

Digitized by the Internet Archive
in 2025

https://archive.org/details/bwb_S0-DTS-680

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in PACIFIC REPORTER

269 P.—271 P.

Cite by Volume and Page of the
PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:
269 P. 167

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Continued from Vol. 271, No. 1-7

PACIFIC REPORTER

COPYRIGHT, 1928, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 269, Nos. 1-6; Vol. 270, Nos.
1-5; Vol. 271, Nos. 1-7.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

Cal. Rep. 269-271 P.

2-1967

PACIFIC REPORTER

269-271 P.

2-1967

WEST PUBLISHING CO.

ST. PAUL, MINN.

1956

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 269-271 P.

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Adams v. Petroleum Midway Co., Sup.	270	668
Ahern; Dickerman v., App.	269	180
Ahumada, Ex parte, App.	269	181
Albright v. North Fork Ditch Co., Sup.	271	1091
Allen; Rolls v., Sup.	269	450
All Persons, etc.; Craviotto v., App.	269	769
All Persons, etc.; Westover v., App.	269	475
Altman v. Blewett, App.	269	751
Amador; Chaplin v., App.	269	544
Ambassador Hotel Corporation v. Los Angeles County, App.	270	726
American Seedless Raisin Co. v. Joshua Hendy Iron Works, App.	271	129
Anchor Laundry Co.; Riverside Portland Cement Co. v., App.	271	367
Anderson v. Blewett, App.	269	751
Anderson v. Rindge Co., App.	270	262
Andreen v. Escondido Citrus Union, App.	269	556
Andriano; Residential Development Co. of San Francisco v., App.	269	186
Anglo-California Trust Co.; Smith v., Sup.	271	898
Aregood v. Traeger, App.	270	1002
Arkle; Drake v., App.	269	689
Arkle's Estate, In re, App.	269	689
Armstrong v. Lassen Lumber & Box Co., Sup.	269	453
Atlantic Fish Co. v. Dollar S. S. Line, Sup.	269	926
Attkisson v. Reynolds, App.	270	686
Atwell Land Co.; Jedlicka v., App.	269	665
Atwell Land Co.; Jedlicka v., App.	270	232
Ayres v. Wright, Sup.	270	453
Bachman; People v., App.	269	769
Baker; Dexter v., App.	271	762
Baker; People v., App.	271	765
Baker; People v., App.	271	777
Bakos v. Shell Co. of California, App.	271	127
Balen, In re, App.	269	734
Ballos v. Natural, App.	269	972
Balzano v. Tracer, App.	270	249
Bandini Petroleum Co. v. Hartman, App.	269	559
Bank of Italy v. Cadenasso, Sup.	270	931
Bank of Italy v. MacGill, App.	269	566
Bank of Milpitas; Witter v., Sup.	269	614
Barnett Rosenberg, Inc., v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, App.	269	730
Barrett; People v., App.	270	1010
Barrett v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	269	551
Barstow-San Antonio Oil Co. v. Whitney, Sup.	271	477
Baruch Corporation v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, Sup.	270	455
Bass v. Hueter, Sup.	270	958

	Vol.	Page
Bateman, Ex parte, App.	271	757
Bathurst, Ex parte, App.	271	781
Becker v. Beldt, Sup.	271	1059
Beldt; Becker v., Sup.	271	1059
Bengochea v. Bengochea, App.	271	760
Bennett; Spalding v., App.	269	948
Beretta; Pratt v., App.	271	546
Bertrand Seed Co.; William A. Davis Co. v., App.	271	123
Bettencourt; El Granada Holding Co. v., Sup.	271	751
Bidwell; Cook v., App.	269	682
Bidwell; Riedy v., App.	269	682
Bigelow; People v., App.	270	460
Bihn; People v., App.	269	939
Black, Ex parte, App.	271	360
Black v. Meyer, Sup.	269	173
Blewett; Altman v., App.	269	751
Blewett; Anderson v., App.	269	751
Board of Directors of Tia Juana River Irr. Dist.; Wilbur v., App.	271	514
Board of Education of Los Angeles City School Dist.; Saxton v., App.	269	764
Board of Fire and Police and Pension Com'rs of City of Fresno; Tripp v., App.	271	795
Board of Osteopathic Examiners of State of California; Thomas v., App.	269	1118
Board of Public Works of City and County of San Francisco; Brougher v., Sup.	271	487
Board of Sup'rs of Contra Costa County; Newsom v., Sup.	270	676
Board of Sup'rs of San Mateo County; Peterson v., App.	269	743
Board of Trustees of Mariposa County Union High School; Godward v., App.	270	725
Bodey; People v., App.	271	203
Boeres; Randleman v., App.	270	374
Bolar v. Maxwell Hardware Co., Sup.	271	97
Boor Singh; Wilkinson v., App.	269	705
Borland v. Key System Transit Co., Sup.	270	194
Boust v. Boust, Sup.	270	209
Boyer v. Son, App.	270	1005
Boyer's Estate, In re, App.	270	1005
Braun v. Leo G. MacLaughlin Co., App.	269	191
Briggs v. Jess Mead, Inc., App.	270	263
Brophy v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	270	670
Brophy's Estate, In re, Sup.	270	670
Brougher v. Board of Public Works of City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	271	487
Brown; Mills v., Sup.	269	636
Brown v. Nelson, App.	271	559
Bruegger, Guardianship of, App.	271	523
Bruegger; Patterson v., App.	271	523
Bryant, Ex parte, App.	271	926
Brydon v. City of Hermosa Beach, App.	270	255
Bue v. Superior Court in and for Shasta County, App.	269	553
Burke v. Meyerstein, App.	271	343
Burns v. Valley Bank, App.	271	107
Butler v. Williams, App.	270	697
Byrnes v. Webster Mfg. Co., App.	271	771
Cadenasso; Bank of Italy v., Sup.	270	931
Calderon; People v., App.	269	961
California Bond & Mortgage Co. v. Washburn, App.	271	554
California Delta Farms v. Chinese American Farms, Sup.	269	443

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
California Reclamation Co.; Sacramento Transp. Co. v., Sup.	269	640
California Rendering Co. v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., Sup.	269	922
Calvert; People v., App.	269	969
Camp v. Oakland Mortgage & Finance Co., Sup.	270	685
Campanella v. Campanella, Sup.	269	433
Campbell v. Miller, Sup.	269	536
Campion v. Continental Casualty Co., App.	271	786
Carbondale Mach. Co. v. Eyraud, App.	271	349
Carlsen; Security Trust & Savings Bank v., Sup.	271	100
Carlsen v. Security Trust & Savings Bank, Sup.	271	104
Carlsen; Security Trust & Savings Bank v., Sup.	271	470
Carlston; Smith v., Sup.	271	1091
Carp v. Carp, App.	271	575
Carrow; People v., App.	270	379
Casazza; Rosetti v., Sup.	269	637
Castriotis v. Cummins, App.	269	1115
Catalina; Thomson v., Sup.	271	198
Cate, In re, App.	270	968
Cate, In re, App.	271	356
Cavanaugh v. Cavanaugh, App.	271	109
C. Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Thompson, Sup.	270	965
Chadwick v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, Sup.	270	192
Chamberlain; City of Pasadena v., Sup.	269	630
Chaplin v. Amador, App.	269	544
Chinese American Farms; California Delta Farms v., Sup.	269	443
Citrus Land Belt Land Co.; Conway v., App.	271	525
City and County of San Francisco v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	271	121
City of Dinuba; Tulare County v., Sup.	270	201
City of Elsinore; Mills v., App.	270	224
City of Hermosa Beach; Brydon v., App.	270	255
City of Los Angeles; Shannon v., Sup.	270	682
City of North Sacramento v. Irwin, App.	271	788
City of Pasadena v. Chamberlain, Sup.	269	630
City of Sacramento; Feraut v., Sup.	269	537
City of Sacramento; Finance & Construction Co. of California v., Sup.	269	167
City of Sacramento; Glide v., Sup.	269	169
City of Santa Rosa; Hansen v., App.	270	268
City of Santa Rosa; Hansen v., App.	270	1000
City of Stockton v. Frisbie & Latta, App.	270	270
Claasen; Granucci v., Sup.	269	437
Clark v. Clark, App.	271	542
Clark v. Tompkins, Sup.	270	946
Clark's Estate, In re, App.	271	542
Clemett; People v., App.	271	112
Clinton Const. Co. of California; Master Builders' Co. v., App.	270	239
Coast Counties Gas & Electric Co.; Muller v., App.	271	338
Cochrane; Tasker v., App.	271	503
Coen; People v., Sup.	271	1074
Cohen; People v., App.	270	377
Collins v. Scott, two cases, App.	269	774
Colvin; Stamm v., App.	270	744
Commercial Mortg. Co.; Haines v., Sup.	269	921
Compton; Purviance v., App.	271	120
Conner v. Lowery, App.	271	118
Conrad v. Randell, Sup.	270	930

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Consolidated People's Ditch Co. v. Foothill Ditch Co., Sup.	269	915
Consolidated Water Co.; McIntyre v., Sup.	270	444
Consumers' Salt Co. v. Riggins, App.	270	392
Continental Casualty Co.; Campion v., App.	271	786
Continental Casualty Co.; Nittler v., App.	271	555
Continental Casualty Co.; Palmer v., Sup.	269	638
Conway v. Citrus Belt Land Co., two cases, App.	271	525
Cook v. Bidwell, App.	269	682
Cook; People v., App.	269	176
Cook's Estate, In re, Sup.	271	1083
Corcoran v. Harris, App.	270	391
Cordish, Ex parte, App.	271	784
Cordua Irr. Dist.; Nissen v., Sup.	269	171
Corse; Da Rocha v., App.	271	208
Coston; New York Cloak & Suit House of Los Angeles v., App.	270	693
Couture v. Ocean Park Bank, Sup.	270	943
Craviotto v. All Persons, etc., App.	269	760
Credit Foncier des Etats Unis; Crittenden v., App.	270	1016
Crenshaw; Lane Mortg. Co. v., App.	269	672
Crittenden v. Credit Foncier des Etats Unis, App.	270	1016
Cummins; Castriotis v., App.	269	1115
Currie; People v., App.	269	770
Da Rocha v. Corse, App.	271	208
Davis; People v., App.	270	715
Davis v. Wansleben, App.	271	382
Davis Co. v. Bertrand Seed Co., App.	271	123
De Bare; Rankin v., Sup.	271	1050
De Garmo v. Petitfils Coniserie, App.	269	692
De Haven v. Kuhn, Sup.	271	1053
Democrat-Herald Pub. Co. v. Pettit, App.	271	910
Denny; H. K. McCann Co. v., Sup.	270	190
Department of Industrial Relations of California, Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety; Fogarty v., Sup.	269	641
De Rigne v. Hart, App.	270	1013
Dexter v. Baker, App.	271	762
Dickerman v. Ahern, App.	269	180
Dollar S. S. Line; Atlantic Fish Co. v., Sup.	269	923
Donahue; Scott v., App.	269	455
Donahue; Scott v., App.	269	458
Donahue; Scott v., App.	269	774
Donahue; Scott v., App.	271	1100
Doolittle; Hartzell v., Sup.	269	527
Dormer; Duncan v., App.	270	1003
Dowd; Lake v., Sup.	270	212
Doyle; Schlimper v., App.	271	538
Drake v. Arkle, App.	269	689
Drew; Wolf v., App.	271	346
Dufresne; Gordon v., Sup.	271	1036
Duncan v. Dormer, App.	270	1003
Dunlap; Rice v., Sup.	270	196
Dunlap; Rice v., Sup.	270	199
Dyer v. Superior Court of California, App.	271	113
East Contra Costa Irr. Co.; Sanchez v., Sup.	271	1060
Edwards; Turlock Irr. Dist. v., Sup.	270	936
Eisenmann; Fraher v., App.	270	704
El Granada Holding Co. v. Bettencourt, Sup.	271	751
Eliassen; Lass v., App.	270	745

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Elroy; People v., App.	271	346
Emery v. Nixon, Sup.	271	1067
Empire Water Co.; Quist v., Sup.	269	533
Engelhardt v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	269	758
England v. Lyon Fireproof Storage Co., App.	269	459
England v. Lyon Fireproof Storage Co., App.	271	532
Engler; Neff v., Sup.	271	744
Ernst; Liberty Bank v., App.	269	959
Escondido Citrus Union; Andreen v., App.	269	556
Everett v. Hayes, App.	270	458
Eyraud; Carbondale Mach. Co. v., App.	271	349
Farbstein v. Woulfe, Sup.	269	443
Farmer v. Mountain Lake Club, App.	271	780
Farrell; May v., App.	271	789
Faull v. Johnson, App.	270	993
Federal Mut. Liability Ins. Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	270	992
Feraut v. City of Sacramento, Sup.	269	537
Fernandes; Foster v., Sup.	270	188
Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland; Francis v., App.	269	571
Field v. Walton, App.	271	500
Filice & Perrelli Canning Co. v. Walton, App.	271	1096
Finance & Construction Co. of California v. City of Sacramento, Sup.	269	167
Fireman; Golden Gate Bldg. Materials Co. v., Sup.	270	214
Fischer Motor Body Co.; Kovacevich v., App.	271	351
Fitzgerald; Roberts v., App.	271	1116
Fitzgerald v. Smith, App.	271	507
Fitzgerald; Thompson v., Sup.	271	1072
Fitzhugh v. Freeman, App.	269	669
Fix; Palmer v., Sup.	271	749
Fix; Palmer v., Sup.	271	759
Floris; People v., App.	269	726
Fogarty v. Department of Industrial Relations of California, Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety, Sup.	269	641
Foothill Ditch Co.; Consolidated People's Ditch Co. v., Sup.	269	915
Foster v. Fernandes, Sup.	270	188
Fraher v. Eisenmann, App.	270	704
Francis v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, App.	269	571
Freeman; Fitzhugh v., App.	269	669
Freeman; Granite Rock Co. v., App.	269	668
Friedlander; Gracchi v., App.	270	235
Frisbie; Sapiro v., App.	270	289
Frisbie & Latta; City of Stockton v., App.	270	270
Fullerton; McKinnon v., App.	269	555
Ganahl Lumber Co. v. Thompson, Sup.	270	965
Garford Motor Truck Co.; Redd v., Sup.	270	447
Garvey; People v., App.	270	732
General Petroleum Corporation; Green v., Sup.	270	952
Gennoni; Latronica v., Sup.	271	1054
Gentry; Ross v., App.	271	1098
Giffin v. Supreme Lodge of Fraternal Brotherhood, App.	271	1111
Giron; People v., App.	270	462
Goble v. City of Sacramento, Sup.	269	139
Godward v. Board of Trustees of Mariposa County Union High School, App.	270	725
Golden Gate Bldg. Materials Co. v. Fireman, Sup.	270	214
Golden State Orchards v. Harter, App.	269	735

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Goodwin; McCarron v., App.	269	977
Goodwin; People v., App.	270	747
Gordon v. Dufresne, Sup.	271	1066
Gordon v. Harris, App.	271	779
Gordon; People v., Sup.	269	529
Gordon; Williams v., Sup.	271	1070
Gorman; People v., App.	271	361
Gottstein v. Kelly, App.	269	940
Gould v. Wood, Sup.	270	183
Gracchi v. Friedlander, App.	270	235
Graham, Ex parte, App.	269	183
Granite Rock Co. v. Freeman, App.	269	668
Granucci v. Claasen, Sup.	269	437
Great Western Syndicate v. Superior Court of California in and for City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	270	200
Green v. General Petroleum Corporation, Sup.	270	952
Green; People v., App.	269	687
Greenberg; Shaprio v., App.	270	1008
Grimes; People v., App.	270	1000
Grimmesey v. Kirtlan, App.	270	243
Gross v. Hazeltine, Sup.	269	925
Grunberg; Lewis v., Sup.	270	181
Guedemann; Riggs v., App.	270	1001
Guido; People v., App.	269	670
Guy; Scovill v., Sup.	270	934
Haack; People v., App.	269	955
Haines v. Commercial Mortg. Co., Sup.	269	921
Hammond Lumber Co. v. Richardson, App.	270	751
Hansen v. City of Santa Rosa, App.	270	268
Hansen v. City of Santa Rosa, App.	270	1009
Hardwick; People v., Sup.	269	427
Harker v. Rickershauser, App.	271	912
Harris; Corcoran v., App.	270	391
Harris; Gordon v., App.	271	779
Hart; De Rigne v., App.	270	1013
Harter; Golden State Orchards v., App.	269	735
Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	269	733
Hartman; Bandini Petroleum Co. v., App.	269	559
Hartsock v. Merritt, App.	269	757
Hartsock v. Merritt, App.	271	381
Hartzell v. Doolittle, Sup.	269	527
Hass; Kage v., App.	269	968
Hatton; Newport v., Sup.	271	471
Hawley; Newsom v., Sup.	270	364
Hayes; Everett v., App.	270	458
Hazeltine; Gross v., Sup.	269	925
Heiter v. Hirschfeld, Sup.	271	1051
Helbing; Katz v., Sup.	271	1062
Hemma; People v., App.	270	457
Hendy Iron Works; American Seedless Raisin Co. v., App.	271	129
Henkel; Usher v., Sup.	271	494
Herbert M. Baruch Corporation v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, Sup.	270	455
Herron v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	271	514
Hickman; People v., Sup.	270	1117

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Hicks v. Wilson, Sup.	271	1049
Hill; Tomblin v., App.	269	944
Hill's Estate, In re, App.	270	708
Hilton v. Oliver, Sup.	269	425
Hirschfeld; Heiter v., Sup.	271	1051
Hiveley; Rupp v., App.	271	768
H. K. McCann Co. v. Denny, Sup.	270	190
Hobson v. King, App.	271	206
Hodges; People v., Sup.	271	897
Hodges; People v., Sup.	271	898
Hoef; Stark v., Sup.	269	1105
Hogan Finance & Mortgage Co. v. Mead, Sup.	269	610
Hollingshead Co.; Sichterman v., App.	271	372
Hollingshead Co.; Sichterman v., App.	271	1111
Hollingsworth v. Lewis, App.	269	709
Hotchkiss v. Superior Court in and for Alameda County, Sup.	269	524
Houston; Roseborough v., Sup.	270	939
Houston's Estate, In re, Sup.	270	939
Huene; Lind v., Sup.	271	1087
Hueter; Bass v., Sup.	270	958
Hulsman v. Ireland, Sup.	270	948
Huntley; People v., App.	269	750
Hutchins v. Security Trust & Savings Bank, App.	270	219
Iknoian v. Winter, App.	270	999
Industrial Accident Commission; Federal Mut. Liability Ins. Co. v., App.	270	992
Industrial Accident Commission; Moody v., Sup.	269	542
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Hartford Accident & In- demnity Co. v., App.	269	733
Industrial Accident Commission of California; Klebe v., App.	269	720
Ireland; Hulsman v., Sup.	270	948
Irvin, Ex parte, Sup.	271	202
Irwin; City of North Sacramento v., App.	271	788
Ivey's Estate, In re, App.	271	559
Jacobson; Nicholas v., Sup.	271	1057
James; People v., App.	270	938
Janssen v. Tate, App.	270	456
Jedlicka v. Atwell Land Co., App.	269	665
Jedlicka v. Atwell Land Co., App.	270	232
Jenkins v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., Sup.	270	1116
Jensen v. McCullough, App.	271	568
Jess Mead, Inc.; Briggs v., App.	270	263
Johnson; Faull v., App.	270	933
Johnson v. Kvale, App.	271	379
Johnson; Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, Limited, of London, England, v., Sup.	270	371
Johnston; People v., App.	269	560
Jonas; People v., App.	271	1113
Jones; San Bernardino Nat. Bank v., App.	271	1103
Jones v. Stevens, App.	271	564
Joshua Hendy Iron Works; American Seedless Raisin Co. v., App.	271	129
Kage v. Hass, App.	269	938
Kashishian; La France v., Sup.	269	655
Kasparoff; People v., App.	270	398
Katz v. Helbing, Sup.	271	1062
Kauffman; Unruh v., Sup.	270	440
Keeler; Kennard v., App.	269	1114
Kellogg v. Snell, App.	270	232

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Kelly; Gottstein v., App.	269	940
Kempley; People v., Sup.	271	478
Kennard v. Keeler, App.	269	1114
Kennard; Los Angeles City High School Dist. of Los Angeles County v., App.	271	342
Kester v. McNear, Sup.	271	1083
Key System Transit Co.; Borland v., Sup.	270	194
Kierulff & Ravenscroft v. Koping, App.	271	353
King; Hobson v., App.	271	206
Kirk; People v., App.	271	347
Kirsch; People v., Sup.	269	447
Kirtlan; Grimmesey v., App.	270	243
Klebe v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, App.	269	720
Klein & Co.; Switzler v., App.	271	367
Kletz v. MacAdam, App.	271	1101
Knocke; People v., App.	270	468
Kolberg v. Sherwin-Williams Co., App.	269	975
Koping; Kierulff & Ravenscroft v., App.	271	353
Kovacevich v. Fischer Motor Body Co., App.	271	351
Kramer v. Reynolds, App.	269	573
Krause v. Marine Trust & Savings Bank, App.	270	246
Kronick; Stenzel v., App.	271	211
Kuder; People v., App.	269	198
Kuder; People v., Sup.	269	630
Kuhn; De Haven v., Sup.	271	1053
Kvale; Johnson v., App.	271	379
La Cava; Papeschi v., App.	269	731
La Count v. Pasarich, Sup.	270	210
La Cumbre Golf and Country Club v. Santa Barbara Hotel Co., Sup.	271	476
La France v. Kashishian, Sup.	269	655
Lake v. Dowd, Sup.	270	212
Landfield; Zwart v., App.	269	740
Lane Mortg. Co. v. Crenshaw, App.	269	672
Lapierre; People v., Sup.	271	497
Lapierre; People v., Sup.	271	500
Lass v. Eliassen, App.	270	745
Lassen Lumber & Box Co.; Armstrong v., Sup.	269	453
Latronica v. Gennoni, Sup.	271	1054
Lauriston; McKay v., Sup.	269	519
Le Baron; People v., App.	269	476
Leo G. MacLaughlin Co.; Braun v., App.	269	191
Leonard & Holt; Margolis v., App.	271	758
Lewis v. Grunberg, Sup.	270	181
Lewis; Hollingsworth v., App.	269	709
Liberty Bank v. Ernst, App.	269	959
Lincoln v. Superior Court of California, App.	271	1107
Lind v. Huene, Sup.	271	1087
Lindsay-Strathmore Irr. Dist.; Tulare Irr. Dist. v., Sup.	269	525
List v. Republic Bond & Mortgage Co., App.	271	529
Little v. Los Angeles Ry. Corporation, App.	271	184
Lobingier v. Skinner, App.	270	394
Logan v. Thorne, Sup.	269	626
London v. Robinson, App.	271	921
Lopez v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., App.	269	685
Los Angeles; People v., App.	269	934
Los Angeles Auto Tractor Co. v. Superior Court within and for Los Angeles County, App.	271	363

CASES REPORTED

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Los Angeles City High School Dist. of Los Angeles County v. Kennard, App.	271	342
Los Angeles County; Ambassador Hotel Corporation v., App.	270	726
Los Angeles County v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., App.	269	767
Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	271	518
Los Angeles First Nat. Trust & Savings Bank v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	270	710
Los Angeles Ry. Corporation; Little v., App.	271	134
Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank; Simonton v., Sup.	270	672
Lowery; Conner v., App.	271	118
Luckenbach v. Luckenbach, Sup.	270	961
Luckenbach's Estate, In re, Sup.	270	961
Luhr; Parsons v., Sup.	270	443
Lundquist v. Lundstrom, App.	270	696
Lundstrom; Lundquist v., App.	270	696
Lyders v. Wilsey, App.	271	383
Lynch; National City Finance Co. v., App.	271	540
Lyon; Waldron v., Sup.	269	450
Lyon Fireproof Storage Co.; England v., App.	269	459
Lyon Fireproof Storage Co.; England v., App.	271	532
MacAdam; Kletz v., App.	271	1101
McAlmond v. Trippel, App.	269	937
McCann Co. v. Denny, Sup.	270	190
McCarron v. Goodwin, App.	269	977
McCarte v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	271	512
McCarthy v. McCarthy, Sup.	270	211
McCullough; Jensen v., App.	271	563
MacGill; Bank of Italy v., App.	269	566
McGrath; People v., App.	271	549
McIntosh; Meisner v., Sup.	269	612
McIntyre v. Consolidated Water Co., Sup.	270	444
McKay v. Lauriston, Sup.	269	519
Mackie; Phillips v., App.	269	943
McKinnon v. Fullerton, App.	269	555
McMahan; Martin v., App.	271	1114
McNear; Kester v., Sup.	271	1083
McNitt v. Volli, Sup.	269	932
MacPherson v. West Coast Transit Co., App.	271	509
Madrano; People v., App.	269	1117
Madsen; Nylund v., App.	271	374
Madsen; People v., App.	270	237
Maine; People v., App.	269	194
Malone; People v., Sup.	269	628
Malone; People v., Sup.	270	196
Mannerstan; People v., App.	269	1117
Marchetti v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	269	529
Margolis v. Leonard & Holt, App.	271	758
Marine Trust & Savings Bank; Krause v., App.	270	246
Marsh; Newton v., App.	270	730
Marsh; Salter v., App.	270	735
Martin v. McMahan, App.	271	1114
Master Builders' Co. v. Clinton Const. Co. of California, App.	270	239
Mathes; Southern California Bond & Finance Corporation v., App.	269	964
Maxwell Hardware Co.; Bolar v., Sup.	271	97
Maxwell Hardware Co.; Wise v., App.	271	948

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
May v. Farrell, App.	271	789
Mayberry; People v., App.	271	1113
Mead; Hogan Finance & Mortgage Co. v., Sup.	269	610
Medalgi; People v., App.	271	552
Meisner v. McIntosh, Sup.	269	612
Melick v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, App.	269	746
Mercantile Trust Co. of California; Oakland Terminal & Elevator Corporation v., App.	271	776
Mercer's Estate, In re, Sup.	271	1067
Merritt; Hartsock v., App.	269	757
Merritt; Hartsock v., App.	271	381
Merritt v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, App.	269	547
Merritt; Westlake Mercantile Finance Corporation v., Sup.	269	620
Meserve; Todd v., App.	269	710
Mesmer's Estate, In re, App.	270	732
Meyer; Black v., Sup.	269	173
Meyer; People v., App.	271	751
Meyerstein; Burke v., App.	271	343
Midstate Oil Co. v. Ocean Shore R. Co., App.	270	216
Miller; Campbell v., Sup.	269	536
Miller & Lux; Sugarman Iron & Metal Co. v., Sup.	269	1113
Mills v. Brown, Sup.	269	636
Mills v. City of Elsinore, App.	270	224
Milwaukee Bldg. Co. v. Wetzel, App.	270	382
Moodie; Oldham v., App.	270	688
Moody v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.	269	542
Moore, Ex parte, App.	269	664
Morgan's Estate, In re, App.	271	762
Morris v. Turley, App.	271	916
Mount; People v., App.	269	177
Mountain Lake Club; Farmer v., App.	271	780
Mountain View Water Co.; Stratton v., App.	270	1006
Muller v. Coast Counties Gas & Electric Co., App.	271	338
Musto; People v., App.	271	764
Myers; Nelson v., App.	270	719
Myers; People v., App.	269	963
Nathan v. Nathan, Sup.	269	628
National City Finance Co. v. Lynch, App.	271	540
National Stone Tile Corporation v. Voorheis, App.	270	286
Natural; Ballos v., App.	269	972
Neece; West v., App.	270	378
Neff v. Engler, Sup.	271	744
Nelson; Brown v., App.	271	559
Nelson v. Myers, App.	270	719
Newport v. Hatton, Sup.	271	471
Newsom v. Board of Sup'rs of Contra Costa County, Sup.	270	676
Newsom v. Hawley, Sup.	270	364
Newton v. Marsh, App.	270	730
New York Cloak & Suit House of Los Angeles v. Coston, App.	270	695
Nicholas v. Jacobson, Sup.	271	1057
Nikolich; People v., App.	269	721
Nissen v. Cordua Irr. Dist., Sup.	269	171
Nittler v. Continental Casualty Co., App.	271	555
Nixon; Emery v., Sup.	271	1067
North Fork Ditch Co.; Albright v., Sup.	271	1091
Novotny's Estate, In re, App.	271	923

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Nylund v. Madsen, App.	271	374
Oakland Mortgage & Finance Co.; Camp v., Sup.	270	685
Oakland Terminal & Elevator Corporation v. Mercantile Trust Co. of California, two cases, App.	271	776
Oberndorff; Podrat v., App.	271	755
Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, Limited, of London, England, v. Johnson, Sup.	270	371
Ocean Park Bank; Couture v., Sup.	270	943
Ocean Shore R. Co.; Midstate Oil Co. v., App.	270	216
Ogburn v. Travelers' Ins. Co., App.	269	728
Oldham v. Moodie, App.	270	688
Oliver; Hilton v., Sup.	269	425
Olson v. Ranker, App.	269	175
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; California Rendering Co. v., Sup.	269	922
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Lopez v., App.	269	685
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Los Angeles County v., App.	269	767
Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Universal Electric & Gas Co., App.	271	377
Palmer v. Continental Casualty Co., Sup.	269	638
Palmer v. Fix, Sup.	271	749
Palmer v. Fix, Sup.	271	750
Papeschi v. La Cava, App.	269	731
Parker v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	269	622
Parra; People v., App.	271	1103
Parsons v. Luhr, Sup.	270	443
Pasarich; La Count v., Sup.	270	210
Passarello, Ex parte, App.	269	719
Passantino; People v., App.	271	205
Patee; Wayt v., Sup.	269	660
Patterson v. Bruegger, App.	271	523
Peak v. Spitzer, Sup.	269	924
Pennell v. Stanley W. Smith, Inc., Sup.	269	171
Pentz; Standard Live Stock Co. v., Sup.	269	645
People v. Bachman, App.	269	769
People v. Baker, App.	271	765
People v. Baker, App.	271	777
People v. Barrett, App.	270	1010
People v. Bigelow, App.	270	460
People v. Bihn, App.	269	939
People v. Bodey, App.	271	203
People v. Calderon, App.	269	961
People v. Calvert, App.	269	969
People v. Carrow, App.	270	379
People v. Clemett, App.	271	112
People v. Coen, Sup.	271	1074
People v. Cohen, App.	270	377
People v. Cook, App.	269	176
People v. Currie, App.	269	770
People v. Davis, App.	270	715
People v. Elroy, App.	271	346
People v. Floris, App.	269	726
People v. Garvey, App.	269	702
People v. Giron, App.	270	462
People v. Goodwin, App.	270	747
People v. Gordon, Sup.	269	529
People v. Gorman, App.	271	361
People v. Green, App.	269	687
People v. Grimes, App.	270	1000

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Guido, App.	269	670
People v. Haack, App.	269	955
People v. Hardwick, Sup.	269	427
People v. Hemma, App.	270	457
People v. Hickman, Sup.	270	1117
People v. Hodges, Sup.	271	897
People v. Hodges, Sup.	271	898
People v. Huntley, App.	269	750
People v. James, App.	270	998
People v. Johnston, App.	269	560
People v. Jonas, App.	271	1113
People v. Kasparoff, App.	270	398
People v. Kempley, Sup.	271	473
People v. Kirk, App.	271	347
People v. Kirsch, Sup.	269	447
People v. Knocke, App.	270	468
People v. Kuder, App.	269	198
People v. Kuder, Sup.	269	630
People v. Lapierre, Sup.	271	497
People v. Lapierre, Sup.	271	500
People v. Le Baron, App.	269	476
People v. Los Angeles, App.	269	934
People v. McGrath, App.	271	549
People v. Madrano, App.	269	1117
People v. Madsen, App.	270	237
People v. Maine, App.	269	194
People v. Malone, Sup.	269	628
People v. Malone, Sup.	270	196
People v. Mannerstan, App.	269	1117
People v. Mayberry, App.	271	1113
People v. Medalgi, App.	271	552
People v. Meyer, App.	271	751
People v. Mount, App.	269	177
People v. Musto, App.	271	764
People v. Myers, App.	269	963
People v. Nikolich, App.	269	721
People v. Parra, App.	271	1103
People v. Passantino, App.	271	205
People v. Pettinger, App.	271	132
People v. Prudencio, App.	269	698
People v. Redding, App.	269	197
People v. Revenko, App.	269	980
People v. Rodgers, App.	270	712
People v. Rogers, App.	271	351
People v. Roldan, App.	270	253
People v. Stanich, App.	271	920
People v. Stanley, App.	269	465
People v. Stern, App.	270	706
People v. Stovall, App.	271	576
People v. Sullivan, App.	270	968
People v. Thomas, Sup.	271	1049
People v. Tosi, App.	271	1113
People v. Turner, App.	269	204
People v. Vasquez, App.	269	549
People v. Vejar, App.	269	671
People v. Warner, App.	270	463
People v. Westcott, App.	269	724

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Wilson, App.	269	951
Perry, Ex parte, App.	270	996
Peterson v. Board of Sup'rs of San Mateo County, App.	269	743
Petitfils Confiserie; De Garmo v., App.	269	692
Petroleum Midway Co.; Adams v., Sup.	270	668
Pettinger; People v., App.	271	132
Pettit; Democrat-Herald Pub. Co. v., App.	271	910
Phillips v. Mackie, App.	269	943
Pilgrim; Stanley W. Smith, Inc., v., App.	269	765
Pista v. Resetar, Sup.	270	453
Pittsburg; Ritterbusch v., Sup.	269	930
Platt v. Platt, Sup.	269	657
Podrat v. Oberndorff, App.	271	755
Potter; Robinson v., App.	271	539
Pratt v. Beretta, App.	271	546
Prudencio; People v., App.	269	698
Pugliese v. Pugliese, Sup.	270	956
Purviance v. Compton, App.	271	120
Quist v. Empire Water Co., Sup.	269	533
Raentsch; Telegraph Ave. Corporation v., Sup.	269	1109
Railroad Commission of California; Southern Sierras Power Co. v., Sup.	271	747
Randell; Conrad v., Sup.	270	930
Randleman v. Boeres, App.	270	374
Ranker; Olson v., App.	269	175
Rankin v. De Bare, Sup.	271	1050
Redd v. Garford Motor Truck Co., Sup.	270	447
Redding; People v., App.	269	197
Rentsch; Trower v., App.	270	749
Republic Bond & Mortgage Co.; List v., App.	271	529
Resetar; Pista v., Sup.	270	453
Residential Development Co. of San Francisco v. Andriano, App.	269	186
Rethers v. Smith, Sup.	271	1096
Revenko; People v., App.	269	980
Reynolds; Attkisson v., App.	270	686
Reynolds; Kramer v., App.	269	573
Rhoades v. Silvius, App.	269	749
Rice v. Dunlap, Sup.	270	196
Rice v. Dunlap, Sup.	270	199
Richardson; Hammond Lumber Co. v., App.	270	751
Rickershauser; Harker v., App.	271	912
Riedy v. Bidwell, App.	269	682
Riggins; Consumers' Salt Co. v., App.	270	392
Riggs v. Guedemann, App.	270	1001
Rindge Co.; Anderson v., App.	270	262
Ritterbusch v. Pittsburg, Sup.	269	930
Riverside Portland Cement Co. v. Anchor Laundry Co., App.	271	367
R. M. Hollingshead Co.; Sichterman v., App.	271	372
R. M. Hollingshead Co.; Sichterman v., App.	271	1111
Robert A. Klein & Co.; Switzler v., App.	271	367
Roberts v. Fitzgerald, App.	271	1110
Robinson; London v., App.	271	921
Robinson v. Potter, App.	271	539
Rodgers; People v., App.	270	712
Rogers; People v., App.	271	351
Rogers v. Schneider, Sup.	270	451
Roldan; People v., App.	270	253
Rolls v. Allen, Sup.	269	450

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Roseborough v. Houston, Sup.	270	939
Rosenburg, Inc., v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, App.	269	730
Rosencrantz, Ex parte, Sup.	271	902
Rosetti v. Casazza, Sup.	269	637
Ross v. Gentry, App.	271	1098
Rowell v. Western Motor Transport Co., App.	270	400
Rupp v. Hiveley, App.	271	768
Sacramento Transp. Co. v. California Reclamation Co., Sup.	269	640
Salter v. Marsh, App.	270	735
San Bernardino Nat. Bank v. Jones, App.	271	1103
Sanchez v. East Contra Costa Irr. Co., Sup.	271	1060
Santa Barbara Hotel Co.; La Cumbre Golf and Country Club v., Sup.	271	476
Sapiro v. Frisbie, App.	270	280
Saxton v. Board of Education of Los Angeles City School Dist., App.	269	764
Schlimper v. Doyle, App.	271	538
Schneider; Rogers v., Sup.	270	451
Schwarz v. Schwarz, App.	269	755
Scott, In re, Sup.	271	906
Scott; Collins v., App.	269	774
Scott v. Donahue, App.	269	455
Scott v. Donahue, App.	269	458
Scott v. Donahue, two cases, App.	269	774
Scott v. Donahue, App.	271	1100
Scott v. Superior Court in and for Alameda County, Sup.	271	906
Scovill v. Guy, Sup.	270	934
Security Trust & Savings Bank v. Carlsen, Sup.	271	100
Security Trust & Savings Bank; Carlsen v., Sup.	271	104
Security Trust & Savings Bank v. Carlsen, Sup.	271	470
Security Trust & Savings Bank; Hutchins v., App.	270	219
Sellers v. Wood Hydraulic Hoist & Body Co., Sup.	271	1055
Shannon v. City of Los Angeles, Sup.	270	682
Shaprio v. Greenberg, App.	270	1008
Shell Co. of California; Bakos v., App.	271	127
Shepard v. Yale, App.	270	742
Sherman; Smith v., Sup.	269	169
Sherwin-Williams Co.; Kolberg v., App.	269	975
Short v. Superior Court of State of California in and for Los Angeles Coun- ty, App.	271	783
Sichterman v. Hollingshead, App.	271	1111
Sichterman v. R. M. Hollingshead Co., App.	271	372
Sichterman v. R. M. Hollingshead Co., App.	271	1111
Silvius; Rhoades v., App.	269	749
Simonton v. Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank, Sup.	270	672
Skinner; Lobingier v., App.	270	394
Smellie v. Southern Pac. Co., Sup.	269	657
Smith v. Anglo-California Trust Co., Sup.	271	898
Smith v. Carlston, Sup.	271	1091
Smith; Fitzgerald v., App.	271	507
Smith; Rethers v., Sup.	271	1096
Smith v. Sherman, Sup.	269	169
Smith v. Smith, App.	270	463
Smith v. Smith, App.	270	995
Smith; Western Brick Co. v., App.	271	356
Smith, Inc., v. Pilgrim, App.	269	765
Snell; Kellogg v., App.	270	232
Son; Boyer v., App.	270	1005

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Southern California Bond & Finance Corporation v. Mathes, App.	269	964
Southern Pac. Co.; Barrett v., App.	269	551
Southern Pac. Co.; Marchetti v., Sup.	269	529
Southern Pac. Co.; Parker v., Sup.	269	622
Southern Pac. Co.; Smellie v., Sup.	269	657
Southern Sierras Power Co. v. Railroad Commission of California, Sup.	271	747
Spalding v. Bennett, App.	269	948
Sparling v. Sparling, App.	271	548
Spitzer; Peak v., Sup.	269	924
Stacy-Judd v. Stacy-Judd, App.	269	561
Stamm v. Colvin, App.	270	744
Standard Live Stock Co. v. Pentz, Sup.	269	645
Stanich; People v., App.	271	920
Stanley; People v., App.	269	465
Stanley v. Westover, App.	269	468
Stanley W. Smith, Inc.; Pennell v., Sup.	269	171
Stanley W. Smith, Inc., v. Pilgrim, App.	269	765
Star Petroleum Co.; Wilshire Oil Co. v., App.	269	722
Stark v. Hoeft, Sup.	269	1105
State; Welsbach Co. v., App.	270	690
Steiger, Ex parte, Sup.	271	201
Stenzel v. Kronick, App.	271	211
Stern; People v., App.	270	706
Stevens; Jones v., App.	271	564
Stewart v. Stewart, Sup.	269	439
Stovall; People v., App.	271	576
Stratton v. Mountain View Water Co., App.	270	1006
Streshley; Whalen v., Sup.	269	928
Sugarman Iron & Metal Co. v. Miller & Lux, Sup.	269	1113
Sullivan; People v., App.	270	968
Sullivan v. Sullivan, App.	271	753
Sullivan's Estate, In re, App.	271	753
Superior Court in and for Alameda County; Hotchkiss v., Sup.	269	524
Superior Court in and for Alameda County; Scott v., Sup.	271	906
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; City and County of San Francisco v., App.	271	121
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; Engelhardt v., App.	269	758
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; Herron v., App.	271	514
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; McCarte v., App.	271	512
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. v., App.	271	518
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Los Angeles First Nat. Trust & Savings Bank v., App.	270	710
Superior Court in and for Shasta County; Bue v., App.	269	553
Superior Court of California; Dyer v., App.	271	113
Superior Court of California; Lincoln v., App.	271	1107
Superior Court of California in and for City and County of San Francisco; Great Western Syndicate v., Sup.	270	200
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; Barnett Rosenburg, Inc., v., App.	269	730
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; Chadwick v., Sup.	270	192
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; Herbert M. Baruch Corporation v., Sup.	270	455

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; Melick v., App.	269	746
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; Merritt v., App.	269	547
Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County; Taylor v., App.	269	727
Superior Court of California in and for Orange County; United Sec. Bank & Trust Co. v., Sup.	270	184
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Brophy v., Sup.	270	670
Superior Court of State of California in and for Los Angeles County; Short v., App.	271	783
Superior Court within and for Los Angeles County; Los Angeles Auto Tractor Co. v., App.	271	363
Supreme Lodge of Fraternal Brotherhood; Giffin v., App.	271	1111
Swallow v. Tungsten Products Co., Sup.	270	366
Switzler v. Robert A. Klein & Co., App.	271	367
Tasker v. Cochrane, App.	271	503
Tate; Janssen v., App.	270	456
Taylor v. Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, App.	269	727
Telegraph Ave. Corporation v. Raentsch, Sup.	269	1109
Thomas, In re, App.	269	1118
Thomas v. Board of Osteopathic Examiners of State of California, App.	269	1118
Thomas; People v., Sup.	271	1049
Thompson; C. Ganahl Lumber Co. v., Sup.	270	965
Thompson v. Fitzgerald, Sup.	271	1072
Thomson v. Catalina, Sup.	271	198
Thorne v. Logan, Sup.	269	626
Title Guarantee & Trust Co.; Jenkins v., Sup.	270	1116
Todd v. Meserve, App.	269	710
Tomblin v. Hill, App.	269	944
Tompkins; Clark v., Sup.	270	946
Tosi; People v., App.	271	1113
Traeger; Aregood v., App.	270	1002
Traeger; Balzano v., App.	270	249
Travelers' Ins. Co.; Ogburn v., App.	269	728
Tripp v. Board of Fire and Police Pension Com'rs of City of Fresno, App.	271	795
Trippel; McAlmond v., App.	269	937
Trower v. Rentsch, App.	270	749
Tulare County v. City of Dinuba, Sup.	270	201
Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Lindsay-Strathmore Irr. Dist., Sup.	269	525
Tungsten Products Co.; Swallow v., Sup.	270	366
Turley; Morris v., App.	271	916
Turlock Irr. Dist. v. Edwards, two cases, Sup.	270	936
Turner; People v., App.	269	204
United Sec. Bank & Trust Co. v. Superior Court of California in and for Orange County, Sup.	270	184
Universal Electric & Gas Co.; Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v., App.	271	377
Unruh v. Kauffman, Sup.	270	440
Usher v. Henkel, Sup.	271	494
Valley Bank; Burns v., App.	271	107
Vasquez; People v., App.	269	549
Vejar; People v., App.	269	671
Volfi; McNett v., Sup.	269	932
Voorheis; National Stone Tile Corporation v., App.	270	286
Wagnon, Ex parte, App.	269	744
Waldron v. Lyon, Sup.	269	450
Walton; Field v., App.	271	500

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Walton; Filice & Perrelli Canning Co. v., App.	271	1096
Wansleben; Davis v., App.	271	382
Warner; People v., App.	270	463
Washburn; California Bond & Mortgage Co. v., App.	271	554
Wayt v. Patee, Sup.	269	660
Webster Mfg. Co. v. Byrnes, App.	271	771
Welsbach Co. v. State, App.	270	690
West v. Neece, App.	270	378
West Coast Transit Co.; MacPherson v., App.	271	509
Westcott, Ex parte, App.	270	247
Westcott; People v., App.	269	724
Western Brick Co. v. Smith, App.	271	356
Western Motor Transport Co.; Rowell v., App.	270	400
Westlake Mercantile Finance Corporation v. Merritt, Sup.	269	620
Westover v. All Persons, etc., App.	269	475
Westover; Stanley v., App.	269	468
Wetzel; Milwaukee Bldg. Co. v., App.	270	382
Whalen v. Streshley, Sup.	269	928
Whalen v. Yank, App.	270	729
Whitney; Barstow-San Antonio Oil Co. v., Sup.	271	477
Wilbur v. Board of Directors of Tia Juana River Irr. Dist., App.	271	514
Wilkinson v. Boor Singh, App.	269	705
William A. Davis Co. v. Bertrand Seed Co., App.	271	123
Williams; Butler v., App.	270	697
Williams v. Gordon, Sup.	271	1070
Wilsey; Lyders v., App.	271	383
Wilshire Oil Co. v. Star Petroleum Co., App.	269	722
Wilson; Hicks v., Sup.	271	1049
Wilson; People v., App.	269	951
Winter; Iknoian v., App.	270	999
Wise v. Maxwell Hardware Co., App.	271	918
Witter v. Bank of Milpitas, Sup.	269	614
Wolf v. Drew, App.	271	346
Wood; Gould v., Sup.	270	183
Wood Hydraulic Hoist & Body Co.; Sellers v., Sup.	271	1055
Woulfe; Farbstein v., Sup.	269	446
Wright; Ayres v., Sup.	270	453
Yale; Shepard v., App.	270	742
Yank; Whalen v., App.	270	729
Zwart v. Landfield, App.	269	740

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

269 PACIFIC REPORTER

204 Cal. 491

FINANCE & CONSTRUCTION CO. OF CALIFORNIA v. CITY OF SACRAMENTO.★
(Sac. 3996.)

Supreme Court of California. July 11, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 9, 1928.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨1024—Corporation, suing city for diversion of water onto corporate lands, on which corporation was growing crops, held "doing business" in county, authorizing change of venue on motion of city (Code Civ. Proc. § 394).

Where corporation, having its principal place of business in San Francisco, sued the city of Sacramento in Yolo county for damages for diversion of water onto corporate lands, thereby injuring its crop of pasturage and barley, which it was growing in Yolo county, and city moved for change of venue, under Code Civ. Proc. § 394, providing city, not located in, but sued in, county in which plaintiff is "doing business," may secure change of venue; held, corporation was "doing business," within meaning of statute authorizing change of venue.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Doing Business.]

2. Municipal corporations ⇨1024—Statute authorizing change of venue held remedial; hence subject to liberal construction (Code Civ. Proc. § 394).

Code Civ. Proc. § 394, authorizing change of venue where city is sued by plaintiff, doing business in county in which suit is brought, in event that city is not also within that county, held remedial, hence subject to liberal construction.

3. Municipal corporations § 1024—Where city moved for change of venue, allegation of plaintiff that at commencement of action it owned land on which crops were damaged supported implied finding it was then producing crops (Code Civ. Proc. § 394).

Where city, sued for diverting water onto lands of corporation, moved for change of venue, under Code Civ. Proc. § 394, providing city not located in county, sued by plaintiff "doing business" in county, may procure change of venue on motion, and corporation contended there was no showing that at commencement of action it was farming land or growing crops thereon, warranting change, allegation in complaint that at commencement of action corporation owned land, and that city threatened to, and would, unless enjoined, continue to discharge volumes of water from river, thereby destroying crops growing thereon, held sufficient allegation from which it could be inferred that at commencement of action corporation had crops growing on land, especially in absence of any denial on corporation's part supporting implied finding that at commencement of action corporation was producing crops on its land.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by the Finance & Construction Company of California against the City of Sacramento for damages for unlawful diversion of water onto lands of plaintiff. From an order granting a motion for change of venue, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Huston, Huston & Huston, of Sacramento, for appellant.

R. L. Shinn, of Sacramento, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. This action against the defendant, the city of Sacramento, was filed in the county of Yolo. Said defendant appeared therein and moved the court for a change of the place of trial of said action, upon the ground that the plaintiff was either a resident of or was doing business in said county of Yolo. The motion was granted, and an order made changing the place of trial of said action from said county of Yolo to the county of Napa. From this order plaintiff has appealed.

The order was granted under the authority of section 394 of the Code of Civil Procedure and was based upon the following state of facts: The action was brought against the city of Sacramento, the defendant, in a county other than that in which said city is situated; said city being situated in the county of Sacramento, and the action having been instituted in the county of Yolo. The action was brought to recover from said city damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of the unlawful diversion by said city of Sacramento of the waters of the Sacramento river from said river onto plaintiff's land, situated in the county of Yolo. There were two unlawful diversions complained of, one of which plaintiff alleges damaged a crop of barley growing upon 1,000 acres of plaintiff's said land, one-fourth of which crop plaintiff was the owner of. The other diversion complained of destroyed the pasturage grown upon land belonging to plaintiff. Plaintiff is a corporation with its principal place of business in the city of San Francisco. It was therefore not a resident of said county of Yolo.

[1, 2] The foregoing facts all appear in plaintiff's complaint, and were relied upon by defendant at the time of making said motion, without any affidavit or other showing of any additional facts. The question presented, therefore, is whether or not a person who owns a tract of land upon which he is growing pasturage and a crop of barley is "doing business," in the sense in which this expression is used in said section 394 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The evident purpose of this section of the Code, as was held in City of Stockton v. Wilson, 79 Cal. App. 422, 424, 249 P. 835, 836, "is to guard against local prejudices which sometimes exist in favor of litigants within a county as against those from without and to secure to both parties to a suit a trial upon neutral ground." It is apparent from the terms of this section of the Code that the Legislature was of the opinion that a person doing business in a county would have an unfair advantage over a city situated without said county, in the trial of an action in which such person and such city were arrayed against each other. It accordingly provided that, in an action in which the parties were so situated, the city might have the place of trial of said action changed to some other county, where such condition did not prevail.

The section is remedial in its purpose, and should for that reason receive a liberal construction. Strictly speaking, it might be said that persons "doing business" are confined to those engaged in merchantable pursuits, such as merchants or others carrying on trade or commerce, and it is in this sense, plaintiff contends, that the words are used in said section 394. The expression "doing business" has frequently been the subject of judicial determination, principally in proceedings wherein the right of a corporation to transact business in a state other than that in which it is organized and has its principal place of business was under consideration. In at least one instance it has been held that "to do business * * * is 'to carry on any particular occupation or employment for a livelihood or gain, as agriculture, trade, mechanic arts, or profession.'" George R. Barse L. S. Com'n Co. v. Range Val. Cattle Co., 16 Utah, 59, 65, 50 P. 630, 632.

In none of the numerous decisions upon the subject do we find that the courts have given the words "doing business" the narrow construction contended for it by the appellant. In one of these cases, cited by appellant, this court held that the mere owning of land in this state by a foreign corporation and the execution and delivery of a deed of said land was not the transaction of business by such foreign corporation. The court further held that the phrase "to transact business," as used in the Constitution, was equivalent to the words "to do business" (General Conference Free Baptists v. Berkey, 156 Cal. 466, 105 P. 411).

There was nothing before the court in that case which showed that the foreign corporation owning said land was engaged in raising crops thereon, or that it did any other act in connection therewith than transfer the same by deed executed by it. We think it is more in keeping with the remedial purpose of section 394 to give the words this broader and more liberal meaning than to restrict them, as contended for by the appellant, to the narrow meaning signifying those only who are engaged in trade or commerce. A person may become as intimately identified with the affairs of a community, and as closely associated with the people of such community in the ownership of a farm and the growing thereon of products of the soil as those who are engaged in carrying on a store or conducting a mill or foundry in the same community. In the event of a suit instituted by him against a city situated as the defendant city in this action finds itself, the same local prejudices could well exist in his favor and against said city as if the plaintiff in said action were the grocer or the hardware merchant in said community. We think the intent of the section of the code was to cover just such cases as well as those where the parties plaintiff were actually engaged in some strictly commercial venture. We find nothing in City of Stockton v. Wilson, supra, in conflict with such a conclusion.

[3] The further contention is made that there was no showing that the plaintiff was engaged in farming the land or growing crops thereon at the commencement of the action. It is alleged in plaintiff's complaint that it was, at the commencement of the action, the owner of said land, and that defendant threatened to and would, unless enjoined by this court, continue to discharge upon plaintiff's said land large volumes of water from the Sacramento river, thereby "destroying all crops growing thereon." We think this a sufficient allegation from which it might well be inferred that at the commencement of the action plaintiff had growing crops on said land, and in the absence of any denial whatever on plaintiff's part that it was, at the commencement of the action, engaged in growing crops upon its said land, such an allegation will support the implied finding of the court that plaintiff was, at the commencement of the action, engaged in producing crops on its said land.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, J.; TYLER, Justice pro tem.

204 Cal. 702

Lizzie H. GLIDE, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. CITY OF SACRAMENTO (a Municipal Corporation), Defendant and Respondent. (Sac. 3995.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 11, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 9, 1928.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Huston, Huston & Huston, of Sacramento, for appellant.

R. L. Shinn, of Sacramento, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The order granting defendant's motion for a change of venue in this action is affirmed, on the authority of Finance and Construction Co. of California v. City of Sacramento (Sac. No. 3996) 269 P. 167, this day decided. The only difference in the two cases is that in this case the plaintiff is a private person, while in case No. 3996 the plaintiff is a corporation. This difference is not material to any question involved herein.

204 Cal. 501

SMITH v. SHERMAN et ux. (L. A. 9430.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 14, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 13, 1928.

1. Trusts $\S$ 44(2)—Evidence held to support finding that husband's quitclaim deed to wife did not convey land in trust (Civ. Code, $\S$ 164).

Court's finding that husband's quitclaim deed conveyed land to wife, not in trust to convey, but absolutely for a valuable consideration, held supported by evidence that they were living in strained relationship at time, and that she had power of attorney to convey property, and presumption, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 164, that deed was intended to vest all his title in wife as her separate estate.

2. Trusts $\S$ 365(2)—Husband, not asserting claim of trust for 20 years after executing quitclaim deed to wife, held guilty of laches, barring relief.

Husband, not asserting claim that his quitclaim deed to wife conveyed land in trust to convey until 20 years after its execution nor any claim to home purchased by wife with proceeds of sale of such land for 14 years after its purchase, held guilty of laches, precluding establishment of trust in such home after wife's death.

3. Trusts ¶87—Husband's affidavits, testimony, and petitions, as administrator, in probate and homestead proceedings, held admissible in suit to establish trust in deceased wife's realty.

Affidavits, testimony, and petitions of husband, as administrator of his deceased wife's estate, in probate and homestead proceedings, held properly admitted in evidence, in his suit to establish trust in home purchased by wife with proceeds of land conveyed to her by his quitclaim deed, to show that he regarded property as her separate estate and received benefit of law entitling him to homestead therein for life.

4. Trusts ¶89(2) — Husband's assertion of trust 20 years after executing quitclaim deed to wife held insufficient to establish trust in realty purchased with proceeds of land conveyed.

Husband's claim of trust in realty purchased by wife with proceeds of land conveyed to her by his quitclaim deed held without merit, in absence of any other indication of intent to establish trust than his assertion, some 20 years after executing deed, in contradiction of his own prior written statement, testimony, and acts as administrator of wife's estate in probate and homestead proceedings.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Herschel M. Smith against Robert W. Sherman and wife. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

I. W. Bane, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fogel & Beman and Dryer, Castle & Harke, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Appeal by plaintiff from judgment in favor of defendants. The complaint was in the usual form of a quiet title suit, but upon the filing of answer and cross-complaint by defendants it was amended to declare a trust in real property, and under such pleadings, upon request of the parties, the question of title to the property was tried.

The appeal is utterly without merit and the various contentions of appellant scarcely warrant discussion. The claim which he asserts to the property in question is based upon a quitclaim deed made by him more than 20 years ago, conveying certain land owned by him as his separate estate to his wife, from sale of which she presumably acquired the funds to purchase later the home which is the subject of this action. His contention now is that said deed was made simply as a trust to convey and without intention of passing title. The arguments advanced by him present, in reality, but the sole query as to whether the findings and judgment are supported by the evidence. That they are amply supported is plain beyond the shadow of a doubt.

[1, 2] The court found that the property covered by the quitclaim deed was not conveyed to the wife in trust for the husband, but, on the contrary, found, according to direct evidence, that she did in fact buy it from him and that said transfer was made for a valuable consideration. The evidence shows that the wife and husband were living in strained relationship at the time. It also shows that she had a power of attorney, which would have enabled her to convey the property. The form of the deed itself, in the light of the circumstances and presumption of law (section 164, Civ. Code), leaves little doubt that it was intended to vest all his title in the wife as her separate estate. The court also found that appellant was guilty of laches, and that his cause of action, if any he had, was barred by the statute of limitations. The truth of this finding, as to laches, at least, cannot be questioned in the face of the fact that appellant for 20 years after execution of said quitclaim deed failed to assert his claim and for 14 years after purchase of the home likewise asserted no claim whatsoever to it.

[3] When the wife passed away she devised the home to her son, respondent Robert W. Sherman, and upon petition of appellant himself, as administrator with the will annexed of her estate, it was duly distributed by decree of distribution to said respondent, subject to homestead for life in appellant. Appellant attacks the finding that the various affidavits, testimony, and petitions made by him as administrator in the probate proceedings, praying for distribution of said property to respondent, subject to the life homestead in himself, and the similar recognition made by him in the homestead proceedings that said home was the separate property of deceased, should estop him from asserting any other right, title, or interest in or to said property and that the respective claims of the parties have already been adjudicated by said probate court.

[4] It is not necessary to discuss the effect of the orders made in the probate and homestead proceedings as res adjudicata on the matters determined thereby. The probate and homestead exhibits were properly admitted in evidence as proof of the fact that appellant had regarded the property as the separate estate of deceased and received the benefit of the law predicated upon that basis. But even were such admissions removed from our consideration, we would find ample support for the claim of respondents. There is absolutely no indication that a trust was ever established or intended to be established in the wife, save and except an assertion to that effect made by the husband some 20 years later in contradiction of his own prior written statement, testimony, and repeated acts to the contrary. The claim of appellant is entirely without merit.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

204 Cal. 540

PENNELL v. STANLEY W. SMITH, Inc.
(L. A. 8674.)

Supreme Court of California. July 17, 1928.

Sales §396—Buyer could recover payment made on automobile for partial failure of consideration, in action to rescind for fraudulent representations regarding its condition (Civ. Code, § 1689, subd. 2).

In action by buyer to rescind purchase of secondhand automobile on ground of fraudulent misrepresentations touching state of repair, judgment for buyer for amount of purchase price paid held supported by pleadings, findings, and evidence on basis of rescission for partial failure of consideration under Civ. Code, § 1689, subd. 2.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action upon a conditional sales contract by W. C. Pennell against Stanley W. Smith, Inc. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 265 P. 957.

Newby & Palmer and Dee Holder, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. O. Leake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. The appeal is by defendant, as seller, from a judgment for plaintiff, as a buyer, for $700, the amount paid on the purchase price, in an action to rescind the purchase under formal written contract dated May 6, 1923, of a secondhand Packard automobile. As finally amended, count 1 of the complaint is denominated a cause of action to rescind for fraudulent misrepresentations touching the state of repair and mechanical condition of the car and specifying in detail these defects; alleging also a return of the car to the seller. Count 2 is for the same relief upon mutual consent of the parties. The answer is a denial of the fraud charged, and contains also a specific denial of all general and special allegations touching the poor state of repair and imperfect mechanical condition of the car.

From the findings it may be stated that the fraud was negatived and the rescission by mutual consent sustained. The appellant asserts a dearth of evidence to support mutual rescission. The question is debatable, but in our view of the situation it becomes unimportant. The judgment is supported by the pleadings, by the findings, and by the evidence upon the basis of a rescission for partial failure of consideration under subdivision 2, § 1689, of the Civil Code. See, also, Richter v. Union Land, etc., Co., 129 Cal. 367, 62 P. 39; Sterling v. Gregory, 149 Cal. 117, 85 P. 305; Campbell v. Kennedy, 177 Cal. 430, 433, 170 P. 1107; Blahnik v. Small Farms Imp. Co., 181 Cal. 379, 184 P. 661.

The complaint pleads the warranty of good repair and condition and the findings follow it. The written contract introduced in evidence provided for it as follows:

"It is agreed that said automobile is now in good repair and condition, and that this instrument contains the entire agreement between the parties."

The complaint also specifies in detail, as above stated, the defects. The answer puts in issue their existence. Evidence was introduced by both parties on the issue, and the court found the allegations of the complaint were correct and specified in detail the defects and lack of repair of said car. The evidence amply supports the findings, and this fact could not be seriously controverted.

Defendant has therefore had a full day in court upon every issue involved in the cause of action for a rescission for partial failure of consideration, which we hold to be included within the allegations of the cause of action denominated an action for fraud. Of course, we are not meaning to state that in every action for rescission of a sale for fraud such cause of action may be found, but what we are intending to state is that in this particular case a cause of action for partial failure of consideration is found.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.

204 Cal. 542

NISSEN v. CORDUA IRR. DIST.★
(Sac. 3912.)

Supreme Court of California. July 17, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 16, 1928.

Waters and water courses §261—Irrigation district held not liable for refusal of its officers and agents to furnish landowner his proportion of available water (California Irrigation District Act [St. 1897, p. 254] as amended and supplemented).

Irrigation district organized under California Irrigation District Act (St. 1897, p. 254), as amended and supplemented, may not be held liable for damages for refusal of its officers and agents to furnish landowner in the district his proportion of the available water where district had the admitted ability to furnish it.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County;
Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by G. A. Nissen against the Cordua Irrigation District. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank A. Duryea, of Marysville, for appellant.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal following the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend. The complaint is one for damages for loss of a crop of rice resulting from the defendant's alleged refusal to deliver irrigation water to the rice lands of the plaintiff. Briefly and in substance it is alleged that the defendant is organized and existing under the California Irrigation District Act (Stats. 1897, p. 254, and acts supplementary to and amendatory thereof); that the district had acquired a large volume of water for the irrigation of the lands within the district; that during the rice-growing season of 1925 the district had and controlled water, as well as the necessary canals, ditches, flumes, etc., more than sufficient to irrigate properly all of the land within the district, including the 260 acres of land held under lease by the plaintiff, of which approximately 250 acres had been planted to rice and of which planting defendant had notice; that the plaintiff made repeated demands upon the defendant for an apportionment to his land within the district of an amount of water necessary and sufficient to irrigate the 1925 rice crop thereon; that defendant failed, refused, and neglected to deliver such water except a limited and insufficient amount thereof, but that on the contrary defendant diverted large quantities of irrigation water from the district to lands without the district, by reason whereof 140 acres of plaintiff's rice crop was totally lost, to his damage in the sum of $25,000. A general and special demurrer was interposed to this complaint. The trial court held the special demurrer to be good and would have permitted an amendment to cure the defects in the complaint. But the court also held that as the defendant was not liable in such an action in any event the general demurrer must be sustained without leave to amend, on the authority of Whiteman v. Anderson Cottonwood Irr. Dist., 60 Cal. App. 234, 212 P. 703. The question is therefore directly presented as to whether the district itself may be held liable for damages for the refusal of its officers and agents to furnish to a landowner in the district his proportion of the available water, having the admitted ability to furnish the same.

In the Whiteman Case an action was brought against an irrigation district organized under the same act and the directors thereof for damages for the death of the minor son of the plaintiff, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendants. A general and special demurrer to the complaint was sustained. The plaintiff declined to amend, and judgment was entered dismissing the action. The complaint alleged that the defendants negligently left and permitted to remain at night on a highway within the district certain sacks of cement and other material which obstructed the highway and that no light or other signal or warning or any protection against danger was provided. The District Court of Appeal entered upon an extended consideration of the nature and character of an irrigation district organized under such act, referring to In re Madera Irrigation District, 92 Cal. 296, 28 P. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106, where it was held that such a district is a "public corporation for governmental purposes"; to Jenison v. Redfield, 149 Cal. 500, 87 P. 62, where the district was called a "public corporation"; to Lindsay-Strathmore Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 182 Cal. 315, 187 P. 1056, where it was denominated a "public agency"; to Turlock Irr. Dist. v. White, 186 Cal. 183, 193 P. 1060, 17 A. L. R. 72, where it was called a "public corporation for municipal purposes," citing Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 S. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369; to People ex rel. v. Reclamation Dist. No. 551, 117 Cal. 114, 48 P. 1016, where a reclamation district was stated to be a "state organization for state purposes." The court then concluded that a district organized under the California Irrigation District Act must be deemed a public agency created for a public purpose and as such is not subject to an action for damages resulting from the negligence of its officers or agents in the absence of a statute expressly imposing such liability, and that the language of the act authorizing the board "to sue, appear and defend" in all courts, actions, suits or proceedings (section 15b, Stats. 1917, p. 758) did not enlarge the liability of the defendant and applied only to such actions as a public corporation might be subject to in carrying out its purposes. The court also decided, pursuant to familiar principles applying to municipal corporations, that as there was no allegation in the complaint that the district was promoting a proprietary right in the use of the cement, nor any allegation of personal participation, etc., by the directors or of negligence in the selection by them of employees, the complaint did not state a cause of action either against the district or the directors.

While the facts which gave rise to the present action are different from those in the Whiteman Case, we think the application of the law should be the same in both. In the Whiteman Case the plaintiff alleged affirmative acts of negligence. In the present case the complaint is based upon the negligent or willful omission to perform a duty imposed by statute. In each the case is grounded in tort and the district itself is no more bound in the one case than in the other. It may be that a sound public policy should demand that the district itself be bound in a case of this kind, but until the state has directed or permitted its agency to be so bound we do not feel justified under established law in holding it liable.

With reference to similar public agencies the Legislature has declared that the district itself be liable. For instance, section 3464 of the Political Code provides:

"The negligence of a trustee or trustees of a reclamation district shall be imputed to the district to the same extent as if the reclamation district were a private corporation, and the reclamation district shall have power and authority to levy assessments for the purpose of paying any damages so incurred, said damages to be deemed incidental expenses of the district."

We find no similar law of this state, either in substance or effect, applicable to an irrigation district. Reclamation districts and irrigation districts are public agencies of the same general character and organized to accomplish similar objects. Each is aimed to aid in the productivity of land, the one to drain surplus water therefrom and the other to supply water thereto. Lindsay-Strathmore Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 182 Cal. 315, 187 P. 1056. The Whiteman Case was decided in 1922, and in the intervening years the Legislature has not seen fit to subject an irrigation district to liability for damages on account of the torts of its officers. Until the Legislature had directed otherwise, it must be held that the district itself is not liable.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

204 Cal. 504

BLACK v. MEYER. (L. A. 9180.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 14, 1923.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 13, 1928.

1. Executors and administrators ~~§~~221(9)—Evidence in suit to establish claim against estate held insufficient to sustain finding that note was executed and delivered and unpaid (Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3).

In suit to recover on claim against estate of deceased, consisting of note claimed to have been executed by deceased, evidence held insufficient to support finding that note had been executed, delivered for valuable consideration, or that it was not intentionally destroyed and that it was uncanceled and unpaid, without regard to competency of testimony, under Code Civ. Proc. 1880, subd. 3.

2. Bills and notes ~~§~~499—Maker's possession of note before death with finding thereof on dead body gives rise to disputable presumption as to payment and cancellation (Code Civ. Proc. § 1961, and section 1963, subds. 9, 13, and 20).

Fact that note on which claim against estate was based or signature thereto was in possession of the maker before his death and was found on his dead body gives rise to certain disputable presumptions under Code Civ. Proc. § 1961, and section 1963, subds. 9, 13, and 20 as to payment and cancellation, which are binding when uncontroverted by other evidence.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Suit by C. W. Dorris against Mabel V. Meyer, executrix of the estate of Henry D. Meyer, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals, and, C. W. Dorris having subsequently died, the appeal is prosecuted against Alfred L. Black as executor. Reversed.

Hahn & Hahn, of Pasadena, and O'Melveny, Millikin, Tuller & Macneil, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. I. Gilbert and Frank P. Doherty, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This suit was commenced by C. W. Dorris. He subsequently died, and defendant's appeal is therefore prosecuted against his executor. The action is one to recover upon a creditor's claim filed against the estate of Henry D. Meyer, deceased, based upon an alleged promissory note dated November 26, 1923, executed by decedent to said C. W. Dorris, payable six months after date, in the principal sum of $25,000, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum.

The peculiar facts of the case are that no note was produced nor was any direct evidence of its execution offered. In the creditor's claim, which contains only what purports to be a true copy of said note, it is stated, as was likewise asserted upon the trial, that the original thereof was totally destroyed with the exception of a fragment found upon the dead body of the alleged maker, upon which appears a signature and a small portion of the printing, as follows:

"This note or any portion thereof I promise court may adjudge reasonable as attorney's fees in said suit.

"[Signed] Henry D. Meyer."

Section 1880, subd. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, provides that a party to an action against an executor upon a claim against the estate of a deceased person cannot be a witness as to any matter or fact occurring before the death of such deceased person. By reason of the prohibition of this section such testimony of plaintiff, C. W. Dorris, as was admitted over the objection of defendant, was extremely limited. The court did permit him, however, to identify the fragment as having been torn from a document of which the note set forth in the claim was a copy and that he last saw it in the outer coat pocket of said Henry Meyer, deceased.

The substance of the testimony of other witnesses was that Dorris and Meyer had had certain business relations and in the year prior to Meyer's death had endeavored to make some settlement of their affairs; that during said period Dorris had been seen in possession of a $25,000 note apparently executed by Meyer, which he exhibited on several occasions and even had copied; that Meyer had likewise mentioned to various people a $25,000 note held by Dorris, but he had emphatically declared more than once that he would never pay it. Handwriting experts testified for both parties, differing materially in their opinion as to the age of the paper, although the signature was positively identified as that of Meyer. Police Detective Moseley testified to having removed said fragment from the body of Mr. Meyer after his death—from his pocket on the outside of his coat.

The court found, among other things, that said note was executed and delivered to Dorris for a valuable consideration; that the original thereof was not voluntarily, intentionally, or maliciously destroyed, but remained a legal and binding obligation and valid claim against the estate of said Meyer; and that no part thereof had been paid. Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of plaintiff for $27,154.15, being the principal sum of said note, with interest, less a small offset.

The appeal is based primarily upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, especially in view of the undisputed fact that the fragment of paper was in possession of Meyer and found upon his body. Appellant also complains of prejudicial error committed by the court in permitting plaintiff, Dorris, to testify to matters and facts which occurred prior to the death of Meyer, in violation of said section 1880, subd. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

As to the latter contention the record shows plainly that in the examination of plaintiff both court and counsel were careful in their efforts to limit the questions and replies to matters not within the inhibition of said section. Whether it was proper to permit identification through his testimony of the note set forth in the claim as that copied by Miss Tompkins prior to the death, the original of which was destroyed, is doubtful. As said in Re Kitchen, 192 Cal. 384, 391, 220 P. 301, 303 (30 A. L. R. 1008) the purpose of the rule declared in said section is "to prevent a claimant from mulcting an estate by proving by claimant's own testimony that which the decedent might perhaps disprove were his lips not sealed by death. Its declared purpose is to protect the estate from the possibility of fraud, perjury, and injustice." Determination of this question, however, becomes unnecessary, as the other grounds urged require a reversal of the judgment.

[1] Bearing in mind and giving full weight to all testimony indicating that, at a time not long before the death of said Meyer, Dorris did in fact hold his note for $25,000, we are confronted with this situation: There was offered no evidence whatsoever, except the testimony of Dorris himself, identifying the fragment as a portion of the instrument set forth in the claim. There was offered no direct evidence of execution of the note. There was no actual proof of any indebtedness of Meyer to Dorris. There was offered no evidence directly connecting the instrument copied prior to the death with the alleged document destroyed prior thereto and said document with the fragment of paper. There was no proof that the note had not been canceled. There was no proof that it had not been paid. There was no explanation of its undisputed possession by the maker. There was no explanation of the fact that the signature had been torn from the body of the note, if such was the fact. There was no proof that the alleged document had not been destroyed voluntarily, willfully, or intentionally, or for purposes of cancellation. In short, the record contains not one word of evidence to support the findings that said note was executed, that it was delivered for a valuable consideration, that it was not intentionally destroyed, and that it was uncanceled and unpaid.

[2] The very fact that said alleged note, or the signature thereto, was in the possession of the maker before his death and was found upon his dead body, gives rise to certain disputable presumptions as to payment and cancellation, which are binding upon the court when, as here, they are uncontroverted by other evidence (section 1961, Code Civ. Proc.) to-wit: "That an obligation delivered up to the debtor has been paid" (subdivision 9); "that a person in possession of an order on himself for the payment of money * * * has paid the money * * *" (subdivision 13); "that the ordinary course of business has been followed" (subdivision 20, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc.).

Light v. Stevens, 159 Cal. 288, 113 P. 659, is an exact converse of the case at bar. There as here the lips of one of the parties to the transaction were closed by death and those of the other party by law, so evidence on the question of payment of the note was somewhat unsatisfactory. The court held that just as an obligation delivered up to the debtor is presumed to have been paid, so the converse of this, that possession by the payee is prima facie evidence of nonpayment, is universally held, further saying:

"* * * It would be quite a departure from 'the ordinary course of business' which is presumed to have been followed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 20), to pay the full amount due on a note without receiving the note from the payee or, if it cannot be delivered, some other evidence of payment. Griffith v. Lewin, 125 Cal. 618, 58 P. 205."

The converse of the latter statement is likewise true and here directly applicable. It would surely be quite a departure from the ordinary course of business to surrender possession of an unpaid note and permit the signature thereto to remain in the hands of the maker.

The case of Turner v. Turner, 79 Cal. 365, 21 P. 959, is also directly in point. The notes there involved were made by one J. T. Turner to his brother, whose administrator was plaintiff in the action. Both brothers were dead before the suit was commenced. There was no direct evidence for or against the payment. Plaintiff did not produce the notes at the trial or give any satisfactory explanation of their absence; the last seen of them was that they were in possession of the maker. The court said:

"The possession of the notes is a material circumstance in relation to the question of payment. Possession by the maker raises a rebuttable presumption of payment. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 9; Greenl. Ev. § 527; Zeigler v. Gray, 12 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 42; Lipscomb v. DeLemos, 68 Ala. 592; Carroll v. Bowie, 7 Gill. [Md.] 41. * * * And upon this principle it has been held in this state that if payment is denied the onus is upon the plaintiff to prove the nonpayment at least by the production of the note. Farmers' Bank v. Christensen, 51 Cal. 572. In other words, if the plaintiff does not produce the note or account for its absence, the presumption is against him."

Thus even if the competency of plaintiff's testimony, the indebtedness of Meyer to Dorris and execution and delivery of the note of which said fragment was a portion, were conceded, there would still remain the unexplained and decisive fact that the undestroyed portion of the alleged obligation was admittedly found in possession of the maker. This would indicate that said obligation had been met, the note returned to the maker, and that, for the purpose of canceling it in accordance with his custom as shown by the evidence, he tore off the signature thereto. Section 3204 of the Civil Code provides that:

"* * * Where an instrument or any signature thereon appears to have been canceled the burden of proof lies on the party who alleges that the cancellation was made unintentionally, or under a mistake or without authority."

Here not only did plaintiff fail to meet the burden of proof resting upon him, but he utterly failed to offer any proof controverting said appearance of cancellation.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

93 Cal. App. 124

OLSON v. RANKER et al. (Civ. 6334.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 9, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇨907(2)—In absence of evidence in record to sustain specification of error that decision was contrary to evidence, findings and judgment must be presumed sustained.

Where record was brought up on bill of exceptions which was so incomplete, ambiguous, and unintelligible that appellate court found it impossible to obtain a clear understanding of the facts, specifications of error therein being that decision was contrary to the law and the evidence, and no evidence was set out in bill of exceptions, evidence must be presumed sufficient to justify trial court's findings and judgment.

2. Appeal and error ⇨901—Appellate court cannot presume error was committed, but burden is on appellant to show it.

Appellate court cannot presume that error was committed, but burden is on appellant, who claims error, to show its existence by presenting a record showing error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Hazel B. Olson against Frank X. Ranker and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Hocker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Irvin C. Taplin and Clifford Crail, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem. The plaintiff, Hazel B. Olson, brought this action to foreclose the rights of defendants in certain real property situate in the city of Los Angeles. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and the court found, among other things, that plaintiff had no right, title, or interest in the property described in the complaint, and rendered judgment in favor of defendants, from which judgment the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1] The record is brought up under what appellant calls "A Bill of Exceptions," but which is so incomplete, ambiguous, and unintelligible that we find it impossible to obtain a clear understanding of the facts. Neither does the opening brief of appellant assist us in determining what facts were presented to the trial court, nor have the attorneys for the respondent seen fit to assist us in any way; in fact, they have filed a stipulation agreeing to submit the appeal upon the opening brief of appellant.

The specifications of error in the so-called "Bill of Exceptions" are:

"(a) That the decision is contrary to law; (b) that the decision is contrary to the evidence and not supported by the pleadings nor by the testimony."

There is no evidence set forth in the bill of exceptions. It appears, however, that this case was submitted to the trial court upon the evidence taken in a case entitled "Peters v. McFate, No. 174484," pending in the superior court of Los Angeles county, but not one word of the evidence taken in that case is shown anywhere in this record on appeal.

[2] In view of this situation, we must presume that the evidence was sufficient to justify the findings and judgment of the trial court. This court cannot indulge in the presumption that error was committed; the burden is upon appellant, who claims error, to show its existence. It was therefore incumbent upon appellant to present a record which affirmatively shows the existence of alleged error. Foster v. Young, 172 Cal. 317, 156 P. 476; 2 Cal. Jur. 697. No such record is here presented. Furthermore, the conclusions of law and judgment are supported by the findings of fact.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

93 Cal. App. 174

PEOPLE v. COOK. (Cr. 1463.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 13, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 11, 1928.

1. Homicide §254—Evidence held to sustain conviction of murder in second degree for causing death of woman while performing criminal operation.

Evidence held to sustain conviction of murder in second degree for causing death of pregnant woman while operating on her for purpose of producing an abortion.

2. Criminal law §1168(2)—Showing declarations of coconspirator, not in defendant's presence, before showing conspiracy, though misconduct, held not prejudicial, in view of subsequent evidence of conspiracy.

In prosecution for causing death of woman while performing criminal operation on her, conduct of prosecuting attorney in attempting to show certain declarations by defendant's alleged coconspirator, not in defendant's presence, tending to incriminate defendant before existence of conspiracy had been shown, though misconduct, held not prejudicial, resulting in miscarriage of justice, in view of evidence subsequently adduced tending to show conspiracy, instruction to jury to disregard questions, and conclusive evidence of defendant's guilt.

3. Homicide §291—Instruction held to have sufficiently presented necessity of establishing fact that instrument used in performing criminal operation was such as would produce abortion.

In prosecution for causing death of pregnant woman while performing criminal operation on her, instruction that, among elements necessary to be established, it must be shown that defendant employed instrument on deceased with intent to produce miscarriage, and that direct and proximate cause of her death was use of such instrument, was a sufficient instruction that instrument used was such as would produce an abortion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

E. R. Cook was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph P. Lacey, of Oakland, and Frank W. Hooper, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CASHIN, J. The defendant was charged by an information filed in the superior court of Alameda county with the murder of Elizabeth Buckles. Upon the trial the jury returned a verdict of murder of the second degree, and from the judgment thereon and an order denying a motion for a new trial, the defendant appealed.

As grounds for reversal it is contended that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict; that the conduct of the prosecuting attorney during the course of the trial was prejudicial to the rights of the defendant; that the court erred in admitting certain evidence over objection, and failed to instruct the jury upon matters material to the defense.

[1] The evidence shows that on December 20, 1927, an operation for the purpose of producing an abortion was performed upon Elizabeth Buckles, who was pregnant, and who died on the operating table. According to the testimony of Josephine Risius, she, with one Cole, assisted in the operation, which was performed by defendant. She testified that chloroform was administered by Cole and that the woman while under its influence, but during the course of the operation, died. Physicians who made a post mortem examination testified that the woman was pregnant; that the cavity of the uterus was dilated; that within the same was found a partially dismembered foetus and placental tissue, much of which had been torn from the walls of the uterus; and that the head and one of the lower limbs had been torn from the body of the foetus. A physician further testified that some outside influence, substance, or metal instrument had been used to dilate the cervix, testifying that in his opinion the major cause of death was hemorrhage and shock. Although the defendant denied that he assisted in the operation, it is admitted that he was present in the office maintained by Cole about the time the death occurred and aided Cole and the witness Risius in an attempt to revive the deceased. On this occasion, according to another witness, he was clad in a gown of the kind worn by surgeons in the operating room. It further appears that Cole was not a licensed physician, although representing himself to be such; that the defendant frequently visited his office, where were found instruments and paraphernalia used in the performance of such operations. It was further shown that after the death of Mrs. Buckles, but before the discovery of her body by the authorities, a person employed in the building in which the office mentioned was situated was requested by defendant to deny in case inquiry should be made that the latter had been associated with Cole. Other circumstances were shown strongly tending to connect the defendant with the death, and the evidence adduced was ample to sustain the conclusions of the jury.

[2] The prosecution, before laying a foundation for such testimony by showing the existence of a conspiracy between Cole, Risius, and the defendant, the objective of which was the performance of criminal operations, attempted to show by questions to witnesses certain declarations by Cole, not in the presence of the defendant, tending to incriminate the latter. The asking of these questions was assigned as prejudicial misconduct on the part of the prosecution, as were also certain questions asked of the defendant and his son on cross-examination. While the former was subject to objection when propounded, nevertheless, in view of the evidence subsequently adduced, which tended to show such conspiracy and the instruction to the jury to disregard the questions, we cannot say that they were prejudicial, and certainly not to a degree to warrant a reversal of the judgment. The same is true of those asked on the cross-examination, for while one of the latter was an inquiry as to whether the witness knew that a certain act of fraud had been committed by the defendant, which, if true, had no connection with the charge being tried by the jury, nevertheless, after a careful examination of the entire record, including the evidence, which leaves no reasonable doubt of guilt, we are satisfied that the acts of the prosecuting attorney, although misconduct, did not prevent the defendant from having a fair trial or result in a miscarriage of justice.

[3] It is further contended that it was the duty of the court to instruct the jury that, before a conviction could be had, they must find that the instrument or instruments used, if any, were such as would produce an abortion and that no such instruction was given. An examination of the record shows the contrary, as the jury was charged that, among the elements necessary to be established before a conviction might be had, it must be shown beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant had used or employed an instrument in or upon the uterus of the deceased with the intent to produce a miscarriage, and that the direct and proximate cause of her death was the use of such instrument.

A motion by the defendant in arrest of judgment was properly denied, and the record discloses no error in the rulings of the trial court.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

93 Cal. App. 81

PEOPLE v. MOUNT. (Cr. 1636.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 5, 1928.

1. Homicide $\S$ 203(3)—Statement of deceased, voluntarily made when she justifiably believed she would not get well, held admissible as "dying declaration."

Statement of deceased held admissible as "dying declaration" in murder case, where she had of her own volition, on several occasions prior to making thereof, expressed to her sister and doctor the belief that she would not get well, and her condition was such as to justify her belief.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Dying Declarations.]

2. Criminal law $\S$ 516—Defendant's statements to witnesses held admissible as admissions, and did not constitute confession.

Statements made by defendant in murder case in conversation with witnesses held admissible in evidence as admissions, and did not constitute a confession.

3. Homicide $\S$ 169(6)—Testimony of having seen surgical instruments in chiropractor's office about three years before treatment of deceased held competent to rebut defendant's testimony denying possession of such instruments.

In prosecution for murder against chiropractor, resulting from alleged abortion performed by him, testimony of a physician that he had seen certain surgical instruments in defendant's office about three years before defendant had treated deceased, offered in rebuttal of defendant's testimony denying that he had any surgical instruments in his office, held admissible to impeach such testimony, and was not incompetent as too remote.

4. Homicide $\S$ 282—Under charge of murder, jury might convict of manslaughter, notwithstanding district attorney argued death resulted from abortion.

Under a charge of murder, jury could find defendant guilty of any lesser offense included within the charge, and fact that district attorney believed defendant committed abortion and urged on jury that theory of case did not limit jury to finding verdict requested so as to preclude conviction for manslaughter, where there was substantial evidence that deceased came to her death by reason of gross negligence of defendant in treatment administered to her.

5. Homicide ☞33—That chiropractor, in treating patient, used instruments not permitted by his license, held in itself negligence.

That defendant in murder case used instruments in the treatment of his patient which his license as a chiropractic physician did not permit him to use held in itself negligence.

6. Homicide ☞250—Evidence held sufficient to support verdict of manslaughter against chiropractor, based on death of patient treated by him.

In prosecution against chiropractor for murder based on death of patient treated by him, evidence held sufficient to support verdict of manslaughter.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Charles O. Mount was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John A. Deweese and Josiah Coombs, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Paul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. Appellant was charged by information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county with the crime of murder. From the judgment upon a verdict of guilty of manslaughter, and an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial, this appeal is prosecuted.

Four assignments of error are stated, as follows:

"First. A dying declaration, or statement, was admitted in evidence contrary to law, and to the injury of this appellant. The said declaration is set forth on pages 69 and 70 of the reporter's transcript.

"Second. The statement made by the defendant, alleged to be a confession, as found on pages 33 to 70 of the reporter's transcript.

"Third. The court allowing testimony to be introduced as to instruments in Dr. Mount's Belvedere office a long time prior to the 15th of November, 1927, as found on pages 187 and 205 of the reporter's transcript, wherein the witness Dr. J. J. Mortensen testified, beginning on page 193, that in the fall of 1924 the defendant had instruments, and various instruments, that could be used to produce an abortion.

"Fourth. The fourth assignment of error relied upon by this appellant is the error in giving instructions, and the failure to give instructions, and the theory upon which this case was submitted to the jury; that is to say, that the defendant was charged with murder, or homicide."

While there is a sharp conflict in the evidence upon several material matters, there is sufficient evidence to have justified the jury in accepting the following as a fair story of the material events and circumstances relating to the case:

The deceased, Violet Van Tassel Berdue, was a young married woman of the age of 25 years. Early in October, 1927, she was taken ill with pains and dizzy spells. Attributing her suffering to the fact that she had passed her menstrual period, upon the advice of a woman friend, she consulted the defendant, who was a licensed chiropractic practitioner. After the defendant had made an examination of the patient and had listened to her story, he gave her an electric treatment, and then inserted two instruments in her vagina. She was told to return on the following day, when again an instrument resembling a clippers was inserted into her vagina. Two days later, on October 17th, she was treated by the defendant in a similar manner with instruments. On this third occasion the defendant stated to the deceased: "You are in a pretty bad condition, but I can't make you come." He then inserted a tube into the patient's vagina, with instructions that it be kept there during the night. Some time during the night she began to flow. Several days later the patient called at the defendant's office, where she was treated by him, and shortly thereafter he visited her at her home, where she was confined to her bed, suffering from vomiting and nausea, and running a high fever and a rapid pulse. She was then removed to the county hospital, where she was under the care of a regular physician, but, on November 6th, she was taken to the Angelus Hospital, where she was under the care of Dr. A. M. Hansen, a regular physician, until her death, which occurred on November 15th. At the Angelus Hospital she was given three blood transfusions, and a portion of her uterus was removed. Upon examination of the uterus, it was found to contain a portion of the afterbirth and in a diseased condition. Dr. A. F. Wagner, who performed an autopsy, testified that death was due to "acute endocarditis with septicemia following abortion."

On November 10th, when apparently the patient's condition was regarded as very serious, and after she had on several occasions stated to the members of her family and the attending physician that she did not expect to recover, the deceased made what has been referred to in the record as a dying declaration, which reads as follows:

"State of California, County of Los Angeles—ss:

"Violet Van Tassel, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: That she is above the age of twenty-one years, a resident of 419 West 57th St., Los Angeles, Calif., and a competent witness. That on October 14th, 1927, at about 7 p. m., she went to the office of Dr. O. C. Mount at Avalon and Vernon streets, Los Angeles, and the nurse there said, 'All right, come on in.' I said, 'I am the girl that Allie sent.' The nurse then put an electric pad on her stomach. Then Dr. Mount came in and said, 'All right, come on in here.' Then he put a spoon in me to open me up and then another instrument like a pair of clippers in me. That on October 15th, 1927, at about 9 a. m., affiant went again to the office of Dr. Mount and the nurse put a big light over me for about an hour and then she was taken into another room. The doctor said, 'Good morning, how do you feel.' Affiant said, 'Not very good.' Ede was with me that morning, but did not go into the office with me. The doctor used the long slender clippers a couple of times. The doctor said 'to come back Monday night.' That on Monday, Oct. 17th, 1927, affiant went to the office of Dr. Mount at about 7 p. m. Doctor asked how I was. I told him not very well. The doctor said, 'You are in a pretty bad condition, but I can't make you come.' Then he used the clippers and inserted a red tube. This tube was left in me all night and I started coming sick. The first time affiant went to the office she told the doctor that she was about seven weeks over time and he said that he thought she was about five weeks. That on Oct. 19th, 1927, affiant went to the office of Dr. Mount and he asked how she was. I told him very bad. I said there wasn't any afterbirth. He said there wouldn't be any, as it was such a short time. On Sunday, October 23d, Dr. Mount came to the house. He asked how she felt. I told him I was sick and just passing little clots. He punched me in the stomach and back and rubbed the back of my neck. Violet Van Tassel."

After Mrs. Berdue had gone to the Angelus Hospital and was under the care of Dr. Hansen, he and her brother-in-law, Mr. Culberson, went to the office of the defendant and had a conversation with him concerning the defendant's treatment of Mrs. Berdue. According to the testimony of Dr. Hansen and Mr. Culberson, the defendant, in response to the question, "What were you treating her for?" replied, "Well, she was overdue, past her period." Other statements and admissions made by the defendant in this conversation, as testified to by Dr. Hansen and Mr. Culberson, corroborate the declaration of Mrs. Berdue that the defendant treated her to overcome a pregnant condition. Dr. Hansen testified further that several days after the first conversation defendant called at his office and inquired as to the condition of Mrs. Berdue. When informed that she was in a very serious condition, defendant stated to Dr. Hansen, "You know if she dies it means the pen for me," and that a day or two later he asked Dr. Hansen to use his influence to protect him from any trouble, and offered to pay him for any aid he would render in the matter.

[1] Appellant's first contention is that the court erred in permitting the so-called dying declaration to be read to the jury. He gives no specific reason for this assertion, except that the ruling was "contrary to the doctrine announced in the case of People v. Westcott (Cal. App.) 260 P. 901." The point is not well taken. In the Westcott Case there was no evidence whatever to indicate that the deceased, at the time he made the statement which was offered as a dying declaration, had any realization of the fact that he might pass away, or in fact that he was seriously wounded. In the instant case, Mrs. Berdue had on several occasions prior to the time that the statement was made, of her own volition, expressed to her sister and the doctor the belief that she would not get well. It also appears that her condition was such as to justify her belief. The evidence was sufficient to meet the requirements that permit the introduction of a "dying declaration."

[2] In his second point appellant does not indicate what particular testimony is the subject of his criticism other than referring to it as "the statement made by the defendant, alleged to be a confession." The pages of the reporter's transcript referred to include the testimony of two witnesses covering various matters. Among other things, these witnesses testified to a conversation with the defendant. The statement referred to as having been made by the defendant, in our opinion, did not constitute a confession. There were statements and admissions which were damaging to the defendant, but in our opinion no error was committed in permitting their introduction.

[3] It is next urged that the court committed error in permitting testimony to the effect that surgical instruments commonly used by surgeons in treating the vagina and cervix had been seen in the defendant's office by Dr. J. J. Mortensen approximately three years prior to the time that the defendant was treating Mrs. Berdue. This testimony was offered by the prosecution in rebuttal, after the defendant on the stand had testified that he had not used any instruments in treating Mrs. Berdue other than a vaginal electrode, and that he had inserted no other instrument in the vagina of this patient. He further testified that, with the exception of a wave generator, with its various electrical attachments, including the vaginal electrode, he had no other instruments in his office; and particularly he denied that he had a clippers or a catheter in his office. It was clearly pertinent to the issues involved in the case as to whether or not the defendant had used surgical instruments in treating Mrs. Berdue. Defendant was licensed only as a chiropractic doctor, and he had no legal right to practice surgery. Certainly, upon the denial that he had any surgical instruments, it was within the right of the prosecution to impeach his testimony, if possible, by showing that he had such instruments as a part of his equipment in his office where he treated his patients. It is urged that the testimony of Dr. Mortensen related to a time so remote as to make it incompetent. We cannot agree with this assertion. The question as to the time when the defendant had surgical instruments in his office may go to the weight of that testimony, but not to its competency.

[4] The fourth and last assignment of error relates to certain instructions given and which it is claimed were erroneous, as also the refusal to give several instructions requested by the defendant. We have carefully examined all of the instructions referred to, and are satisfied that but one point requires any discussion.

The court gave the usual instructions defining murder, and also the degrees of murder, including an instruction defining manslaughter. It is urged that the court committed error in giving any instruction on the subject of manslaughter, for the reason that the prosecution presented its case upon the theory that deceased came to her death from an act of abortion committed by the defendant, and that there was no issue before the jury that required an instruction on the subject of manslaughter. In support of this theory appellant cites the case of People v. Huntington, 138 Cal. 261, 70 P. 284.

There is no merit in this contention. It is too well settled to require discussion that under a charge of murder the jury may find the defendant guilty of any lesser offense that may be included within the charge, and, of course, manslaughter is so included. The fact that the district attorney believed that the defendant committed an act of abortion and urged upon the jury that theory of the case did not limit the jury to finding the verdict requested by the prosecution. There is substantial evidence in the record to justify the jury's conclusion, which undoubtedly formed the basis for the verdict, that the deceased came to her death by reason of the gross negligence of the defendant in the manner and character of the treatment he administered to her.

[5, 6] In the case of People v. Huntington, supra, there was no evidence in the record to support any theory except that the death was produced by an act of abortion committed by the defendant. Mr. Justice McFarland, in his opinion reversing the judgment of the lower court, says: "Instructions must be applicable to the facts and features of the case in hand." But assuming that there is language in the opinion in that case that furnishes some basis for appellant's contention, the case loses its effect in that respect largely because of the fact that upon a retrial of the defendant he was found guilty of manslaughter, and upon appeal the judgment was affirmed. People v. Huntington, 8 Cal. App. 612, 97 P. 760. Furthermore, there is evidence that the defendant used instruments in the treatment of the patient which his license as a chiropractic physician did not permit him to do. This in itself constituted negligence. In addition, there is expert testimony to the effect that the conditions which caused the patient's death were induced by the careless and incompetent treatment accorded the deceased by the defendant.

In our opinion, there is sufficient evidence to support the verdict of manslaughter.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur in the judgment: HOUSER, Acting P. J.; YORK, J.

93 Cal. App. 166

DICKERMAN v. AHERN et al. (Civ. 5680.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 12, 1928.

1. Creditors' suit $\S$ 46—Evidence held to sustain finding in creditor's suit that bonds which debtor's brother delivered for deposit as bail on appeal in criminal proceedings against debtor, were property of debtor.

Evidence in creditor's bill held to sustain finding that debtor was owner of bonds which his brother had taken to attorney for deposit with United States commissioner as bail on appeal in criminal proceedings against debtor.

2. Courts $\S$ 478—One court will not ordinarily issue process against property held under process of another court.

One court will not ordinarily issue process against or attempt to disturb possession of property which is held under process previously issued by another court.

3. Courts $\S$ 497—Order in creditor's suit directing payment to plaintiff of remainder of bonds deposited in United States District Court as bail on appeal, after appeal bond was satisfied, held within court's authority.

Court in creditor's suit had authority to require debtor to apply to plaintiff's claim remainder of bonds, deposited by debtor as bail on appeal in criminal case, which should not be required to satisfy appeal bond, where no process of any sort was directed to any officer of the United States District Court in which the criminal proceedings were instituted.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 169—To obtain rulings on appeal, points involved should be first presented to trial court.

Points should be first presented in trial court in order to obtain ruling thereon on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by M. Dickerman against William Ahern, also known as W. J. Ahern, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James F. Brennan, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Byrne & Lamson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff brought a creditor's bill against the defendants. They answered and a trial was had before the court, sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and from a judgment entered thereon, the defendants have appealed.

The defendants make two points. They contend the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision and they contend that the bonds hereinafter mentioned were in custodia legis, and therefore were exempt from attachment, garnishment, or levy. We will discuss these points in the order stated, but it is necessary to state some of the facts.

On October 22, 1923, a judgment was entered against William Ahern, one of these defendants, and in favor of this plaintiff. That judgment was for $3,349.61, costs, and interest. On December 4, 1923, $406.78 was credited thereon. Later such proceedings were had that the creditor's bill was filed. In the meantime William Ahern was arrested on process issued out of the United States District Court. He was tried and convicted and took an appeal. Pending his appeal, an order was made that he be admitted to bail in the sum of $5,000. As bail on appeal, the brother of William Ahern took to Joseph Connelly, who was acting as attorney for William Ahern, five $1,000 United States bonds, and Connelly deposited the bonds with the United States commissioner and took a receipt in his own name. By the creditor's bill this plaintiff sought to obtain a decree subjecting said bonds to plaintiff's claim after the said bond on appeal should have been exonerated.

[1] In presenting their attack on the findings, the defendants claim there was no evidence that William Ahern was the owner of the bonds, but that all of the evidence was to the effect that the defendant Frank Cator was the owner of the bonds. The direct evidence given by the witnesses was as contended by the defendants; but the testimony of each witness was very inexact, inaccurate, and equivocal. The brother of William Ahern, a most material witness, was not produced, nor was his absence accounted for. There were many conflicts in the story as told by the defendants. We think it is clear that there is in the record substantial evidence supporting the findings.

[2-4] As to the second point made by the defendants, it will be conceded at once that one court will not ordinarily issue process against, or attempt to disturb the possession of, property which is held under process theretofore issued by another court. Swinerton v. Oregon Pac. R. R. Co., 123 Cal. 417, 424, 56 P. 40. But that authority has no application to the facts of this case. In the case now before us the record does not disclose that the trial court issued a writ of attachment, garnishment, or any other process or order directed to any officer of the United States District Court. Its process was addressed solely to the actors before it. The point is without merit under the facts. Furthermore, the point was never presented to the trial court, and is, for the first time, presented to this court. If defendants wanted a ruling thereon, they should have made the point below. 2 Cal. Jur. 234. We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 152

Ex parte AHUMADA. (Cr. 1696.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 11, 1928.

1. Criminal law — 1218—Confinement in county jail carried out municipal court sentence to "city jail" on conviction of misdemeanor (Pen. Code, § 19, and § 1617, as added by St. 1925, p. 949).

Under Pen. Code, § 19 and § 1617, as added by St. 1925, p. 949, confinement in county jail, merely carried out terms of municipal court sentence designating "city jail" as place of confinement on conviction of misdemeanor, no matter what jailor's intention was; such designation being interchangeable with term "county jail."

2. Criminal law — 1218—One acquitted of felony after expiration of city jail sentence, served in county jail, for misdemeanor, held entitled to discharge (Pen. Code, § 19, and § 1617, as added by St. 1925, p. 949).

Imprisonment in county jail for period of sentence to "city jail" by municipal court on conviction of misdemeanor being lawful under Pen. Code, § 19, and § 1617, as added by St. 1925, p. 949, prisoner was entitled to discharge on acquittal of felony after expiration of such term as against contention that such restraint was pursuant to law authorizing it pending disposition of felony charge.

Application by Francisco Ahumada for a writ of habeas corpus to the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles. Writ granted.

John F. Groene, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

E. J. Lickley, City Prosecutor, Joe W. Matherly, and F. W. Fellows, Deputy City Prosecutors, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. On the 11th day of May, 1923, in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles, Francisco Ahumada was convicted of a misdemeanor committed in said city. On the same day he was sentenced to pay a fine of $250, or, in default thereof, to be confined in the city jail in the proportion of one day for each $10 of the fine unpaid, not to exceed 25 days. He was then taken to the Los Angeles county jail, where he remained until June 28, 1928, when he was removed to the Los Angeles city jail. It appears that on the 10th day of May, 1928, petitioner was charged by complaint with having committed a felony, and was thereafter immediately arraigned on the last-named charge and lodged in the county jail, which, it will be noted, was on the day previous to his sentence for the misdemeanor. The customary steps in the prosecution of the felony action were taken, terminating on June 28, 1928, in an acquittal of Ahumada. He thereupon at once applied to the sheriff for release, which was refused.

The theory of the petitioner is that his detention in the county jail, in all 49 days up to June 28th, was pursuant to the judgment pronounced in the municipal court case, and hence that he is now entitled to his liberty. Respondent insists that such sentence could only be satisfied by imprisonment in the city jail, and that the restraint of petitioner in the county jail was pursuant to the provisions of law authorizing the same pending disposition of the felony charge. It is conceded that the sentence for a misdemeanor might have been imprisonment in the county jail. The decisions cited shed but little light upon the question presented. Leaving the felony charge out of consideration, if, under the sentence pronounced, incarceration in the county jail was illegal, the petitioner might have been released through habeas corpus. If such imprisonment would have been lawful it is clear that he is entitled to a discharge.

[1] Section 1617 of the Penal Code (as added by St. 1925, p. 949) reads in part:

"Whenever by the terms of this Code, or of any other law of the state, it is provided that a prisoner shall be confined in any county jail, such provision shall be construed to authorize the confinement of any prisoner convicted in a municipal or police court to be confined in a city jail of the city in which such conviction was had, and as to such prisoner so confined in such city jail, the designations, county jail and city jail shall be interchangeable."

That confinement in the county jail upon the misdemeanor charge was authorized in this instance is conceded by respondent, and cannot be doubted. Pen. Code, §§ 19, 1617. We think it clear that the language above quoted from section 1617, "As to such prisoner so confined in such city jail, the designations, county jail and city jail shall be interchangeable," applies and controls here. The county jail became a city jail for the purpose of petitioner's imprisonment. It is as though the city possessed two jails and the sentence had been to one of them by name; in that case it would hardly be argued that imprisonment in either would be unlawful. Since the designation "city jail" in the sentence pronounced in the instant case is interchangeable with the term "county jail," confinement in the last-named place was but carrying out the terms of the sentence, no matter what the intention of the jailor may have been.

This conclusion is supported by authority as well as by reason. In Re Johnson, 6 Cal. App. 734, 93 P. 199, it appeared that the city of San Diego had an arrangement with the county for the use of certain cells in the county jail for city prisoners. The petitioner was convicted of a misdemeanor and sentenced to confinement in the city jail. He was lodged in one of the cells of the county jail rented by the city. It is said in the opinion: "This portion of the county jail, then, to all intents and purposes, is the city jail of the city of San Diego."

[2] The only purpose of detaining one charged with crime pending trial is to guard against his escape and to insure his presence at the trial, and his custody according to law in case of conviction. The attainment of this object and the serving of a sentence pursuant to a judgment after conviction of another criminal offense are entirely consistent. It does no violence to the principle that courts merely construe laws and do not ordinarily give weight to questions of policy to observe that the citizen's loyalty or disloyalty is often dependent upon the degree of fairness with which he is treated by his government. Although it is undoubtedly permitted by law, and justifiably so, that one charged with crime, unable to furnish bail, be held in custody of proper officers pending trial, yet the imposition of such a hardship becomes an injustice where those responsible for the administration of the law do not make all reasonable concessions to avoid it, consistent with the safety of society. Where, as here, a defendant has been pronounced innocent by a jury after trial, beyond dispute the accused was deprived of liberty to which we must admit all human beings have an absolute right. That right was disregarded for the good and protection of the public, a matter of even higher importance than the maintenance of the individual's rights. Yet a real wrong was done the petitioner, but this inequity does not result if his incarceration during the period in question was in conformity with the sentence under which he rested as a result of an offense of which he had been adjudged guilty. A fair consideration of the law prevents an injustice in this case, and in any other for which this might be a precedent.

The writ is granted.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; HAZLETT,
Justice pro tem.

93 Cal. App. 88

(269 P.)

Ex parte GRAHAM. (Cr. 1653.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 6, 1928.

1. Municipal corporations ⚡121—One charged with standing taxicab at place not designated cannot challenge constitutionality of ordinance as discriminatory without showing that any other was given permit to stand at same place.

One charged with violating city ordinance by causing his taxicab to stand elsewhere than at place designated by permit of Board of Public Utilities cannot challenge constitutionality thereof, in absence of showing that any permit was given any other taxicab owner to stand at same place, though discrimination may occur through administration of such ordinance.

2. Municipal corporations ⚡680, 681 (2)—Delegation of power to municipal officers to grant and refuse permits for occupations subject to police regulation will be sustained, though involving discretion.

Delegation of power to municipal boards or officers to grant and refuse permits to engage in occupations and businesses, which are proper subjects of police surveillance and regulation, will be sustained, though involving discretion, on theory that such officers will not use powers villainously or for purpose of oppression or mischief.

3. Municipal corporations ⚡686—No one has natural right to conduct business excluding others from particular area in street.

No one has a natural right to conduct a business involving the exclusion of others from a particular area in a public street, but such an occupation ordinarily constitutes a nuisance.

4. Municipal corporations ⚡680, 681 (8)—City council may abolish street taxicab stands.

City council has authority to abolish taxicab stands on streets, not because taxicab operators are common carriers, but because of their private use of public highways.

5. Municipal corporations ⚡683 (1)—Privilege of maintaining taxicab stand can be granted only under proper regulation, which may be confided to discretion of municipal administrative board or officer.

Privilege of maintaining taxicab stands on streets can be granted only under proper regulation, which may be properly confided to discretion of municipal administrative board or officer.

6. Constitutional law ⚡241, 297—Use of public highways by common carrier for hire is mere privilege, which may be granted or withheld without violating due process or equal protection clauses (Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

A citizen may have right, under Const. U. S. Amend. 14, to travel and transport his property on public highways by auto vehicle, but has no right to make highways his place of business by using them as common carrier for hire; such use being a privilege which may be granted or withheld by state in its discretion without violating due process or equal protection clauses.

7. Habeas corpus ⚡92 (1)—Objection to ordinance, first stated in habeas corpus petitioner's closing brief, need not be discussed.

Objection to ordinance, stated for first time in closing brief of petitioner for writ of habeas corpus to secure his release from custody after conviction of violating it, need not be discussed.

8. Habeas corpus ⚡54—Taxicab owner's habeas corpus petition, not alleging that petitioner encroached on area assigned to another for taxicab stand, held not to show discrimination invalidating ordinance (Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Petition for writ of habeas corpus, merely alleging petitioner's confinement on conviction of violating city ordinance prohibiting taxicab owners and drivers from causing such vehicles to stand elsewhere than at place designated by stated board, without showing that petitioner encroached on area assigned to owner of other such vehicles, held not to show discrimination invalidating ordinance, under Const. U. S. Amend. 14.

Application, by Orville Graham, for a writ of habeas corpus to the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Charles W. Cradick, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and James L. Ronnow and D. M. Kitzmiller, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The petitioner is under sentence of imprisonment for having violated certain provisions of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles. He asks to be discharged on habeas corpus, claiming that the ordinance is void. The provisions of the ordinance here in question are the early part of section 5, subdivision (a) of section 5, and the first paragraph of section 12. The first part of section 5 reads:

"Permits may be issued as provided in section 12 hereof to the owners of the vehicles herein defined allowing any such vehicles while awaiting employment to stand at certain designated places upon the streets of the city of Los Angeles. * * *

Subdivision (a) provides:

"It shall be unlawful for the owner or driver of any of the vehicles herein defined to stand or to cause or to permit such vehicles to stand while awaiting employment at any place other than a stand designated by the Board of Public Utilities and Transportation and assigned to the owner of said vehicle."

The first part of section 12 is as follows:

"The board in its discretion shall have the power to grant or deny any and all of the permits mentioned in this ordinance. * * *

The only contention of the petitioner which requires our attention is the claim that these provisions concerning permits are void as being partial and oppressive and not general in their operation, and because of them, it is asserted, an arbitrary power is placed in the hands of the police commission, and that they violate certain constitutional provisions, not very definitely specified, but apparently those protecting him from a denial of equal protection of the law and the privileges of citizens.

[1, 2] It is said that the petitioner is not in a position to challenge the constitutionality of the ordinance under whose provisions he is prosecuted, on the ground that it is discriminatory, because there is no showing that he has been the subject of discrimination. There is nothing to indicate that any permit had been given to any one else to stand at the place where he is charged with having caused his taxicab to stand. Hence it seems clear that the petitioner is in no position to say that the law is discriminatory unless it is sufficient to render a law void upon this ground that discrimination may occur through its administration. This, petitioner asserts, is the law. He insists that, if a law allows an opportunity for the exercise of discrimination of municipal authorities in the regulation of a lawful business, it is per se void and unconstitutional, and he cites a long list of cases from many jurisdictions. However, a careful examination of these and other authorities reveals that with few exceptions the doctrine expounded by them is not broad enough in its scope to support the principle asserted to be the law. This is especially true of the decisions from this jurisdiction. Here the rule has been announced in positive terms to be that in those occupations and businesses which are the proper subject of police surveillance and regulation the delegation of power, even though involving discretion to municipal boards or officers to grant and refuse permits, will be sustained. This is upon the theory, as stated by our Supreme Court in Re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 38 P. 981, 27 L. R. A. 529, that:

"Laws are not made upon the theory of the total depravity of those who are elected to administer them; and the presumption is that municipal officers will not use these small powers villainously and for purposes of oppression and mischief."

The authority of this decision is augmented by the fact that it has repeatedly been referred to with approval by other cases, among which are In re Dart, 172 Cal. 47, 155 P. 63, L. R. A. 1916D, 905, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1127; Gaylord v. Pasadena, 175 Cal. 433, 166 P. 348; In re Holmes, 187 Cal. 640, 203 P. 398. If the petitioner had applied for a permit under the section of the ordinance in question, and, had his application been arbitrarily or capriciously refused, he would then have been entitled to secure relief from such unjust action through the courts. Gaylord v. Pasadena, supra; In re Holmes, supra.

But, if there is any doubt upon the merit of this preliminary objection interposed by respondents, regardless of any conflict which may exist in other jurisdictions, the cases named above and others of similar import in this state have determined the merit of the main question presented and adversely to the contention of petitioner. In cases which have to do with things which may be dangerous to public health, comfort, or welfare enactments have uniformly been upheld regulating the conduct of individuals as to whom no natural, inviolate right was possessed, even though special privileges might result to particular persons. On the other hand, in instances where one possessing an inherent right to do a lawful and innocent act has been limited in the exercise of that right by the creation of an arbitrary power in an officer or board, the ordinance has been held unlawful, discriminatory, and void. This distinction is well pointed out in Re Flaherty, supra, where many other cases are reviewed, and to which attention is called in a concurring opinion in Re Dart, supra.

[3, 4] Bearing in mind and applying these distinctions and principles, the issue here presented is not difficult of decision. Public streets and highways are made for travel and the convenience and enjoyment of the citizens. The petitioner has the same rights to their use as others, but he is demanding a privilege which might greatly inconvenience the general public and impair its safety. No one has a natural right to conduct a business involving the exclusion of others from a particular area in a public street; such an occupation would ordinarily constitute a nuisance, but the wants and pleasures of the public suggest that, although in a broad sense an interference with public comfort and convenience may result, the maintenance of taxicab stands should be allowed under special conditions and regulations. It cannot be doubted that the city council has the authority to abolish taxicab stands from the streets. As was said in Holmes v. Railroad Commission, 197 Cal. 627, 242 P. 486:

"The reason for the rule which authorizes the state to prohibit the private use of the highways by such carriers is not that they are common carriers. It is that they are making a private use of the public highways, which are owned and paid for by the public and which are open alike to all persons."

This applies to taxicab stands as well as to any other instance in which an individual is making a private use of public highways, a use which would be subversive of the rights of other members of the public.

[5] It is too obvious to require extended discussion that, if such a privilege is to be granted at all, it must be only under proper regulation. If petitioner's theory were correct, that if any citizen is entitled to a taxicab stand all others have the same right, it is easy to conceive that dozens of taxicab drivers might see fit to claim a stand on the same corner, and thus obstruct traffic, bring about great public inconvenience, and seriously endanger property and persons.

It is obvious that this subject, like many others, is one which no general enactment could possibly regulate efficiently. Other matters similar in character which have been held properly confided to the discretion of an administrative board or officer are where, on the public street or on private property, glass, rubbish, etc., might be deposited (Ex parte Casinello, 62 Cal. 538); in what wooden buildings within certain fire limits repairs might be made (Ex parte Fiske, 72 Cal. 125, 13 P. 310); the regulation of noises on the traveled streets (In re Flaherty, supra); operation of motor vehicles on public highways (Holmes v. Railroad Commission, supra). See, also, the following cases involving the same general principles: In re Guerrero, 69 Cal. 88, 10 P. 261; Ex parte Frazer, 54 Cal. 94; Ex parte Moynier, 65 Cal. 33, 2 P. 728; Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 208, 24 P. 747; Ex parte Tuttle, 91 Cal. 589, 27 P. 933. Dozens of authorities of similar import might be cited from other jurisdictions, many of which are enumerated in Re Flaherty, supra.

[6] It is not necessary to discuss each decision cited by petitioner in which a law has been held unconstitutional upon the grounds here under consideration. In so far as those of California courts mentioned are concerned, without exception they uphold inherent inviolate property rights only. The same is true of his citations of decisions of the United States Supreme Court. Especial reliance is placed on Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 374, 6 S. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220, but the limitation of the authority of that decision has been determined by our Supreme Court in Ex parte Fiske, supra, in which it was said:

"It is evident from this language that the decision rested mainly upon the admitted discrimination against a class of persons in the public administration of the ordinance. Indeed, the admitted facts which the court considered, showed that the intent of the ordinance was to exclude Chinamen from a business which should be open to all other persons, as clearly as if that intent had been boldly written on its face. The decision, therefore, as an authority, goes no further than to hold that, under a state of facts similar in character to the facts of that case, an ordinance similar in character to the one there passed upon would be invalid. But there are no such facts in the case at bar." (Italics as quoted.)

Nor do they exist here. Instead, the record is such that the language in Buck v. Kuykendall, 267 U. S. 307, 45 S. Ct. 324, 69 L. Ed. 623, 38 A. L. R. 286, applies. The rule there stated is:

"* * * A citizen may have, under the Fourteenth Amendment, the right to travel and transport his property upon them [the public highways] by auto vehicle, but he has no right to make the highways his place of business by using them as a common carrier for hire. Such use is a privilege which may be granted or withheld by the state in its discretion, without violating either the due process clause or the equal protection clause."

[7] Petitioner attacks the ordinance in question upon other grounds. We do not regard it as possessing merit, and, since it is stated for the first time in his closing brief, it is unnecessary to discuss the objection presented.

The writ is discharged, and the petitioner remanded to custody.

WORKS, P. J. I concur in the judgment and, with one or two exceptions, in everything that is said in the opinion of Justice CRAIG.

[8] I think it unnecessary to say in disposing of the proceeding, as it is said in the opinion, that in certain specified cases "enactments have uniformly been upheld regulating the conduct of individuals as to whom no natural, inviolate right was possessed, even though special privileges might result to particular persons." I take this language to mean, reducing it to the terms of the present situation, that the public authorities, in conferring privileges in streets, may discriminate between persons belonging to the same class, and such a pronouncement seems to me unnecessary for the reason that petitioner can make no claim that he was subjected to such a discrimination. The petition merely alleges that petitioner is under confinement by reason of his having been found guilty of a violation of section 5a of the ordinance referred to in the foregoing opinion, which we construe, under the arguments contained in the briefs, as a reference to subdivision (a) of section 5, for there is no section 5a contained in the ordinance. There is no showing whatever in the petition that in causing a vehicle to stand or in permitting it to stand "while awaiting employment, at any [some] place other than a stand designated by the board * * * and assigned to the owner of said vehicle," the offense denounced by subdivision (a), petitioner was encroaching upon an area which had been assigned to the owner of vehicles other than that owned or driven by him. The petition must be construed, then, as alleging that he was found guilty and was imprisoned because he stood his cab in a space which had been assigned as a stand to no owner of vehicles. Plainly, under such circumstances, petitioner could have been subjected to no discrimination, as all other cab drivers, if standing their cabs in the same place occupied by his, would have been subjected to pains the same as those under which he suffers.

I think, for the reasons stated in the last preceding paragraph, it is unnecessary to a disposition of the proceeding to include in the foregoing opinion the following matter:

"If petitioner's theory were correct, that if any citizen is entitled to a taxicab stand all others have the same right. It is easy to conceive that dozens of taxicab drivers might see fit to claim a stand on the same corner, and thus obstruct traffic, bring about great public inconvenience, and seriously endanger property and persons."

For the reasons given above, we are not now required to say whether or not all owners of taxicabs have the right upon some principle of rotation, for instance, or upon some other principle which may be imagined, to occupy what might be conceded as immeasurably the best and the greatest revenue producing stand in the city of Los Angeles. Therefore I feel it unnecessary for the present to commit myself upon the question.

Having thus limited my concurrence in the foregoing opinion, I think it not inappropriate to say something, in addition to what Justice CRAIG has said, upon the point made by petitioner that the ordinance is unconstitutional because it confers upon the petition granting body powers that are susceptible of a discriminatory exercise. I think petitioner is in no position to raise such a question. It would be strange, as the petition must be construed as showing no invasion of an established stand by petitioner, if he could contend that the petition granting body might act arbitrarily in the future in granting applications for the establishment of stands. Petitioner's arrest and imprisonment resulted, under a proper construction of his petition, from his placing his cab at a place outside of spaces which had already been designated as stands. There is no contention that the petition granting body has not fairly and justly discharged its duty in locating these stands. As the power granted by the ordinance is surely susceptible of a just exercise, we must presume, under the well-known rule to that effect, that official duty has been properly performed and that, therefore, the established stands from which petitioner had strayed at the time of his arrest were judiciously and indiscriminatorily located. Under the circumstances surrounding his arrest, I think petitioner must look to the occurrences of the past and cannot be heard to urge the point, whether or not it would be good in any case, that the power granted by the ordinance possibly might be unfairly exercised in the future. In truth, I conclude that the petition fails to state facts sufficient to entitle petitioner to the relief he asks.

THOMPSON, J. I concur in the judgment solely because I am of the opinion that petitioner fails to allege a situation showing that he has been discriminated against, or showing that the ordinance is susceptible of a discriminatory exercise. I am so convinced, however, that even as the Creator "maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust," even so must the laws and ordinances be made to operate alike upon the elect and non-elect, that I cannot assent to language intimating that arbitrary discrimination is permissible when the subject of legislation is not a natural right.

93 Cal. App. 155

RESIDENTIAL DEVELOPMENT CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO v. ANDRIANO et al.
(Civ. 5841.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 12, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 6, 1928.

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 460—Sum expended to make portion of tunnel conform to architecture of surrounding dwellings held improperly charged against assessment fund.

Sums paid for labor and material in excavating tunnel in order to conform to high-class architecture of surrounding dwellings, being clear departure from original plans and specifications, and increasing cost thereof, having no other purpose than to further private interests, held improperly charged against fund raised by assessment for construction of such tunnel, pursuant to resolution of municipality.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 460—Sums expended to reconstruct crossings in accordance with city plan subsequently entered into held improperly charged against tunnel assessment fund.

Where resolution for construction of tunnel required contractor to restore all surface pavement which might be destroyed through work of construction of tunnel, sum paid contractor for restoring crossings to conform with subsequent plans held improperly charged against assessment fund.

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 460—Award for death of city employee held improperly charged against assessment fund for constructing tunnel (St. 1913, pp. 279-286).

Where city and county employing an inspector was within the provisions of Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, pp. 279-286), and liable thereunder, but had failed to protect itself by insurance, an award against the municipality by the Industrial Accident Commission to widow of such inspector who was killed in inspecting the tunnel held not properly chargeable against assessment fund.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 426—Excluding parcels of realty owned by city from assessment for construction of tunnel held improper.

Excluding parcels of realty owned by city from assessment on property for construction of tunnel, on the sole ground that such parcels were owned by the city, held improper, without having been excluded from assessments by resolution of intention.

5. Limitation of actions 66(3)—Limitation relative to landowners' right to proportionate distribution of remaining part of fund created by assessment for tunnel ran only from date of demand (Pol. Code, § 3804; Code Civ. Proc. § 338).

Fund remaining in hands of city from assessment against landowners for cost of constructing tunnel being held in trust for purposes provided by ordinance, limitations of Pol. Code, § 3804, and Code Civ. Proc. § 338, relative to landowner's right to proportionate distribution of remaining part of fund, commenced to run only from date of demand for distribution of remaining part of such fund.

Original application for writ of mandate by the Residential Development Company of San Francisco and others against Sylvester Andriano and others, as members of, and constituting, the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, and others. Writ granted.

Theodore J. Savage, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

John O'Toole, City Atty., and Dion R. Holm, Chief Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

CASHIN, J. A proceeding in mandamus to compel respondents to make a proportionate distribution of the remaining part of a fund known as the "Twin Peaks Ridge Tunnel Assessment Fund," which was created by the assessment upon land owned by petitioners and others of the cost of constructing the Twin Peaks tunnel in the city and county of San Francisco.

On March 3, 1913, there was adopted by the board of supervisors, and approved by the mayor of the city and county, a resolution of intention, numbered 10,020 (new series), to order the construction of the tunnel mentioned and to assess the cost, including that of construction, the acquisition of rights of way, damages to property, and incidental expenses, upon two assessment districts, in which were situate the lands of petitioners. Thereafter, on November 25, 1913, the board, with the approval of the mayor, adopted resolution numbered 10,545 (new series), confirming a report by the board of public works, and making and levying an assessment upon the districts mentioned in the sum of $3,955,001.29 for the purpose of defraying the cost of constructing the tunnel, including the other expenses in that connection. Subsequently the municipality acquired the necessary land and rights of way, a contract for the construction of the tunnel was entered into, and the work was completed on or about July 27, 1917. An ordinance of the city and county known as the "Tunnel Procedure Ordinance" provides a method of procedure for the construction of tunnels within the municipality and for the levying of assessments on private property to defray the cost thereof. It also provides for the levy and collection of the assessment before the contract for the work is let, based upon an estimate of the cost of construction, the necessary acquisition of private property, with the damage thereto and incidental expenses, and further, that the assessment shall be collected by the tax collector of the city and county either in cash or installments, or, in the event of a delinquency, by a sale of the property assessed. The ordinance provides that the resolution of intention shall contain a general description of the construction contemplated (section 2), and that a copy of the same shall be transmitted to the board of public works, and that the latter shall prepare a plan showing the gradients of approaches to, and the passageway through, the proposed tunnel (section 3). Notices of the passage of the resolution are required to be posted and published, and thereafter, within 30 days, any owner of property claiming damage by reason of the proposed tunnel may file with the board of public works a petition showing the estimated amount of damage (section 4). Thereupon this board is required to determine such damage, and estimate and assess the total amount thereof, together with the other expenses of construction, upon the land benefited (section 5). It is their further duty to file with the board of supervisors a report including, among other things, (1) plans, profiles, cross-section, and general specifications of the work required for the completion of the tunnel and appurtenances thereto; (2) an itemized estimate of the cost of the proposed tunnel, including damages that may result therefrom to property and all incidental expenses; (3) a map showing the district or districts as specified in the resolution of intention, and a list of the parcels assessed, with an estimate of the benefits to be received by the construction of the tunnel (section 6). A notice of the filing of the report is required to be given (section 7), and any person interested objecting to the construction of the tunnel, to the plans and specifications therefor, to the extent of the assessment district, or to the amount of the damages or benefits estimated in the report, may file a protest in writing. Such protests are required to be heard by the board of supervisors at a time fixed by notice (section 8), when the board may by resolution confirm the report, and upon such confirmation it is provided by section 10 that the report and list filed shall "be and constitute the assessment made and levied for defraying the damages, costs, and expenses of such tunnel construction, and the amount of the benefits set opposite each parcel of land shall constitute the amount of the assessment thereon."

No opportunity is afforded the property owner to object to the assessment proceedings previous to the filing of the report by the board of public works, following which, however, the property owner may object, not only to the project as a whole, but also to the manner of doing the work as shown by the plans and specifications.

Section 28 of the ordinance provides that, should the estimate levied appear to be insufficient to fully complete and pay for the construction of the tunnel in conformity with the plans and specifications, the board of supervisors may levy a supplemental assessment upon the district or districts for the amount required, or, in lieu of a supplemental assessment, may provide for payment by the city and county of the amount necessary to complete the construction. Section 31 provides that the board in its discretion may order that not more than one-half of the whole of the cost and expense of any work mentioned in the ordinance, or the damage resulting therefrom, be paid out of the treasury of the city and county from such fund as the board may designate. The last section also requires that, when the work has been completed, and all damages and incidental expenses have been paid, the board of public works shall make a ratable and proportionate distribution of the entire actual cost based upon the original assessment, and issue an order to refund to all persons who have paid an excess either on the assessment or for interest the amount thereof, and that the treasurer shall pay such order from the fund.

Under section 17 the property owner is given an option to pay his assessment in ten annual installments upon signing what is called an installment agreement, by which he is required to pay interest on deferred payments at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, it being also provided by section 25 that such interest payments, of which a separate account is required to be kept, shall be used to pay interest on the bonds or certificates issued to the contractors; and by section 22 that any surplus in the interest account shall by resolution of the board of supervisors be transferred to the assessment fund.

The levy in the present case followed the filing of a report by the board of public works, together with plans and specifications and an estimate that the work would cost $3,955,001.29, upon which an assessment for a like sum was levied by the board of supervisors. The contract for the construction of the tunnel let as above stated provided that:

"Said work shall be done according to the plans and specifications hereto annexed and made a part of this contract, and the materials used therein shall comply with the specifications."

The answer to the petition admits that, with the exception of certain sums transferred to the assessment fund from the funds of the city and county, and which they alleged have not been restored, the entire cost of the work, including construction, the acquisition of land, rights of way, damages to property and incidental expenses, has been paid, and that the records of the treasurer of the city and county show a balance or overplus in the assessment fund of $42,508.21. It is claimed by petitioners that this amount should be distributed to the property owners as provided by the ordinance, and by respondents, that the sums paid into the fund by the property owners were insufficient to complete the tunnel, and that the overplus shown is the unused balance of moneys transferred for that purpose from other city funds, and should be retained by the city.

This proceeding having involved a determination of questions of fact, a referee was appointed, before whom evidence, both oral and documentary, was adduced by the parties. The correctness of the treasurer's account of the receipts from the assessment and from other sources is not disputed; but petitioners contend that certain expenditures made by the city were improperly charged against the fund, and that the sums received, exclusive of any advances made by the city, were sufficient, after paying all proper charges for the construction of the tunnel, to leave a surplus in the assessment fund. They further claim that the sums advanced by the city were in lieu of a supplemental assessment, were made under the provisions of section 28 of the ordinance for the purpose of completing the tunnel, and that any surplus thereof remaining in the fund should be shared pro rata by the property owners.

As to the last contention, however, it will be sufficient to say that the sums advanced were transferred from other funds to the assessment fund for the purpose of meeting the demands of the contractor for which the latter fund was temporarily inadequate, and nothing appears from the resolutions of the board of supervisors authorizing the transfers or from the evidence which would justify the conclusion that the same were in lieu of a special assessment, or made with the intention of thereby providing for the payment by the city and county of any part of the cost of building the tunnel.

The evidence shows the following receipts and expenditures in connection with the work, the items of which are numbered from 1 to 14:

Receipts:

1. From assessments.....	$3,903,910.93
2. From interest.....	767,494.53
3. From the sale of old improvements	9,617.70
4. From the redemption fund	32,608.25
	$4,713,621.41

Advanced by the city:

5. From the good roads fund	$5,000.00
6. From the municipal railway fund.....	82,152.53
	90,652.53

Total$4,804,273.94

Expenditures:

7. Paid contractor on his contract	$3,709,919.00
8. Paid contractor for extras..	122,160.74
9. Paid for incidental expenses	34,577.70
10. Paid for land in fee simple	511,098.00
11. Paid for easements.....	6,525.00
12. Paid for leaseholds.....	3,840.00
13. Paid interest on bonds or certificates issued to contractor	352,243.94
Cash balance May 31, 1927.....	42,508.21
14. Transferred from assessment fund to general fund	21,398.35
Total	$4,804,273.94

It appears from the above that the total amount paid by the taxpayers, together with the sums received from the sale of improvements situated on lands taken for the tunnel, was $4,713,621.41, and that the total expenditure, including the extras, so called (item No 7 above), which petitioners contend were improperly charged against the fund, was $4,740,367.38. The apparent deficit of $26,745.97 was counterbalanced by the advances made by the city, the net amount of which was $69,254.18, the balance to the credit of the fund being the sum of $42,508.21, as shown by the books of the treasurer.

In addition to the allowances for extras, the petitioners also except to the payment from the fund of an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission against the city for the sum of $4,500 for the death of a city employee who was killed in the tunnel, and to the cancellation by the board of supervisors of assessments aggregating $9,271.92, assessed against 181 parcels of property owned by the city, and which were situated in the assessment districts.

[1] It appears that certain labor and material consisting of 32 items, including the two last mentioned, were allowed as extras, for which a total of $122,160.74 was paid from the fund. That certain of these items were properly allowed is clear from the evidence, but we are of the opinion that others were improperly charged to the fund. These items are numbered in the report of the city engineer, which is in evidence, and will be hereinafter referred to by the number used therein.

The sum of $858.10 (item 24) was paid for labor and material in excavating the west portal and westerly portion of the tunnel to conform with a planned subdivision to be known as West Portal Park. The further sum of $14,526.40 (item 26) was spent in making additions to, and changes in, the construction of Laguna Honda station, which, according to the report, were made in order "to conform to the high-class architecture of the surrounding dwellings."

The above excavations and additions were clear departures from the original plans and specifications, increased the cost in the above amounts, and were made, as shown by the evidence, for no other purpose than to further private interests.

Item 27 covers a substitution of tile for plaster in the Eureka Valley and Laguna Honda stations, for the purpose of obtaining, according to the report, "a more sanitary, lasting, and more slightly wall covering," and for which the sum of $9,450.05 was expended. This change was also a departure from the original plans and specifications, and the expenditure was made, as fairly appears from the evidence, for the same reasons that led to the extra expense covered by items 24 and 26.

[2] The contractor was required to restore all surface pavement which, due to the work of constructing the tunnel, might be destroyed. At the time the contract was let, the city contemplated the construction of what is known as the Market street extension, which lies above the eastern end of the tunnel. These plans were completed before certain Market street crossings, the pavement upon which had been removed, were restored by the contractor, as provided by his contract. In order to save the city the additional expense of reconstructing the restored crossings to conform with the plans for the Market street extension, it was agreed that the contractor should pave in accordance with the new plans, and not with the original plans referred to in his contract. For the additional services shown by item 32, the contractor was allowed the sum of $13,162.44. He was also allowed the sum of $5,374.34 (item 33) for paving Collingwood street to conform with the Market street extension plans, which street had been reconstructed to conform to the new plans adopted after the contract for the construction of the tunnel had been let. As shown by item 34, the sum of $9,626.16 was spent for the construction of a retaining wall at Ord street, in accordance with the Market street extension plan, and charged to the assessment fund. After more extensive studies of the Market street extension plan, the city determined to construct a two-level street north of the easterly approach walls of the tunnel, and the reconstruction of the pavement at Market and Seventeenth streets in accordance with the new plan led to the further expenditure of $1,112.47 as shown by item 39. None of the work done or materials furnished shown by the last five items was within the resolution of intention or the original plans and specifications; no estimate of the benefits, if any, to the lands in the districts by reason thereof was made by the board of public works; no opportunity to be heard was afforded the property owners, and the result of these expenditures from the assessment fund was to charge all the land in both assessment districts without regard to benefits with the cost of a project having no necessary connection with the construction of the tunnel.

What we have said respecting items 24 and 26 applies also to item 36 of $962.88. This sum was expended for labor in changing what are called the Eureka Valley kiosks. As stated in the engineer's report:

"Above the Eureka Valley station a two-level street with a dividing wall was planned for the Market street extension, but, owing to the protests of the property owners, the plans were changed."

[3] In addition to the foregoing, it appears that on July 2, 1915, an employee of the city and county, namely, an inspector attached to the office of the city engineer, was killed while inspecting the work in the tunnel. An award against the municipality in the sum of $4,500 was made by the Industrial Accident Commission to the widow of the deceased and paid. This sum was also charged against the fund. The city and county was the employer of the inspector within the provisions of the Compensation Act (Stats. 1913, pp. 279-286), and liable thereunder, but failed to protect itself by insurance, as it was empowered to do. The evidence shows no reasonable ground for shifting to the property owners a loss which by the use of ordinary foresight might have been prevented, and the same was not properly chargeable to the fund.

[4] It was shown that 181 parcels of realty owned by the city were found to be benefited by the proposed improvement, and that the same were assessed for a total of $9,271.92. Section 33 of the tunnel procedure ordinance provides that "city and county property may be assessed for any benefit as other property if it appears that such property is benefited, and the amount thereof shall be paid as ordered by the supervisors upon the completion of the work or as progress payments as other demands are paid." On February 25, 1924, the board of supervisors adopted resolution No. 22,156 (new series), declaring that the assessments upon property owned by the city and county for the construction of the Twin Peaks tunnel should be canceled; that the lien of the assessment thereon was thereby discharged, and directing the tax collector to cancel the same. None of the parcels mentioned were excluded from the assessment districts by the resolution of intention, and it is not contended that the parcels were not benefited by the improvement; the only ground for the attempted cancellation being that the same were owned by the city. This ground alone was insufficient, in view of the tunnel ordinance and the previous assessment to support the action of the board.

While, as stated, the petitioners except to other items, the foregoing comprise all the items reasonably shown by the evidence to have been improperly charged against the fund. The amounts so paid from the fund or charged against the same total the sum of $55,072.84. This, with the award of the Industrial Accident Commission of $4,500, which was a charge against the city and county alone, and the amount of its assessment, which should have been paid or credited to the fund, aggregate the sum of $68,844.76. The account of the treasurer shows a balance to the credit of the city and county for moneys advanced of $69,254.18, the difference between this balance and the sums chargeable to the city and county being the sum of $409.42. The actual balance shown in the assessment fund is $42,508.21; and, had the proper charges and credits to the fund been made, the balance therein to the credit of the property owners would have been the sum of $42,098.79, which under the ordinance should be distributed pro rata to the property owners, including the city and county, and the excess of $409.42 retained by the latter.

[5] The respondents contend that the claims of petitioners are barred by certain provisions of the charter, by section 3804 of the Political Code, and section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We find no merit in this contention. The fund is held in trust for the purposes provided by the ordinance, and the statute of limitations commenced to run only from the date of demand. Miller & Lux v. Batz, 142 Cal. 447, 76 P. 42; MacMullan v. Kelly, 19 Cal. App. 700, 127 P. 819.

It is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue out of and under the seal of this court directing the distribution by respondents or their successors in office of the sum of $42,098.79 now in the Twin Peaks ridge tunnel assessment fund; that said board of public works make a ratable and proportionate distribution of the entire actual cost of the work described above based on the original assessment, and issue an order to refund to persons, including the city and county of San Francisco, who may have paid an excess, either on the assessment or for interest, a ratable and proportionate share of the above amount; that the auditor of said city and county audit and its treasurer pay the same; and that respondent board of supervisors do and perform such acts as may be necessary to effect such distribution in accordance with the views above expressed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

93 Cal. App. 116

BRAUN v. LEO G. MACLAUGHLIN CO.
(Civ. 6323.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 9, 1928.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨86(2)—Notice by lessee that it has "decided" to exercise option held sufficient to show clear intention to exercise option.

Notice by lessee to purchaser of leased premises that lessee "has decided" to exercise option granted it for an additional lease held sufficient to show clear intention on part of lessee to exercise option; the word "decided" being defined as meaning resolved or determined.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Decide.]

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨86(2)—Provision in lessee's notice of exercise of option held not to have constituted counter offer, constituting rejection of option.

Provision in notice by lessees to purchaser of leased premises following lessee's unqualified exercise of option to lease premises for additional term that lessees are prepared to execute new lease in proper form, obliging themselves for additional term, together with testimony of president of lessee corporation, held not to show that acceptance of terms of option did not meet terms of offer in option, but was, in effect, a counter offer.

3. Appeal and error ⇨173(6)—Plaintiff, not raising issue of invalidity of option at trial, cannot claim its invalidity for first time on appeal.

Where, in suit for declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060, involving question whether lessee exercised option for additional lease, plaintiff in his complaint treated option as valid, and only issue raised was whether option could be withdrawn at any time before acceptance because of lack of consideration, held, that plaintiff could not on appeal contend that option was void for uncertainty.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇨86(1)—Option written on reverse side of lease, granting lessee additional lease at stipulated rental for stated period, held supported by valuable consideration.

Option, written on reverse side of original lease, and granting lessee an additional lease of five years at stipulated monthly rental, held to be supported by valuable consideration, since it is clear that other terms and conditions of additional lease were to be same as in old lease, which contains full terms and conditions and particular description of property, etc., and option had same effect as if it had been incorporated in original lease.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇨86(1)—Exercise of option by lessee one year and seven months after it was granted, and two years and eight months before expiration of original lease, held within reasonable time.

Where lessee was granted option of additional lease on June 19, 1923, and original lease ran until September 30, 1927, more than four years later, no time limit for exercising option being stated, held, that exercise by lessee of option in January, 1925, one year and seven months after option was granted, and two years and eight months before expiration of original lease, was within a reasonable time.

6. Landlord and tenant ⇨86(1)—What is reasonable time for exercising option for additional lease depends on particular circumstances in each case.

A question of what is a reasonable time within which lessee is required to exercise an option for an additional lease depends in each case on its own particular circumstances, and it is primarily question of fact for determination of trial court.

7. Landlord and tenant ⇨86(1)—Option granted lessee for additional lease held granted on same terms and conditions as original lease, whether treated as option for renewal or as mere extension of old lease.

Where, by option written on reverse side of old lease, lessee was granted right of additional lease for five years at stipulated rental, held that, whether option be treated as one for a renewal or as a mere extension of old lease, lessee, on exercising option, was entitled to occupy premises for five years from expiration of old lease under same terms and conditions as original lease, except as to time and rental.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John F. Pullen, Judge.

Action for declaratory relief by F. W. Braun against the Leo G. MacLaughlin Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John E. Biby, and Harry C. Biby, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. J. Carr, of Los Angeles, and A. G. Allen, of Pasadena, for respondent.

PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an action for declaratory relief under section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, from which judgment the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The facts are, briefly, these: The plaintiff and appellant is the owner of the Chamber of Commerce building, situate in the city of Pasadena. Said building was formerly owned by the Chamber of Commerce Building Company. On May 21, 1920, the Chamber of Commerce Building Company executed a lease to the defendant and respondent, Leo G. MacLaughlin Company, a corporation, covering a portion of this building, to be used for store purposes. Respondent went into possession under this lease. The lease was for a term of eight years, commencing on October 1, 1919, and ending September 30, 1927. On June 19, 1923, the said Chamber of Commerce Building Company, for a valuable consideration, indorsed on the back of the original lease the following option:

"In accordance with action taken at the regular meeting of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce Building Co. held June 19, 1923, an option is hereby granted the party of the second part herein for an additional lease of five years from September 30, 1927, at a monthly rental of $300.00.

"Dated June 19, 1923. Chamber of Commerce Building Company, by Wm. C. Crowell, President; by Leo G. MacLaughlin, Secretary."

On the said 19th day of June, 1923, the Chamber of Commerce Building Company accepted the offer of one Louis Conrad to purchase said property covered by said lease, and, at the request of the purchaser, the conveyance was made to the Angelus Realty Company, and, through mesne conveyances, the title to the building was conveyed to appellant. The respondent, at all times since the making of the original lease, has occupied and used the premises.

The appellant and his immediate and mesne grantors, at and prior to their respective purchases, knew of the existence of said lease and said option.

On January 2, 1925, appellant wrote respondent the following letter:

"January 2, 1925.

"Leo G. MacLaughlin Co., Pasadena, Cal.—Gentlemen: As I think you know, I am, and have been for some months past, the owner of the Security building at Colorado and Broadway, Pasadena, of which building you are a tenant, being located on the ground floor, 119 East Colorado street.

"In looking over the lease originally made between yourself, as lessee, and the Chamber of Commerce Building Company, as lessor, for a period expiring December 30th, 1927, I note on the reverse thereof an option, dated September 19th, 1923, given you by the Chamber of Commerce Building Company, for a five year period after the expiration of your present lease, mentioned.

"Inasmuch as you have never exercised the option, mentioned, it of course, cannot be binding in any way upon me as the present owner of this building and I hereby give you notice to this effect.

"Yours very truly,

F. W. Braun."

Immediately upon the receipt of this letter, respondent, through its attorney, replied on January 6, 1925, in part as follows:

"You are hereby notified that the Leo G. MacLaughlin Company intends to and hereby does exercise its option to continue its occupancy of the premises now occupied by it, and covered by said option for the term of five years from October 1, 1927, at the rate of $300 per month."

Thereafter, and on January 22, 1925, a more formal notice was given appellant by respondent, as follows:

"Pasadena, Cal., January 22, 1925.

"Mr. F. W. Braun, 2140 S. Main St., Los Angeles, Calif.—Dear Sir: You are hereby notified that the Leo G. MacLaughlin Co. by resolution duly passed by its board of directors has decided to exercise the option which it holds covering the leasing of the premises now occupied by it in what was formerly known as the Chamber of Commerce building, now known as the Security building, in Pasadena, California, said option being dated June 19, 1923, and endorsed on the lease, copy of which lease and option we understand is in your possession and with which you are familiar.

"Under the terms of this option, we are given the right of an additional lease for a term of five years, commencing September 30, 1927, at a monthly rate of $300 per month; the premises being that certain room on the ground floor of said building at 119 E. Colorado street, Pasadena, and being the same quarters now occupied by us and having been occupied by us for more than five years last past.

"If we are mistaken in our understanding that you have and are familiar with the copy of the lease and option, please advise us and a copy of the same will be furnished you promptly.

"We are prepared to execute a new lease in proper form, obliging ourselves for this additional term. Kindly prepare such a lease satisfactory to you at your early convenience and submit for our execution. Yours very truly, Leo G. MacLaughlin Co., Leo G. MacLaughlin, President; Geo. F. Howell, Secretary. [Seal.]"

From the foregoing facts the trial court, among other things, found that:

"On January 22, 1925, the defendant elected to exercise, and did exercise, its option to have and take an additional lease of five years from the expiration of its then lease at a rental of three hundred dollars ($300) per month. Said election and exercise of said option was made by the defendant within a reasonable time."

[1] Appellant first contends that the court erred in finding that respondent exercised the option in question. There is no merit in this contention; it is based entirely upon the wording of the notice of January 22, 1925, which says, "You are hereby notified that the Leo G. MacLaughlin Company * * * has decided to exercise the option. * * *" Appellant claims that this is equivalent to respondent saying "it intends to" or "it will exercise the option at some future time." We think this an entirely too narrow and technical interpretation to be placed upon the language used in the notice. The word "decided" is defined by Webster's International Dictionary as meaning "resolved" or "determined." Any form of expression, showing a clear intention on the part of respondent to exercise its option on the precise terms stated in the option, is sufficient. We think that the wording of the notice is amply sufficient to show a clear intention on the part of respondent to exercise the option in question. If, however, it be conceded that the language of the notice of January 22d is defective or insufficient, still, the notice of January 6th is amply sufficient. There can be no question but that respondent served upon appellant an unqualified acceptance of the option, and, when this was done, what was before an option became an executory contract for a continuance of the lease for five years from October 1, 1927, upon a monthly rental of $300.

[2] Appellant further contends that the last paragraph of the notice of January 22, 1925, reading "We are prepared to execute a new lease in proper form, obliging ourselves for this additional term. Kindly prepare such a lease satisfactory to you at your early convenience and submit for our execution," coupled with the testimony of Mr. MacLaughlin, the president of the respondent corporation, shows that the purported acceptance of the terms of the option by respondent does not meet the terms of the offer in the option, and, in effect, is a counter offer, and therefore a rejection of the offer contained in the option. We think this contention is without merit. The portion of the notice complained of, and the testimony of Mr. MacLaughlin, had reference solely to the performance of the contract that came into existence by the acceptance of the terms of the option; that is to say, the manner in which the newly created contract for the extension of the old lease for five years should be carried out—it has reference to something that would necessarily have to be done after respondent had exercised its option; it was merely a suggestion of a convenient mode or manner of closing up the transaction. Respondent had already, in the first paragraph of this notice and in the notice of January 6, 1925, unqualifiedly exercised the option. A similar notice was involved in Cates v. McNeil, 169 Cal. 697, 147 P. 944, and the ruling there fully sustains our conclusion here.

[3, 4] Appellant next contends that the option is void for uncertainty, and urges two points: (1) "That the offer was for 'an additional lease' and the terms of the additional lease were not stated, except that it was to be for a period of five years at a rental of $300 per month," and (2) "The failure to describe the property to which the additional lease relates renders the option void." There are at least two answers to both of these contentions. In the first place, the pleadings do not raise this issue. Appellant, in his complaint, treated the option as valid, but claimed that it could be withdrawn at any time before acceptance because of lack of consideration. In fact, this was the only issue raised by the complaint. Both parties, however, throughout the entire case have treated the option as valid. The terms of the "additional lease" are fixed in the option at five years and the rental at $300 per month. It is clear that the other terms and conditions of the "additional lease" were to be the same as in the old lease, for the option itself is written upon the reverse side of the old lease, and refers to it, which contains the full terms and conditions and a particular description of the property, etc. The option is supported by a valuable consideration, and, to all intents and purposes, has the same effect as if it had been incorporated in the original lease itself.

[5, 6] Appellant next contends that the court erred in finding that respondent exercised said option within a reasonable time. No time limit is stated in the option. The option was granted on June 19, 1923, one year and seven months later, and in January, 1925, respondent exercised the option for an additional lease of five years from October 1, 1927. The original lease ran until September 30, 1927, more than four years from the date of the option, and two years and eight months after the option was exercised.

Under all these circumstances, we think the trial court was correct in finding that the option was exercised within a reasonable time. It is true that appellant offered evidence tending to show that the value of the leasehold had increased between the date of the option and the date it was exercised by respondent, but respondent also offered testimony to the effect that the rentals were about the same when the option was given and when it was exercised, so that was a disputed question of fact for the trial court to determine.

The rule is well settled that the question of what is a reasonable time depends in each case upon its own particular circumstances; it is primarily a question of fact for the determination of the trial court. Hoppin v. Munsey, 185 Cal. 678, 198 P. 398; Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 359, 104 P. 689, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522; Adams & McKee Land Co. v. Dugan, 68 Cal. App. 226, 228 P. 681; Cambridge v. Ramser, 43 Cal. App. 722, 185 P. 862; Luckart v. Ogden, 30 Cal. 547; Weatherbee v. Sinn, 73 Cal. App. 98, 238 P. 134.

[7] Appellant further contends that the court erred in finding that said option was granted on the same terms and conditions as the original lease, except as to rent, and also erred in rendering judgment that it was appellant's duty to execute a new lease on the same terms and conditions as the old lease, except as to time and rental.

A careful examination of the entire record convinces us that there is no merit in either of these contentions. We are well aware of the fact that there is a clear distinction between the meaning of the expression "renewing a lease" and "extending the term" thereof (Shamp v. White, 106 Cal. 220, 39 P. 537; Robertson v. Drew, 34 Cal. App. 143, 166 P. 838; 15 Cal. Jur. 659), but we think the distinction is wholly immaterial under the facts of the case at bar. If the expression "an additional lease," used in the option, be construed as meaning "a renewal of the old lease," then it was incumbent upon respondent to give notice of his election to renew the lease within a reasonable time before the expiration of the original lease. This respondent did. If it be construed merely "as an extension of the terms of the old lease" (there being no special form of notice required by the option), respondent could have stayed in possession after the expiration of the old lease, and that would have been a sufficient notice of its intention to exercise the option to extend the lease. But in this case the old lease had not expired when the notices of January 6 and January 22, 1925, were given, and respondent was in possession under the old lease; therefore, if the option be construed merely as providing for "an extension of the old lease," and respondent had stayed in possession after the expiration of the old lease, the notices would have been unnecessary. On the other hand, if the option be construed as calling "for a renewal," meaning a new lease, respondent has fully complied with all the requirements entitling it to a new lease upon the same terms and conditions as the old one, except as to time and rental. Therefore, whether it be treated as an option for a "renewal," as the trial court did, or as a "mere extension of the old lease," is wholly immaterial, for in either case the terms and conditions are to be exactly the same.

Respondent is clearly entitled to occupy the demised premises for five years from October 1, 1927, by paying a rental of $300 per month, and complying with all the terms and conditions of the old lease, and whether it does this under an extension of the old lease, or under a new lease containing the same terms and conditions, is wholly immaterial as far as appellant is concerned, and he certainly could not be prejudiced by being required to execute a new lease containing the same terms and conditions as the old one, with the exception that the rent would be increased to $300 per month, and the term five years.

We have examined the entire record with care, and find no error that could be considered in any way prejudicial to the rights of appellant.

Appellant sought to have the option declared void solely on technical grounds, none of which has any substantial merit. The equities of the case are all on the side of respondent. Respondent paid a large consideration for the option, acted seasonably in exercising it, and should not be deprived of enjoying the fruits thereof, merely because some of the language used in the negotiations was awkward or ambiguous, when the intent and purpose thereof were clearly understood by all parties to the transaction. Appellant was not a party to the original lease or the option, but purchased the leased premises with full knowledge of respondent's lease and option, and also knew that respondent was in possession under the original lease.

The judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

PEOPLE v. MAINE. (Cr. 1029.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 10, 1928.

1. Infants $\S$ 20—Information for committing certain lewd and lascivious acts upon body of minor, stating specific acts, held sufficient (Pen. Code, $\S$ 288).

Information under Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, for having willfully, unlawfully, and lewdly committed certain lewd and lascivious acts upon the body of a minor, stating the specific acts with which the defendant was charged, held sufficient to state a public offense.

2. Infants $\S$ 20—Law forbidding committing lewd or lascivious acts on or with body of minor held constitutional (Pen. Code, $\S$ 288).

Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, forbidding any person from willfully, unlawfully, or lewdly committing any lewd or lascivious act on or with the body of a minor child, held constitutional.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 742(1)—Truth or falsity of testimony is for jury.

The truth or falsity of testimony given by witnesses in a criminal trial is wholly a matter for the jury.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 807(1)—Refusal of argumentative instructions held not error.

Refusal of requested instructions which were couched in argumentative language held not to constitute error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Ross Campbell, Judge.

Robert Maine was convicted of having willfully, unlawfully, and lewdly committed certain lewd and lascivious acts upon and with the body of a minor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Emmett I. Donohue, of Petaluma, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant was convicted upon an information charging the commission of a felony, omitting mere formal allegations in the following words, to wit:

"The said Robert Maine, on or about the 15th day of November, A. D. one thousand nine hundred and twenty-seven, at and in the county of Sonoma, state of California, did willfully, unlawfully and lewdly commit certain lewd and lascivious acts upon and with the body of one Delbert Butler, a person under the age of fourteen years, to wit, of the age of eleven years, by placing his hands upon the private parts of the said Delbert Butler with the intent of arousing, appealing to, and gratifying the lust, passions, and sexual desires of the said Robert Maine and of the said Delbert Butler, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California."

From the order denying his motion for a new trial and the judgment of conviction, the defendant appeals.

Upon this appeal it is urged that the information does not describe a public offense; that section 288 of the Penal Code is unconstitutional; that the evidence is insufficient to warrant the verdict; that the court erred in its instructions and in the admission of testimony; and that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct.

[1] To the point that the information is insufficient to state a public offense, we are cited to the case of People v. Grinnell, 9 Cal. App. 238, 98 P. 681. In that case, however, the information did not state the specific acts with which the defendant was charged. The information simply contained in its charging part words to this effect, that the defendant did willfully and lewdly commit a lewd and lascivious act with and upon the body of a minor child, with intent, etc. The mere comparison of the information in the instant case with the case relied upon demonstrates that the objection to the sufficiency of the information is wholly without merit.

[2] In support of appellant's contention that section 288 of the Penal Code is unconstitutional, the case of In re Lockett, 179 Cal. 581, 178 P. 134, is cited. In that case, section 288a of the Penal Code was held unconstitutional by reason of the fact that the section as it then stood was not wholly printed in the English language, and contained Latin words, which had not become Anglicized, and that, as adopted by the Legislature, the section was uncertain and indefinite. Appellant, however, overlooks the fact that section 288a of the Penal Code was amended in 1921 to avoid the objections pointed out in the Lockett Case. Since the amendment to that section it has been passed upon and upheld in the following cases: People v. Parsons (Cal. App.) 255 P. 212; In re Parsons (Cal. App.) 257 P. 881.

The point urged by appellant is that section 288 of the Penal Code is no more definite than section 288a of the Penal Code, and therefore, if section 288a of the Penal Code is unconstitutional, the same invalidity attaches to section 288, Penal Code. In view of the fact that section 288a of the Penal Code has been held constitutional, the argument of appellant, based upon the comparison of the two sections, necessarily fails.

It is finally argued that, as section 288 of the Penal Code refers to part II, instead of to part I, it is indefinite, uncertain, and not capable of furnishing a foundation for a criminal prosecution. In that particular it is urged that the holding in the case of People v. Bradford, 1 Cal. App. 41, 81 P. 712, should be overruled. In that case the court held that part II should be read as part I, and that it was evident that the characters "II" were inserted by clerical misprision for the character "I." In that case it was said:

"Such construction is warranted by the decision of our Supreme Court in California Loan Co. v. Weis, 118 Cal. 497, 50 Pac. 697, wherein it was held that the word 'June' was inserted, either by legislative oversight or clerical error, where 'July' was intended, such construction being necessary to give effect to the plain intent of the Legislature as deduced from the whole act then under consideration. The rules of statutory construction embrace also the correction of clerical errors by the insertion of the true word or words. County of Lancaster v. Frey, 128 Pa. St. 593, 18 Atl. 478, cited in California Loan Co. v. Weis, 118 Cal. 497, 50 Pac. 497. Under this construction section 288 is intelligible and certain."

The appellant, however, cites the case of Hatfield v. Jordan, 183 Cal. 223, 190 P. 1030, wherein it was held that, where a statute contained the figures "1931," it could not be read as referring to the year 1921. The Hatfield Case, however, is not controlling here, and does not furnish any reason for our refusing to follow the case of People v. Bradford, supra. In the Hatfield Case there was nothing before the court which indicated what the intention of the Legislature was other than mere inferences. Section 288 of the Penal Code, supra, appears in the Penal Code in such a setting that the intention of the Legislature, and the purpose to refer to part I instead of to part II is so plain and certain that no one could be misled as to the intention and meaning of the Legislature. As to the section being ambiguous when read as held in the Bradford Case, supra, is shown to be without merit by reference to 16 California Jurisprudence, p. 67, § 28, and the authorities there cited. We deem it unnecessary to quote the section.

As to the insufficiency of the evidence to warrant the verdict, we can only say that a careful reading thereof leads to the contrary conclusion. The testimony shows that the defendant took the boy named in the information, a boy of the age of 12 years, and also another boy named Charles Burmester, somewhat older, just how many years not stated in the testimony, in a Dodge coupé from the town of Santa Rosa to a place called Bennett Valley, ostensibly on a hunting trip; that on the way out he stopped and purchased a bottle of wine, which fact, perhaps, accounts in part for the commission of the acts with which he was charged, and of which he was found guilty. The two boys testified substantially to the acts charged in the information as having been committed upon the person of the boy Delbert.

[3] The testimony is of such a vile character that we refrain from setting it forth in this opinion, and we will content ourselves with saying that we are satisfied from a reading thereof that the contention that there is not sufficient testimony to warrant a conviction by the jury is likewise without merit. The defendant, of course, denied all the testimony given by the boys. The truth or falsity of the testimony being wholly a matter for the jury, the fact that the acts were denied by the defendant cannot be considered by us as overthrowing the testimony of the boys.

As to the errors of the court alleged to have been committed in overruling the objections to certain testimony, it appears from the transcript that the testimony objected to had previously been given by the defendant without any objection being interposed thereto. The testimony objected to was that of the witness upon cross-examination, and, upon objection by defendant's counsel, the court did erroneously state that such testimony had been given upon direct examination. The transcript shows that the testimony which was objected to had, however, been previously given by the defendant on cross-examination, and, when so given, came into the record without any objection being interposed. However, if such were not the case, the testimony objected to is not such as to warrant a reversal. It simply referred to the fact of the defendant's having taken an automobile ride with a boy by the name of Martin Law. The defendant had testified that he took an automobile ride with the witness Burmester and another boy whose name he did not know.

It is next objected that the court erred in its instructions to the jury and in refusing instructions requested by the defendant. The instructions are too lengthy to set out in this opinion, and we content ourselves with the statement that the court fully and very carefully advised the jury as to the law in the premises, and also went so far as to give the jury the following precautionary instructions, to wit:

"You are instructed that the testimony of a child of tender years, such as the prosecuting witness here, ought to be viewed with care and caution, and the evidence in a case of this kind is to be weighed by you with the utmost care without bias or prejudice."

And further:

"While the law does not require in this character of a case that the prosecuting witness be supported by another witness or other corroborating circumstances, it does, however, require that you examine the testimony of the prosecuting witness with caution."

[4] It may be observed further that the testimony of the prosecuting witness was corroborated. The appellant challenges the veracity of the corroborating witness. However, that was a matter for the jury and not for us. If believed by the jury, the corroborating evidence was absolutely sufficient to support the verdict of guilty, irrespective of the testimony of the prosecuting witness. As to the refused instructions, which cover a number of the pages of the transcript, we only need to state that everything contained therein which should have been given to the jury was included in the instructions given, and that most of the refused instructions were couched in argumentative language and were not asked in such form as to entitle them to be read to the jury. We do not need to cite authorities to the effect that a trial court should not give instructions which are argumentative in form.

The trial court properly held that, under the testimony, Delbert Butler was not an accomplice, and therefore the instruction requested by the defendant, to the effect that he was, was properly refused.

We find nothing in the transcript indicating any serious misconduct on the part of the district attorney, or any misconduct that calls for comment in this opinion.

Appellant has quoted page after page from opinions of other courts when passing upon questions similar to those involved herein to the effect that great caution and circumspection should be used in cases of this character, lest a defendant be convicted from the mere repulsiveness of the charge. It would serve no useful purpose to add anything to such comments or to review them herein. It is sufficient to say that the instructions which we have quoted, as given by the trial court in this case, call that very fact to the attention of the jury, and advise them to give serious and critical attention to the testimony of the witnesses upon which the charge was based.

As herein stated, the record is so full of repulsive details that we refrain from contaminating the public records of this state with a recital thereof, and content ourselves with the statement that a review of the whole case leads us to the conclusion that the testimony sufficiently supports the verdict, and that no error was committed by the court of which the appellant has any reason to complain.

The order and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

93 Cal. App. 169

PEOPLE v. REDDING. (Cr. 1659.)*

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 12, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 6, 1928.

1. Robbery $\Rightarrow$ 24(3)—Evidence of defendant's identity held sufficient to sustain conviction for robbery.

Evidence of defendant's identity, though weak and unsatisfactory, in view of impeachment of witness identifying defendant, held sufficient to sustain conviction of robbery.

2. Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 1170½(5)—Witnesses $\Rightarrow$ 337(4)—Compelling defendant to admit on cross-examination he was "fugitive from justice," without showing particular crime of which he was accused, held error and prejudicial (Code Civ. Proc. § 2051).

In robbery prosecution, forcing defendant to admit on cross-examination, over objection, that at time robbery occurred he was a fugitive from justice, held error, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, so prejudicial as to have affected his substantial rights, where there was no attempt to show any connection between fact that before his conviction he had been convicted of a felony and fact that, when robbery occurred, he was fugitive from justice, thus leaving matter wholly to conjecture of jury; the general understanding of what is meant by "fugitive from justice" being one who, having perpetrated a crime, or was accused of having done so, in a given jurisdiction, flees therefrom without awaiting consequences of act which it is assumed he has committed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fugitive from Justice.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Terrell Redding was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Reversed.

Martin S. Ryan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime of robbery and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The fact that a robbery occurred, as charged in the information filed against defendant, is not disputed; but the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the identification of defendant as the man who committed the crime, as well as the effect of certain evidence admitted over the objection of defendant, are the material questions presented for the consideration of this court.

[1] With reference to the first question, the record discloses the fact that on the trial of the action the man who was robbed was unable to, and did not, identify defendant as the man who committed the robbery. However, the identity of defendant as the robber was positively established by the testimony of a boy of the age of 13 years, who was present at the time the robbery was committed. The boy's testimony was impeached, not only by the fact that in his testimony given at the preliminary examination of defendant before the committing magistrate he failed to identify defendant, but as well by the testimony of two witnesses to the effect that prior to giving his testimony on the trial of the action in the superior court the boy had been approached by two police detectives, who, by the power of suggestion, if not by a more sinister influence, had induced the boy to change his testimony given at the preliminary examination of defendant, so that on the trial of the action in the superior court he testified to what amounted to an identification of defendant as the man who committed the crime. However, in rebuttal, each of the police detectives denied that they, or either of them, had been guilty of the use of any improper or unethical methods with reference to the testimony given by the boy.

In the main the defense consisted of a denial by defendant of his guilt, together with the testimony of six other witnesses to the effect that, not only including the exact time when the robbery was committed, but for several hours preceding such time and for about an hour thereafter, they were and each of them was in the presence of defendant at a place located approximately eight miles from the scene of the robbery. If, notwithstanding the weakness of the evidence upon which the verdict of guilt of defendant depended, resting as it did upon what ordinarily might be assumed as being great infirmities, the jury chose to adopt it as a reflection of the truth of the situation, including the identity of defendant as the robber, the result, as expressed in its verdict, is beyond the reach of successful attack on appeal. The evidence, though in itself weak and perhaps unsatisfactory to the judicial mind, nevertheless was legally sufficient to sustain the verdict.

[2] But, as hereinbefore indicated, the reversal of the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial is sought upon the additional ground that, over the objection of defendant evidence was admitted against him by which he was substantially prejudiced in the eyes of the jury. By defendant's testimony on cross-examination it was established that some years preceding the date of the robbery here under consideration, acting on the belief that he was "pleading guilty to a misdemeanor," defendant actually pleaded guilty to "an attempt to commit burglary," for which he was sentenced to a term of one year in the county jail. In the course of such cross-examination of defendant he was asked by the deputy district attorney in charge of the prosecution whether, at the time the robbery in question was committed, he was a fugitive from justice. The court overruled defendant's objection to the question. Thereupon defendant answered in the affirmative. No point was made at the trial, nor is it here raised, as to whether in the circumstances, as a matter of law, defendant had actually been convicted of a felony as defined and provided, respectively, by sections 17, 664, and 461 of the Penal Code. But it is now urged that the ruling by the trial court to which attention has been directed was "grossly prejudicial," and authorities are cited in support of such contention.

While in accordance with the provisions of section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the examination of a witness it is permissible to show that theretofore he had been convicted of a felony, nevertheless it is also specifically provided therein that "evidence of particular wrongful acts" may not be shown for the purpose of impeaching the general reputation of the witness for truth, honesty or integrity. 27 Cal. Jur. 132.

Over the objection of defendant, he was forced to admit that at the time the robbery in question occurred he was a fugitive from justice. The general understanding of what is meant by the term "fugitive from justice" is one who, having either perpetrated a crime, or who is accused of having done so, in a given jurisdiction, flees therefrom without awaiting the consequences of the act which it is assumed he has committed. The record herein is silent as to any connection between the fact that before his conviction in the instant case defendant had been convicted of a "felony" and the fact that when the robbery in question occurred he was a fugitive from justice. The "particular wrongful act" of which defendant was accused, or which in fact he had theretofore committed, was left wholly to the conjecture of the jury, and without any evidence of the specific fact each member of the jury may have assumed that the crime, the consequences of which defendant was fleeing, was of the most heinous character, and consequently that his testimony was unworthy of belief.

Nor is this court convinced that, because the jury had before it evidence to the effect that theretofore defendant had been convicted of a "felony," to wit, of an attempt to commit the crime of burglary, the testimony of defendant had been so impeached that nothing was added to the discredit of his testimony by reason of the fact that he was a fugitive from justice. An attempt by defendant to commit burglary may have had some effect upon the credibility which should attach to his testimony; but it may not have entirely destroyed confidence in it. On the other hand, the possibly imagined fact by the members of the jury that, in addition to an attempt by defendant to commit burglary, he was at least accused of the commission of some other offense, ranging in character from the least morally objectionable to that of the most desperate or most despicable, may have had the effect, not only of utterly overthrowing the testimony given by defendant, but as well of creating such a prejudice against him and his defense as to have carried with it a fatal distrust of the testimony given by his supporting witnesses.

Considering the weakness of the case presented by the prosecution, it is not improbable that, without the evidence to which reference has been had, the jury would have taken a different view of the testimony of defendant and his six witnesses relating to the presence of defendant at the time the robbery was committed and at a place where it would have been impossible for him to have been the robber, with the result that he would have been acquitted of the charge against him. It thus becomes manifest that the error of which appellant complains was prejudicial in that it affected his substantial rights in the premises. While for the safety of the public it is greatly to be desired that the guilty be apprehended and punished for their crimes, as a stabilizing influence toward the permanence of our institutions, it is of much greater importance that the guaranty of a fair trial within the meaning and intent of the Constitution and the statutes should be assured and made a certainty, so far as may be within the bounds of average human ability, attended by its inevitable imperfections and frailties.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

93 Cal. App. 42

PEOPLE v. KUDER et al. (Cr. 1539.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 29, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 27, 1928.

I. Indictment and information $\S$ 125(19)—Indictment charging violation of Corporate Securities Act by doing several acts prohibited thereby charged but one offense (Corporate Securities Act, $\S$ 14).

Under Corporate Securities Act, $\S$ 14 (St. 1917, p. 680), making it an offense to issue or sell any security in nonconformity with permit of corporation commissioner, or to apply proceeds of sale to purpose contrary to permit, or to fail to comply with any provisions of the act, or to conspire to violate said act, indictment charging violation of the act by defendants issuing and selling to themselves 250 shares of stock without paying to, or obtaining and receiving for, the corporation cash representing full par value, and by using and applying proceeds of such sale to purposes other than those specified in application and permit, charged but one offense, since violation of any or all provisions of act constitutes but one offense.

2. Licenses —42(3)—Proof of violation of any one of acts prohibited by Corporate Securities Act charged in indictment would sustain conviction (Corporate Securities Act, § 14).

Where indictment charged violation of Corporate Securities Act, § 14 (St. 1917, p. 680), regulating issuance and sale of securities, proof sustaining any one of violations charged would be sufficient to sustain conviction.

3. Constitutional law —32—Constitutional provision making fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness by corporation void is self-executing (Const. art. 12, § 11).

Const. art. 12, § 11, providing that no corporation shall issue stock or bonds except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void, is self-executing to the extent that acts done in contravention of it are illegal and void.

4. Constitutional law —62—Statute regulating issuance and sale of corporate securities held not invalid as delegating legislative powers to commissioner (Corporate Securities Act, §§ 4, 14).

Corporate Securities Act, § 14 (St. 1917, p. 680), regulating issuance and sale of securities, held not invalid as attempting to delegate legislative powers to commissioner of corporations because of provision of section 4 authorizing commissioner to impose such conditions as he may deem necessary to issuance of securities and to establish such rules and regulations as may be reasonable or necessary to insure disposition of proceeds of securities for purposes provided in permit, and to amend, alter, or revoke any permit issued by him or temporarily suspend applicant's rights thereunder.

5. Constitutional law —60—Legislature may delegate making of rules and regulations for transaction of any state business and declare violation of rules offense.

The Legislature has power to delegate to proper authority the making of suitable rules and regulations for the conduct and transaction of any business of state and to declare the violation of the rules a penal offense.

6. Words and phrases—"Quasi judicial power" lies in judgment and discretion of officer other than judicial officer.

Quasi judicial power is a duty conferred by words or by implication on an officer to look into facts and to act on them in the exercise of discretion, and it lies in the judgment and discretion of an officer other than judicial officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Quasi Judicial.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Chas. L. Allison, Judge.

J. M. Kuder and others were convicted of violating the Corporate Securities Act. From an order granting defendant's motion in arrest of judgment after conviction, the People appeal. Reversed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

J. M. Friedlander, Corporation Com'r, H. A. I. Wolch, Asst. Corporation Com'r, and Vernon S. Gray, Deputy Corporation Com'r, all of Los Angeles, amici curiae.

Arthur L. Veitch, of Los Angeles, for respondent Kuder.

Estudillo & Schwinn, of Riverside, for respondents E. B. Fishel and U. R. Fishel.

P. N. McCloskey, of San Bernardino, for respondent Luke.

William Guthrie and R. E. Hodge, both of San Bernardino, for respondent Bedford.

CRAIG, J. The respondents were tried before a jury in San Bernardino county upon a charge of having violated the Corporate Securities Act, and were convicted. They then moved the trial court for an arrest of judgment, which motion was granted upon the ground that the indictment failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. The people appealed from such ruling, and respondents moved this court for an order dismissing said appeal, which we denied on April 3, 1928. 266 P. 337. The case is now before us upon its merits.

In the indictment which is the subject of this appeal the grand jury of San Bernardino county accused the five defendants of the crime of violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), "a felony, committed as follows," and the acts therein alleged to have been committed in violation of said statute were that, on or about September 30, 1925, the defendants did willfully, unlawfully, knowingly, fraudulently, and feloniously authorize, direct, and aid in the issue and sale of, and cause and assist in causing to be issued, executed, and sold, certain stock certificates and securities of a corporation known as Fishelton Farms, Incorporated, consisting of 250 shares of its capital stock to themselves, in nonconformity with a permit of the commissioner of corporations authorizing such issue, and that, with intent to violate said permit, the defendants issued and caused the issuance of said stock without demanding, obtaining, and receiving for and on behalf of the corporation, and without paying, remitting, or delivering to it cash therefor at par, so as to net the corporation par value at the selling price, and, with intent to violate the terms of said permit, that the defendants used, expended, and applied the cash obtained from the sale and issue of said stock for uses and purposes other than and contrary to the uses and purposes recited in the application therefor.

The commissioner's permit is made a part of the indictment, and recites that said corporation is authorized to sell and issue 250 shares of its capital stock to its five incorporators at par for cash, for the uses and purposes recited in its application, and so as to net the applicant the full amount of the selling price thereof.

[1] Before the trial, the defendants demurred, and thereafter moved in arrest of judgment, upon asserted grounds that the indictment charged two separate and distinct offenses, which should have been separately stated, first, that of issuing and selling to themselves 250 shares of stock without paying to, or obtaining and receiving for, the corporation cash representing the full par value; and, second, that of using and applying the proceeds of such sale to purposes other than those specified in the application and permit. And it was further contended that each such charge offset and justified the other, in that, if they did not pay the value of said stock to the corporation, they could not have applied the proceeds of such sale to unlawful purposes, whereas, if the latter charge were true, they could not be guilty of selling the stock without receiving the purchase price on behalf of the corporation. The evidence tends to show, as a matter of fact, that the defendants, as officers of the corporation, issued 250 shares of the stock of their corporation to themselves, for which they gave checks upon a bank account wherein there were not sufficient funds to meet them, and in turn issued to themselves checks of the corporation for like amounts so that no moneys were in fact paid or misapplied.

From the holding herein which we think is inevitable it becomes unnecessary to consider the point advanced by respondents that the allegations of the indictment are contradictory, or that the commission of one of the alleged acts would render the commission of the other impossible. Section 14 of the Corporate Securities Act (Stats. 1917, c. 532) makes it an offense to issue or sell any security in nonconformity with a permit of the corporation commissioner, or to apply or cause to be applied the proceeds of the sale of securities to a purpose contrary to the provisions of a permit, or to fail to comply with any of the provisions of the act, or to conspire to violate said act. Hence, not only is it a violation of the Corporate Securities Act to act contrary to its provisions in any one respect, but it is equally illegal and violative of the act to do so in all of them combined. To say that they are distinct offenses is equivalent to the assertion that an indictment charging the issuance of securities contrary to the provisions of a permit, and a failure to comply with the provisions of the act, would embrace two offenses, for each of which a separate sentence might be imposed.

Other similarly phrased statutes of this state have received repeated and consistent interpretations which render such views untenable. In People v. Barnovich, 16 Cal. App. 427, 117 P. 572, an information based upon section 601 of the Penal Code was challenged upon the same grounds as those here asserted. Said section provides that one who maliciously deposits or explodes or attempts to explode under any structure which human beings usually inhabit, any dynamite, etc., with intent to injure any human being, or by means of which a human being is injured, is guilty of a felony. Barnovich was charged with having deposited an explosive under such a structure with intent to injure a person, and with intent to injure the property described in the information. The Court of Appeal said:

"The information alleges two intents—one an intended injury to a person and the other an intended injury to property. It does not follow from this that the information charges two offenses as claimed by counsel for the defendant. Section 601 of the Penal Code, which defines the offense of which the defendant was convicted, enumerates a series of acts any of which separately or all together may constitute the offense. 'All such acts may be charged in a single count, for the reason that notwithstanding each may by itself constitute the offense, all of them together do no more, and likewise constitute but one and the same offense.' People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507; People v. Leyshon, 108 Cal. 440, 41 P. 480; People v. Swaile, 12 Cal. App. 192, 107 P. 134."

People v. Swaile, supra, was also a prosecution under section 601 of the Penal Code, and the court there said that it is not improper in such cases to charge conjunctively the various acts constituting the offense which are disjunctively recited in the statute. People v. Frank, supra, involved a charge that the defendant "feloniously made, forged, and counterfeited, and aided and advised and encouraged another to make, forge, and counterfeit" an indorsement. In People v. Leyshon, supra, the defendant, was charged with forging and passing a forged note. In each of these cases the same rule was invoked.

In People v. Huber, 64 Cal. App. 352, 221 P. 695, the defendant was charged with having violated the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 397), in that, while driving an automobile, he collided with another person, that he unlawfully failed and refused to stop, or to render assistance to the person injured, or to carry said person to a physician or surgeon for medical or surgical treatment, and failed and refused to give to such person the number of his automobile, the name of the owner, or of the passenger therein. Upon the contention that the information did not comply with sections 950 and 951 of the Penal Code, and that it charged several offenses, it was held:

"It will thus be seen that the information is almost identical with the language used in section 21 of the Motor Vehicle Act. It is true that there are a number of specific things required to be done by that section in the event of a collision with or injury to a person on the highway, yet the information following the language of the statute, as above quoted, charges in fact but one offense. That but one offense is charged is clearly established by the case of People v. Barnovich, 16 Cal. App. 427, 117 P. 572. It is the failure to comply with any one of the requirements of said section that renders the person so failing amenable to prosecution. It is not alleged in the information that any assistance was necessary to be given to the injured person, but the information nevertheless charges a complete offense in that it is therein stated in both clear and concise language that the defendant did not stop his automobile and also failed and neglected to give the information required by the statute. Having charged sufficient to constitute an offense the demurrer was properly overruled, even though it be admitted that the information does not with sufficient certainty show that any assistance should have been given by the defendant to Steve Begley, the injured person."

[2] So in the case at bar respondents were charged with the offense denounced by the statute as a violation of the Corporate Securities Act, which itself is a felony as charged by the indictment under consideration, and which may be committed in any one or more of the various ways specified. It does not appear that any money was paid to the corporation for the securities issued and sold, as required by the permit, which alone is sufficient to warrant the overruling of the demurrer, and the denying of the motion in arrest of judgment, in so far as this ground of attack is concerned. It is therefore immaterial to the issue thus presented whether or not other allegations of the indictment were true, or that, had the jury found as a fact that the corporation received full par value for its stock, and that respondents misapplied the proceeds so received, the allegations of nonpayment would have been untrue. Had the indictment charged violations of all of the elements of the offense as defined in the act, it is obvious that the allegations would necessarily have been inconsistent, yet to convict upon all of them would not be necessary, since a violation of the Corporation Securities Act by noncompliance with any of its provisions or with a permit issued thereunder is sufficient to sustain the indictment, and to support a conviction thereon.

Many authorities are presented by respondents wherein statutes so worded as to embrace various distinct offenses, such as gambling, betting, pool selling, etc., were held to authorize a separate charge for a violation of each. Yet, as appears from a dissenting opinion in People v. Thompson, 111 Cal. 242, 43 P. 748, while in some cases such as sales of rum, brandy, whisky, or gin, distinct offenses may be committed, "it is not ill to charge in one count that the defendant did offer to sell and suffer to be sold intoxicating liquor." And in the same opinion it is further said that the "natures of the offense and of the act should be considered in determining whether or not a charge is double." In the instant case the defendants were alleged to have committed the "crime of violation of the Corporate Securities Act of the state of California, a felony, committed as follows," which in itself is an offense, and it is not attempted to be argued that, had all of the allegations been consistent and in fact proved, the trial court could have imposed more than one penalty. We conclude, therefore, that the indictment charged one public offense, and sufficiently conformed to the sections of the Penal Code governing the form and contents of such a pleading.

[3] It is next insisted that the Corporate Securities Act is unconstitutional. Respondents quote section 11 of article 12 of the Constitution, which provides, "No corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money paid, labor done, or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void," and assert that this provision is self-executing. They then refer to the provision of article 12, § 24, that "the Legislature shall pass all laws necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this article," and upon the latter predicate the claim that the act does not purport to provide for the enforcement of section 11, above quoted, because, unlike other similar enactments, its object and purpose are not specifically so stated. We think the laws passed by the Legislature comply with and fulfill the constitutional mandate. Without question this provision of the Constitution is self-executing to the extent that acts done in contravention of it are rendered illegal and void. The same declaration is contained in section 359 of the Civil Code, which provides that "no corporation shall issue stocks or bonds except for money paid," etc. All that can remain to be done is to give practical effect to these enactments by supplying the necessary legal administrative and executive machinery to compel compliance therewith. The act does this by providing that the commissioner of corporations shall make all necessary investigation of the applicant and its affairs, and if thereupon he finds that the proposed plan of business "is not unfair, or inequitable, that it intends to fairly and honestly transact its business, and that the securities that it proposes to issue and the methods to be used by it in issuing or disposing of them are not such as, in his opinion, will work a fraud upon the purchaser thereof, the commissioner shall issue a permit authorizing it to issue and dispose of securities, as therein provided," etc. As suggested by respondents, the prohibition of the Constitution against the issuance of stock except for valuable consideration imports the right under reasonable and proper conditions to issue and dispose of such securities. And yet, notwithstanding this constitutional privilege, section 12 of the act here in controversy provides that a sale even for cash, without the permit required by section 6 thereof, shall subject the seller to a penalty of fine and imprisonment. That all of the initial steps required by the act were complied with by the corporation and the commissioner is not denied. The applicant requested permission to dispose of its capital stock to the incorporators for cash, and a permit was issued, directing that it sell its capital stock to the persons designated, for full net cash to the corporation, which is in strict accord with the Constitution, Civil Code, and Corporate Securities Act. It is obvious that said act was intended to furnish the procedural system for enforcement of the constitutional safeguards to the purchasing public. Taken together, they constitute a single bulwark against the sale of worthless securities and other fraudulent practices, as well as guides for imprudent corporate officials, brokers, and purchasers in honest transactions. Such purpose and intention has been recognized by all of the decisions to which our attention is directed.

[4] It is insisted, however, that the act transcends legislative powers by attempting to delegate, and to provide for the exercise of, legislative and judicial authority, by conferring upon the commissioner of corporations the duty of investigation, determination as to the conditions of issuance and sales of stock, and discretion in granting or denying permits. It is contended, in effect, that what is fair, just, and equitable business which will not work a fraud upon purchasers, and reasonable or necessary conditions which should be imposed in order to insure safe disposition of the proceeds of sales of stock, are questions for legislative determination, and that since article 12, § 11, of the Constitution inferentially affords the right to issue and sell such securities, the Legislature alone is empowered to ordain what shall constitute the proper and necessary prerequisites to the issuance of a permit therefor.

The voluminous briefs filed by respondents are replete with authorities which interpret similar statutes creating commissions, and define the legislative limitations prescribed by our Constitution with respect to the delegation of powers and duties to officers of such state departments. A great many decisions are quoted which deal with harbor commissions, highway commissions, municipal charities commissions, industrial accident commissions, the state medical board, and the department of agriculture, but in none of these cases, nor in any others which we have been able to find, has it been held that the examination of facts and circumstances and determination of reasonable and necessary conditions to the issuance of permits, and their reasonable requirements, for the assurance of public safety, are legislative matters which cannot be delegated to the officers of a duly constituted state executive department. The cases relied upon by respondents hold that such commissions or departments have no power to legislate, but they do not attempt to intimate that they are mere rubber stamps. It has been held that they may not prescribe the nature and extent of proof necessary to make out a case, determine what shall be a misdemeanor and impose a penalty therefor, create drainage districts, nor in any manner enlarge or abridge a statute. Yet, in all cases where the question has arisen, it has been held that the commissioners of various departments may be invested with and exercise the power to make reasonable rules and regulations, and to determine any fact or state of facts upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. Board of Harbor Commissioners v. Excelsior Redwood Co., 88 Cal. 491, 26 P. 375, 22 Am. St. Rep. 321; In re McLain, 190 Cal. 376, 212 P. 620; In re Dart, 172 Cal. 47, 155 P. 63, L. R. A. 1916D, 905, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1127; Hewitt v. Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 84 P. 39, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750.

The Corporate Securities Act, by section 4 thereof, provides as follows:

"The commissioner may impose such conditions as he may deem necessary to the issue of such securities, and shall have the power to establish such rules and regulations as may be reasonable or necessary to insure the disposition of the proceeds of such securities in the manner and for the purposes provided in such permit, and may, from time to time for cause, amend, alter, or revoke any permit issued by him, or temporarily suspend the rights of the applicant under such permit."

This general power is conferred by all statutes creating state boards and commissions, in the same or similar language, and in no instance of which we are aware has it been held invalid because conferring legislative or judicial authority. Section 2520 et seq. of the Political Code, prescribing the powers and duties of harbor commissioners; chapter 176, Statutes of 1913, as amended, applicable to the Industrial Accident Commission; chapter 212, Statutes of 1907, as amended, known as the State Medical Act; chapter 325, Statutes of 1919, defining the powers and duties of the director of the department of agriculture, as derived from the former horticultural department (Pol. Code, § 2319b et seq.); Statutes of 1907, p. 124, designated the Poison Act, and chapter 212 of the Statutes of 1901, as amended, providing for the appointment of a board of architecture, and prescribing its powers and duties—all vest such authority in officers of the departments so created. In Ex parte McManus, 151 Cal. 331, 90 P. 702, our Supreme Court in passing upon the question now under discussion in the instant case, sanctioned the delegation of such powers to state boards and commissions generally, in the following language:

"It is insisted, in this connection, that it was the duty of the Legislature to have itself fixed in the act some standard or rules for determining the qualifications of applicants; that this was a legislative duty to be discharged by the Legislature itself, and a function which it could not delegate to the board of architecture, nor invest it with arbitrary power to provide a standard or rules upon the subject. It is undoubtedly a well-recognized maxim of constitutional law that authority conferred on the Legislature to make laws cannot be delegated by it to any other department or body; but here there is no delegation by the Legislature to the state board of architecture of the power to declare what the law shall be. That is declared by the act. It is an equally well-recognized principle that the Legislature, notwithstanding it may do things itself, may nevertheless authorize them to be done by ministerial officers or boards when it believes that they can do them more conveniently and effectually than it can itself. Especially may this be done when it is deemed proper by the Legislature to regulate in the interests of the public, through public commissions or boards constituted for that purpose, the pursuit of particular professions or occupations, as for example, that of physicians, dentists, druggists, engineers, architects, and others, which involve the exercise of skill and the possession of special knowledge and experience. Such commissions or boards are composed, as under this act the board of architects necessarily must be, of persons technically skilled and trained in their profession or occupation, and who are usually better able to determine whether an applicant for a license or certificate to practice a given profession or occupation is competent to do so, under reasonable rules and standards adopted by them, than under those which might be prescribed by the Legislature; and if in its wisdom the Legislature authorizes such a technically trained commission or board to prescribe reasonable rules, or fix a fair standard for determining the proficiency of applicants for a license or certificate, it cannot be said that a delegation, within the constitutional inhibition, of authority to make laws is conferred, or any other authority given, than the power necessary to be exercised by them to the end that the law as completely enacted by the Legislature may properly be carried into effect. * * * There is always implied in a grant of authority, such as here conferred, that it shall be exercised reasonably and fairly so as to effectuate the end contemplated. It may not be presumed that the authority conferred will be abused by the formulation of unreasonable or unjust rules, and from such presumption declare the act to be unconstitutional. On the contrary, the presumption is that the board will not act unreasonably or unfairly."

In Agnew v. Daugherty, 189 Cal. 446, 209 P. 34, section 4 of the Corporate Securities Act was directly attacked, and the Supreme Court there said:

"The passage in the above quotation from the statute which allows the commissioner to issue a permit authorizing the applicant to sell his securities 'upon such terms and conditions as the commissioner may in said permit provide' must be read in connection with the context, which provides that the commissioner must inquire into the method of doing business and shall ascertain if the same is fair, just and equitable and that the methods used in disposing of them would not work a fraud upon the purchasers thereof. The terms and conditions to be prescribed in the permit must not be such as would make a greater burden than is consistent with safety and security. * * * If the commissioner should refuse to issue a permit except upon conditions which would be unjust, unfair or inequitable to the applicant, doubtless he would have the right to have such permit revised and reformed so as to make it equitable and fair, but we cannot assume that he will impose such conditions in advance of his action."

We think it unnecessary to look outside our own state for authority upholding the right of the Legislature to empower and direct a commission or board created by it to make reasonable rules and regulations, to investigate into affairs of the business, profession, or occupation over which it is given jurisdiction, and exercise sound discretion as occasion may arise in granting or denying rights which are conditionally conferred. Respondents do not complain that the conditions imposed by the permit issued to them were unreasonable, oppressive, or arbitrary. Since, therefore, these precautionary measures in the interests of public safety may, as we have observed, be delegated to and performed by a board, commission, or officer theretofore duly constituted by the Legislature, respondents manifestly are subject to the regulations and conditions prescribed by the commissioner of corporations in this instance, and are not legally justified in complaining of the source from which they emanated.

[5, 6] That the commissioner exercises certain functions of a quasi judicial character is true. That the Legislature has "power to delegate to proper authority the making of suitable rules and regulations for the conduct and transaction of any branch of the business of the state," and to "declare a violation of those rules a penal offense," there can be no doubt. In re Potter, 164 Cal. 735, 130 P. 721. Such delegation does not, however, as already pointed out, authorize a commissioner to declare that any particular conduct constitutes a public offense, or to impose a penalty for a violation of a rule, regulation or law. It does no more than vest in him the power to exercise such necessary judgment and discretion as shall be incidental to the enforcement of laws which prescribe his other duties, and without which he would be helpless. Quasi judicial power lies in the judgment and discretion of an officer other than a judicial officer. State ex rel. Board of Liquidation v. Briede, 117 La. 183, 41 So. 487. It is a duty conferred by words or by implication upon an officer to look into facts and to act upon them in the exercise of discretion. Bair v. Struck, 29 Mont. 45, 74 P. 69, 63 L. R. A. 481.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

93 Cal. App. 133

PEOPLE v. TURNER. (Cr. 1032.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 10, 1928.

1. Homicide $\Rightarrow$ 151(3)—Burden of proving self-defense does not rest on defendant charged with manslaughter (Pen. Code, § 1105).

Defendant charged with manslaughter does not have burden of proving self-defense; Pen. Code, § 1105, providing that burden of proof does not shift to defendant in cases when proof tends to show manslaughter.

2. Homicide $\Rightarrow$ 118(2)—If circumstances lead reasonable man to believe that he is in danger of death or great bodily harm, retreat is unnecessary before killing in self-defense.

If the circumstances are such as to lead reasonable man to believe that he is in danger of death or great bodily harm, retreat is not necessary before killing in defense against attack is justifiable.

3. Homicide $\Rightarrow$ 300(3)—Instruction that danger of death or bodily harm would not be imminent if mode of escape appeared to reasonable man held uncertain.

Instruction that, if circumstances would have induced reasonable man so situated to believe that there was reasonable mode of escape from danger of death or great bodily harm, danger would not be imminent and killing would not be justifiable, held uncertain and indefinite; mode of escape not being specified.

4. Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 1186(4)—Constitutional provision against reversal for nonprejudicial error held inapplicable where erroneous instructions were given against defendant who as sole witness testified she shot in self-defense (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Where defendant as sole witness testified she shot deceased who was drunk, after he had given her rifle and told her to shoot him or he would kill her with knife which he had in his hand, Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing against reversal for error not prejudicial, was not applicable, where erroneous instructions were given.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County, F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Cassie Turner was convicted of manslaughter, and she appeals. Reversed.

O. S. Baldwin and J. T. Sharp, both of Alturas, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant was convicted upon an information charging her with the offense of manslaughter, and appeals from the order denying a motion for a new trial and from the judgment of conviction.

Upon this appeal the principal grounds urged for a reversal are that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence, that the court erred in its instructions to the jury, and that prejudicial error was committed in calling in a person, who was not a judge of any superior court of the state of California, to pass upon the defendant's motion for a new trial. Several minor points are also set forth as reasons why the judgment herein should be reversed. By reason of the conclusion at which we have arrived, it is not necessary for us to discuss more than one of the principal reasons urged for reversal, to wit, alleged errors in instructions given by the trial court to the jury. Whether the evidence is or is not sufficient to sustain the verdict, or whether error was committed in calling in some one, not a judge of the superior court, to pass upon the defendant's motion for a new trial, will be shown to be immaterial when we have stated our conclusions as to the merits of this case. The minor errors alleged are such as may not occur again, and therefore need not be set forth at length herein.

The record shows: That on and for a short period prior to the 16th day of February, 1928, the defendant (an Indian girl), and the deceased, Robert De Clute, had been occupying a railroad car, used as a residence. On the evening of the 16th of February, 1928, the defendant and another Indian girl named Dressie Dickens spent a considerable time at a place referred to in the testimony as the Turner cabin, in the town of Alturas. That, while they were at the Turner cabin, the deceased and the two Indian girls managed to consume a bottle of rubbing alcohol which the deceased brought with him to the Turner cabin. That the three remained in the Turner cabin until about 1 o'clock of the following morning, playing cards and drinking the alcohol referred to. That at about 1 a. m. on the 17th day of February, 1928, the deceased and the two Indian girls left the Turner cabin and went to the railroad car occupied by the deceased, as hereinbefore referred to, upon the request of the deceased, and upon his statement that he had some more liquor there. That, upon reaching the railroad car, the deceased produced a gallon jug of liquor mentioned in the testimony as "jackass whisky" and "jackass brandy," and from this all three of the parties drank more or less, the deceased drinking until he became drunken. At about 2:30 a. m. the Indian girl named Dressie Dickens left the railroad car and went home. The deceased and the defendant remained in the car, and, when the witness named Dressie Dickens departed therefrom, were sitting on a bed, apparently friendly. From this time on, as to what occurred depends entirely upon the testimony of the defendant, and occurred while both of the parties in the car were in an intoxicated condition. From the testimony of the appellant, it appears that the trouble began over the subject of marriage between the deceased and the defendant, and, as it appears in the record, is substantially as follows: The deceased having asked the defendant to marry him in the morning, and the defendant having replied, "Have you forgotten our agreement that we are to get married the 1st of March?" The deceased then said, "If you don't marry me to-morrow, I will kill you and then myself;" the defendant answering, "Don't you remember we promised to get married the 1st of March? I'll bet you're drunk." The deceased replied, "You bet your —— life I'm drunk." At this instant of time the deceased became angry and walked over to the corner of the car to a small closet and took therefrom a 30-30 Winchester rifle, manipulated it as in the act of loading, took it over to where the defendant was sitting, and placed it in her hands. After placing the rifle in the hands of the defendant, the deceased took a pocket knife from his pocket and opened a long sharp blade and sat down on the bed directly in front of the defendant, not over six feet distant, and then told the defendant to kill him, otherwise he would kill her and himself, to which the defendant replied, "I don't want to kill you, Bob, and I don't want to die, either; please don't make me do it." Again the deceased repeated his command to the defendant, and held the open pocket knife in his right hand in a menacing manner, and stated, "You kill me, or I'll kill you and then myself." Again the defendant declined to fire, and deceased further said, "Well, are you going to shoot?" He then raised the open pocket knife in his right hand and repeated for the third time, "Are you going to shoot? If you don't, I'll kill you and myself;" at which time the defendant, fearing for her own life and bodily safety, fired the fatal shot. Testimony of the defendant was further to the effect that she acted under the belief that she was in great bodily peril, and that the deceased was about to execute his threat by killing her with the knife. In support of this, testimony was introduced to the effect that the deceased was skillful in throwing knives, that the defendant had seen him so doing, and, further, that the deceased had, at some time previously, in the county of Elko, Nev., been arrested and pleaded guilty to the charge of assault with a deadly weapon, with intent to inflict great bodily harm, etc. The only evidence in the record which might tend to contradict that of the defendant was to the effect that on the following day, or shortly thereafter, the defendant, upon being interrogated, stated that the deceased was killed by a Mexican called the "Chief," and also with reference to what was stated in a letter written by the defendant after the occurrences, in which she stated that she had shot the deceased, and that what she wrote to that effect was at the request of a certain Mrs. Beck, Mrs. Beck testifying that she did not tell the defendant what to write in the letter referred to.

The record shows, as the foregoing summary indicates, that the only question to be decided by the jury was whether the defendant acted in necessary self-defense, or whether the circumstances were such as to justify a reasonable person in so acting. To aid the jury in answering this question, the court gave the jury, among others, the following instructions:

"Instruction No. 8. You are instructed, lady and gentlemen of the jury, that the defendant in this case has sought to justify the killing of Robert De Clute, by attempting to show that she acted in self-defense. You are further instructed that the burden of proving justification is upon the defendant.

"Instruction No. 9. You are instructed, members of the jury, that, to justify the commission of a homicide in self-defense, there must exist a necessity, actual or apparent. The danger must appear to the person assailed to be so urgent and pressing that, in order to save his own life or to prevent his receiving great bodily harm, the killing of his assailant is absolutely, or at least reasonably, necessary. A defendant may not justify the taking of human life upon the belief that danger is about to become imminent, or that it will in the future become imminent; it is not enough that there should exist in the mind of the defendant a belief that he is in actual peril. It must appear that he believed himself in such peril, but that, as a reasonable person, he had sufficient grounds for his belief. The killing must be done under an honest and well-founded belief that it is necessary for the party killing, to take the life of the deceased at that time to save himself from great bodily harm. If the circumstances as they appear to the defendant would have induced a reasonable man, so situated, to believe that there was a reasonable mode available to him to escape from danger of death or great bodily harm, the danger thereof would not then be imminent, and the killing would not be justifiable. It is for the jury to determine whether, as a reasonable man, the defendant was justified in believing himself in danger."

"Instruction No. 12. The court instructs you that the duty of the defendant to flee rather than to kill, if retreat is possible, only applies where the defendant is the assailant; but, when a defendant, who is himself without fault, is suddenly attacked in a way that puts his life or bodily safety at imminent hazard, he is not compelled to fly (flee) or to consider the proposition of flying (fleeing), but may stand his ground and defend himself to the extent of taking the life of the assailant, if that be reasonably necessary."

[1] While there is some doubt as to the state of the record concerning the giving of instruction No. 8, whether it was consented to by counsel for the defendant, we are satisfied that the record is in such condition that the defendant is not bound by anything that appears therein. This instruction appears to have been given on the theory that section 1105 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows: "Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon him, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable," is applicable where an information or indictment charges manslaughter. This, however, is not the law. The section applies only where murder is charged, and the circumstances do not show any mitigating or justifying facts. The rule is aptly stated in 13 California Jurisprudence, p. 736:

"If the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the homicide amounts only to manslaughter, or that it was justifiable or excusable, then no burden is placed on defendant to prove any circumstances of mitigation or that justify or excuse it."

Here the charge against the defendant is that of manslaughter only, and the burden of proof is not shifted. The trial court in the instant case did not give to the jury that portion of section 1105 of the Penal Code which would have informed the jury that it applied only to cases where the defendant was on trial for the crime of murder, but, omitting such portion of the section, the court directly charged the jury that the burden of proof rested upon the defendant. To show the prejudicial character of this instruction, we have only to set forth a short excerpt taken from the concluding argument of the district attorney, to wit:

"So, after we have presented the proof to you that the defendant Cassie Turner killed Robert De Clute by shooting him with a rifle, the burden has shifted to the defense to show why she killed him, or if she had any justification whatever for taking this human life. She must show you, by a preponderance of the evidence, that she killed this man in self-defense."

Section 1105 of the Penal Code has been considered a number of times both by the Supreme Court and District Court of Appeal, and the holding in all of the cases is to the effect that the burden does not shift when the testimony introduced on the part of the people shows that the offense amounts only to manslaughter, or that there are mitigating or justifying circumstances, and also that, when the testimony introduced on the part of the prosecution shows that the offense amounts only to manslaughter, section 1105 of the Penal Code is inapplicable and should not be given even though in some of the cases the giving of the instruction is held not to be erroneous. There is no California case holding that, when a defendant is charged only with manslaughter, the burden of proof rests upon the defendant. Such is not the meaning of the section, as we interpret it, and the giving of the instruction in this case we think prejudicial error.

[2] Again, in instruction No. 9, we find the following sentence:

"If the circumstances, as they appear to the defendant, would have induced a reasonable man so situated, to believe that there was a reasonable mode available to him to escape from danger of death or great bodily harm, the danger thereof would not then be imminent, and the killing would not be justifiable."

While in some states this rule is followed, the modern trend is to the contrary, and the exact opposite is the law in the state of California. 13 Cal. Jur., p. 649, § 49.

In the case of People v. Maughs, 149 Cal. 253, 86 P. 187, an almost identical instruction was given to the jury, and in an elaborate opinion the Supreme Court, in the Maughs Case, held the giving of such instruction prejudicial error, and further held that the giving of an instruction, as we find in instruction No. 12 in this case, not sufficient to cure the error. The court, in considering the subsequent instruction given in the Maughs Case as to the nonnecessity of retreating, used the following language:

"Nor is it any answer to this objection that the court elsewhere gave a correct instruction upon the subject. The result served but to confuse the jury and to render it impossible to determine whether in their deliberations they followed the law as correctly or as incorrectly set before them"—citing People v. Campbell, 30 Cal. 312; People v. Anderson, 44 Cal. 65; People v. Wong, etc., 54 Cal. 151, 35 Am. Rep. 69; People v. Messersmith, 57 Cal. 575; People v. Thomson, 92 Cal. 506, 28 P. 589, and People v. Pearne, 118 Cal. 154, 50 P. 376.

[3] The further objection that the language which we have just quoted from instruction No. 9 is indefinite and uncertain as to its meaning, we also think well taken. Just what is "the reasonable mode available to him to escape from danger of death," etc., is not specified. Was it by retreating, or was it by using other available means to repel the threatened assault of the deceased, such as by striking him over the head with the rifle instead of discharging the load therein contained? We conclude that it means that the defendant should have retreated, if possible, which, of course, is not a correct statement of the law.

[4] The arriving at a conclusion in this cause necessarily depending upon the interpretation and credibility to be given to the testimony of the defendant, as she was the sole witness to the affair, it follows that there is no room for the application of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. Upon the record, the testimony would as readily lead to the conclusion that the defendant was justified, as to the conclusion that she was not.

While the words used by the deceased, taken alone, were not sufficient to justify the acts of the defendant, yet, in view of the threats of the deceased, when coupled with his acts, such as the raised right arm with the hand grasping an open knife, indicating a present purpose and ability to inflict great bodily harm, we find a situation presented which precludes our holding that the evidence was such that the jury could not have been influenced by the erroneous instructions casting the burden of proof upon the defendant, even though we were to hold that the jury may not have been misled by the conflicting instructions as to the defendant's duty to retreat. The fact that the acts of the deceased were being impelled by a thought inflamed with the poison of jackass brandy also presents an added peril which we cannot overlook in passing upon the probable effects of the erroneous instructions. The errors being prejudicial, the judgment cannot be sustained. It therefore follows that the order and judgment appealed from must be, and the same are hereby, reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

204 Cal. 535

HILTON v. OLIVER et al. (Sac. 3898.)

Supreme Court of California. July 17, 1928.

1. Drains ☞57—Negligence of employees in cleaning débris from culvert in drainage ditch is not imputable to trustees (Civ. Code, § 2351).

Negligence of drainage district employees in placing cut tules on bank when cleaning débris from culvert cannot be imputed to trustees of the district, having no knowledge of method followed by employees in performing such work under superintendence of foreman, since under Civ. Code, § 2351, lawfully appointed subagent represents principal in like manner with original agent.

2. Principal and agent ☞160—Agent generally is not liable to third persons for misfeasance or malfeasance of subagent.

An agent is not, in general, liable to third persons for misfeasance or malfeasance of a subagent employed by him in the service of his principal, unless he is guilty of negligence in the appointment of such subagent, or authorizes particular wrongful act.

3. Officers ☞118—Respondeat superior doctrine does not apply between public officer and subordinates, unless superior directs or countenances tortious acts.

Doctrine of respondeat superior has no application as between a public officer and his subordinates, who are likewise in the public service, unless the public officer has directed or countenanced the tortious acts to be done, or has co-operated therein.

4. Drains ☞57—Evidence held insufficient to sustain recovery against trustees of reclamation district for damage to crop from overflow.

In action against trustees of reclamation district for damages to crops because of overflow, evidence held insufficient to sustain recovery against trustees without showing knowledge of alleged acts of negligence on the part of subordinate agents in cleaning débris from ditch.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; John F. Pullen, Judge.

Action by F. A. Hilton against Emery Oliver and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 261 P. 1021.

Charles W. Slack and Edgar T. Zook, both of San Francisco, and C. F. Metteer, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Martin I. Welsh and Robert Schwab, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

SHENK, J. In 1921 and 1922 the plaintiff was the lessee and in possession of 120 acres of land in reclamation district No. 1000. In the latter part of the year 1921 he seeded the land with barley. On the 9th day of February, 1922, the crop was about two inches high. On that day a heavy rainstorm started, and continued for three or four days. On February 12th one of the drainage ditches of the district, located near the plaintiff's land, overflowed and damaged the plaintiff's crops. Thereafter he brought this action for damages against the district and the individual defendants, who were at the time the trustees of the district. Before trial the action was dismissed as to the district. The jury rendered a verdict against the trustees in the sum of $1,000, and from a judgment thereon this appeal is taken.

The complaint alleged "that on or about the 12th day of February, 1922, said defendants so negligently and carelessly maintained and operated" said drainage ditch that the ditch overflowed and the water therefrom covered the premises of the plaintiff and damaged his crops. It is not disputed that under certain circumstances the trustees may be held liable for negligence. See Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 127 P. 50; Proper v. Sutter Drainage District, 53 Cal. App. 576, 200 P. 664. Prior to 1923 the district itself was not liable for the negligence of its trustees. By section 3464 of the Political Code, added in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 513), the negligence of the trustees of a reclamation district is made imputable to the district to the same extent as if the district were a private corporation.

The main contention of the defendants is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict finding them guilty of negligence in the "maintenance and operation" of the drainage ditch. Negligence in the construction of the ditch is not charged against them. Reclamation district No. 1000 was one of the first big tracts of overflowed land in the Sacramento valley to be reclaimed under the Drainage District Act. The work of reclamation commenced in 1914. The area in the district comprises 54,000 acres of land, and approximately 130 miles of drainage ditches were constructed therein. The particular ditch in question is known as the "L-lateral," and passes north and south within about 800 feet to the east of plaintiff's land. In the original plans it was determined from an engineering standpoint that this ditch should have a carrying capacity of 29 second feet. By applying a safety factor, the ditch was actually constructed with a carrying capacity of from 50 to 60 second feet. The original plans called for the installation of a culvert opposite plaintiff's land as a means of furnishing a crossing for the convenience of land owners. This culvert, consisting of a 30-inch pipe, was installed in 1918, and was sufficient to carry the maximum flow of the ditch. In the course of time tules and other vegetable growth appeared in the drainage ditches which required removal annually. To remove this growth laborers were employed in 1921 under the direction of a foreman, who performed his duties under the immediate direction of F. E. Awalt, who was occupying the position of field superintendent under appointment by the board of trustees. It is not claimed by the plaintiff that Mr. Awalt was not qualified for the position, nor that the trustees were remiss in any respect in his appointment. In removing the tules from the ditch above the culvert in 1921, the crew, working under the direction of the foreman, placed the cut tules on the bank of the ditch, there to remain until the same should be removed or destroyed. Following the rainstorm of February 9th to 12th, inclusive, in 1922, a large portion of the land in the district was inundated. The water covered from 10,000 to 12,000 acres of land according to one witness, and according to another witness from 40 to 50 per cent. of the entire area of the district was flooded from two to four inches deep, the water eventually running off in the canals. The field superintendent testified that "after the storm broke the canals were plugged up with all kinds of debris. Oil drums, gasoline barrels, boards, timbers, tumble weeds, debris of all description," were taken therefrom. The culvert in the "L-lateral" was clogged with debris, and it was this stoppage of the water that caused the overflowing of the ditch.

The plaintiff contended at the trial that the tules that had been cut by the employees of the district and placed upon the banks of the ditch were caught by the rising waters and floated down to the culvert, and obstructed the passage of the water through it. On the proof of the maintenance of the culvert, the placing of the cut tules upon the banks of the ditch, and the further proof that tules were removed from the culvert in order to release the water through the same, the plaintiff predicates his claim of sufficient proof of negligence against the defendant trustees. The plaintiff saw the water backing up in front of the culvert, and testified that he endeavored to remove the obstruction, but was unable to do so. He noticed that tules were fastened in the head of the culvert, and concluded that the entire obstruction was caused by tules; but employees of the district, who got down into the water and removed the debris, found boards obstructing the flow of water in the pipe. On these boards the tules and weeds had apparently fastened themselves. The evidence was undisputed that the culvert as constructed and maintained was sufficient to carry the maximum flow of the ditch, and there was no proof that the culvert had theretofore been clogged with debris or had theretofore caused an overflow of the ditch.

[1-4] Assuming that the employees of the district working under the foreman were negligent in placing the cut tules on the bank of the ditch in such a way that during the storm they were caught by the rising waters and carried on to the culvert, thereby contributing to the obstruction and the consequent overflow, there was no evidence whatever in the record, either directly or by reasonable inference, that the defendant trustees knew anything at all about such action on the part of said employees in doing the work. Nor was there any evidence that the method followed by the said employees in disposing of the cut tules was directed or countenanced by or known to the trustees prior to said rainstorm and flood. Under these circumstances the negligence, of which we have assumed the employees were guilty, could not be imputed to the trustees of the district under well-established law of this state. The trustees were the agents of the district, a public corporation. The field superintendent and foreman of the crew were subordinate agents employed in the service of the common principal, the reclamation district. Section 2351 of the Civil Code provides:

"A subagent, lawfully appointed, represents the principal in like manner with the original agent; and the original agent is not responsible to third persons for the acts of the subagent."

The trustees in the case at bar were in the position of original agents, as contemplated by the statute. As such original agents they were not liable to the plaintiff, a third person, for the negligence of their coservants or agents, except under circumstances which do not here appear. The rule laid down or approved by the decisions in this state is that an agent is not in general liable to third persons for the misfeasance or malfeasance of a subagent employed by him in the service of his principal, unless he is guilty of negligence in the appointment of such subagent, or directs or authorizes the particular wrongful act of the subagent, or improperly co-operates in the latter's acts or omissions. Dobbins v. City of Arcadia, 44 Cal. App. 181, 186 P. 190; Baisley v. Henry, 55 Cal. App. 760, 204 P. 399. The defendant trustees can be held liable under the facts shown herein only by reason of the application of the doctrine of respondeat superior. This doctrine has no application as between a public officer and his subordinates, who are likewise in the public service, unless the public officer has directed or countenanced the tortious acts to be done, or has co-operated therein. Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205 P. 113; Whiteman v. Irrigation District, 60 Cal. App. 234, 212 P. 706. As the record herein does not disclose that the defendant trustees directed or co-operated in or knew of the alleged acts of negligence on the part of the subordinate agents and employees of the district, or were at all remiss in the matter of their appointment, the evidence was wholly insufficient to support the verdict.

The case of Perkins v. Blauth, supra, and the case of Proper v. Sutter Drainage District, supra, so strongly relied upon by the plaintiff, are not controlling. In the Perkins Case the defendant trustees in their official capacity entered into a contract on behalf of the district for the doing of the particular work involving the tortious act that caused the damage. In the Proper Case the defendant trustees knew of the defective condition of the ditch or lateral from which the plaintiff's land was flooded, and continued its use in that condition, with knowledge of the defects which had resulted in a prior flooding of the same land. With such knowledge they failed to control the cause so as to prevent it from inflicting further injury. In neither case was the doctrine of respondeat superior applied or applicable, for negligence was brought home to the trustees themselves.

Other points need not be discussed. The judgment is reversed.

We concur: PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

204 Cal. 582

PEOPLE v. HARDWICK. (Cr. 3087.)

Supreme Court of California. July 18, 1928.

1. Assault and battery §64—Peace officer in arresting for misdemeanor need not retreat before using extreme measures to prevent receiving injury, but must press forward to accomplish his purpose.

While a private citizen may be obliged to retreat to avoid the necessity of resorting to extreme measures to prevent receiving great bodily injury, a peace officer in making an arrest for a misdemeanor is not under such compulsion, but must press forward to accomplish his purpose.

2. Assault and battery §96(2)—Jury should have been instructed that defendant in making arrest for misdemeanor was not obliged to retire to avoid conflict.

In prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon, under evidence that defendant was endeavoring to make an arrest for a misdemeanor, jury should have been instructed he was under no obligation to retire in order to avoid a conflict.

3. Criminal law §757(6)—Instruction that witness convicted of felony was less likely to be truthful than one not so convicted held reversible error.

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, where to impeach defendant as a witness evidence was introduced that he had been convicted of manslaughter in Oklahoma, instruction that one convicted of felony is less likely to be honest and truthful in his testimony than one who has not been convicted held reversible error, where credibility of witness was for jury and court was unauthorized to suggest as matter of law that former conviction deprived witness of credit presumptively due him.

4. Criminal law §823(12)—Error in charge on credibility of witness convicted of felony held not cured by general statement jury were sole judges of evidence.

In criminal prosecution, where evidence that defendant was convicted of manslaughter in Oklahoma was admitted to impeach his credibility as a witness, error in instruction that one convicted of felony was less likely to be honest and truthful in testimony than one not so convicted held not cured by general instruction that jury were sole and exclusive judges of effect and value of evidence.

5. Witnesses §345(4)—Pardon of witness convicted of felony is admissible and to be considered by jury in determining his credibility.

In criminal prosecution, where conviction of defendant of felony is admitted to impeach him as a witness, if pardon has been granted him, it is admissible in evidence so that jury may determine his credibility thereafter.

6. Witnesses §345(4)—Whether witness convicted of felony was wrongfully convicted cannot be inquired into because of admission of pardon on issue of credibility.

In criminal prosecution, where conviction of witness of felony is admitted as affecting his credibility, if pardon is introduced in evidence, whether conviction was wrongful may not be inquired into, since to do so would require examination into collateral matter.

7. Criminal law §778(3)—Instruction that presumption of innocence continues throughout trial should always be given.

In criminal prosecution, charge that presumption of innocence continues with defendant throughout trial and deliberations of jury should always be given.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

Joe Hardwick was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Reversed.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 260 P. 946.

Edgar B. Hervey and M. W. Conkling, both of El Centro, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Elmer W. Heald, of Brawley, for the People.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 2, was granted. Further consideration of the record and of the points involved has persuaded us of the correctness of the conclusions expressed by the District Court of Appeal. We therefore adopt the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, of which Mr. Justice Thompson is the author, as the opinion of this court. The opinion is as follows:

The defendant was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon upon William A. Taylor and appeals from the judgment of the court pronounced upon the verdict and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The undisputed facts are that on the evening of February 3, 1927, Taylor, in company with his wife and six male companions and their wives, had been at the Climax Café in Mexicali, Mexico, from about 7:30 in the evening, eating, drinking and dancing; that about 8:50 p. m. they recrossed the international line into Calexico, Cal.; that upon their arrival in Calexico they separated into two groups of seven each, for the purpose of driving home in two automobiles; that very soon after Taylor and a Mrs. Booker seated themselves in one of the machines, the defendant, who was a peace officer, approached the automobile and demanded that they not make so much noise; that in the conversation which immediately ensued the defendant said in effect that he ought "to throw" Taylor "in"; that Taylor demanded to see Hardwick's authority; that Hardwick grabbed Taylor in an effort to pull him out of the machine and shortly after shot him; that the bullet entered the body near the left nipple and lodged under the skin in Taylor's back, whence it was subsequently removed; that after the shooting Taylor was taken into the police station, where the officers secured the services of a physician. This, in substance, comprises the undisputed facts. There is a sharp conflict on other matters. The defendant and several of his witnesses testified that the party returning from Mexico was very noisy and boisterous. The defendant asserts that his attention was attracted to the car in which Taylor and Mrs. Booker were sitting by the noise made by a woman and that as he approached it he heard her exclaim, "Oh! Oh!" "Quit; let me alone!" several times. Appellant further testified that when Taylor demanded his authority he threw back his coat and displayed his badge, not once but twice; that after he tried to pull Taylor out of the machine Taylor made a move with his right hand toward his right hip pocket as though to draw a gun, accompanying the move with profanity; and that he, being fearful of his life, shot. He testified further that the only members of Taylor's party in or at the automobile were Taylor and Mrs. Booker. He was corroborated in this testimony by his nephew, who said that he heard a woman screaming; that his uncle went over to see what the trouble was and a few minutes later called him and his cousin, Roly Hardwick, over there, saying something about trouble; that he saw his uncle show Taylor his badge, saw the attempt to pull Taylor out of the automobile, followed by the motion of Taylor as though to draw a gun, and saw the shooting; that Roly was there with him until he was told by his uncle to get a policeman and get him quick; and that no member of Taylor's party was present except Taylor and the one woman. The testimony of the people's witnesses may be fully illustrated by stating in substance the testimony of Taylor, who was corroborated in all important points by four of his witnesses who claimed to have been in a position to see and hear. He testified that Mr. and Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Jones branched off from his party of seven, the three of them going to the rest rooms of a Shell Oil Company station near by and did not come up to the car until about the time that he told the defendant that he was not aware of the fact that they were making any noise and also told the defendant to leave the young lady "out of the conversation"; that Hardwick at no time placed him under arrest or showed him an emblem of authority; that after his refusal to show his authority he resisted the defendant when he tried to pull him out of the car, whereupon Hardwick called out, "Come over here, you fellows," and after a few more words, pulled his gun and shot.

The appellant's first complaint is the refusal of the court to give the following instruction:

"An officer having legal authority to make an arrest who is resisted by the person whom he attempts to arrest is under no obligation to wait for assistance or retire in order to avoid a conflict with the person he thus attempts to arrest, or to retire in order to avoid injury at the hands of any such person whom he attempts to arrest, or to wait for assistance in the making of any such arrest by reason of any resistance offered, and that it is the duty of all persons who commit any crime be it felony or misdemeanor in the presence of an officer to peacefully submit to arrest and not to offer any resistance." (Italics ours.)

The court refused to give the instruction in toto, but did give the italicized portion, and also gave an instruction, a portion of which reads as follows:

"If you believe from the evidence in this case that Taylor, at the time of his arrest, if he was arrested, or at the time defendant was approaching the car which Taylor and Mrs. Booker had entered, was drunk or committing a disturbance of the peace or any other public offense, then and in either such case it was the duty and right of the defendant to arrest Taylor, and for that purpose he was authorized to use whatever force was necessary to take Taylor into custody, and if Taylor resisted such arrest, and in the course of such resistance threw back his hand as if to draw a gun, and if from that act and other circumstances in the case the defendant honestly believed, and, as a reasonable man, had good cause to believe, that he was in imminent danger of suffering death or great bodily harm at the hands of Taylor, then the defendant was justified in shooting Taylor for the purpose of disabling or killing him, if that appeared to be necessary in order to protect himself, and in such case the defendant would not be accountable, and you should acquit him even though it should afterwards appear that Taylor was unarmed, and that the indication on which the defendant acted was wholly fallacious, and that he was not in actual peril. On the other hand, if, after considering all of the evidence in this case, you believe, beyond a reasonable doubt, that Taylor had neither committed, nor was in the act of committing, any public offense at the time the defendant approached the car on the night in question, then the arrest of Taylor by the defendant, if he was arrested, would be unlawful, and Taylor would have a right to resist such unlawful attempt to arrest him, though he would not have a right to resort to extreme measures such as using a gun, or other dangerous weapon in such resistance, unless circumstances existed at the time the arrest was being attempted which were reasonably sufficient to justify him in the belief that he was about to be injured in body or limb, or that his life was in danger from the defendant. If the arrest of Taylor was unlawful and was made without probably [sic] cause, or, if the arrest was made by the defendant in bad faith and for the purpose of oppression, then and in either such case the defendant, as between himself and Taylor, would be the first aggressor, and the defendant would not be permitted under the law to justify his act of shooting Taylor on the ground of self-defense, unless he had in good faith, before he fired the shot that wounded Taylor, desisted from all threats, if any, and all acts of violence, if any, and had withdrawn from his attempt to arrest Taylor, if he was attempting to arrest him."

There was another instruction which stated the conditions under which the right of self-defense may be asserted, including the following:

"That the party may not himself be the first aggressor, or, if the aggressor, that he has in good faith withdrawn from the contest before the fatal blow."

[1, 2] It is the claim of appellant that in these instructions, together with others which define with greater particularity the element of apparent necessity to resort to extreme measures to prevent receiving great bodily injury, the trial judge overlooked the distinction between a peace officer and a citizen; that while the citizen may be obliged to retreat to avoid the necessity, that the officer is under no such compulsion, but rather is obligated to press forward for the accomplishment of his purpose. There can be no doubt that appellant's statement of the law is correct, but in this connection we must bear in mind that there is a substantial difference, in using an undue amount of force to prevent escape, from that of using all the force necessary to overcome resistance. In Krueger v. State, 171 Wis. 566, 177 N. W. 917, it is said that:

"While in order to apprehend the person charged with a misdemeanor only an officer may not take the life of the person so charged, it does not follow by any means that any resistance offered to the arrest may not be overcome to the extent of taking life, if that be necessary to overcome the resistance. * * * It was not only his privilege but his duty to overcome such resistance, and the taking of life necessary to do so constitutes justifiable homicide under section 4366, Stats."

And in State v. Dierberger, 96 Mo. 666, 10 S. W. 168, 9 Am. St. Rep. 380, the court says:

"The officer must of necessity be the aggressor. His mission is not accomplished when he wards off the assault. He must press forward and accomplish his object. He is not bound to put off the arrest until a more favorable time. Because of these duties devolved upon him the law throws around him a special protection."

Further quotations might be added to the same effect from the old books of the common law, which are to-day accepted as guides to our modern law. See quotations and citations, Bishop's New Criminal Law, vol. 2, §§ 647 et seq. Under this state of the law the jury should unquestionably have been told, in view of the testimony which justified them in believing that the defendant was endeavoring to make an arrest for a misdemeanor, that he was under no obligation to retire in order to avoid a conflict. They were informed that before the defendant could possibly be justified in the use of a deadly weapon he could not have been "the first aggressor, or, if the aggressor, that he" had "in good faith withdrawn from the contest before the fatal blow." As is stated in the quotation from State v. Dierberger, supra, the officer must under the law be the aggressor. The court endeavored, however, to define what was meant by the term aggressor as used in the instruction by saying that if the arrest were unlawful or oppressive the defendant would be the first aggressor. Did the jury understand from this that the defendant in the eyes of the law would only be the aggressor in the event of an unlawful attempt to make an arrest? Ordinarily, it may be said that the statement of one instance where the person would be an aggressor would not conclude the possibility of his being an aggressor otherwise. However, as a part of this same instruction, the jury were told that if Taylor was in fact committing any offense at the time of the attempted arrest, "it was the duty and right of the defendant to arrest Taylor, and for that purpose he was authorized to use whatever force was necessary to take Taylor." Reading the two portions of these instructions together, we think the jury could gather no other idea than the one that only in the event the attempted arrest were unlawful or oppressive would the defendant be the aggressor, and that otherwise it was his duty to press forward and make the arrest, using all the force necessary to accomplish that purpose.

[3] During the trial of the defendant, who was a witness, evidence was introduced, for the purpose of impeachment, establishing that the defendant had been convicted of the offense of manslaughter in the state of Oklahoma, and thereafter the defendant sought to introduce an unconditional pardon from the Governor of that state in which it is recited that the defendant was first granted a parole on the recommendation of the board of prison control, and that "since the granting of said parole" the defendant has "lived the life of a good, upright, law-abiding citizen, and as such is entitled to a full pardon." The court excluded the pardon and in connection with this phase of the case instructed the jury as follows:

"Where the defendant in a criminal case, testifies as a witness in his own behalf, he may be impeached by showing that he has been convicted of a felony, if such is the fact; and such showing may be made by examination of the defendant himself or it may be shown by the record of the judgment of the conviction. Such impeachment affects only the credibility of the witness. It is permitted upon the theory that a man who has been convicted of a felony is less likely to be honest and truthful in his testimony than a man who has not been convicted of a felony. It does not, however, impeach the character of defendant for the peace and quiet, or prove, or tend to prove, in any way, the charge upon which he is on trial, and no such inference should be drawn from the impeachment or from the judgment of conviction upon which the impeachment is based (Code Civ. Proc. § 2051), and anything said or done in the presence of the jury concerning a pardon, which may or may not have been granted to defendant, it having been stricken from the record, is of no consequence in this case, and must be disregarded by the jury, as must all other evidence which has been ruled out or stricken, or to which objections have been sustained."

Counsel complains of the action of the court in this respect for two reasons: First, that the court erred in giving the instruction, and particularly that portion in which it is stated that one "who has been convicted of a felony is less likely to be honest and truthful in his testimony" than one who has not been convicted, asserting that the court should have given a requested instruction to the effect that it is for the jury, and the jury alone, to say what effect the conviction will have upon their mind; second, that, the conviction being admitted, the pardon was admissible, together with the circumstances attending the conviction. He also asserts that the record disclosing that the district attorney having knowledge of the pardon, it was prejudicial error for the district attorney to mention the conviction before the jury. However, inasmuch as appellant concedes the admissibility of the conviction regardless of the pardon, it is impossible to conceive any legitimate reason why the district attorney should not mention the conviction.

Should the court have given that portion of the instruction just mentioned and refused to give the following instruction:

"A previous conviction of a felony does not necessarily destroy the credibility of any witness, nor does it raise a presumption that the witness has or will testify to that which is false. It is simply a circumstance of more or less weight which you are authorized to take into consideration in determining what credit shall be given to him with respect to his testimony."

[4] It is not debatable that the instruction asked by defendant correctly states the law applicable to the situation. It was for the jury to say, in view of all the circumstances, what credit should be given the witness, and the court has not the authority to suggest that, "as a matter of law," a former conviction "deprived the particular witness of any portion of the credit presumptively due to the testimony of witnesses [sic]." People v. McLane, 60 Cal. 412. It has been held that the effect of a former conviction, where introduced for the purpose of impeachment must be left to the jury. Leventhal v. Home Ins. Co. (Sup.) 165 N. Y. S. 323. But here the trial judge in no uncertain terms informed the jury that the witness was not entitled to the same credibility as one who had not been convicted. And in so far as he did so he stepped beyond the judicial function and attempted to discharge the duty of the jury. This he could not do, nor was the error cured by a general statement included in the instruction usually if not always given, to the effect that the jury are the sole and exclusive judges of the effect and value of evidence. In this instance they were given to understand that, as a matter of law, a person who has been convicted is deprived of a part, at least, of the credibility presumptively due the witness. We have heretofore recited sufficient of the testimony to disclose that the testimony was in sharp conflict and that had the jury not been misinstructed the trial might have terminated otherwise. We cannot say that the error is not prejudicial or that it has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

While the error found to exist requires a reversal, yet, in view of the fact that the admissibility of the pardon will probably arise on a retrial, we must determine the law upon that question.

[5, 6] In our consideration of the problem thus presented, and especially at a period in our civic development when there is being given great attention to procedural reform in an effort to secure sure and speedy justice, with the hope that it will result in a lessening of the commission of crime, it is most desirable that we realize that while the certain and swift conviction of the guilty is an end "devoutly to be hoped for," yet, more important still, in the aim to free the citizens from violence, is the certain acquittal of the innocent. It is obvious that whenever in any country, in a mistaken zeal for conviction, the administration of the law has reached a point where the innocent are not safe, that respect and reverence for institutions and regard for the rules of social intercourse are blighted. There is no surer avenue to the increase of social crimes than for the state to permit the punishment of those who are not guilty. Long ago it was discovered that convictions were sometimes had where there was a doubt concerning the guilt, and that sometimes a man was guilty who was not really bad at heart and who evinced a sincere desire to atone for his misdeed. Such persons were fit subjects for pardon by the crown, in much the same manner as many persons who may have rebelled under a sense of grievance, mistaken or otherwise, were proper objects of a general amnesty. And as a general amnesty blots out the offense from the memory, so we find the early authorities concerning pardons making like statements. In Hay v. Justices of the Tower, 24 Q. B. 561, we read from Baron Pollock's opinion:

"By the prerogative of the crown the pardon extends far beyond the mere discharge of the prisoner from any further imprisonment. It is a purging of the offense. The King's pardon, says Hale, 'takes away poenam et culpam.' 2 P. C. 278. This points to the character, condition and status of the convict. Again, in 2 Hawkins, P. C., s. 48, the author says that pardon 'does so far clear the party from the infamy and all other consequences of his crime that he may not only have an action for a scandal in calling him traitor or felon after the time of the pardon, but may also be a good witness. * * *'"

And Justice Hawkins, in his opinion in the same case, says:

"I cannot believe that it was the intention of the Legislature that if a man had the great misfortune to be wrongly convicted, and was pardoned on the ground that the conviction was wrong, the queen's pardon, although absolving him from the pains of imprisonment, should nevertheless leave him to suffer the penal effect of his conviction by being prevented in future from following his avocation, notwithstanding the rectification of the error which had occurred." (Italics ours.)

And in an earlier case (Cuddington v. Wilkins, 1 Hob. 67, 80 English Rep. [Full reprint] 216), which was an action for slander by Cuddington, who had been convicted of larceny and subsequently pardoned, against Wilkins, who called the plaintiff a thief and attempted to justify his words by the conviction, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, because "the felony is by the pardon extinct." Later, in the case of Osborn v. U. S., 91 U. S. 474, 23 L. Ed. 388, Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"The pardon of that offense necessarily carried with it the release of the penalty attached to its commission, so far as such release was in the power of the government, unless specially restrained by exceptions embraced in the instrument itself." (Italics ours.)

And in Oklahoma, where the defendant in this case was formerly convicted and pardoned, we find that:

"Pardon reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender; it obliterates, in legal contemplation, the offense itself, and hence its effect is to make the offender a new man." (Italics ours.) Ex parte Collins (Okl. Cr. App.) 239 P. 696, citing Ex parte Crump, 10 Okl. Cr. 133, 135 P. 428, to the same effect.

Mr. Chief Justice Wallace, in discussing a restoration to citizenship as distinguished from a full pardon, in the case of People v. Bowen, 43 Cal. 439-443 (13 Am. Rep. 148), says:

"It did not purport to remove the guilt of Davis, nor wipe away the infamy by the law of the land attaching upon him by reason of his conviction. It sought to restore him to all the rights of citizenship possessed by him before his conviction of the offenses 'above referred to,' and to so restore him, while he yet remained a convicted felon, and with the consequent legal infamy attaching by law to that status. The stain of his iniquity flowing from his conviction, is still left upon him by the executive. The judgment of the law upon that fact is that the credit of his oath is so absolutely and effectually destroyed that he cannot be trusted to testify at all; that it is not to be hoped that he will speak the truth, but must be conclusively assumed that he will not. If the judgment be reversed, the disability is, of course, necessarily removed; if the offense be pardoned the same consequence, too, would follow." (Italics ours.)

Also, in a disbarment proceeding (Matter of Emmons, 29 Cal. App. 121, 154 P. 619), founded upon a conviction of a felony which had subsequently been pardoned, after quoting from Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall, 333, 18 L. Ed. 366, to the effect that pardon not only releases the person from punishment but also blots "out the guilt thus incurred, so that in the eye of the law he is as innocent of that offense as if he had never committed it," and other authorities of like wording, it is said:

"Notwithstanding that the respondent at one time stood convicted of a felony and that the record of conviction might have been used as the foundation for this proceeding while the judgment of conviction was in force, it is no longer possible, after the pardon, to disbar him by this statutory proceeding wherein, if it is maintainable at all, judgment must go against him without any opportunity to defend against any present imputation against his moral character." (Italics ours.)

We conceive of this case as being particularly in point, because the record of conviction when introduced for impeachment purposes is a "present imputation against" the "moral character" of the witness.

Basing the opinion in part upon the authority of Sims v. Sims, 75 N. Y. 466, wherein it is held that a conviction in a foreign jurisdiction, if admissible at all, is not conclusive, but may be rebutted by proof of innocence, the court in the case of Sisson v. Yost, 58 Hun. 609, 12 N. Y. S. 373, not only decides that the pardon is admissible, but also that the witness may show "the promptitude with which the pardon itself was granted, the reason why it was granted, and the time when the defendant was discharged," the statement being added that "all these facts would necessarily have had a very important bearing on the question of the credibility to be given to the witness." The judgment was reversed for this error. As long as it remained the law that the witness was disqualified by the conviction there was a unanimity in the decisions that the pardon removed the disqualification. The pardon was consequently always admissible to effect the removal. Gradually the law was changed in many jurisdictions so that the conviction does not work a disqualification. And with this change has come a small measure of difference in the language of the opinions. The only authority which we have been able to discover wherein the pardon was refused admission by the court of last resort is the case of Gallagher v. People, 211 Ill. 158, 71 N. E. 842, and although the appellate court in a former hearing of the same matter, then entitled O'Donnell v. People, 110 Ill. App. 250, decided that the pardon was admissible on the ground of "common fairness to the witness," the Supreme Court dismissed the argument with these words:

"Under the statute" (permitting the conviction for impeachment purposes only) "the guilt or innocence of the defendant of the crime for which he had been convicted, his punishment, his term of service, etc., are wholly immaterial and incompetent. That he may have been pardoned proves nothing as to his credibility, and to permit evidence of that fact would simply be to introduce into the case a collateral issue."

This statement is at variance with the history of the reason for and the effect of a pardon. Respondent relies upon a statement in the case of People v. Mackey, 58 Cal. App. 123, 208 P. 135, but the question there was whether one who had pleaded guilty and been granted probation and served his probationary period might be confronted with the record, and it was held that he could not. The declaration that, "although the grant of a pardon makes a 'new man' of the pardoned individual, his manhood is not revived to the extent that he may not be confronted with the record of his conviction whenever he testifies as a witness," although obiter, correctly states the great weight of authority, concerning which we might have grave doubt, were it not for section 2051, Code of Civil Procedure, and the almost unanimous voice of the decisions. It does not, however, decide the inadmissibility of the pardon.

Counsel attaches considerable importance to the remarks of the district judge in the case of Wallamet R. T. Co. v. Oregon S. N. Co., 29 Fed. Cas. 88 (No. 17,106) to the effect that:

"It is, or certainly was at the date of this pardon, an ex parte proceeding, taken upon the ex parte statements, representations and solicitations of sympathizing friends and interested and uninformed parties, and cannot be said to prove anything except its own existence and the fact that the party was entitled to have, or had the influence requisite to procure the application of the executive clemency to this case. A pardon does not profess to be a reversal of the judgment of conviction, but only a relief from the punishment imposed by it. In every other respect the judgment stands as if no pardon had been granted."

This statement is certainly in sharp contrast with the opinions heretofore noted from the United States Supreme Court and does not fit as well with our notion of official duty performed by the executive as another found to have been quoted from 1 Starkie's Ev. (7th Am. Ed.) 99, in the case of Bennett v. State, 24 Tex. App. 73, 5 S. W. 527, 5 Am. St. Rep. 875:

"And although a pardon cannot convert a wicked man into an honest one, and confer credibility upon one who through the infamy of his conduct is not credible, yet such a pardon must be presumed to have been conferred after inquiry, upon good and sufficient ground, on an object worthy of the indulgence, and therefore worthy of being heard, but the degree of credit is still to be left to the jury."

From this rather lengthy résumé of the authorities it is apparent that sound reason and a proper sense of justice dictate that the jury should be left to determine the credibility of the witness after having laid before it the pardon; that while the subject of the wrongful conviction, if such in fact it was, may not be inquired into, because that would require a lengthy examination into collateral matters, nevertheless the pardon is a proper subject of evidence.

[7] We have examined the other assignments of error, but find nothing requiring further comment other than to say that the instruction, in substance, that the presumption of innocence continues with the defendant through the trial and the deliberations of the jury should always be given. People v. Ye Foo, 4 Cal. App. 730, 89 P. 450.

Judgment and order reversed.

204 Cal. 515

CAMPANELLA v. CAMPANELLA.
(L. A. 7899.)

Supreme Court of California. July 16, 1928.

1. Judgment $\S$ 570(5)—Judgment dismissing suit, without findings and without judgment roll disclosing grounds, and disclosing that ruling was not on merits, held no bar to subsequent action.

Where court dismissed action by one partner against another to rescind land sale contract without making findings, and judgment roll did not disclose grounds on which dismissal was had, and disclosed that no ruling on merits was made, and no motion for dismissal was shown by record, held, judgment of dismissal was not res judicata as respects subsequent action for damages for the deceit.

2. Judgment $\S$ 570(5)—Generally judgments of dismissal are not on merits, and do not operate as bar or estoppel, unless judgment necessarily involves same matters.

Generally judgments merely of dismissal, whether voluntary or involuntary, are not on the merits, and do not operate as a bar or estoppel in subsequent proceedings involving same matters, unless it appears that judgment necessarily involves those matters.

3. Judgment $\S$ 197—Where case is dismissed without evidence having been offered, it is error to render judgment on merits.

When a case is dismissed without evidence having been offered, it is error to render judgment on the merits, as there is nothing before the court on which to base any findings determinative of issues.

4. Judgment $\S$ 540—There must have been right adjudicated or released to constitute judgment a bar or estoppel to subsequent proceedings; "estoppel by judgment."

To constitute the judgment a bar or an estoppel to subsequent proceedings, there must have been a right adjudicated or released in the first suit.

5. Judgment $\S$ 570(1)—Dismissal because of wrong forum, form of proceeding, or remedy, defects in pleadings or parties, want of jurisdiction, or because suit was premature, does not operate as bar or estoppel.

A judgment of dismissal of a cause for the reason that plaintiff has chosen the wrong forum or form of proceeding or remedy, or because of defects in pleadings or parties, or for want of jurisdiction, or because suit was prematurely brought, will not operate as a bar or an estoppel to subsequent suit.

6. Election of remedies $\S$ 1—Doctrine of election of remedies will be applied, where disadvantage which may be caused by change of remedy will be real injury.

Courts will apply the doctrine of election of remedies when, under the well-settled principles of estoppel, the disadvantage which may be caused an adverse party by change in remedy amounts to a real injury.

7. Election of remedies $\S$ 9—Where action to rescind partner's land sale contract was dismissed, not on merits, plaintiff was not precluded from maintaining subsequent action for damages.

Where one partner sued another party to rescind land sale contract and for damages, and action was dismissed, not on the merits, held, that plaintiff was not precluded from maintaining subsequent action for damages for partner's fraud and deceit in connection with such contract, on theory that prior action constituted a conclusive election.

8. Appeal and error $\S$ 854(6)—Order granting new trial in general terms will be affirmed, if it could properly have been granted on any ground on which motion therefor was predicated.

When trial court's order granting a new trial is general in its terms, it will be affirmed, if it could properly have been granted on any of the grounds on which motion for it was predicated.

9. Appeal and error $\S$ 977(3)—Order granting new trial will not be disturbed on appeal, except for clear and manifest abuse of discretion.

Order granting new trial will not be disturbed on appeal, except on a showing of clear and manifest abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court.

10. Fraud $\S$ 58(1)—New trial $\S$ 77(2)—Evidence held to sustain damage award for partner's deceit respecting selling price of land, and new trial because of passion or prejudice of jury not warranted (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 657, subd. 5).

In action by one partner against another in damages for deceit for misinforming plaintiff as to price received for land owned in common by partners, evidence held sufficient to sustain jury's finding for plaintiff, and damages awarded, and trial court's action in granting new trial could not be sustained, on ground that damages awarded were so excessive as to suggest passion or prejudice, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 657, subd. 5.

11. New trial $\S$ 76(1)—Unduly excessive verdict is unsupported by evidence; "insufficiency of the evidence" (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 657, subd. 5).

Verdict which awards damages so excessive as to suggest passion or prejudice on part of jurors, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 657, subd. 5, is one, in part, at least, unsupported by the evidence; "insufficiency of the evidence" meaning want of evidence, as well as contrary to the weight of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Insufficient Evidence.]

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by Felice Campanella against Victor Campanella. Judgment for plaintiff, and he appeals from an order granting a new trial. Reversed.

Superseding opinion in 265 P. 327.

Canepa & Castruccio and W. W. Wallace, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Massey & Massey, George S. Hupp and Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. We are satisfied with the conclusion of the learned District Court of Appeal (265 P. 327) in this cause and adopt a part of its opinion herein:

"This is an action in damages for deceit. Judgment was entered against defendant for $3,958.33 and costs on the verdict of a jury. Defendant moved for a new trial, his motion was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

"In his second amended complaint, plaintiff alleged that he and defendant and one Giovanni Gai were the owners of 167½ acres of land as tenants in common, each owning a one-third interest; that they had been partners in manufacturing wine; that defendant was the managing partner, and conducted most of the business of the partnership; that plaintiff and defendant were cousins; that the partners agreed to sell the land, and that defendant should procure a purchaser; that defendant represented to plaintiff that he had received an offer of $29,312.50 for the land, and that he could obtain no higher offer; that plaintiff reposed great confidence and trust in defendant, and believed defendant, and believed that the land was worth no more than the amount of the alleged offer, which confidence and belief were known to defendant; that, so believing, and at defendant's solicitation, plaintiff conveyed his interest in the land to defendant for $10,000; that the representations were false, and were made to deceive plaintiff, the facts being that, before making them, defendant had an offer of $41,875 for the land, and had agreed to sell it for that sum; that the land was worth $54,437.50, and that an accounting of the affairs of the partnership was had before plaintiff learned that the representations were false; and plaintiff prayed for judgment in the sum of $8,145 as the difference between the amount received by plaintiff from defendant and the value of the land, and for interest, costs, $3,000 exemplary damages, and general relief.

"Defendant's answer denied that the three owners had agreed to sell the land; denied the alleged false representations and lack of knowledge on the part of plaintiff, and that defendant had an offer of $41,875, or had agreed to sell the land, before plaintiff conveyed his interest to defendant, and alleged that plaintiff then knew of every offer defendant had obtained; denied that the land was worth more than $30,000, and alleged that before this action was commenced another action had been brought by plaintiff against defendant and Gai, wherein plaintiff had alleged the same matters pleaded by him in this action, and wherein the pleadings had raised the same issues raised in this action, and that, after a trial was had therein, judgment on the merits was rendered against plaintiff, which judgment estopped plaintiff from maintaining this action.

"In an amendment to his answer defendant alleged that by the prior action plaintiff elected to rescind his conveyance to defendant, and that thereby plaintiff was estopped and precluded from maintaining this action or to recover damages in this action. At the trial defendant offered to introduce in evidence the judgment roll in the prior action, which offered evidence was objected to by plaintiff on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and the objection was sustained.

"Defendant moved for a new trial on the minutes of the court, on the grounds that excessive damages were given under the influence of passion or prejudice, that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict, that the verdict was against the law, and that error in law occurred at the trial and was excepted to. On this motion the court made its order granting a new trial and setting aside the verdict and judgment. This appeal was taken from the order.

"In support of the order defendant advances the propositions that (1) the judgment in the prior action was res adjudicata of the matters involved in this action, and is a bar to this action; (2) that in the prior action plaintiff elected to rescind and was thereby precluded from maintaining this action; and (3) that the jury, in awarding the damages, was under the influence of passion and prejudice.

"The complaint in the prior action, which named Gai and defendant, Campanella, as defendants, alleged substantially the same matters pleaded by plaintiff in his second amended complaint in this action, and also that plaintiff had offered to return to defendant the money paid him by defendant for plaintiff's conveyance, and at the same time demanded a reconveyance from defendant, which demand was refused by defendant, and plaintiff prayed for cancellation of the conveyance, for a judgment requiring defendant to reconvey, and for general relief. Gai did not attack this complaint, nor did he plead to it. Defendant, Campanella, demurred to it on the sole ground that it did not state a cause of action. His demurrer was sustained, and plaintiff was permitted to amend.

"There was an amended complaint predicated in damages, which omitted Gai as a party, and plaintiff alleged therein substantially the same matters pleaded in the original complaint, that plaintiff, as such partner, owned a one-third interest in the land of the partnership, and that he was damaged in the sum of $4,175, and he prayed for judgment against defendant, Campanella, in that sum, for $15,000 exemplary damages, for costs, and general relief.

"Defendant, Campanella, answered the amended complaint, denying that the partnership owned the land, admitted that he acted as agent for the other members of the partnership, but only with such powers as existed by reason of his membership in the partnership, alleging that the land was held as tenants in common by the partners, and denying the alleged false representations, the alleged sale or agreement to sell, the alleged offer of plaintiff to return the moneys paid for plaintiff's conveyance, and demand for a reconveyance, or that plaintiff suffered any damage.

"No other attack was made on the amended complaint; but thereafter plaintiff filed his second amended complaint, alleging substantially the same matters pleaded in the amended complaint, except that he pleaded that defendant sold the lands for $41,875, that the partnership affairs had never been settled, and that large sums of money were due the partnership; and praying that the partnership be dissolved, that an accounting be had, that plaintiff be adjudged the owner of one-third of the partnership assets, that a receiver be appointed, that, in the event plaintiff's conveyance to defendant cannot be canceled, plaintiff 'shall receive the difference between $175 per acre (the basis upon which plaintiff conveyed to defendant) and $250 per acre (the price at which defendant had sold the land) for his one-third interest' in the land, that the partnership's assets be sold and the net proceeds be divided, and for general relief.

"Defendant demurred to this second amended complaint. This demurrer was ordered off calendar, and on the day the order was made, the court made its judgment as follows:

"This matter coming on to be heard the 5th day of January, 1921, upon a motion to strike the second amended complaint from the files, Messrs. Canepa & Castruccio appearing for the plaintiff, and H. A. Massey and Geo. S. Hupp, Esq., appearing for the defendants, and the court having heard the arguments:

"Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the second amended complaint be stricken from the files and the said action be and the same is hereby dismissed, and that the defendants have and recover from plaintiff their costs herein expended, to wit $ (written in ink), $58.15.

"Done in open court this 8th day of January, 1921. Charles S. Burnell, Judge of the Superior Court."

"Thereafter the court, without any showing in the judgment roll therefor except the recitals in the judgment, made another judgment as follows:

"This cause coming on to be heard the 18th day of January, 1921, upon a motion to strike the second amended complaint from the files, Messrs. Canepa & Castruccio and Wallace appearing for plaintiff, and Messrs. H. A. Massey and Geo. S. Hupp appearing for the defendants, and the court having heard the arguments:

"Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the second amended complaint be stricken from the files without leave to amend, and that the said action be and the same is hereby dismissed, and that the defendants, and each of them, have and recover from the plaintiff their costs herein expended, to wit, $31.50.

"Done in open court this 24th day of January, 1921. Charles S. Burnell, Judge of the Superior Court."

"There were no findings of facts, and the judgment roll does not disclose upon what grounds the second amended complaint was stricken, nor for what reason the action was dismissed. No motion for dismissal of the action is shown or otherwise indicated by the record.

"Defendant contends that the judgments of dismissal in the prior action were res adjudicata of the matters involved in this action, and barred and estopped plaintiff from maintaining this action. Plaintiff contends that, as neither of the judgments purports to have been made on the merits of the cause, neither is a bar to the present action. The two judgments in the prior action are essentially the same in form and substance, and for the purposes of this opinion they will be referred to as 'the judgment.'"

[1-5] It is clear that the judgment is not res adjudicata and therefore not a bar to the present action nor an estoppel upon any issue therein and that the ruling refusing to admit the judgment roll in evidence was proper. The judgment roll not only fails to show a ruling upon the merits but discloses that no such ruling was made. The following from the opinion of the District Court of Appeal is in point:

"Generally, judgments merely of dismissal, whether voluntary or involuntary, are not on the merits, and do not operate as a bar or estoppel in subsequent proceedings involving the same matters, unless it appears that the judgment necessarily involves those matters. Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118 Cal. 160, 222, 50 P. 277; Hubbard v. Superior Court, 9 Cal. App. 166, 98 P. 394; Bell v. Solomons, 162 Cal. 105, 110, 121 P. 377; Johnston v. Baker, 167 Cal. 260, 263, 139 P. 86; 18 Cor. Jur. 1200; Freeman on Judgments, § 753.

"When a case is dismissed without evidence having been offered, it is error to render judgment on the merits. There is nothing before the court on which to base any findings determinative of the issues. The absence of proof on either side could not involve a judicial determination of the merits of the controversy. Freedman v. Sirota, 109 App. Div. 874, 96 N. Y. S. 812. See, also, Kruger v. [Persons] 52 App. Div. 50, 64 N. Y. S. 841. There must have been a right adjudicated or released in the first suit to constitute the judgment a bar or an estoppel. Haldeman v. United States, 91 U. S. 584, 23 L. Ed. 433; Rincon Water & Power Co. v. Anaheim Union Water Co. [C. C.] 115 F. 543, 549, et seq. (Welborn, District Judge).

"If the record of a judgment of dismissal fails to show that the judgment was given upon a consideration of the merits of the controversy, it is not available as an estoppel. The fact that the judgment was made at the instance of the court gives it no greater weight than if it were merely a judgment of nonsuit. The dismissal for the reason that plaintiff has chosen the wrong forum, or form of proceeding, or remedy, or because of defects in the pleadings or parties, or for want of jurisdiction, or because the suit was prematurely brought, will not operate as a bar or an estoppel to a subsequent suit. Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., supra; Hogeberg v. Industrial Accident Commission (Cal. Sup.) 256 P. 413."

[6, 7] Respondent contends that by the prior action plaintiff resorted to a conclusive election of remedies, and is now barred from relying upon the present cause of action. This position, too, is without merit. Herdan v. Hanson, 182 Cal. 538, 542, 189 P. 440, and cases therein cited. Under well-settled principles of the doctrine of estoppel, the disadvantage caused the other party by a change of remedy must be a real injury, such as would, in the contemplation of law, amount to an estoppel, and when it is of this character the doctrine of election of remedies will be applied by the courts. Buckmaster v. Bertram.

186 Cal. 673, 678, 200 P. 610; Mansfield v. Pickwick Stages, 191 Cal. 129, 131, 215 P. 389; Roullard v. Rosenberg, 193 Cal. 360, 224 P. 449. Here defendant has not shown or claimed that he suffered any disadvantage by reason of the prior plea in rescission and the subsequent pursuit by plaintiff of the remedy of damages. We hold that plaintiff did not elect his remedy by the prior action.

[8, 9] Lastly, it is contended by respondent that the order granting a new trial may be upheld on the ground that the damages awarded by the jury were so excessive as to suggest passion or prejudice on the part of the jurors (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 657, subd. 5). We are mindful of the rules here applicable, expressed in Scott v. Times Mirror Co., 178 Cal. 688, 690, 174 P. 312, 313, as follows:

"It is the well-settled rule of this court that when the order of the trial court in granting a new trial is general in its terms, it will be affirmed if it could properly have been granted upon any of the grounds upon which the motion for it was predicated. Weisser v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 148 Cal. 426, 83 P. 439, 7 Ann. Cas. 636; Morgan v. J. W. Robinson Co., 157 Cal. 348, 107 P. 695. It is an equally well-settled and long-established rule of this court that an order granting a new trial will not be disturbed upon appeal, except upon a showing of clear and manifest abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in respect to granting the same. Harrison v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 156, 47 P. 1019; Doolin v. Omnibus Cable Co., 125 Cal. 148, 57 P. 774; Sherwood v. Kyle, 125 Cal. 652, 58 P. 270; Lee v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 101 Cal. 118, 35 P. 572; Meinberg v. Jordan, 29 Cal. App. 760, 57 P. 1005, 1007."

[10] But it can be demonstrated from the record before us that the jury in the present case was influenced by neither passion nor prejudice. In answer to special issues, the jury specifically found that respondent, with a written offer in his pocket of $250 per acre for the property and while acting as the agent of his partner and cotenant, concealed said fact and represented to appellant that $175 per acre was the maximum amount he could get for it, and that relying upon said information so furnished him, appellant deeded his interest in said property to respondent for the sum of $10,000. The jury thereupon rendered a general verdict in favor of appellant for the sum of $3,958.33, and it is clear that this figure was arrived at as follows: 167½ acres of land at $250 per acre amounts to $41,875. One-third thereof is $13,958.33. Subtracting $10,000 from this result leaves the amount of the verdict, to wit, $3,958.33.

It is clear from the evidence, also, that respondent could have obtained this amount for said property, with 6 per cent. interest payable in advance upon the deferred payments. In fact, the record shows that a suit in specific performance was begun against him on account of an alleged contract resulting from said offer. Witnesses fixed the value of the property at $300, $250, $180, and $175 per acre, respectively; $250 per acre was the price fixed by respondent himself, when dealing with third persons, as the value of the property. Had the sale been consummated, appellant could have sued respondent and recovered the identical amount awarded him by the jury.

[11] It is a sacrifice of substance to form to hold that under these facts a sufficient basis may be found for upholding the action of the trial court upon the ground of excessive damages, evincing passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. It is really unfair to the trial court to attempt to explain his action upon that ground, for it is manifest from a reading of the record that the court was of the opinion that the doctrine of res adjudicata controlled the litigation. It may also be seriously doubted whether this contention is open to respondent in view of the fact that the trial court did not specify that the motion for new trial was granted on the insufficiency of the evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 657; Yoakam v. Hogan, 198 Cal. 16, 20, 243 P. 21), for a verdict unduly excessive is a verdict, in part, at least, unsupported by the evidence. In other words, a deficiency in the evidence must be the basis for every contention that the verdict is excessive or the result of passion or prejudice. In Doolin v. Omnibus Cable Co., 125 Cal. 141, 144, 57 P. 774, 775, it is said:

"To say that a verdict for damages was enhanced by passion or prejudice is one mode of saying that the evidence did not justify it; and the only means of discovering therein the element of passion or prejudice, within the meaning of the statute, is by comparing the amount with the evidence which was before the court at the trial."

"Insufficiency of the evidence" means want of evidence as well as "contrary to the weight of the evidence." S. P. L. Co. v. Dickerson, 188 Cal. 113, 117, 204 P. 576; Estate of Bainbridge, 169 Cal. 166, 146 P. 427.

The transaction forming the basis of this litigation transpired more than 8 years ago. There cannot be the slightest doubt as to the right of appellant to recover every cent awarded him by the jury, and it seems eminently appropriate that this litigation should now end.

The order granting the new trial is reversed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.

204 Cal. 509

GRANUCCI v. CLAASEN et al. (S. F. 11825,)

Supreme Court of California. July 16, 1928.

1. Appeal and error §927(7)—Facts must be most liberally viewed in favor of plaintiff's contention that court erred in directing verdict for defendants.

Facts of case must be most liberally viewed in favor of plaintiff's contention that court erred in directing verdict for defendant at close of trial.

2. Municipal corporations §808(2)—Landowner, having constructed driveway primarily for use with adjacent property, must keep driveway, where superimposed on sidewalk, in safe condition for pedestrians.

Where landowner constructed driveway primarily for use in connection with adjacent property, duty was cast upon landowner and lessee to exercise reasonable care and diligence in keeping of driveway at point where it was superimposed upon sidewalk in proper and safe condition for passage of pedestrians rightfully using sidewalk and driveway superimposed thereon.

3. Landlord and tenant §167(5)—Owner could not relieve herself of duty to keep driveway over sidewalk in safe condition by leasing premises or by contract with lessee.

Landowner could not relieve herself of duty to exercise reasonable care and diligence to keep driveway at point where it was superimposed upon sidewalk in safe condition for pedestrians either by leasing premises or by contracting with lessee for keeping of premises and driveway in proper state of repair.

4. Municipal corporations §821(17)—Negligence of landowner and lessee in failing to keep driveway superimposed on sidewalk in safe condition where pedestrian fell held for jury.

Negligence of landowner and lessee in failing to exercise reasonable care in keeping driveway at point where it was superimposed on sidewalk in proper and safe condition for passage of pedestrians, where pedestrian had caught shoe in some obstruction above surface of driveway and fallen violently forward, held for jury.

5. Municipal corporations §808(2)—Landowner and lessee held liable for injuries to pedestrian falling on private driveway over sidewalk without notice from municipality to repair.

Landowner and lessee held liable for injuries to pedestrian falling on driveway superimposed on sidewalk without notice from municipality to repair, under provisions of charter, where driveway had been constructed and was being used by defendants primarily as driveway into their premises and for their private use, convenience, and benefit.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action for damages for personal injuries by Rosa Granucci against Mary J. Claasen and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion found in 262 P. 345.

J. Maxwell Peyser and Joseph E. Isaacs, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Andrew F. Burke, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. [1] This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the defendants after a directed verdict given and made by order of the court on motion of the defendants at the close of the trial. The action was one to recover damages for injuries sustained by plaintiff while walking upon a wooden driveway superimposed upon the sidewalk in front of the property owned by the defendant Mary J. Claasen, and at the time of the plaintiff's injury and for some time prior thereto being used by the defendant John H. Claasen, Jr., as the lessee thereof from his said codefendant. The facts of the case, which are to be most liberally viewed in favor of the plaintiff's contention by virtue of the action of the court in granting the defendants' motion for a directed verdict are as follows: On February 28, 1922, about midday, the plaintiff was walking upon and along the concrete sidewalk in front of the defendants' premises and was in the act of crossing a wooden driveway which had been constructed upon and within the space in said sidewalk which otherwise would have been occupied by a concrete pavement and which driveway led from the street into the defendants' said premises. While so proceeding, the plaintiff's shoe, caught in some obstruction above the surface of said wooden driveway with the effect that she fell violently forward, as a result of which she sustained certain injuries which form the basis of the present action. One John P. Cuneo, a carpenter, living about 200 feet away from the scene of the accident, and at the moment thereof standing or sitting at a point opposite the place where it occurred, saw the plaintiff lying upon the driveway in question immediately after she had fallen and went at once to her relief. When he stooped to pick plaintiff up he noticed two nails or spikes protruding about from a half to three quarters of an inch above the surface of the driveway, and he also noticed that the boards from which these spikes protruded were loose. The witness took his hammer and drove the spikes back into place, but noticed that they went in easily. The inference is irresistible that it was upon one or other of these protruding spikes that the plaintiff tripped and fell.

The driveway in question had been constructed by the defendant Mary J. Claasen, the sole owner of the adjacent premises, in the year 1912 when a building had been erected thereon and a cement sidewalk laid along Mission street in front of the same, except for a distance of approximately nine feet opposite an entrance at the southerly end of the premises. Upon this nine-foot space the said owner of the premises had caused to be constructed this wooden driveway under a special permit therefor from the board of public works of San Francisco. The driveway was constructed of three by twelve inch Oregon pine planks, laid on top of three by nine inch redwood stringers set sixteen inches apart, which stringers were laid upon the surface of the ground and which driveway when constructed was flush with the level of the cement sidewalk. The premises had been used for several years thereafter as a brewery and the driveway had been constructed and was used during that period for the ingress and egress of the trucks and other vehicles coming and going to said brewery daily. For about two years after the brewery ceased to operate the premises were unused, but thereafter began and continued to be used in connection with a coffee business, which the owner's son and codefendant conducted under a lease from his mother thereon under the name of Eagle Packing Company, and during the period of which use prior to the date of the plaintiff's injuries the said driveway had been used daily by trucks and other vehicles entering and emerging from said premises.

[2, 3] This driveway having been thus constructed and used not primarily for sidewalk purposes but for the benefit and convenience of the said defendants in connection with their adjacent property and which use was one which was independent of and apart from the ordinary and accustomed use for which sidewalks are designed, the duty was cast by law upon the defendants to exercise reasonable care and diligence in the keeping of said driveway at the point where it was superimposed upon said sidewalk in a proper and safe condition for the passage of pedestrians rightfully using said sidewalk and said driveway superimposed by defendants thereon. Monsch v. Pellissier, 187 Cal. 792, 204 P. 224; Du Val v. Boos Bros. Cafeteria Co., 45 Cal. App. 383, 187 P. 767; 20 Ruling Case Law, p. 77, § 68; 13 Ruling Case Law, p. 320; Grand Forks v. Paulsness, 19 N. D. 293, 123 N. W. 878, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1158; Ryder v. Kinsey, 62 Minn. 85, 64 N. W. 94, 34 L. R. A. 557, 54 Am. St. Rep. 623; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 567, 15 Am. Rep. 530; Gray v. Boston Gaslight Co., 114 Mass. 149, 19 Am. Rep. 324. The duty which was thus cast upon the defendant Mary J. Claasen, as owner of said premises, continued during the entire period of the presence and use of said driveway in connection therewith and said defendant could not relieve herself of such duty either by leasing the same to her codefendant or by contracting with him by the terms of said lease for the keeping of said premises and said driveway in a proper state of repair. Jessen v. Sweigert, 66 Cal. 182, 4 P. 1188; Village of Jefferson v. Chapman, 127 Ill. 438, 20 N. E. 33, 11 Am. St. Rep. 136; Norton v. St. Louis, 97 Mo. 537, 11 S. W. 242.

[4] From the evidence as thus far presented it appears conclusively, for the purposes of this appeal, that the said driveway at the point where the plaintiff tripped and fell upon it was in a state of disrepair, which, if imputable to the negligence of said defendants, would suffice to entitle this plaintiff to maintain her action. The undisputed evidence disclosed that said driveway during the ten years of its existence, with the exception of a brief intermission, had been used and passed over daily by more or less heavy trucks and horse-drawn vehicles in connection with the use of said premises as a brewery and later as a coffee mill. During that entire period, according to the testimony both of the owner of said premises and of her son, the lessee thereof, the driveway had never been subjected to any sort of repair. The defendant Mary J. Claasen testified that during said period she had frequently observed said driveway and that the same was always in a good state of repair. She does not testify, however, that her inspection of said driveway was to any extent constant or regular or otherwise than casual, as she came and went upon said premises. The testimony of her son, as the lessee of the premises, is substantially to the same effect. There is no evidence, as a matter of course, as to how long the driveway had been in the state of disrepair which was the immediate cause of the plaintiff's injuries, but from the testimony of the witness John P. Cuneo that the spikes which should have held the boards of the driveway firmly in place were protruding as much as three-fourths of an inch and that said boards were loose, it is a reasonable inference that said spikes had gradually worked their way upward and that said boards had been gradually loosened by the operation of heavy vehicles upon and across said driveway, and that a more rigid inspection thereof by the defendants than they or either of them are shown to have exercised would reasonably have resulted in the discovery of the defective condition of said driveway and the repair thereof, to the prevention of the plaintiff's injuries. In a word, we are of the opinion that the state of the evidence was such at the close of the trial and at the time of the defendants' motion for a directed verdict and of the action of the trial court in granting the same and directing such verdict, as would have required the question of the negligence of the defendants to have been submitted to the jury; and, this being so, we reach the conclusion that the trial court was in error in granting the defendants' said motion in ordering and procuring the jury to return a directed verdict in the defendants' favor.

[5] It is attempted to be argued by the respondents herein that because said portion of the wooden driveway upon which the plaintiff tripped and fell was a portion of the public sidewalk constructed under permission of the board of public works, the obligation and duty was not upon the defendants, but upon the municipality through its board of public works, of keeping that portion of said sidewalk in repair, and that under the provisions of section 16 of chapter 2 of article 6 of the charter of the municipality the liability of an abutting owner to repair a sidewalk does not arise until there has been a notification so to do from said board of public works, and that since in the instant case there was presented no evidence showing such notification, the owners' duty to repair said sidewalk had not arisen at the time of the plaintiff's injuries. In making this contention the respondents misconceive the meaning and application of the aforesaid provisions of the charter in their relation to the facts of the instant case, since the portion of said sidewalk upon which the defendants' driveway was superimposed was being used by said defendants, not as a sidewalk nor primarily for the use and convenience of the general public, but that the same had been constructed and was being used by the defendants primarily as a driveway into their said premises and for their private use, convenience and benefit. To such a state of facts the decision of this court in the case of Monsch v. Pellissier, supra, has direct application.

It follows from the foregoing that the trial court was in error in directing a verdict in the defendants' favor, and that the judgment entered upon said verdict was for that reason erroneous and must be reversed. It is so ordered.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.

204 Cal. 546

STEWART v. STEWART. (L. A. 9554.)

Supreme Court of California. July 18, 1928.

1. Husband and wife §265—Husband is sole owner of community property during marriage, and only interest of wife is mere expectancy as heir.

During the marriage, the husband is the sole and exclusive owner of all community property, and the wife has no title thereto, nor interest or estate therein, other than mere expectancy as heir if she survive him.

2. Husband and wife §247—Law relating to respective interests of husband and wife in community property has no effect as to property acquired prior to effective date (Civ. Code § 161a, as added by St. 1927, p. 484).

Civ. Code, § 161a, as added by St. 1927, p. 484, relative to respective interests of husband and wife in community property during continuance of marriage relation, has no effect as to community property acquired prior to its effective date, whatever its effect on property acquired subsequent thereto.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by Frances Lee Stewart, sometimes known as Fanny Lee Stewart, against Ernest A. Stewart. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

F. S. Reese, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ida May Adams, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Allan G. Wright and Perry Evans, both of San Francisco, Burrell D. Neighbours and F. A. Jeffers, both of Los Angeles, Stoney, Rouleau, Stoney & Palmer, and Knight, Bolland & Christin, all of San Francisco, Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, Kenneth K. Wright, and Stanley S. Burrill, all of Los Angeles, Carey Van Fleet, of San Francisco, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Flint & MacKay, Ingle Carpenter, and J. Wiseman Macdonald, all of Los Angeles, and Dunne, Dunne & Cook, of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

CURTIS, J. This is the second appeal in this action. Our decision of the first appeal will be found reported in 199 Cal. 318, 249 P. 197, where the facts of the case are fully stated, and for that reason it will not be necessary to repeat them here. At the first trial of this action, judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, which judgment was reversed by this court. On the going down of the remittitur, the case was again set for hearing. At this hearing no new evidence was introduced, but the case was submitted for decision upon the evidence adduced at the former or first hearing. Thereupon the court again rendered judgment for the plaintiff, from which the defendant has appealed, and the action is now before us on this appeal.

The respondent and the numerous amici curiæ, who appear herein and who unite with respondent in asking for an affirmance of the judgment, rest their case apparently upon two grounds: First, that this court was in error in its former opinion in this matter, wherein it reversed the judgment of the trial court rendered at the first hearing of this case; second, that the present judgment of the trial court is in accordance with the views of this court as expressed in its former opinion. We will consider these grounds in the order stated.

First. This case has been most thoroughly and ably argued by the parties hereto and the amici curiæ appearing herein. This statement applies both to arguments made at the first hearing before us as well as to those on the present appeal. The briefs on file on each of said hearings are before us, and we have carefully examined and compared them. We find with hardly an important exception that the arguments relied upon on the present appeal are those advanced and relied upon on the first appeal. One firm of attorneys appearing as amici curiæ on each appeal, and who filed a most comprehensive and exhaustive brief on the first hearing before us, has on this appeal presented a short brief of eight pages, prefacing the same, however, with the statement that "our position was fully stated in the brief and petition for rehearing filed with this court on the first appeal." We think this statement can well apply to the briefs and arguments as a whole filed in this matter.

The former opinion of this court in this action was arrived at and enunciated only after a most careful and exhaustive study of the briefs and argument of all counsel in the case, supplemented by independent examination of the statutory law of this state and the decisions of this and other jurisdictions relative to the subject of community property. In that opinion we reviewed the decisions of this court from its earliest days down to the time of the rendition of said opinion relating to the rights of the wife in property acquired by the community during the marriage state. We set forth our views therein as to the force and effect and meaning of the several acts of legislation enacted in this state, wherein the respective rights of the spouses in community property acquired by them had been considered or defined. This opinion was concurred in by five members of this court being the whole membership of this court at that time, two of its members having died only a short time before the rendition of said opinion, and their successors not having been appointed until after said decision had become final. All of the members of this court uniting in said decision are among the present members of this court. We have, therefore, the same arguments, based upon precisely the same state of facts presented to the court, largely composed of the same membership as upon the former hearing. Notwithstanding this condition, we have carefully and diligently read and considered the briefs and arguments presented by the parties and the amici curiæ appearing herein. We have endeavored to do so with an open mind, realizing the importance of the question involved, not particularly to the litigants in this action, but to that vastly larger number of persons who may be indirectly affected by the final determination of the issues involved in this appeal. The result of our deliberations thus undertaken is that we are firmly convinced of the correctness of our former decision in this case.

We see no reason why we should modify our views as expressed therein regarding any of the questions determined. We are satisfied with the treatment of the subjects considered therein and the conclusions reached by us in that opinion. It is not necessary for us to set forth in detail our reasons for arriving at this conclusion, for to state them would be in the main but to repeat the language of our former opinion. In that opinion we held that the long-established doctrine of this state was, as reiterated and confirmed by this court in Spreckels v. Spreckels, 172 Cal. 775, 158 P. 537, that the husband was during marriage "the sole and exclusive owner of all of the community property, and that the wife had no title thereto, nor interest or estate therein, other than a mere expectancy as heir, if she survived him." We further pointed out, what was declared in more recent decisions of this court, that legislation enacted subsequent to the rendition of said last-mentioned decision had not in any manner changed or modified said doctrine as to the wife's right in community property acquired in, or prior to, the year 1918, the year the parties hereto purchased the real property described in the complaint herein. We saw no escape from that conclusion at the time of the rendition of that opinion, and nothing has since been brought to our attention to cause us to doubt the correctness of our views as thus expressed. The opinion as then rendered must now stand as a correct embodiment of the views of this court upon the questions therein considered and determined.

Second. It is also contended, by those who appear herein asking for an affirmance of the present judgment entered in this action, that said judgment is in accordance with the views of this court as expressed in its former opinion. The material parts of said judgment are as follows:

"(1) That said plaintiff now has an interest and estate in and to an undivided one-half of the above described real property.

"(2) That said defendant is entitled to the management and control of said real property during the continuance of the marriage relation of the parties hereto, but neither party hereto can sell, convey, or incur said real property, or any interest therein, or lease said real property, or any interest therein, for a longer period than one year, except by an instrument in the execution of which both parties hereto shall join.

"(3) That said interest and estate of said plaintiff in and to said real property is a much more definite and present interest therein than the expectancy of an heir apparent of said defendant, and is more than a mere possibility."

"(4) That said interest and estate of said plaintiff in and to said real property is a present right, within the protection of the provisions of section 16 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state of California, and of section 10 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States.

"(5) That by virtue of said interest and estate of said plaintiff in said real property she will on the death of said defendant take one-half thereof in her own right, and not as his heir, provided said plaintiff survive said defendant.

"(6) That said defendant now has an interest and estate in said real property, by virtue of which he may make testamentary disposition of one-half of said real property, if said plaintiff survive said defendant, and by virtue of which, if said defendant survive said plaintiff, he will take one half of said real property in his own right and the other half thereof as the heir of said plaintiff, unless with respect to the latter one-half the law should otherwise provide.

"(7) That said interests and estates of the parties hereto, in said real property, constitute the community interest of husband and wife referred to in sections 161 and 682 of the Civil Code of the state of California.

"(8) That in the event of the dissolution of the marriage of the parties hereto by divorce, by virtue of their respective interests and estates in said real property aforesaid, they would become tenants in common thereof in equal undivided shares, unless the court having jurisdiction of such a divorce action should otherwise order, if the decree for such a divorce were rendered on the ground of adultery or extreme cruelty.

"(9) That said title, interest, and estate of said plaintiff in and to an undivided one-half of said real property be and the same is hereby quieted as against said defendant."

We think it perfectly obvious, from a mere reading of these portions of said judgment, that said judgment transgresses the letter and spirit of our former decision. By the first paragraph of said judgment the plaintiff, the wife, is decreed a present interest and estate in the community real property described therein. In practically every other paragraph, especially those purporting to describe the wife's interest in said community property, the same false note is sounded. By the last paragraph of the judgment the plaintiff's (the wife's) interest, estate, and title to the community property is quieted as against her husband. Such a decree is utterly at variance with the doctrine, held and approved by us in our former opinion, that the interest of the wife during marriage in the community property is a mere expectancy, to be realized only upon her surviving her husband, or upon the earlier dissolution of the marriage by divorce proceedings. So apparent must this be that we think further comment is not only unnecessary, but would be out of place.

It is contended, however, by the respondent and certain of the amici curiæ, that in the last paragraph of our former opinion is to be found language which gives some color of justification to the present judgment. The language referred to, and which it is claimed warrants the entry of the present judgment, is as follows:

"We are in accord with the intimations from time to time reflected by this court in the long line of its past decisions to the effect that the interest of the wife in the property of the community during the continuance of the marriage relation, while it has not yet reached the status of a vested interest therein, is and has always been from a time reaching back into the Spanish and Mexican originals of our community property laws a much more definite and present interest than is that of an ordinary heir."

It is apparent, we think, what was in the mind of the court in the use of the above language when the entire decision is read, and particularly when attention is given to that portion of the decision immediately following the above-quoted language, wherein the court said:

"She [the wife] has, by virtue of the share which in her own sphere she has contributed toward the acquisition and conservation of such properties, rights therein which have been always safeguarded against the fraudulent or inconsiderate acts of her husband with relation thereto, and for the assertion and safeguarding of which she has been given access to appropriate judicial remedies both before and after the time when her said rights and interests would ripen and become vested through the death of the husband or other severance of the marriage relation, whenever such rights and ultimate interests were affected by or threatened with such forms of invasion."

[1] The court in the foregoing passages from the opinion was simply stressing those rights of the wife in community property which were not possessed by an heir in property of his ancestor. Those rights were given her in order that she might protect herself against the fraudulent and inconsiderate acts of her husband, and thereby preserve the community property intact until the dissolution of the marriage. These were not new rights, but were those which existed "from a time reaching back into the Spanish and Mexican originals of our community property." This interest of the wife, which we characterized as "a much more definite and present interest than is that of an ordinary heir," was reflected "by this court in the long line of its past decisions." Unquestionably this long line of past decisions include those rendered in the cases cited by us in our former opinion, among which are In re Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 44 P. 734, Spreckles v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 P. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170, Estate of Moffitt, 153 Cal. 359, 95 P. 653, 1025, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207, Spreckels v. Spreckels, 172 Cal. 775, 158 P. 537, and Roberts v. Wehmeyer, 191 Cal. 601, 218 P. 22. These authorities hold uniformly and consistently that during the marriage the husband is the sole and exclusive owner of all the community property, and the wife has no title thereto, nor interest or estate therein, other than a mere expectancy as heir, if she survive him.

A careful perusal of our former opinion will convince the most critical that we did not, in anything that we said therein, depart in the least degree from this long-established doctrine, so clearly and emphatically enunciated and adhered to in the many prior decisions of this court, a large number of which were referred to and discussed in our former opinion. We think this sufficiently and definitely disposes of the second contention made by respondent and certain of the amici curiæ that the present judgment is justified by the conclusions reached and expressed in our opinion on the first appeal in this action. As we read that opinion, we are satisfied that it does not in any respect support this contention.

In several of the briefs on file herein in behalf of respondent, frequent reference is made to sections 161 and 682 of the Civil Code, and it is confidently asserted that these sections of the Code definitely and conclusively determine that the interest of the wife in the community property during marriage is a present and vested interest in and to an undivided one-half of said property. Some surprise is expressed by the authors of some of said briefs that this court in its former opinion made no reference to either of said sections. The further complaint is made that neither of these sections of the Code was referred to in Roberts v. Wehmeyer, supra. These sections in their present form have been parts of the Civil Code since its adoption in 1872. They were, therefore, in full force and effect, not only at the time In re Burdick, supra, was decided, but also at all times since. Section 682 was referred to in the dissenting opinion in Re Burdick. Both sections were before the court in the first Spreckles Case, and section 682 was referred to in Estate of Moffitt, supra. After reference to that and other Code sections, as well as to certain earlier decisions of this court, which it might be here noted are decisions upon which the respondent at present relies, this court said in Estate of Moffitt, 153 Cal. 360 and 361, 95 P. 654:

"All of these Code sections, all of these cases, and all of these arguments were most ably urged upon the attention of the court in the first two cases above cited [In re Burdick, supra, and the first Spreckles Case] and the conclusion there reached was there expressed. * * * After painstaking investigation and review, and after the fullest deliberation, this court, in Re Burdick, determined and held, as it declared in Spreckles v. Spreckels, that upon the death of the husband the wife takes one-half of the community property as heir. Every argument here advanced against that conclusion was urged by learned counsel in the other cases, and was fully met in the opinions above referred to. * * * A reading of the opinions of this court in those cases will establish how thoroughly the questions were entered into and what a complete disposition was made of them."

They were not mentioned in subsequent decisions of this court, where the question of the wife's interest in community property was involved, no doubt for the perfectly obvious reason that the court considered that it had definitely decided in its former decisions that these sections of the Code in no way entered into the determination of the question as to the character of the wife's interest in community property. Neither of these sections of the Code attempts to define the interest of either of the spouses in community property, and in determining that question we are forced to resort to other provisions of the Code, and particularly to sections 172, 172a, 1401, and 1402, and at present to section 161a of the Civil Code, enacted in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 484). In arriving at the proper construction and meaning to be given these latter sections, we are in no way aided by the provisions of said sections 161 and 682 of the Civil Code.

Our attention is called to the recently enacted section of the Civil Code numbered 161a, adopted by the Legislature at its 1927 session, wherein it is provided:

"The respective interests of the husband and wife in community property during continuance of the marriage relation are present, existing and equal interests under the management and control of the husband as is provided in sections 172 and 172a of the Civil Code. This section shall be construed as defining the respective interests and rights of husband and wife in community property."

[2] In connection with this section of the Code counsel say:

"The statute simply characterizes and particularly defines what the wife has been given. Certainly this definition must go back to the legislation of 1917."

If this legislation can go back to 1917, why may it not extend back to 1891? And if it can be deemed in any way controlling of legislation enacted in 1891, why should it not serve the same purpose as to the first statute of this state dealing with the subject of community property enacted in 1850, over 75 years prior to the adoption of said section 161a? As might be expected, no authority is cited by counsel in support of this novel and extraordinary doctrine, and we think simply to state it in counsel's own words is to show its utter fallacy. This section of the Code, whatever effect it may have upon community property acquired subsequent to its effective date, cannot in any manner relate to or govern the ownership of property acquired prior thereto.

The further point is made by at least one of the amici curiæ appearing herein that the court in its former opinion failed to mention the case of Taylor v. Taylor, 192 Cal. 71, 218 P. 756, 51 A. L. R. 1074, and that since the date of our former opinion herein this court has decided the case of Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Welch, 260 P. 545, and that both of these cases were decided upon a theory completely at variance with the theory upon which our former decision in this case was based. The Taylor and Welch Cases each involved the rights of the former spouses after a decree of divorce to property which was held as community property prior to said decree of divorce. In each of these cases it was held that upon a decree of divorce, granted on grounds other than extreme cruelty or adultery, said spouses become tenants in common of the community property. These decisions simply followed the provisions of section 146 of the Civil Code to the effect that:

"If the decree [of divorce] be rendered on any other ground than that of adultery or extreme cruelty, the community property shall be equally divided between the parties."

We are at a loss to comprehend how the decision in either of these cases is out of line with our former decision in this case. In Taylor v. Taylor, supra, it was held that, the marriage having been dissolved by a decree in Nevada, the community property in this state was not affected by such a decree, and accordingly the former spouses held said community property as tenants in common after the dissolution of the marriage. In the case of Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Welch, supra, it was held that, the marriage having been dissolved by a decree of divorce, wherein all the property claimed by the plaintiff in her complaint as community property had been set aside to her, whatever other property either of the parties then owned or was interested in, in so far as its community character was concerned, was the separate property of the particular spouse in whose name it was held. Certainly neither of these cases attempted to consider, much less determine, the respective rights of the spouses in community property before the dissolution of the marriage. They are, therefore, of no assistance in determining the questions involved in the present action.

It follows, from the views above expressed, that the judgment should be reversed. From the findings and admissions in the pleadings it appears that the property involved herein was acquired on the 27th day of April, 1918, and that the purchase price thereof was wholly paid from community funds, there has been no divorce of the parties, but that the plaintiff and defendant are living together peacefully and happily as husband and wife. No question is made in the pleadings or in the findings that the real property is not the community property of the two spouses. We fail to see how any decree can be rendered in said action that would be of any value to either of the parties hereto, unless it be a decree for declaratory relief under section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Two decrees have already been entered herein, each of which has been for specific relief, and neither of which has purported to be given under the provisions of said section of the Code. It is apparent to us that a decree for declaratory relief is not what is wanted by the plaintiff herein. We doubt whether such a decree would be of any advantage to her. We are also in doubt whether plaintiff is entitled to any decree for declaratory relief, as such a decree may be granted only "in cases of actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties." Section 1060, Code Civ. Proc. There appears to be no such actual controversy between these parties as will justify a claim herein for declaratory relief. The parties are living together happily. Neither is attempting to withhold from or deny to the other any right of possession or enjoyment of the community property involved herein. Under these circumstances, we can see no benefit to accrue to anybody by prolonging this litigation.

The judgment, therefore, will be reversed, with directions to the trial court to dismiss the action.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; TYLER, Justice pro tem.

=====

204 Cal. 524
CALIFORNIA DELTA FARMS, Inc., v. CHINESE AMERICAN FARMS, Inc.*
(Sac. 3918.)

Supreme Court of California. July 16, 1928.

Rehearing Denied and Opinion Modified Aug. 13, 1928.

1. Receivers ⚡8—Order for receiver pendente lite is largely in trial court's discretion.

Order of trial court, appointing receiver pendente lite, is largely in discretion of such court.

2. Appeal and error ⚡955—Appellate court, in passing on order appointing receiver, must view cause as appearing to lower court when making order.

Appellate court, in passing on order appointing receiver pendente lite, must, as order is discretionary, view the cause as it legally appeared to lower court at time order was made.

3. Vendor and purchaser $\Leftrightarrow$ 299(1)—Vendor, bringing action for forfeiture of executory contract for purchase of real estate, held not entitled to receiver to collect mesne profits (Code Civ. Proc. § 564, subd. 1).

Vendor in executory contract for purchase of real property, after bringing action for forfeiture of contract, held not entitled to appointment of receiver pendente lite, under Code Civ. Proc. § 564, subd. 1, to collect mesne profits, without showing of fraud; vendor having no claim to fund arising from proceeds of crops, being at the most only a general creditor.

4. Vendor and purchaser $\Leftrightarrow$ 194—As respects crops, purchaser in default, continuing in possession after notice of cancellation, is adverse claimant.

As respects crops, purchaser in default under an executory contract for purchase of real estate, who continues in possession after notice of cancellation, is an adverse claimant, and all privity between him and vendor ceases on such notice.

5. Vendor and purchaser $\Leftrightarrow$ 300—Vendor, successfully forfeiting contract for purchase of real estate, has right of action only for value of use and occupation after cancellation.

Vendor under executory contract for purchase of real estate, if successful in action for forfeiture of contract, has right of action only for value of use and occupation of property from and after the time of cancellation, without any right to crops raised thereon.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Action by the California Delta Farms, Inc., against the Chinese American Farms, Inc., wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. From an order appointing a receiver pendente lite, defendant and cross-complainant appeals. Reversed.

A. B. Bianchi, Albert H. Elliot, and Manson & Allan, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford, and A. P. Hayne, all of Stockton, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This, the third appeal in the above-entitled cause, is from an order made on July 10, 1925, on motion of plaintiff, appointing a receiver pendente lite. The order confers power upon the receiver to collect what is termed "mesne profits," which is therein interpreted to mean a conferring of power upon said receiver to substitute himself for the defendant, and secure and keep, pending further order of the court, all of defendant's portion, or its equivalent, of the fructus industriales after severance, produced on the real property in suit during the year 1925. Said property for said year was being cropped by various tenants of defendant under agreements providing for shares of the yield in lieu of rentals. The order is sweeping in its scope, and, in short, divests defendant of all rights as a possessor of said lands, and invests them in the receiver. The order indirectly imputes to defendant a purpose to circumvent the efforts of the receiver to gain possession of said crop and makes elaborate provisions to help him in such event.

The main action, begun on September 15, 1924, was one to declare forfeited all rights of defendant under a contract made in 1919, wherein plaintiff agreed to sell and defendant to buy some 3,400 acres of agricultural lands in San Joaquin county. The purchase price was approximately $900,000, payable in installments, some 40 per cent. of said purchase price having been paid prior to suit; the final installment thereof matured in 1928. Defendant entered into possession of the premises on January 1, 1920, and so remained at the time of the order here appealed from. Defendant duly answered, and also filed a cross-action, and, after denial of default, set up, among other defenses, the enactment in 1920 of the second Alien Land Act (Stats. 1921, p. lxxxiii), effective December 9th of said year, contending that thereby the consideration for all unexecuted portions of said contract became illegal and in violation of the penal provisions of said statute. Basing its claims upon this contention, it tendered restoration of possession of said property upon the granting to it of an accounting in equity of all payments made, itself offering to account for the value of the use and occupation of the lands, but asserting a lien under section 3050 of the Civil Code, coupled with the right to remain in possession until the lien so claimed was satisfied. Following said enactment, and until the year 1924, apparently no heed was given by either party to the effect of said statute upon the contract. But untoward circumstances caused defendant to fall in arrears on its obligation, and as a result this action was begun. Soon thereafter the application for a receiver followed, and was predicated largely upon the apparent insolvency of defendant, provided, of course, forfeiture under said contract had occurred as claimed by plaintiff.

[1-4] We realize that the order under review is largely one in the discretion of the court, and that we have to view it as the cause legally appeared to the court below at the time it was made. Still we are unable to find any legal support for it. Apparently it is sought to justify it under subdivision 1, section 564, of the Code of Civil Procedure; but, in order to do so, either fraud must be shown in the purchase, or the plaintiff must be shown to have some right in or lien upon or claim to the fund sought to be impounded. Here no fraud is claimed, and in our view of the case plaintiff has no right whatsoever in or to the fund, or any part thereof, and is at most in no better position than that of a general creditor. And as a general creditor we need not pause to cite authorities to show that no receiver can be legally appointed at its instance. A vendee in default under an executory contract of purchase, who continues in possession after notice of cancellation, is an adverse claimant, and all privity between him and the vendor ceases upon such notice. Hovsepien v. Eskender, 69 Cal. App. 379, 231 P. 364.

[5] Plaintiff in this action, if successful in its efforts to obtain possession of the property, would have a right of action for the value of the use and occupation of the property from and after the time of said cancellation; but this apparently is the full measure of its rights. In 39 A. L. R. page 971, the annotator states this proposition as follows:

"The cases holding the owner of land not to be entitled to the crops raised thereon and harvested by persons not in privity with him all agree that his remedy consists in a recovery of the mesne profits"—citing Pennybecker v. McDougal, 46 Cal. 661; Groome v. Almstead, 101 Cal. 425, 35 P. 1021; Johnston v. Fish, 105 Cal. 420, 38 P. 979, 45 Am. St. Rep. 53; Rector v. Lewis, 46 Cal. App. 168, 188 P. 1018.

This right of action, however, falls far short of title to or interest in the usufruct. In fact, it negatives any claim of the true owner to it. As against such adverse claimant, the owner is not entitled to sue in trover or detinue for the crop as a chattel. Johnston v. Fish, supra; Groome v. Almstead, supra; Phillips v. Keysaw, 7 Okl. 674, 56 P. 695. In Page v. Fowler, 39 Cal. 412, 416-417 (2 Am. Rep. 462), it is said:

"The very fact that he may recover the rents and profits of the land, shows that he cannot recover the crops; for, as was well said in the case of Stockwell v. Phelps, 34 N. Y. 363, [90 Am. Dec. 710], the owner of the land, in such cases, does not recover the value of the crops raised and harvested, but the value of the use and occupation of the land; and the annual crops of grain and grass, which contain both the value of the use of the land and the labor of the farmer, do not, under such circumstances, belong to the owner of the land. It would be an oppressive rule to require every one who, after years of litigation perhaps, may be found to have a bad title, to pay the gross value of all the crops he has raised; and it would be an inconvenience to the public if the bad title of the farmer to his land attached to the crops he offered for sale, and rendered it necessary to have an abstract of his title to make it safe to purchase his produce."

Nor could an attachment or execution be levied thereon as the property of such owner (Smith v. Cunningham, 67 Cal. 262, 7 P. 679); nor would the owner be entitled to an injunction to protect its claims (Fritcher v. Kelley, 34 Idaho, 468, 471, 201 P. 1037). The simple fact is that such a crop in the hands of a bona fide adverse claimant is not the property of the true owner, but is the property of such claimant; and this is true, whether the crop be severed or growing. Grossman v. Yip Wing, 62 Cal. App. 128, 216 P. 634. We are not concerned with the question of growing crops produced by a trespasser, and not severed on the entry of the true owner. Rector v. Lewis, supra. Moreover, the order in question contemplated the taking into custody of crops after severance and before final judgment in the cause, and hence under either theory they would not belong to plaintiff.

Construing the action as one in ejectment, in the absence of peculiar circumstances, none of which are here present, the appointment of a receiver cannot be sustained. Bateman v. Superior Court, 54 Cal. 285; San Jose Deposit Bank v. Bank of Madera, 121 Cal. 543, 54 P. 85; Miller v. Oliver, 174 Cal. 407, 163 P. 355; Scott v. Sierra Lumber Co., 67 Cal. 71, 7 P. 131; Bennallack v. Richards, 125 Cal. 427, 58 P. 65.

Finally, the whole question here involved is determined adversely to plaintiff by the fact that, under the issues as made by the pleadings, as the word "issue" is defined in section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Baar v. Smith [Cal. Sup.] 255 P. 827), the court cannot administer or distribute the fund arising from such receivership, the plaintiff having no interest therein. The insolvency or supposed insolvency of the defendant is, therefore, not a factor in the question. A case similar in facts and like in principle is Golden Valley, etc., Co. v. Johnstone, 21 N. D. 101, 128 N. W. 691, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 631, approved in Roney v. Halvorsen, 29 N. D. 13, 149 N. W. 688.

The order is reversed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.

204 Cal. 595

FARBSTEIN v. WOULFE et al. (L. A. 8596.)

Supreme Court of California. July 18, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇨973—Order dismissing mechanic's lien enforcement action for want of prosecution cannot be disturbed on appeal, except for abuse of discretion (Code Civ. Proc. § 1190).

Order dismissing action to enforce mechanic's lien for want of prosecution under Code Civ. Proc. § 1190, cannot be disturbed on appeal, except on showing of abuse of discretion on part of trial court.

2. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇨60(7)—Dismissal of mechanic's lien enforcement suit for delay in prosecution caused by attempted settlement in another action, in which movants not parties, held not abuse of discretion (Code Civ. Proc. § 1190).

Dismissal of action to enforce mechanic's lien for delay of more than two years in bringing action on motion of certain defendants, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1190, held not abuse of discretion, though delay was caused by attempted settlement through receiver appointed in another action, where moving defendants were not parties to the other action, and did not countenance or encourage delay in prosecution of action, even though they were incidentally benefited by the delay.

3. Dismissal and nonsuit ⇨71—Defendants, seeking dismissal, need not show damage from delay in prosecuting action to enforce mechanic's lien (Code Civ. Proc. § 1190).

Defendants in action to enforce mechanic's lien need not show damage by reason of delay in prosecution of action, in order to have action dismissed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1190, since law presumes injury from unreasonable delay.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Action to foreclose a mechanic's lien by J. Farbstein against Martin Woulfe, also known as Martin J. Woulfe, and others. From an order dismissing the action for want of prosecution, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 265 P. 973.

Turner & Grainger, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert M. Pease, of Los Angeles, for respondent Woulfe.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from an order dismissing for want of prosecution an action to enforce a mechanic's lien. The defendant Woulfe is the owner in fee of certain lots in the Vista Del Mar tract, in the county of Orange. On June 1, 1921, he entered into an oil and gas lease with the defendant Robert M. Pease. By assignment this lease came into the hands of the defendant Malis Aldahl Syndicate. In August, 1921, the syndicate commenced the drilling of an oil well on the premises. Between August 15 and March 8, 1922, the plaintiff furnished to the syndicate for use, and which was used in the oil-drilling enterprise, certain oil-well casing at an agreed price of $8,653, of which the sum of $2,646.54 was paid. The balance of the purchase price not having been paid, the plaintiff, on March 8, 1922, filed a mechanic's lien on said real property. On April 13, 1922, a complaint was filed to foreclose the lien.

On December 12, 1924, the defendants Pease and Woulfe moved the court, on notice, for an order dismissing said action for want of prosecution. The motion was supported by the affidavit of the defendant Robert M. Pease, setting forth that the summons in said action was not served on the defendant Woulfe until November 11, 1924, which was more than 2 years and 6 months after the commencement of said action; that said defendant Woulfe had maintained a residence and office and had actually resided in the city of Los Angeles during all of said time; that his name appeared in the Los Angeles city and telephone directories during the time, and that said real property appeared on the assessment roll of Orange county in his name, and with his office address given thereon; that the defendants Pease had resided in the city of Los Angeles during all of said time, and that the name of the defendant Robert M. Pease appeared in the city and telephone directories during said time; that no proceedings whatsoever were taken by the plaintiff to bring said action to trial during said period of more than 2½ years after the commencement thereof and that the failure to bring said action to trial was inexcusable and was not caused by act or omission of the said defendants.

The motion was granted and the action was dismissed under the specific authority of section 1190 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to the dismissal of mechanic's lien actions, for want of prosecution. That section, among other things, provides that, in case the action to enforce the lien "be not prosecuted to trial within two years after the commencement thereof, the court may in its discretion dismiss the same for want of prosecution."

[1] The motion to dismiss the action invoked the discretionary power of the court. The showing made by the moving defendants was abundantly sufficient to sustain the order, and under familiar rules the order may not be disturbed on appeal, except upon a showing of abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court.

[2, 3] The plaintiff contends that such abuse of discretion appears from the showing made by affidavit in opposition to the motion to dismiss. The affidavit was made by one of the attorneys for the plaintiff. It appears therefrom that immediately after the commencement of this action another action was commenced by one Gullick and others against said Malis Aldahl Syndicate in the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, wherein the plaintiffs therein prayed for the appointment of a receiver; that a receiver was appointed in said action, with full power to take possession of said leased premises and conduct the oil drilling and producing operations thereon; that shortly after the commencement of the Gullick action the attorney for the plaintiffs therein notified the affiant of the commencement thereof and requested the affiant not to press the present action or incur any further expense on account thereof, and represented to affiant that the claim secured by said mechanic's lien would be paid by the receiver from the production of oil on said property; that the plaintiff herein has received, pursuant to said arrangement, payments aggregating $3,050, thus reducing his claim to $2,956.46; that on the 5th day of November, 1924, the affiant first learned that the receiver had entered into a contract with one Behr wherein the latter had taken over the operation of said property and had agreed to assume and pay certain obligations, including the claim secured by said lien, but that the affiant knew nothing of the financial responsibility of said Behr, and then took steps to have summons served on the defendants Pease and Woulfe. The affidavit also states, as a conclusion of the affiant, that the defendants Pease and Woulfe have been in nowise injured by the delay in the prosecution of the present action, but, on the contrary, have profited thereby.

We find no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in dismissing this action. It does not appear that the defendants Pease and Woulfe, or either or any of them, were parties to the Gullick action. Nor were they parties to the arrangement between the plaintiff herein and the plaintiff in the other action. Nor does it appear that they had countenanced or encouraged the delay in the prosecution of the present action or by any act or omission on their part become estopped from pursuing their rights under the statute. The plaintiff herein and the moving defendants were at all times at arm's length. It was unnecessary for said defendants to show damage by reason of the delay. The law presumes injury from unreasonable delay. Gray v. Times-Mirror Co., 11 Cal. App. 155, 104 P. 481. Indeed, the cloud upon their title during all of said time by reason of the filing of a lis pendens at the time of the commencement of this action would constitute a prejudice if any were necessary to be shown.

The plaintiff contends that the payment of a portion of the claim by the receiver resulted in a benefit to the defendants and that therefore they should not complain. Assuming that the defendant Woulfe, who was not personally liable for the obligation incurred by the syndicate, would be benefited by a reduction of the amount of the lien, it does not appear that it was out of any consideration for the defendant Woulfe that the delay was caused by the plaintiff. On the contrary it appears that the moving cause for the delay was a request on the part of the attorney for the plaintiff in the Gullick action, coupled with an unquestioned desire on the part of the plaintiff herein to obtain satisfaction of his claim by payments in cash from the oil operations on the leased property and thus avoid further proceedings in the present action. Having started this action, he was bound to realize the consequences of delay in the prosecution thereof, and cannot be heard to complain that he selected the uncertain course.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.

204 Cal. 599

PEOPLE v. KIRSCH. (Cr. 3105.)

Supreme Court of California. July 19, 1928.

1. Larceny $\S$ 14(1) — Where possession of property is obtained by fraud or trickery, title remains in owner.

Where possession of property is obtained by fraud or trickery, wrongdoer holds property without right or consent of owner, and title remains in owner.

2. Larceny $\S$ 8—Possession, as against wrongdoer, is sufficient interest to justify allegation and proof of ownership in larceny prosecution.

Possession alone, as against wrongdoer, is sufficient interest to justify allegation and proof of ownership in prosecution for larceny.

3. Larceny $\S$ 43—In prosecution of junk dealer for larceny from telephone company, evidence regarding defendant's gifts of liquor to company's employees held admissible as showing method of obtaining permission to weigh materials.

In prosecution of junk dealer for larceny, evidence that defendant gave liquor to employees of telephone company from which he obtained junk material held admissible to show one of methods defendant used to place himself in good graces of such employees to end that he be permitted by them to weigh material and thus enable him to defraud telephone company out of its property.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 178—Statement that matters alleged in counts dismissed constituted separate statement of offense stated in preceding count did not make offense stated the same as regards former jeopardy plea (Pen. Code, $\S$ 1008).

That pleaider stated in each of counts dismissed that matters and things alleged therein

"constitute another and separate statement of offense stated" in preceding count did not make offense particularly stated in dismissed count same offense that was stated in preceding count, as regards plea of former jeopardy, under Pen. Code, § 1008.

5. Criminal law — 202(2)—In larceny prosecution, pleas of former jeopardy and former acquittal did not lie, where false pretense counts were dismissed (Pen. Code, § 1008).

Where defendant was indicted on twelve counts, four for grand larceny, four for obtaining property by false pretenses, and four for embezzlement, and the court sustained a demurrer to the four false pretense counts, pleas of former jeopardy and former acquittal by reason of implied dismissal of false pretense counts did not lie under Pen. Code, § 1008, since each of the counts dismissed charged an offense separate and distinct from charge stated in any other count.

6. Criminal law — 204—Defendant's failure to present evidence concerning pleas of jeopardy constituted waiver of pleas (Pen. Code, § 1008).

In larceny prosecution, defendant's failure to introduce evidence concerning pleas of former jeopardy and former acquittal, under Pen. Code, § 1008, by reason of implied dismissal of false pretense counts, where court sustained demurrer to false pretense counts, constituted waiver of pleas.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

A. Kirsch was convicted of larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed. Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 262 P. 761.

Paul W. Schenck, of Los Angeles, and Clifford K. Fitzgerald, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Stephen Connell, Dist. Atty., and Ernest N. Clark and J. H. McKinney, Deputy Dist. Attys., all of San Diego, for the People.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. In January, 1927, the defendant was indicted on twelve counts, four for grand larceny, four for obtaining property by false pretenses, and four for embezzlement. Four transactions only were involved; each one of the four being pleaded three ways and charging a different offense. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the four false pretense counts and proceeded to trial on the remaining counts. The defendant was found guilty of grand larceny as charged in count IV, and of petit larceny under the charge contained in count X. The remaining six counts were eliminated by verdicts of not guilty thereon.

The Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company operates an exchange in the city of San Diego. By contract entered into in January, 1924, with the Western Electric Company, the latter company agreed to act as agent for the telephone company in the purchase of supplies and equipment; also to receive and dispose of apparatus or supplies returned to it by the telephone company, including material which had no value except as junk. The electric company agreed to dispose of this junk material at the best possible advantage, and, after deducting a charge for its services, credit the telephone company with the net amount received from the sale.

In July, 1926, the Western Electric Company entered into a contract with the Sugarman Iron & Metal Company to sell to the latter scrap or junk material that might accumulate during the period from July 1, 1926, to June 30, 1927, the sales to take place at different localities, including the regular yard and warehouse of the telephone company at San Diego. This contract provided that the weight, count, and classification of the material delivered to the purchaser should be made by the seller. The Sugarman Company assigned its interest in said contract to the Amalgamated Metals Corporation, of which the defendant was an officer and employee. Under the supervision of the defendant, his company did the first hauling of material from the San Diego yard of the telephone company. This work was performed from September 27 to November 17, 1926. The transactions of the defendant in connection with the hauling on November 10, 1926, form the basis of the charge and conviction of grand larceny under count IV of the indictment. The evidence showed that on that day an Orndorff truck, driven by one Hammack, went to the yard of the telephone company at San Diego under the orders of the defendant; that the defendant was at the yard on the arrival of the truck and instructed the truck driver as to what material to load; that a very heavy load of lead-covered cable was thereupon placed on the truck; that the truck then proceeded to the public weighmaster's scales and was weighed by Deputy Weighmaster Matthews; that the defendant was present at the time of the weighing of the truck; that thereupon the truck went to the railroad track, where about one-third of the load was unloaded into a box car; that the defendant then instructed the driver to return to the scales and reweigh the load; that after the reweighing, the balance of the material was unloaded into the box car; that the certificate covering the second weighing of this load showed approximately 10,000 pounds less than the original weighing; that the second weight certificate was used by the defendant in reporting the weight of the load, and the seller was never advised of the first weight, nor was any accounting made to it of the difference in weight.

In regard to the transaction in which the defendant was convicted of petit larceny, it appeared that certain junk material was loaded on the truck, and, by order of the defendant, the truck went direct to the box car, where a portion of the load was unloaded into the box car before any weighing had taken place; that the defendant then ordered the truck to the scale and weighed; that no accounting was made to the seller of the portion of the material removed from the truck before the weighing had taken place.

[1] It is first contended by the defendant that the crime of larceny was not, and could not have been, committed under the facts shown. It is conceded that there was no trespass necessary to constitute common-law larceny, but unquestionably there was sufficient evidence to show larceny by trick and device. There was evidence from which the jury might properly infer that the defendant so ingratiated himself with the employees of the telephone company that they permitted the defendant himself to do or supervise the weighing instead of having the same done by the seller, as the contract plainly provided, and that the conduct of the defendant in this respect was with the felonious design to place himself in such a position with reference to the weighing of the property as to enable him to deceive the seller as to the true weights and thus cheat and defraud the seller out of its property. That this element of the crime of larceny by trick and device was present can admit of no reasonable doubt. Where the possession of property was obtained by fraud or trickery, the wrongdoer holds the property without right and without the consent of the owner and title remained in the owner. People v. Hennessey (Cal. Sup.) 258 P. 49; People v. Edwards, 72 Cal. App. 102, 236 P. 944.

[2] The defendant further contends that there was a fatal variance as to the ownership of the property. The indictment alleged ownership in the telephone company, whereas it is claimed that the proof showed ownership to be in the electric company. The evidence is subject to the construction that the electric company was merely a purchasing agent or supply department of the telephone company, with right to pass the title of the junk material upon a sale in accordance with the terms of the contract between the two companies. Such a sale of the property in question had not been consummated. Furthermore, the possession of the property immediately before it was loaded into the trucks on orders from the defendant was in the telephone company. Possession alone, as against the wrongdoer, is a sufficient interest to justify an allegation and proof of ownership in a prosecution for larceny. People v. Edwards, supra,

[3] Numerous errors in the admission and rejection of evidence are claimed by the defendant to have been committed by the trial court. It is argued that the court committed prejudicial error in admitting evidence of gifts of liquor made by defendant to employees of the telephone company during the course of his transaction with them. This evidence was admissible as indicating one of the methods employed by the defendant in endeavoring to place himself in the good graces of said employees to the end that he be permitted by them to weigh the material and thus enable him to defraud the telephone company out of its property. The other assignments of error have been examined. None is such as to have invaded any substantial right of the defendant. Complaint is also made of certain instructions given and refused. It is apparent from the record that the court to a considerable extent instructed the jury orally. The exactness usually attendant upon the giving of written instructions is wanting in some instances. However, we find nothing in the instructions given which would require a reversal. Nor do we find any prejudicial error in the refusal of requested instructions.

[4-6] It is also contended that the failure of the jury to pass upon the plea of once in jeopardy makes a new trial imperative. Following the order sustaining the demurrer to the four counts charging the obtaining of property by false pretenses, the prosecution requested permission to amend those counts. This the court refused. When the defendant was required to plead, he entered pleas of not guilty to the remaining counts, and also tendered pleas of former jeopardy and former acquittal by reason of the implied dismissal of the false pretense counts. When these pleas were interposed on February 28, 1927, argument was had, not in the presence of the jury, on the question of whether such pleas would lie on the then state of the record. The court "overruled" said pleas, and thus decided as matter of law that they would not lie. It may be assumed, as contended by the defendant, that, had the indictment charged one offense only and had the demurrer been sustained thereto without direction to amend or resubmit to the same or a different grand jury, the case would have been at an end, and the legal bar to further proceedings would have attached under section 1008 of the Penal Code. But such is not this case. Each of the counts dismissed charged an offense separate and distinct from the charge stated in any other count. The fact that the pleader stated in each of the counts dismissed that the matters and things alleged therein "constitute another and separate statement of the offense stated" in the preceding count, did not make the offense particularly stated in the dismissed count the same offense that was stated in the preceding count. In reality each dismissed count charged an offense different from the offense stated in the charge next preceding it, but arising from the same transaction. The defendant was in no better position by reason of the dismissal of said counts than he would have been if the demurrer had been overruled and he had been acquitted on said counts. In such case there would have been no inconsistency in the verdicts, and, under section 954 of the Penal Code his conviction on counts IV and X would likewise stand. Furthermore, had the defendant believed that his pleas of jeopardy should be passed upon by the jury, it was his duty to present some evidence concerning the same. This he did not do and his failure to do so constituted a waiver of the pleas. People v. Newell, 192 Cal. 659, 221 P. 622. There was nothing with reference to said pleas for the jury to pass upon.

We are satisfied from an examination of the record that the defendant was fairly tried; that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the conviction, and, as we find no prejudicial error in the record, the judgment and order are, and each is, affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; TYLER, Justice pro tem.

92 Cal. App. 400

A. N. WALDRON, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. Ernest C. LYON et al., Defendants; A. E. Wallace, J. W. Harriman et al., Defendants and Appellants. (L. A. No. 9235.) In Bank.

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 2, 1928.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Norman T. Mason, of Los Angeles, for appellant Harriman.

D. Joseph Coyne, of Los Angeles, for other appellants.

McGee, Sumner & Tilden, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Appellant's petition to have the above-entitled cause heard and determined by this court after judgment in the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1 (268 P. 457), is denied.

It is urged in the petition for hearing that certain points presented by the appellant were not considered by the District Court of Appeal, in its decision affecting the judgment of the court below, or, if they were considered, that the grounds of its decision as to them were not stated. We have examined the record on appeal in the light of this contention, and are of the view that the trial court and the District Court of Appeal reached a proper conclusion as to the liability of the defendants in the premises.

We therefore deem it unnecessary to grant a hearing merely for the purpose of considering the points presented in the petition.

204 Cal. 604

ROLLS et al. v. ALLEN et al. (L. A. 9279.)

Supreme Court of California. July 19, 1928.

1. Wills ⇨58(1)—One may contract to make particular testamentary disposition of property and validly renounce power to revoke will.

One may make a contract binding upon himself to make a particular testamentary disposition of his property, and may validly renounce power to revoke his will, which agreement will be enforced in equity.

2. Wills ⇨188—One executing conjoint or mutual will does so with notice that such will is subject to revocation (Civ. Code, § 1279).

Any person executing a conjoint or mutual will with another does so with notice given by Civ. Code, § 1279, that such a will is subject to revocation.

3. Wills ⇨188—Mere concurrent execution of mutual wills is not enough to prove legal obligation to forbear revocation.

Mere concurrent execution of mutual wills with full knowledge of their contents by both testators is not enough to prove a legal obligation to forbear revocation in the absence of a valid contract.

4. Wills ⇨188—Indisputable evidence of agreement is necessary in order to attribute quality of irrevocability to mutual will.

In order to attribute to a mutual will the quality of irrevocability, there must be indisputable evidence of agreement which is relied on to change its ambulatory nature, and presumptions will not and should not take the place of proof.

5. Wills ⇨62—Mere execution of mutual will does not show contractual obligation to make such will.

Mere execution of mutual will has no tendency to show that there is a contractual obligation to make such a will.

6. Wills ⇨188—Act of surviving wife in retaining income from estate in accordance with terms of mutual will did not preclude her from exercising right of revocation.

The fact that wife after husband's death retained income from estate in accordance with terms of mutual will theretofore executed by parties held not to preclude her from exercising her right of revocation, in view of fact that she would nevertheless have been entitled to one-half of income in addition to family allowance and to homestead out of estate.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by Owen Rolls and others against W. S. Allen, as executor of the last will and testament of John Rolls, deceased, and others. Judgment for defendants and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Robert M. Clarke, of Los Angeles, and Bowker & Sheridan, of Ventura, for appellants.

Lawrence W. Allen, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

TYLER, Justice pro tem. Action in equity to establish the provisions of a joint and mutual will made by husband and wife. The case was before this court upon a former appeal taken from a decree of distribution in the matter of the estate of John Rolls, deceased. Two questions were there involved—one as to whether the assets of the estate were separate or community property, the other concerned the revocability of the joint and mutual wills made by John Rolls and his wife Leah. Estate of Rolls, 193 Cal. 594, 226 P. 608. It was there held that the property involved was the community property of the spouses. It was further held that the remedy of a person injured by the violation of a contract to make testamentary provision for others, must be pursued in a court of equity and cannot be enforced in a probate proceeding. It is admitted by both parties that the facts in the present appeal are fully stated in the decision of this court in such former appeal. Briefly, they show that John and Leah Rolls intermarried in Newfoundland in the year 1889. At the time of their marriage John Rolls was the father of eight children the issue of a previous marriage, the youngest of whom was five years of age and the oldest seventeen. Four of these children survived the father, the others dying without issue, and they are the plaintiffs herein. Leah Rolls was then the mother of two children by a previous marriage, and they are defendants herein. No children were born as the issue of the marriage of John and Leah. In 1891, Rolls and his wife, accompanied by all of his children, left Newfoundland and became residents of this state. The children of Leah did not accompany them. The spouses, during their marriage, succeeded in acquiring community property of the value of about $23,660. On April 16, 1919, they executed a conjoint and mutual will in accordance with the provisions of section 1279 of the Civil Code. The will disposed of all their possessions. It was on one paper and provided that all their property, both real and personal, should be held by the survivor during his or her lifetime, the use and income thereof to be enjoyed by such survivor as he or she should deem best, during the remainder of the life of such survivor. If further provided that at the death of the survivor $1,000 was to be paid to Thomas K. Winsor, a grandson, when he became of age, and $500 to Jessie Rolls, a daughter-in-law, the balance to be equally divided among the surviving children of John Rolls. The will declares itself to be joint as well as several. The following day John Rolls died leaving surviving him his widow and his four children, the issue of his former marriage as above referred to. Upon his death his widow took possession of all the property jointly held by them and enjoyed the use and income thereafter until the date of her death, which occurred on April 11, 1921, a period of some two years. After the death of the husband and on the 6th day of November, 1920, the widow, then 80 years of age, made and executed a will whereby she revoked as to herself the conjoint will and devised her share of the community property to her daughters, Maude Agnes Prowse and Sarah Dicks, and to her grandson, Thomas K. Winsor, respondents herein, in certain proportions. No steps were taken during the lifetime of the widow to probate her husband's share of the estate. After her death defendant W. S. Allen, who was named as the executor in each of the wills, presented both documents to the court for probate, and each was duly admitted and letters testamentary were issued to Allen as executor of each will. After proceedings leading up to distribution were had, Allen as the executor of the conjoint will and the separate will of the widow petitioned the court to have one-half of the property which was jointly held by the deceased parties in their lifetime distributed in accordance with the last will of the widow. The property was distributed as prayed for, and the appeal above referred to was taken with the result as stated. In holding that the question of the right of revocation could not be litigated in the probate court, this court had occasion to say that whether or not appellants ought to prevail in a suit in equity to enforce the disposition made under the mutual will under the peculiar facts was a matter not before it and upon the subject no opinion was expressed. The instant suit is such a proceeding—it being sought to have the terms of the mutual will declared irrevocable and binding upon the defendants who are devisees and legatees named in the second will. The trial court found the last and separate will of the widow revoked her portion of the conjoint will, and that the latter was not executed pursuant to a contract or agreement with the husband, and judgment followed in favor of defendants. Appellants claim that the evidence is insufficient to justify the judgment of the trial court and that it is contrary to law.

[1-6] The pivotal questions here presented are, first, whether under the facts the widow could, after the death of her husband, make a valid revocation of their conjoint will; and, second, whether her acceptance of the benefits thereunder for the period stated estopped her from so doing. It is undoubtedly true that one may make a contract binding upon himself to make a particular testamentary disposition of his property and he may validly renounce the power to revoke his will, and equity will enforce such an agreement and not suffer him to defeat his obligation by the making of another will. The same rule applies to the case of mutual wills as equity likewise will assume enforcement of the same when attempt is made by the survivor to impair the terms thereof by subsequent testamentary disposition. In the absence of such a contract or agreement, however, the cases universally hold that either of the comakers may at any time revoke his part of the will. This principle has found expression in our Civil Code, for it is there provided that a conjoint or mutual will may be revoked by any of the testators in like manner with any other will. Section 1279. Whoever, therefore, executes a conjoint or mutual will with another does so with notice given by the statute itself that such a will is subject to revocation. Estate of Rolls, 193 Cal. 594, 601, 226 P. 608. The mere concurrent execution of mutual wills with full knowledge of their contents by both testators is not enough, therefore, as claimed, to prove a legal obligation to forbear revocation in the absence of a valid contract. A different conclusion would render our statute meaningless when it declares that a conjoint will may be revoked, for if the mere fact of its joint execution is to be deemed evidence of a contractual intention then all conjoint wills, in the absence of other evidence, must be treated and given effect in equity as irrevocable contracts. The language employed by the parties in their conjoint will is purely testamentary in character, there being not one word to indicate a contractual intent, or to indicate that the will was the result of a contract or agreement as would deprive the survivor of his right of revocation. No facts or circumstances surrounding the execution of the will are in evidence, nor is it claimed that there is any agreement other than the will itself which would support or compel the conclusion that the parties intended or undertook to bind themselves and estate irrevocably in the event of the prior death of either.

To attribute to a will the quality of irrevocability demands the most indisputable evidence of the agreement, which is relied upon to change its ambulatory nature, and presumptions will not and should not, in such cases, take the place of proof. Edson v. Parsons, 155 N. Y. 555, 50 N. E. 265. The mere execution of the will in question, therefore, has no tendency to show that there is a contractual obligation to make such a will. Monsen v. Monsen, 174 Cal. 97, 162 P. 90. Here the court found that the mutual will in question was not executed pursuant to any contract, and that its reciprocal provisions were referable solely to the marriage relation existing between the parties. There is no evidence that would justify a contrary finding. Nor do we think that the act of the survivor in retaining the income from the estate for the limited period involved precluded her from exercising her right of revocation. Had she acted promptly she would have been entitled as of right to one-half of the income. She would also have been entitled to a family allowance and to a homestead out of the estate. Under these circumstances, and considering its modest character, we fail to see how appellants have been prejudiced, as the entire income could not have been more than sufficient for her proper support. In fact, considering her homestead rights, it would seem that appellants were benefited rather than injured by the delay. A different situation might be presented in a case where administration was had and a survivor received certain substantial benefits which he retained and enjoyed. In such a case it might well be argued that he would be estopped to exercise a right to revoke. The decree permits the children of the wife to enjoy the benefits of the estate equally with the children of the husband. It is equitable and just and should not be set aside unless for imperative reasons. The record presents none.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.

204 Cal. 529

ARMSTRONG v. LASSEN LUMBER & BOX CO. (S. F. 11479.)★

Supreme Court of California. July 17, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 16, 1928.

1. Pleading $\S$ 236(5)—Trial court has discretion as to amendment of pleadings to conform to proof.

Allowance of amendment of pleadings to conform to proof is a matter for the exercise of discretion of the trial court.

2. Pleading $\S$ 333—That formal pleading after amendment was not made part of record until later held immaterial.

Where amendment of complaint to conform to proof was offered and allowed at time proof was taken, the fact that formal pleading was not made a part of record until later was immaterial, without showing that injury resulted therefrom.

3. Fraud $\S$ 59(1)—Measure of damages for fraud is amount which will compensate for all detriment (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3333).

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 3333, measure of damages in case of fraud is the amount which will compensate for all detriment, whether anticipated or not, proximately caused by a breach of the obligation.

4. Sales $\S$ 442(6, 7)—Buyer, purchasing boiler for resale, could not recover damages for seller's misrepresentation because of loss from negligence in contracting to resell different type boiler.

Where buyer of tubular boiler for purpose of resale contracted for resale of materially different type of boiler, seller was not liable because of misrepresentation for loss resulting to buyer, because of necessity of purchasing boiler to conform to specifications; such loss arising out of its own negligence in contracting to resell something which it was not in fact purchasing, and constituting damages too remote, and not likely to follow in ordinary course of things from breach of original contract.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by L. D. Armstrong, doing business under the name and style of the L. D. Armstrong Company, against the Lassen Lumber & Box Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order, made after trial and entry of judgment, allowing plaintiff to amend the second amended complaint, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Superseding Opinion of District Court of Appeal in 260 P. 810.

Rehearing denied; Langdon, J., voting for a rehearing.

Cushing & Cushing and Walter Slack, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank W. Street and Horace M. Street, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This action was brought to recover damages growing out of the sale on March 24, 1922, by defendant to plaintiff of a used 80 horse power return tubular boiler. The complaint, as finally amended, in substance alleged that prior to March 10, 1922, plaintiff informed defendant that he was about to enter into a contract with a customer, viz. Leal & Sons Lumber Company, for the sale to said company of one 80 horse power return tubular boiler, in good condition, built for 140 pounds per square inch working pressure, with all necessary fittings, etc; that defendant stated it was the owner of a boiler of the kind and character specified, which it would sell to plaintiff for the sum of $800; that plaintiff, relying upon the honesty and integrity of defendant, and upon the truth and correctness of said representations, on March 10, 1922, entered into an agreement in writing to sell said boiler, complete with fittings, to said Leal & Sons for the sum of $1,575; that on March 24, 1922, plaintiff paid defendant said purchase price of $800, and received from it a bill of sale for said boiler; that immediately thereafter said boiler was dismantled and shipped by freight from Susanville, where it was located, to Oroville, whence it was hauled by wagon to the sawmill of Leal & Sons, at a hauling cost of $140; that plaintiff was informed by said Leal & Sons that upon arrival they found said boiler was not such a one as they were entitled to receive under their contract; that it was old, worn-out, bagged, leaky, damaged, had a lamination, and was valueless; that plaintiff thereupon sent mechanics and a state inspector to try to repair and to inspect it, at a total cost of $232.10; that said inspector condemned said boiler; that plaintiff was unaware of its defective and useless condition, and thereafter settled and compromised the demand of Leal & Sons against it by furnishing them, in lieu of said defective boiler, a used water tube boiler (a boiler of a different type), procured at a cost to plaintiff of $1,933.18, for which said Leal & Sons paid only $1,575, all to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $2,305.28. The first count of said complaint alleged a cause of action for deceit; the second, for breach of contract.

The answer denied the material allegations of the complaint, with the exception of sale of the boiler and execution of bill of sale therefor. The trial court found that defendant had misrepresented to plaintiff the condition of said boiler, which was, in fact, worthless and of no value, and fixed damages at $2,113.29, being $1,933.18, cost of the substituted water tube boiler and its erection, plus $180.11, plaintiff's expenses in endeavoring to service the old boiler. Judgment for said sum was accordingly entered in favor of plaintiff, and there was also included therein an allowance of interest at 7 per cent. per annum on the purchase price of $800 from March 24, 1922, and costs. Defendant appealed from the judgment, and also from an order, made after entry thereof, allowing plaintiff to amend the second amended complaint.

It appears that during the trial plaintiff was granted permission to amend its second amended complaint to conform to proof. However, through neglect or inadvertence, the formal amendment was not engrossed and made part of the record until after this appeal was taken, at which time it was filed under order of the trial court, on motion of plaintiff, after hearing thereon. The amendment set forth the facts with respect to replacement of the boiler sold by defendant with a used water tube boiler. The propriety of permitting the amendment is not questioned so much as is the fact that plaintiff had more than a reasonable time within which to file it; that no showing was made of inadvertence or excusable neglect explaining his failure to do so, and by virtue of entry of the judgment and the appeal therefrom the court lost jurisdiction to entertain plaintiff's motion.

[1, 2] This was a matter for exercise of the discretion of the trial court, and it does not appear that defendant suffered prejudice by its action. Courts are liberal in the allowance of amendments, in order that pleadings may conform to proof, and here said amendment was offered and allowed at the time the proof was taken. The fact that the formal pleading was not made a part of the record until later is immaterial under the circumstances. This very question arose in the case of Stark v. Wellman, 96 Cal. 400, 402, 403, 31 P. 259, 260, and the court there said:

"Although plaintiff announced that the amendment would be made, the amendment was not actually made until after the verdict and the entry of judgment. This is assigned as error, and the ruling is brought here by a bill of exceptions. But here, I think, we can plainly see that the defendant was not injured. * * * Here we know that the proposed amendment did not and could not have benefited the plaintiff or injured the defendant. It did not change the character of the complaint in any respect. But if its effect had been to help the complaint, the defendant still was not injured, for he tried his case with reference to it, and was not prejudiced by the fact that it was not reduced to writing until afterwards."

Appellant contends that the findings as to fraud and misrepresentation cannot be sustained by the evidence, nor can the judgment be upheld upon any theory of breach of warranty; also that, admitting the finding of fraud to be sustained by the evidence, the measure of damages adopted by the trial court was nevertheless incorrect. To our mind the latter position is sound and necessitates a reversal of the judgment; hence this contention alone will receive our consideration.

There is some conflict in the evidence, it is true, but it can scarcely be questioned that the record furnishes ample support for the conclusion that the boiler, instead of being a used boiler in good condition for 140 pounds working pressure, was in fact, by reason of burnt-out rivets, leaks, bags and a lamination, defective and practically valueless. The sufficiency of the evidence to warrant a finding of fraud is open to debate, but, as above stated, we need not definitely determine this contention. These observations are far from holding, however, that defendant should be forced to bear the burden of plaintiff's entire loss by reason of its dealings with a third party by a written contract antedating the contract with defendant, and to which defendant was not a party and of which it had no specific knowledge. The most that was told defendant by plaintiff's agent was that plaintiff desired to purchase the boiler for resale, and later defendant was given the name of the company to which said boiler should be shipped; and in this behalf said agent misrepresented the intended resale price, stating to defendant that it was to be $900 (which would give a profit of $100), instead of $1,575, the price mentioned in the Leal & Sons contract. The bill of sale executed by defendant described the article as follows:

"One butt-strap boiler 60' in diameter by 16' long for 140 pounds working pressure complete with breachings, stack, front grates, and full complement of fittings. Boiler now located at our plant at Susanville, Cal. Above consideration includes delivery of boiler on cars in good condition at Susanville."

Respondent's contract with Leal & Sons covered in part:

" * * * One 80 HP return tubular boiler, designed and built for 140 pounds working pressure. This is the boiler from Nevada * * * and is an exceptionally fine equipment. This boiler will be complete with all the necessary fittings consisting of steam gauge, water column, safety valves, blow-off valves, and feed valves. * * * There will also be furnished one stack 24 to 28" in diameter of No. 12 ga. steel 70' in length. * * * We will also furnish working drawings of brick setting, also the arrangement of the furnace construction. * * *" shown. To do so is to hold defendant liable for plaintiff's improvident contract. The measure of damages in case of fraud, it is true, is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment, whether anticipated or not, proximately caused by a breach of the obligation. Section 3333, Civ. Code. The question here is: What detriment was proximately caused by defendant's breach? The major portion of the loss suffered by plaintiff was clearly due to its own negligence in contracting to resell something which it was not in fact purchasing. Such loss, directly occasioned by the fact that plaintiff upon resale added to and changed materially representations as to the condition of the article, cannot be laid at defendant's door. As is said in the case of California P. Mfg. Co. v. Stafford P. Co., 192 Cal. 479, 483, 221 P. 345, 346 (32 A. L. R. 114):

[3, 4] Even a cursory examination of the two documents reveals that plaintiff's contract of resale covered far more than the boiler purchased from defendant. If plaintiff had submitted the Leal & Sons contract to defendant, and had only resold what it contracted to buy from defendant, the loss with some show of reason might be claimed as the measure of damages. But it is manifestly unfair to hold defendant liable for $2,113.29 under the circumstances here

"It is a well-settled rule that the damages that can be recovered for any breach of contract are only such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time of entering into the agreement, as the probable result of a breach. 'Other damages are too remote.' * * * This rule does not mean that the parties should actually have contemplated the very consequence that occurred, but simply that the consequence for which compensation is sought, must be such as the parties may be reasonably supposed, in the light of all the facts known, or which should have been known to them, to have considered as likely to follow in the ordinary course of things, from a breach, and, therefore, to have in effect stipulated against. The understanding and intention of the parties in this regard must of course be ascertained from the language of the contract, in the light of such facts." Hunt Bros. Co. v. San Lorenzo Water Co., 150 Cal. 51, 56 [7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, 87 P. 1093, 1095]."

The well-recognized and generally-approved rule is stated in the case of Hadley v. Boxendale, 9 Ex. 341, 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 396, 156 Eng. Reprint, 145, as follows:

"Where two parties have made a contract which one of them has broken, the damages which the other party ought to receive in respect to such breach of contract should be such as would fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally; i. e., according to the usual course of things, from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties, at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it. Now, if the special circumstances under which the contract was actually made were communicated by the plaintiff to the defendant, and thus known to both parties, the damages resulting from the breach of such contract, which they would reasonably contemplate, would be the amount of injury which would ordinarily follow from the breach of contract under these special circumstances so known and communicated."

It was certainly far beyond the contemplation of defendant, and perhaps of plaintiff also, that plaintiff would undertake to resell the boiler for almost twice its purchase value, upon a highly embellished and materially different description, and then replace it with a different type of boiler costing even more than that sum. The circumstances of the resale, therefore, offer no proof upon which a valid measure of damages may be based, as the loss arising therefrom would constitute damages too remote and not likely to follow in the ordinary course of things from the breach, and certainly no special circumstances were brought home to defendant sufficient to enlarge the rule of damages.

This holding emphasizes the absence of evidence in the record upon which to predicate a proper judgment for damages. Whether section 3313, 3314, or 3333, Civil Code, is to measure the damages in this cause will depend upon the findings of fact on a retrial of the action.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

93 Cal. App. 126

SCOTT v. DONAHUE et al. (WRINKLE, Intervener). (Civ. 5690.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 10, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 6, 1928.

1. Insurance §697—Local's sick benefit funds constitute trust for members, and without special agreement parent body cannot take funds on local's involuntary dissolution.

Associations, such as railroad brotherhoods, are not bodies politic or corporations, but are mere aggregates of individuals, and all the property said to belong to such association is in fact the property of its members, and funds acquired by association for mutual benefit of its members in case of sickness constitute a trust in favor of every member of the association in good standing, and in absence of special agreement the parent body cannot successfully claim the funds on involuntary dissolution of local association.

2. Constitutional law §303—Insurance §697—Where charter or by-law provides for hearing before local is dissolved and its property forfeited, forfeiture is by contract and not without due process.

Charter of a local beneficial association and by-laws of supreme body constitute contract between them, and where, by either charter or by-law, adequate provision is made for notice of hearing before local lodge is dissolved and its property forfeited to supreme body the funds of local are deemed to have been raised in accordance with contract, and the forfeiture is by contract and not without due process.

3. Insurance ☞697—Rule that one claiming right to deprive another of property without opportunity to defend must show consent applies to forfeiture of local's funds.

As respects forfeiture of the funds of a local lodge to supreme lodge on its dissolution, rule that whoever would claim the right to deprive another of property or privilege without giving him an opportunity to defend must show some consent to such action applies.

4. Insurance ☞697—Burden of proving contract authorizes forfeiture of subordinate body's funds to supreme body is on one asserting it.

Burden of proving that contract between supreme order and local lodge of beneficial association authorizes forfeiture of funds of subordinate body to supreme body on dissolution of local is on one asserting such authority.

5. Insurance ☞697—Requirement that local voluntarily dissolved surrender effects to grand lodge held not to relate to sick benefit funds (Civ. Code, § 1442).

Under Civ. Code, § 1442, provision of railroad brotherhood's constitution that local lodge whose charter has been voluntarily surrendered or reclaimed by president of grand lodge shall deliver to grand lodge its charter, seal, rituals, unwritten work, all supplies furnished by grand lodge, and effects of lodge at time of dissolution held not, on revocation of local's charter, to authorize grand lodge to forfeit moneys belonging to local as a lodge or funds held by local in trust for its members, such as sick benefits.

6. Insurance ☞697—Rule that funds raised by local for general purposes of parent organization cannot be diverted held inapplicable to sick benefit fund.

Rule that funds raised by a local lodge for general purposes of parent organization, such as teaching of religion or creed of general body, they constitute a trust fund for the purpose for which they were raised, and no number of members less than the whole can divert funds to other uses, does not apply to sick benefit fund raised for benefit of members of local lodge, but such members in good standing at time of its involuntary dissolution, are entitled to their proportionate share of such fund.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nosttrand, Judge.

Action by Robert C. Scott, in behalf of himself and all members of San Francisco Lodge No. 198 of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, an unincorporated association, against J. J. Donahue and others, in which J. S. Wrinkle intervened. Judgment for intervenor, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

See, also, 269 P. 458.

George D. Collins, Jr., and J. H. Morris, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Gillogley, Crofton & Payne, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff on behalf of himself and some 200 associates, sued in replevin to recover four Liberty bonds, the property of the members of the San Francisco Lodge Number 198 of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, prior to its dissolution. By order of court the parent organization of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen was substituted as a party defendant for defendant Donahue, who was sued as treasurer of the local lodge, and thereafter one Sully, purporting to represent the parent body, filed an answer and cross-complaint, and one Wrinkle, representing a minority of 48 of the members of Local 198, filed a complaint in intervention. Before the trial the bonds were deposited in court and the treasurer and the bank were discharged from liability. Though the action was commenced as a simple suit in replevin, it was in fact tried upon the complaint in intervention, which transformed the proceeding into one of equity to establish a trust fund. The cause was tried before the court, sitting without a jury, and resulted in a finding that the bonds constituted a trust fund for the benefit of the members in good standing of the Brotherhood who were formerly members of Local 198. This was followed by a judgment that the intervenor was entitled to have the bonds as trust property for himself and such former members of the local. From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed on a typewritten record.

In the year 1920 Local 198 consisted of about 284 members. At this time dissension arose because of action taken by the local in opposition to the policy of the grand lodge relative to participation in a strike against employing railway concerns. Disobedience of the orders of the grand lodge by the local resulted in a revocation of the local charter pursuant to the rules and regulations of the parent body. The original complaint was filed by appellant on behalf of a large majority of the members, while the complaint in intervention was filed on behalf of those minority members who supported the action of the grand lodge and who later associated with Local No. 947, a new local organized under the sanction of the grand lodge.

[1] There are certain rules of law which are determinative of the controversy aside from any of the arguments advanced in the respective briefs. "Associations of this character are not bodies politic or corporations; nor are they recognized by the law as persons. They are mere aggregates of individuals called for convenience, like partnerships, by a common name. * * * All the property said to belong to it is in fact the property of its members and each man's share of it is his own private property and equally protected by the fundamental laws." Grand Grove, etc., v. Garibaldi Grove, 130 Cal. 116, 119, 62 P. 486, 487 (80 Am. St. Rep. 80).

When funds have been acquired by the association for the mutual benefit of its members, as to care for the individuals in case of sickness, such funds constitute a trust in favor of every member of the association in good standing, and, in absence of special agreement, the parent body cannot successfully lay claim to the funds upon an involuntary dissolution of the local association. State Council v. Emery, 219 Pa. 461, 68 A. 1023, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 336, 12 Ann. Cas. 870; Detroit Sav. Bank v. Haines, 128 Mich. 38, 87 N. W. 66; I. O. O. F. v. Donahue, 91 Ill. App. 585.

[2] The rule rests upon the sound base that property may not be taken without due process of law. Accordingly, it has been held that where the parent body seeks to dissolve a subordinate lodge by its mere fiat and to confiscate the property of the latter its action will not be upheld in the courts. Austin v. Searing, 16 N. Y. 112, 69 Am. Dec. 665; Wicks v. Monihan, 130 N. Y. 232, 29 N. E. 139, 14 L. R. A. 243; State Council, etc., v. Emery, supra; Merrill Lodge, etc., v. Ellsworth, 78 Cal. 166, 20 P. 399, 400, 2 L. R. A. 841. Some of the early decisions held that a provision in a local charter or in the by-laws of the supreme body making the supreme body entitled to the funds of the local lodge on dissolution of the latter was confiscatory and void as taking property without due process. The later decisions have recognized the local charter as a contract between the lodge and the supreme body (of which the by-laws of the latter become a part) (Grand Grove, etc. v. Garibaldi Grove, etc., 105 Cal. 219, 224, 38 P. 947), and where, by either charter or by-law, adequate provision is made for notice and hearing before the local lodge is dissolved and its property forfeited, the funds are then deemed to have been raised in accordance with the contract between the parties, and the forfeiture is a forfeiture by contract and not without due process (Subsidiary H. Ct. A. O. F. v. Pestarino, 41 Cal. App. 712, 714, 183 P. 297; 7 Cor. Jur. p. 114). Where the power to thus forfeit the property of a local lodge is given by charter or by-law the forfeiture can be effected only "for cause," and this "implies the existence of the fact of good and reasonable cause," which can be determined only after the lodge has been given due notice and a reasonable opportunity to be heard. Bannerman v. Boyle, 160 Cal. 197, 206, 116 P. 732; Taboada v. Sociedad Espanola, etc., 191 Cal. 187, 191, 215 P. 673, 27 A. L. R. 1508; K. K. K. v. Francis, 79 Cal. App. 383, 386, 249 P. 539; State Council, etc., v. Emery, 219 Pa. 461, 68 A. 1023, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 336, 12 Ann. Cas. 870.

[3] As applied to the forfeiture of the funds of a local lodge the language of Grand Grove, etc. v. Garibaldi Grove, etc., 105 Cal. 224, 225, 38 P. 947, 948, is pertinent:

"Whoever would claim the right to deprive another of property or privilege, without giving him an opportunity to defend the same, must show some consent on his part to such action."

Here the several pleadings of the parties assume that Local Lodge 198 was duly dissolved, it seeming to be the desire of all parties to treat their fraternal relations as effectively severed. The assumption of due process is a violent one in view of the fact that the charter was revoked by order of the vice president of the supreme lodge after a one-day notice to the officers of the local to appear before him and show cause why their charter should not be suspended or revoked "for failure to conform to the constitution and general rules" of the Brotherhood. All parties, however, concede that it was not a voluntary dissolution, although a large majority of the members of the local desired to discontinue their affiliation with the parent lodge. In determining the rights of the parties to the funds in litigation we must, therefore, assume that the vice president of the supreme lodge attempted to revoke the local charter for misconduct on the part of the members and that, so far as this proceeding is concerned, his action was in accord with the constitution and by-laws of the Brotherhood.

[4, 5] In view of the well-established rule of law to which we have adverted—that the "contract" between the supreme order and the local lodge must authorize the forfeiture of the funds of the subordinate body—the burden of proof was upon respondent to show such authority. He relies solely on section 43 of the constitution of the Brotherhood, which reads in part:

"A lodge whose charter has been voluntarily surrendered, or reclaimed by the president of the grand lodge, shall be known as a defunct lodge. The president of a defunct lodge shall deliver to the grand lodge, within thirty days after the dissolution of the lodge, the charter, seal, rituals, unwritten work, and all other supplies furnished by the grand lodge, and all effects of the lodge at the time of dissolution."

In view of the well-known principle that forfeitures are not favored, and that, when the right of forfeiture is claimed under contract, the condition involving the forfeiture must be strictly interpreted against the party for whose benefit it is created (Civ. Code, § 1442), we are unable to find any justification for the claim that this fund, which was created as a sick benefit fund for the members of Local 198, became the property of the grand lodge upon the revocation of the local charter. The section of the constitution quoted follows immediately the section which covers the whole subject of the suspension and revocation of a local charter for misconduct, yet in section 43 no mention is made of either suspension or revocation. This section applies only to a case of voluntary surrender of a charter and to a charter "reclaimed" by the president of the grand lodge. It specifies the lodge properties and regalia which must be turned over to the grand lodge, but does not mention the moneys belonging to the lodge as a lodge or the funds held by the lodge in trust for its members. We conclude, therefore, that the inherent right of every member of the lodge to the fund in dispute was not changed by any contract between the grand lodge and the local. The case is parallel to State Council v. Emery, 219 Pa. 461, 68 A. 1023, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 336, 12 Ann. Cas. 870, where similar language in the constitution of the grand lodge was held not to confer upon the grand lodge the right to a sick benefit fund of a local lodge upon dissolution of the latter. To the same effect is Detroit Sav. Bank v. Haines, 128 Mich. 38, 87 N. W. 66; Ind. Order of Foresters v. Donahue, 91 Ill. App. 585; Nat. Circle, etc., v. Hines, 88 Conn. 676, 92 A. 401; Wolfe v. L. C. O. of I. A., 233 Pa. 357, 82 A. 499.

[6] Respondents rely upon the rule that those who remain faithful to the parent organization are entitled to all the property of the local lodge on dissolution of the latter, citing Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. Ed. 666; Nance v. Busby, 91 Tenn. 303, 18 S. W. 874, 15 L. R. A. 801; Grand Court, etc. v. Hodel, 74 Wash. 314, 133 P. 438, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 927; and other cases. The rule, as stated, is too general, but, even so, it has no application here. Where funds have been raised by a local lodge, or order, for the general purposes of the parent organization, such as the teaching of the religion or creed of the general body, they constitute a trust fund for the purpose for which they were raised and "no number of the members of the order less than the whole could therefore divert the funds to other uses than the uses defined in the constitution and laws of the order." Grand Court, etc., v. Hodel, supra. The rule is based upon the sound principle that a trust fund must be devoted to the purposes for which it was raised. It has no application to a sick benefit fund raised for the benefit of all the members of the local lodge and to which all who are in good standing at the time of an involuntary dissolution of the local are entitled to their proportionate share. Thus, the judgment herein is error in its finding that these funds constituted a trust fund for the benefit of the minority members of Local 198 who affiliated with Local 947. The fund was raised for the benefit of all members—it was a trust for all and not for any particular number of them less than all.

The trial court found that all the allegations of the complaint were true except the allegation that the action was brought on behalf of plaintiff and all the members formerly belonging to Lodge 198 and at their request. It also found that the allegations of the complaint in intervention of Wrinkle on behalf of other members of the local named therein were true. There is no need for a new trial of any of the issues involved, but the trial court should appoint a suitable person to take possession of and sell the bonds in suit and to distribute the proceeds equally among all the former members of Local 198 who were in good standing upon the rolls at the time of its dissolution, after deducting therefrom the costs of suit and other charges and fees properly chargeable against the trust fund.

Judgment reversed, with directions to proceed as herein indicated.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

93 Cal. App. 795

Robert C. SCOTT, in Behalf of Himself and all Members of San Francisco Lodge No. 198 of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, an Unincorporated Association, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. J. J. DONAHUE, J. D. Murray, and the Humboldt Savings Bank, Defendants (J. S. WRINKEL, Intervener, Respondent).
(Civ. 5690.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 10, 1928.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

George D. Collins, Jr., and J. H. Morris, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Gillogley, Crofton & Payne, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Action in assumpsit to recover $1,500 held by the defendant bank on deposit for the members of Local 198, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. Before trial the money was deposited in court and is held there, awaiting distribution. A complaint in intervention was filed on behalf of a minority of the former members of Local 198, and the trial court found that the money was a trust fund for the benefit of this minority only.

Upon the authority of Scott v. Donahue (Cal. App.) 269 P. 455, this day decided, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to distribute the fund as indicated in said opinion.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

ENGLAND v. LYON FIREPROOF STORAGE CO. (Civ. 3527.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 10, 1928.

Rehearing Granted Aug. 9, 1928.

1. Warehousemen ⇨34(7)—In action for damages for theft of goods in storage, evidence held sufficient to justify jury's finding theft occurred.

In action for damages for theft of goods in storage, evidence held sufficient to justify jury's finding that boxes were not received empty and that theft occurred.

2. Warehousemen ⇨24(4)—In absence of specific agreement, warehouseman does not become insurer of property against theft, and need only exercise ordinary care (Warehouse Receipt Act, St. 1909, p. 441, § 21).

Under Warehouse Receipt Act, St. 1909, p. 441, § 21, in absence of specific agreement to contrary, bailee or proprietor of general warehouse does not become an insurer of property against theft, but he need only exercise ordinary care for protection of owner's property, such as would be used by owner himself under similar circumstances.

3. Warehousemen ⇨24(4)—What constitutes reasonable care on part of warehouseman against theft depends on circumstances and character of property (Warehouse Receipt Act, St. 1909, p. 441, § 21).

What constitutes reasonable care on part of warehouseman against theft, under Warehouse Receipt Act, St. 1909, p. 441, § 21, depends largely on circumstances of case and upon value and character of property.

4. Warehousemen ⇨34(5)—Owner has burden of proving warehouseman was guilty of negligence, where goods were stolen.

Where goods in warehouse were stolen, owner has burden of proving negligence of warehouseman either in employment of servants or management of business, which negligence proximately contributed to loss of goods.

5. Warehousemen ⇨34(5)—Where owner has proved prima facie case against warehouseman where goods were stolen, burden is not on owner to establish warehouseman failed to operate business according to usual custom of warehousemen.

In action for damages for theft of goods in storage, where owner has proved prima facie case of negligence against warehouseman, burden is not on owner to establish fact that warehouseman failed to operate his business according to usual custom of warehousemen.

6. Warehousemen ⇨24(4)—Warehouseman must exercise ordinary care commensurate with value of goods stored and circumstances to protect property from theft from within and without.

Warehouseman must exercise due diligence and ordinary care commensurate with value of goods stored and circumstances of case to protect bailor's property from damage or theft from both within and without storehouse.

7. Warehousemen ⇨34(7)—In action for damages for theft of goods in storage, evidence of negligence held sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff.

In action for damages for theft of goods in storage, evidence of negligence of warehouseman proximately contributing to theft held sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff.

8. Appeal and error ⇨1001(1)—Where evidence supports jury's verdict regarding warehouseman's negligence, its findings will not be disturbed on appeal.

In actions involving negligence of warehouseman, where there is substantial evidence supporting verdict of jury, its findings will not be disturbed on appeal.

9. Warehousemen ⇨24(7)—Where there was no contract limiting warehouseman's liability regarding boxes, contents of which were made known and were stolen, warehouseman cannot claim benefit of limitation regarding other boxes stored at same time.

Where there was no contract limiting liability of warehouseman with respect to contents of particular boxes stolen, and contents were made known to foreman, who must be presumed to have known that value of each box was greatly in excess of $25, warehouseman cannot claim benefit of limitation of $25 per box under contract covering other goods stored at same time.

10. Warehousemen ⇨24(7)—Warehouseman was not relieved from liability for theft under statute limiting liability to amount warehouseman reasonably supposed was value, where there was no evidence that warehouseman had reason to suppose value was less than amount of verdict (Civ. Code, § 1840).

Warehouseman was not relieved from liability for theft of goods, under Civ. Code, § 1840, providing that liability of depositary for negligence cannot exceed amount which he is informed by depositor or has reason to suppose the thing deposited to be worth, where there was no evidence that warehouseman had reason to suppose value of goods stolen was less than amount of verdict.

11. Trial ⇨260(7)—In action for theft of goods, refusing instruction covered by instructions given held not error.

In action for damages for theft of goods in storage, refusal of instruction that burden was on plaintiff to show defendant failed to exercise due care in choice of employees and that fact that employee might prove to be dishonest was no evidence of negligence on employer's part, held not error, where it was fully covered by other instructions given.

12. Warehousemen ⇨34(10)—Instruction that bailor, receiving warehouse receipt listing delivery of some packages, together with notice of limited liability, acquiesced in limitation of value as to subsequent boxes delivered, held properly refused.

In action for damages for theft of goods in storage, instruction that bailor, receiving warehouse receipt on which was listed delivery of first packages, together with printed notice of $25 limitation of liability attached thereto, acquiesced in such limitation of value as to all subsequent boxes delivered because all goods were stored in same room, held properly refused.

13. Warehousemen ⇨24(7)—Limitation of liability on warehouseman's part depends on contract and intention of parties.

Limitation of liability on part of warehouseman depends entirely on contract, and mutual understanding and intention of parties.

14. Appeal and error ⇨1066—Instruction that warehouseman cannot limit its liability against its own negligence by contract held harmless; there being no evidence of such contract.

In action for damages for theft of goods in storage, where there was no evidence of agreement respecting limitation of liability for loss of goods stolen, instruction that defendant could not limit its liability against its own negligence by contract, and that any contract to that effect would be void, held harmless.

15. Appeal and error ⇨1064(1)—Judgment will not be reversed for giving of harmless instruction.

Judgment will not be reversed for giving of an instruction which does not harm appellant.

16. Appeal and error ⇨1064(1)—Judgment will not be reversed for giving of erroneous instruction on matter regarding which there is no conflict in evidence, where it appears jury was not misled.

Judgment will not be reversed for giving of erroneous instruction upon matter regarding which there is no conflict in evidence, where it clearly appears jury was not misled to thereby render an erroneous verdict.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. S. Crail, Judge.

Action for damages for theft of goods in storage by George H. England against the Lyon Fireproof Storage Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Howard S. Clewett, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ben F. Gray and Geo. S. Hupp, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment and verdict of $4,000 damages on account of the theft of goods while stored in the defendant's warehouse at Los Angeles. The defendant was engaged in warehouse business at that city. The plaintiff and his family were about to leave their residence in Los Angeles to travel abroad, and on December 10, 1920, he packed their household goods in various boxes and containers and hauled them to the warehouse of defendant for storage during their absence. These goods were received by the defendant, and the packages were consecutively numbered from 1 to 57, inclusive, and listed upon duplicate warehouse receipts, one of which was retained by the defendant and the other was delivered to the plaintiff. A few days later other boxes and packages of household goods and effects were also delivered to the defendant. This second consignment included seven cases of whisky, the contents of which were made known to the defendant. These goods were also numbered and listed on the back of defendant's original warehouse receipt, but a duplicate of this last list was not given to the plaintiff. The entire consignment of goods was stored in a separate room in defendant's warehouse, and the door to the room was securely locked. No other person's goods were placed in this same storeroom. Several employees of the defendant held pass-keys to all the rooms of the warehouse, including the room in which plaintiff's goods were stored. When the pass-keys became worn and failed to operate in the locks, new ones were procured and the old ones were carelessly thrown into the wastebaskets or rubbish. Upon other occasions liquor had been stolen from the warehouse, and once another storeroom had been burglarized. The president of the defendant corporation had been warned that a certain one of his employees was a bootlegger, and, while the president admitted that he had secured a detective to investigate the charge, he retained this man in his employ.

Upon plaintiff's return after three years' absence, he called upon the defendant to reclaim his property. On going to his storeroom, the employee who accompanied him fumbled with the lock and complained about the difficulty of opening it. Upon unlocking and entering the storeroom, however, he found three boxes opened, empty, and the contents missing, including a number of valuable pictures, hand-painted china porcelain and Dresden ware, bronze and ivory statues, bric-a-brac, rugs and laces of rare value, together with the entire stock of liquor. The liquor was stipulated to be worth $400. Suit was brought against the defendant for negligently suffering theft of the goods, and a verdict of $4,000 was rendered against the defendant.

The defendant seeks a reversal of the judgment on the ground that (1) the boxes in question were received empty, and asserts that the theft never occurred; (2) the judgment is not supported by the evidence, for the reason that there is a total lack of proof of negligence proximately contributing to the theft; that (3) the liability of the defendant was specifically limited by the provisions of section 1840, Civil Code, and the language of the warehouse receipt to $25 per package; and that (4) the trial court erred in giving and refusing certain instructions.

[1] Defendant's contentions that the boxes in question were empty when they were delivered for storage, and that the theft did not occur, are without merit. The plaintiff himself testified to the packing and specific contents of these boxes, each item of which is mentioned in the complaint. He accompanied the van which hauled them to the warehouse, and went with them to the sixth floor and saw them packed in the storeroom. Defendant's manager accepted and listed on the warehouse receipt each of these boxes. The liquor was first brought to the warehouse wrapped in heavy paper and without the necessary government permit for removal. The defendant refused to accept it for storage in this condition, and it was returned and re-packed in one of the boxes in question, and then brought back to the warehouse with the government permit, which was exhibited to the foreman. These three boxes weighing about 200 pounds each, were then marked by the foreman Nos. 62, 63, and 65, respectively, and were listed by him on the warehouse receipt, in each instance as "box & con." This clearly implies that the boxes, when received by the defendant, were not empty. Upon the contrary, the indorsement on the receipt is an acknowledgment of the existence of "contents" of some sort, in the boxes. Plaintiff was present when the storeroom was first opened at the time when he went to reclaim his property, and immediately observed the broken and empty boxes and commented upon the theft to the employee. This furnishes ample evidence to support the loss of the goods.

[2-5] In the absence of a specific agreement to the contrary, a bailee or proprietor of a general warehouse does not become an insurer of property against theft. All that is required of him is the exercise of ordinary care for the protection of the owner's property such as would be used by the owner himself under similar circumstances. The question as to what constitutes reasonable care on the part of a bailee for hire depends largely upon the circumstances of the particular case and upon the value and character of the property entrusted to him. California Warehouse Receipts Act, Stats. 1909, c. 290, § 21; 25 Cal. Jur. 957, § 15; 27 R. C. L. 992, § 51; 6 C. J. 1121, § 61; 3 R. C. L. 96, § 23; Runkle v. Southern Pac. Milling Co., 184 Cal. 714, 195 P. 398, 16 A. L. R. 275; Webber v. Bank of Tracy, 66 Cal. App. 29, 33, 225 P. 41; Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Pacific Transfer Co., 120 Wash. 665, 208 P. 55, 26 A. L. R. 217, and note. Mere evidence of the theft of goods left in the custody of a bailee, even though they were stolen by his servant or employee, is insufficient to charge him with negligence and liability for their loss, and the burden is upon the owner to supply evidence from which it may be reasonably inferred that the bailee was guilty of negligence either in the employment of his servants or the management of his business, which negligence proxi-mately contributed to the loss of the goods. 27 R. C. L. 993, § 51; 40 Cyc. 472, § 6; Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Pacific Transfer Co., supra, 120 Wash. 665, 208 P. 58, 26 A. L. R. 217; Exporters' & Traders' C. & W. Co. v. Schulze (Tex. Com. App.) 265 S. W. 133; Balice v. Erie Ry. Co., 208 App. Div. 427, 203 N. Y. S. 636. Where, however, the owner of the goods has proved a prima facie case of negligence against the warehouseman, the burden is not on the bailor to establish the fact that the bailee failed to operate his business according to the usual custom of warehousemen. In order that an owner may recover damages from a bailee for hire for the theft of his goods, it is necessary that the bailor should sustain the burden of showing acts, conduct, or omissions on the part of the warehouseman amounting to a lack of ordinary care of the property left in his custody, but this burden does not require the bailor to affirmatively prove the usual custom among warehousemen with relation to the operation of their business, as this is a matter of defense, the burden of which rests upon the bailee. Runkle v. Southern Pac. Milling Co., 184 Cal. 714, 721, 195 P. 398, 16 A. L. R. 275.

In 27 Ruling Case Law, 992, it is said:

"A warehouseman is bound to exercise reasonable care to avoid the theft of the stored goods. * * * Such a company is required to use that degree of care in the safe-keeping of property which is demanded from a bailee for hire in the keeping of valuable property. He must use such care in the protection of the property from thieves without and thieves within, in the selection of its employees, and in the supervision of their conduct."

See Cussen v. Southern California Savings Bank, 133 Cal. 534, 65 P. 1099, 85 Am. St. Rep. 221.

In the case last cited, it was held that a bank was liable to the owner for a theft of valuable articles taken from a safe-deposit box, where it was shown that one of the duplicate keys to the box was left accessible to the employees of the bank, and where the vault had been placed in the custody of a 17-year old lad, employed without previous inquiry as to his honesty, and who was paid but $30 per month for his services, and remained in the service of the bank but three months. In sustaining a verdict of a jury in that case, it was said:

"The jury might well say that proper care was not exercised in the selection" or rejection "of this employee."

In that case Justice Garoutte quoted with approval from the case of Preston v. Prather, 137 U. S. 604, 11 S. Ct. 162, 34 L. Ed. 788, as follows:

"Persons, therefore, depositing valuable articles with them expect that such measures will be taken as will ordinarily secure the property from burglars outside and from thieves within,

* * * and also that they will employ fit men, both in ability and integrity, for the discharge of their duties, and remove those employed whenever found wanting in either of these particulars. An omission of such measures would in most cases be deemed culpable negligence so gross as to amount to a breach of good faith, and constitute a fraud upon the depositor."

[6] It will thus be seen that a bailee for hire, who conducts a regular business of storing goods for hire, must exercise due diligence and ordinary care commensurate with the value of the goods stored and the circumstances of the case, to protect the bailor's property from damage or theft from both without and within the storehouse. He must provide buildings, storage apartments, and facilities for locking the doors and windows adequate to safeguard the goods with ordinary care against the depredations of thieves, and he must exercise due care in the employment and retaining of men about the storehouse, of known honesty and ability.

[7, 8] In the present case it may be inferred from the verdict that the jury of necessity found, not only that the plaintiff's goods were stolen, but that the defendant was guilty of negligence in the hiring and retaining of employees and the conduct of his warehouse business which proximately contributed to the theft. These findings are supported by substantial evidence sufficient to uphold the verdict and the judgment. Among the goods which were stored and stolen were seven cases of liquor. The defendant had previously lost by theft other consignments of liquor. It had been warned that a certain employee who worked about the storehouse was a bootlegger, which charge imputed dishonesty to the employee. The president of the corporation defendant was suspicious of this employee, and hired a detective to watch him, yet he was not discharged. The plaintiff's goods were stored in a separate room apart from all other goods, and the door to this room was securely locked. There was no occasion for any employee to visit this room or to have access thereto during the absence of the plaintiff, yet master keys, which fitted all the rooms of this warehouse, were supplied to several employees. When these keys became worn so that they would operate in the locks with difficulty, new ones were replaced, and the old ones were carelessly thrown into a wastebasket or in the debris, where they were accessible to the employees or loafers about the place. We are of the opinion that this evidence furnishes substantial proof of negligence sufficient to support the judgment. In actions involving the negligence of a warehouseman, the usual rule applies with respect to what constitutes ordinary diligence for the protection of the owner's goods, and, where there is substantial evidence in this regard to support the verdict of a jury, its findings will not be disturbed on appeal. 27 R. C. L. 1004, § 65; 40

Cyc. 482, § 8; Garrette v. Grangers' Business Ass'n, 58 Cal. App. 396, 208 P. 1010.

The case of Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Pacific Transfer Co., supra, is relied upon by appellant in support of its contention that the evidence in the present case does not uphold the findings of negligence on its part. The facts of that case, however, were radically different from those of the present case. The record discloses the fact that plaintiff rented a space in the defendant's warehouse in which to store a large quantity of automobile tires. This space was inclosed with a lattice partition which extended only to within three feet of the ceiling, thus leaving an aperture over which one could easily climb. The plaintiff was furnished keys to this inclosure and to the warehouse, and always had free access to both. It was not assumed by the parties that this inclosure was burglar proof. It was constructed and maintained as a mere convenience by means of which to keep plaintiff's tires separate from other goods which were stored in the warehouse. No goods had been previously stolen from the warehouse, and there was neither suspicion on the part of the defendant nor warning received regarding the dishonesty of its employees. Two of the defendant's servants did, however, steal the tires. The evidence was deemed to be insufficient to uphold a finding of negligence on the part of the defendant. The foregoing recital of facts readily distinguishes that case from the present one without the necessity of comment. It is therefore not authority for the reversal of this case.

[9, 10] The appellant claims that the damages for loss of the goods in question was limited by contract to the sum of $25 per package. It is true that when the first 57 packages were received and listed a duplicate warehouse receipt signed by respondent was given to him, and contained the following provision:

"It is agreed that said goods shall be stored at owner's risk of damage by moth, vermin, rust, fire, heat, leakage or injury to fragile articles that are not packed. * * * The responsibility of this warehouse for any piece or package, or its contents, is limited to the sum of $25, unless the value thereof is made known at the time of the storing, and receipted for in the schedule, and an additional charge made for the higher valuation. * * *"

This provision was not called to the respondent's attention, and, in listing the packages on the receipt, the foreman of appellant made no inquiry regarding the valuation of the contents of the boxes. There is no affirmative evidence in the record showing that a contract or duplicate receipt similar to the one which was issued affecting the first 57 packages was ever signed by or delivered to the respondent. No such contract appears to have been executed regarding appellant's limitation of liability for loss of the contents of boxes numbered 62, 63 and 65, which were involved in this action. It does, however, appear that, when the packages which were delivered by respondent subsequent to those which were numbered from 1 to 57, inclusive, the foreman listed the boxes and packages on the back of the original receipt held by appellant, but delivered no copy thereof to the respondent. Moreover, it appears that the nature of the contents of these boxes in question was made known to the foreman, although he neither asked for the value thereof nor indorsed it upon his receipt. The respondent testified:

"Q. You didn't tell anybody what was in those boxes, did you? A. It wasn't necessary; they knew. * * * The foreman and the men that were—"

The court, interrupting, said:

"He asked you a question. * * * A. Yes; I did (tell him the nature of the contents). * * * I judged at the time, and have always been under the impression that he (the man who received the goods) was the foreman; he seemed to have authority; he was around with the men and superintended the unloading of the goods. I took it for granted he was the foreman."

Regarding the appellant's failure to supply respondent with a receipt for the boxes in question, or any package subsequent to that which was numbered 57, the following colloquy occurred at the trial:

Mr. Clewett, attorney for appellant, said: "(All the boxes) numbered up to 57, are on the original receipt."

Mr. Hupp, attorney for respondent, replied: "There is no question about those articles. The only question, as I understand it, is as to articles 62, 63, and 65." Mr. Clewett responded: "Yes; the three boxes which Mr. England has testified were robbed, are the articles 62, 63, and 65 on this receipt, which the testimony shows came in later, and, of course, did not appear on the receipt when issued to him."

When the owner of goods which are stored with a warehouseman signs a receipt, which is not in conflict with the provisions of the statute, but which contains limitations as to the liability of the bailee, as to the value of the property, or otherwise, the owner ordinarily becomes bound thereby. 25 Cal. Jur. 962, § 18; 27 R. C. L. 997, § 57; Taussig v. Bode, 134 Cal. 260, 66 P. 259, 54 L. R. A. 774, 86 Am. St. Rep. 250; McMullin v. Lyon Fireproof Storage Co., 74 Cal. App. 87, 95, 239 P. 422; Cunningham v. International Committee of Y. M. C. A., 51 Cal. App. 487, 197 P. 140; Wilson v. Transfer & Storage Co., 201 Cal. 701, 258 P. 596. But the contract of a bailee for hire, which seeks to exempt him from liability resulting from his own negligence, or which seeks unfairly or in bad faith to limit the amount of his liability, will be cautiously scrutinized, and such provisions will not be upheld unless they clearly appear to conform to the intention of the contracting parties. 27 R. C. L. 998, § 57. The contract of a bailee which purports to exempt him from liability for loss or damage resulting from specified causes will not relieve him from the necessity of exercising ordinary care for the protection of the property entrusted to him. 27 R. C. L. 998, § 57; Langford v. Nevin (Tex. Com. App.) 298 S. W. 536. In the present case, since there was no contract limiting the liability of the appellant with respect to the contents of the particular three boxes in question, and since the contents of these boxes was made known to its foreman, who made no inquiry as to their actual value, but who must be presumed to have known from the character of the contents that the value of each box was greatly in excess of $25, the appellant is not entitled to claim the benefit of this limitation of value. Nor is the appellant relieved from liability pursuant to section 1840, Civil Code, which declares:

"The liability of a depositary for negligence cannot exceed the amount which he is informed by the depositor, or has reason to suppose, the thing deposited to be worth."

Knowing the character of the contents of these boxes in question, the appellant had reason to suppose they were worth vastly more than $25 per box. It was stipulated that the liquor alone was worth $400. There is no evidence to indicate that appellant had reason to suppose the value of the contents of these boxes was worth less than the amount of the verdict.

[11] Finally, the appellant assigns as error the giving and refusing of certain instructions by the court. Defendant's instruction No. 17, which was refused, charged the jury that:

"* * * An employer is presumed to have exercised due care in the choice of his employees, and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that the defendant failed to exercise such care, and the mere fact that an employee may prove to be dishonest is no evidence of negligence on the part of the employer, or of failure to exercise due care in the choice of such employee."

The refusal of this instruction was not error, since it was fully covered by other instructions which were given. The court charged the jury that a bailee for hire was not an insurer of the safety of property entrusted to him, but was required to use only ordinary care to protect it from damage or loss such as a prudent man would exercise for the preservation of his own property. And the jury was further instructed:

That the defendant "was required to use such (ordinary) care in the selection of its employees and in the supervision of their conduct after they were employed."

And further that, "if it is established that the property was stolen * * * by the servants of the bailee, * * * it is then incumbent upon the bailor to introduce evidence from which the jury might legitimately infer that the loss or theft was due to lack of ordinary care on the part of the bailee."

And also that "the burden * * * is on the plaintiff to show that the defendant failed to exercise due care in the choice of its employees, and the mere fact that an employee may prove to be dishonest, is no evidence of neglect on the part of the employer, or of failure to exercise due care in the choice of such employee."

These and other instructions along this line, fully advised the jury that the burden was upon the plaintiff to prove the negligence of the defendant in the employment of dishonest servants, before it could be held liable on that score.

[12, 13] The court also refused to give defendant's instructions numbered 2D, 13, 13A, and 15, to the effect that, by delivering to respondent the duplicate warehouse receipt upon which was listed the first delivery of packages numbered from 1 to 57, inclusive, together with the printed notice of a $25 limitation of liability thereto attached, he acquiesced in such limitation of value as to all subsequent boxes delivered, for the reason that all the goods were stored in the same room, and the plaintiff failed to disclose to the defendant the actual value of the property. The refusal to so instruct the jury was not error, since there was no evidence in the record that such limitation of value applied to the boxes and packages subsequently delivered, among which were the three involved in this action. The limitation of liability on the part of a bailee depends entirely upon contract, and the mutual understanding and intention of the parties. It would be a violent presumption which would limit an owner of three boxes of valuable art goods worth $4,000, to a recovery of $75 for their theft, through the negligence of a bailee, merely because a warehouse receipt was issued for a previous consignment of goods containing a stereotype limitation, even though all the goods were stored in the same room. This is particularly true when no receipt is given for the subsequent consignment, and the character of the goods is made known to the bailee, who lists them and makes no inquiry regarding their actual value. The facts of the present case completely refute the inference that there was an agreed limitation of valuation of the contents of the three boxes in question.

[14-16] The record is absolutely devoid of evidence indicating that either an oral or a written agreement existed between the parties respecting a limitation of liability for the loss of the contents of the three boxes numbered 62, 63, and 65. Therefore there was no harm in the court instructing the jury, as it did, that:

"The defendant cannot limit its liability against its own negligence by contract, and any contract to that effect would be void."

A judgment will not be reversed for the giving of an instruction which does not harm the appellant, or for the giving of an erroneous instruction upon a matter regarding which there is no conflict in the evidence, where it clearly appears that the jury was not misled to thereby render an erroneous verdict. 2 Cal. Jur. 1026, § 611; Estate of Gharky, 57 Cal. 274. Moreover, the jury was fully, fairly, and correctly instructed regarding the measure of damages for the loss of goods resulting from the negligence of a bailee, as follows:

"It is an express provision of the law that the liability of a depositary for negligence cannot exceed the amount which he is informed by the depositor, or has reason to suppose the thing deposited to be worth." Section 1840, Civil Code.

And, "if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff did not inform the defendant of the value of the contents of the boxes in question, its liability cannot exceed the amount which it had reason to suppose the contents of the box to be worth."

And also that, "if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff did inform the defendant that said boxes contained whisky, but did not inform the defendant that they contained any other valuable articles, and that the defendant did not have reason to suppose that they contained other valuable articles, then, even if you find the defendant was negligent, nevertheless, its liability cannot exceed the value of the whisky which was stipulated to be $400."

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

92 Cal. App. 778

PEOPLE v. STANLEY et al. (Cr. 1648.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. June 27, 1928.

1. Criminal law ⇨780(3)—Instruction submitting question of "accomplice" to jury held not erroneous where facts were disputed (Pen. Code, § 1111).

Instruction that accomplice is one liable to prosecution for identical offense charged against defendants and whether one is accomplice is for jury was not erroneous because court did not instruct jury that witness testifying at trial, charged by information with same offense for which defendants were on trial, was accomplice as matter of law, since facts were disputed and since under Pen. Code, § 1111, except where rule is altered by special statute, "accomplice" is one who has been connected in commission of crime whether directly or by aiding and abetting in its commission or advising and encouraging its commission and is liable to prosecution for identical offense charged against defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accomplice.]

2. Automobiles ⇨356—Larceny ⇨68(2)—Felony intent held for jury where defendants charged with grand theft and violation of act abandoned automobile (Vehicle Act, § 146).

Felony intent of defendants charged with grand theft and violation of Vehicle Act, § 146 (Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 5128) in taking automobile held for jury, where car was stripped of tires and abandoned.

3. Larceny ⇨79—Evidence held to warrant instruction on grand theft.

Instruction defining grand theft and charging jury that if they found from evidence that defendants did take, steal, or drive away automobile with a criminal intent, they were guilty of grand theft, held warranted by evidence.

4. Criminal law ⇨1172(8)—Defendants convicted of grand theft and violation of act could not complain of instruction defining offense of receiving stolen property where they were not affected (Vehicle Act, § 146).

Defendants convicted of grand theft and violation of Vehicle Act, § 146 (Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 5128) could not complain of instruction defining offense of receiving stolen property, where they were not convicted of offense and defendant convicted was released on habeas corpus.

5. Larceny ⇨79—Failure to instruct that defendants convicted of grand theft and violation of act could only be convicted of petty larceny because value of stolen car was not shown held not error (Vehicle Act, § 146; Pen. Code, §§ 484, 487, subds. 1, 2, 3, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046).

Where defendants, convicted of grand theft and violation of Vehicle Act, § 146 (Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 5128) assigned as ground for reversal failure to instruct jury that they could only be convicted of petty larceny because there was no testimony relating to value of stolen car, held that under Pen. Code, § 487, subd. 3, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, providing grand theft is committed when property taken is automobile, assignment was not ground for reversal, section 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, providing rule of evidence for determining value under section 487, subd. 1, not operating as limitation on subdivisions 2 and 3.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Carl J. Stanley was convicted of receiving stolen property, and Kenneth George and Edward McSorley were convicted of grand theft and of violation of California Vehicle Act, § 146. Defendant first named was discharged on habeas corpus. The last two defendants named appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Springfield, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn and John D. Richer, Deputies Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendants Kenneth George, Edward McSorley, and Carl J. Stanley were jointly charged by an information, containing two counts, with grand theft and also with the offense of violating section 146 of the California Vehicle Act, which section provides that:

"Any person who shall drive a vehicle not his own, without the consent of the owner thereof and in the absence of the owner, and with intent to either permanently or temporarily deprive the owner thereof of his title to or possession of such vehicle, whether with or without intent to steal the same, shall be deemed guilty of a felony. * * *" Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, p. 1896.

The jury returned a verdict of guilty of both offenses against the defendants Kenneth George and Edward McSorley and guilty of the offense of receiving stolen property against the defendant Stanley. The defendant Stanley was subsequently discharged on a writ of habeas corpus (see 265 P. 561), and the other defendants prosecute this appeal from the judgment pronounced upon the verdict and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

[1] The appellants' complaint is limited to three instructions which they say were improperly given and the failure of the trial judge to give an instruction. The first instruction given reads as follows:

"An accomplice is one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendants on trial, and whether or not one is an accomplice as defined in these instructions is for the jury to determine from all the testimony and circumstances in proof in the case."

The basis of appellants' objection to this instruction is that Louis Barone, a witness who testified at the trial, was, at the very time at which the testimony was given, charged by information with the same offense for which appellants were on trial, and they argue therefrom that it was the duty of the court to instruct and inform the jury that Barone was, as a matter of law, an accomplice. Counsel for appellants rely upon People v. Allison, 200 Cal. 404, 253 P. 318, as authority for their position, but that case only declares that one who has been convicted of "the identical offense charged against the defendant * * *" is an accomplice of the defendant, as a matter of law. The next citation of appellants, People v. Truax, 30 Cal. App. 471, 158 P. 510, is clearly of no assistance to appellants, for it was there held that:

"It is for the jury to determine from the evidence whether as a matter of fact the witness is an accomplice, if the facts are disputed. It is only where, the acts and conduct of a witness being admitted, they necessarily establish the witness' participation in the guilty act, or guilty relation thereto, that the court should determine and instruct the jury as a matter of law that the witness is to be regarded as an accomplice. People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 436, 119 P. 901, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704."

In the present action the facts involving the guilt of Barone were disputed. In the case of People v. Swoape, 75 Cal. App. 404, 242 P. 1067, also relied upon by appellants, objections were sustained to a question asked on cross-examination whether the witness had been charged by information with the same crime, and also to a question whether he had been arrested for the same offense. The court was there of the opinion that the trial court had fallen into error, particularly if the witness was in fact an accomplice, but held the error to be without prejudice, saying:

"The defendants were therefore entitled to show by this witness just what was his position with reference to the situation then before the court. That right having been denied the defendants, it follows that in that regard the defendants were injured by the action of the court, were it not for the further fact that within the testimony of the same witness his complicity appears in that it was shown that he did take part in the commission of the crime. The error of the court, therefore, became immaterial. * * *"

It is apparent that appellants can find no consolation in this case and that it utterly fails to support their assertion. In fact, if their assertion be true that one who is charged by information or indictment with the same offense as that for which another is on trial, the former is, as a matter of law, an accomplice of the latter, how could it be said that testimony showing his complicity in the matter would cure the error of rejecting testimony to establish that fact, unless the testimony was of such conclusive character as to establish that he was an accomplice as a matter of law? This assertion is not made in the text of the opinion, and, therefore instead of being authority for appellants' position, it may be taken as indicating the contrary.

The case of People v. Howell, 69 Cal. App. 239, 230 P. 991, while not coinciding with the facts of the present situation, more nearly approaches the instant problem. It was there argued that because of the presence of the witness at the scene of the crime and other circumstances indicating "probable cause" that he was liable to prosecution for the same offense and therefore an accomplice within the meaning of section 1111 of the Penal Code, which defines an accomplice as "one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial. * * *" The court answers this contention in the following language:

"Any person, however innocent, is 'liable to prosecution' in the broad sense of the phrase. The determination of the question of his being in law an accomplice with one who is charged with crime must depend upon whether or not he may be properly 'liable to prosecution'; otherwise, every innocent person might be an 'accomplice' of every other person who committed a criminal offense."

We are inclined to agree with these words, but at the same time we think it necessary to define their meaning. If it be said that the phrase "properly 'liable to prosecution'" contemplates one a magistrate or grand jury has said is "properly 'liable to prosecution,'" then every person prosecuted by information or indictment for the identical offense for which the defendant is on trial is an accomplice even if the facts involving his guilt are disputed, and even regardless of his innocence. This would indeed be a strange anomaly. It would mean that one wholly innocent and free from stain might be an accomplice, in the eyes of the law, of the most degraded felon. Such was never the intent of the amendment of 1915 to section 1111 of the Penal Code. The rule of law with respect to the testimony of accomplices is akin to the old rule of common law which sealed the lips of the convicted felon, and a modification of the maxim of the Roman law that nemo allegans turpitudinem suam est audiendus. Under the common-law doctrine accomplices included "all particeps criminis, whether they are considered, in strict legal propriety, as principals in the first or second degree, or merely as accessories before or after the fact." In re Rowe (C. C. A.) 77 F. 161. And so in California it is said:

"Manifestly, the single, sole determinative consideration is the part which the witness has borne in the crime perpetrated. If the witness has committed the crime, if he has knowingly aided and abetted in its commission, or if he has advised and encouraged its commission, the existence of any one of these facts admitted or established stamps his status as that of an accomplice. This is the precise language of the law, and this, and this alone, is the governing principle of the law."

And, again, in the same case:

"One is an accomplice, we repeat, because of what he has done and not because of the form of punishment which the law may mete out for his acts. Wherever the law has denounced as a separate crime the particular act of participation by an accessory or accomplice, the sole logical and legal effect is not to destroy the relationship of accomplice, but merely to effect a modification of section 31 of the Penal Code, as though by an express proviso it should read, 'all persons concerned in the commission of a crime,' etc., 'are principals in any crime so committed, provided that they shall not be indicted as principals in any case where the law has denounced their participation as a separate crime and declared that they shall be prosecuted exclusively for such separate crime.' But this, as we have said, does not and cannot, by any species of legal hermeneutics or legerdemain, relieve an accomplice of his character of accomplice. It is merely prescribing a separate punishment for the particular act of one who is still an accomplice." People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 119 P. 901, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704.

Such was the state of the law prior to the amendment of 1915 to section 1111 of the Penal Code, and regardless of our opinion of the wisdom of the policy the legislative intent is manifest to again somewhat modify the rule with respect to accomplices so that we may now say that except in those instances where the rule is altered by special statute, an accomplice is one who has been concerned in the commission of a crime, whether he has directly committed the act or aided and abetted in its commission or advised and encouraged its commission and is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant. As thus construed it does no violence to our sense of justice by saying that an innocent man may as a matter of law be the accomplice of a debased felon and is entirely consistent with those authorities which hold that persons are not accomplices, who, although present for one reason or another, are not guilty of criminal participation. Under this view it is obvious that the witness Barone was not an accomplice, as a matter of law, and that this instruction was not erroneous for that reason.

[2, 3] The next instruction of which complaint is made is as follows:

"Theft, in so far as it applies to this case, is the felonious stealing, taking, carrying, riding or driving away the personal property of another:

"When the property taken is an automobile, it is grand theft.

"If you find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants or any of them on or about the date charged did take, steal and drive away an automobile, as charged in count I of the information or knowingly and with criminal intent, aided, encouraged or instigated the driving away of said automobile, then you are instructed to find such defendant guilty as charged in said count I."

The objection to this instruction is that "there was no evidence to justify such an instruction," because after the automobile was stripped of its tires and "had been driven some four or five blocks from the home of defendant Stanley," it was abandoned. The evidence discloses that a Chevrolet car belonging to E. R. Plummer was taken from Seventh and Los Angeles streets in Los Angeles on November 20th. At the time the automobile was taken it was equipped with four new tires and three used tires on the rack. On November 21st, when it was found a few blocks from Stanley's home, its tires had been removed. One of the new tires was found on Stanley's Ford and the three others under his house. The automobile was driven to Stanley's home by the defendants and the change of tires was there made. When they attempted to start the Chevrolet, they called the witness Louis Barone and asked him to help push the car, stating that they had a loose connection. This witness testified with regard to this incident:

"And then he said, 'Come on, push it,' because everything was done in a rush, and he was kind of nervous there, and I looked down and seen one tire off. I give it a push, and when I done that it run over the street a ways and all four of them were off."

The four referred to included the two appellants. Under these circumstances the jury were fully justified in believing that it was the intention of the appellants to steal the automobile and that on account of ignition trouble and the necessity for haste they determined to abandon it rather than attempt repairs, with its attendant delay. It is true that the appellants gave a different version of the affair, but it was for the jury to say under the conflict thus produced and all of the circumstances whether the automobile was taken by them with felonious intent. There being sufficient evidence to warrant this deduction, the instruction was properly given.

[4] The third instruction which is made the subject of attack defines the offense of receiving stolen property. Undoubtedly this was error for the reason that it is not an offense included within the offense of theft. However, these appellants may not be heard to complain for the reason that neither of them was affected thereby. It is difficult to conceive of any manner in which they might have been prejudiced, and none is suggested. The defendant Stanley, who was convicted of that offense, as has already been suggested, was released on habeas corpus. Ex parte Stanley (Cal. App.) 265 P. 561.

[5] The fourth and last reason assigned for reversal is the court's failure to instruct the jury that the appellants could only be convicted of petty larceny "for the reason that no testimony relating to the value of the alleged stolen Chevrolet was introduced by the prosecution." Appellants do not say that they requested such an instruction, and a failure on their part to make such request would probably preclude them from raising the question. However, a plain and inescapable answer is found in section 487 of the Penal Code (as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046), the pertinent portion of which reads as follows:

"Grand theft is theft committed in either of the following cases: (1) * * * (2) * * * (3) When the property taken is an automobile," etc., * * *.

It has already been shown that there was evidence from which the jury might have inferred that defendants had stolen the automobile and not merely the tires. Because section 484 of the Penal Code (as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046), among other things, provides a rule of evidence for the determination of value when necessary under subdivision 1 of section 487, it cannot possibly be argued that it operates as a limitation upon the plain and unambiguous language of subdivisions 2 and 3 thereof.

Judgments and order affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

93 Cal. App. 97

STANLEY et al. v. WESTOVER.*
(Civ. 3498.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 6, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 4, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 4, 1928.

1. Execution $\S$ 118—Levy of execution, made after judgment debtor's death and sale thereunder, were void (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 686, 1505).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 686, 1505, levy of execution, made after judgment debtor's death, was void, and sale under such execution was likewise void.

2. Quieting title $\S$ 20, 23—To authorize action to quiet title under McEnerney Act, public records must be lost or destroyed, and plaintiff must be in actual peaceable possession (McEnerney Act).

To authorize action to quiet title under McEnerney Act June 16, 1906 (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78), the public records of the county must be lost or destroyed in whole or in part by flood, fire, or earthquake, and plaintiff must at the time of bringing action be in actual and peaceable possession, and these requirements are jurisdictional, and, unless each exists when action is commenced, there is no right to bring action.

3. Action $\S$ 65—Plaintiff's right of action must exist when he commences action.

Plaintiff's right of action must exist when he commences his action, for rights of parties are to be judged by conditions existing at that time.

4. Judgment $\S$ 443(1)—Fraud, to constitute equitable ground to vacate judgment, valid on face, must be extrinsic or collateral.

In action in equity to vacate a judgment, valid on its face, on the ground of fraud, such fraud, to constitute a ground for equitable relief, must be extrinsic or collateral to the question examined or determined.

5. Quieting title $\S$ 52—Judgment quieting title of purchaser at execution sale held void on its face (McEnerney Act, $\S$ 4).

Judgment quieting title of purchaser at execution sale under McEnerney Act June 16, 1906 (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78), providing for quieting title to realty in case of loss or destruction of public records, held void on its face because particular description of realty was not set forth in complaint, summons, or lis pendens because plaintiff's affidavit showing character of his title and possession was insufficient, and because of insufficient publication under section 4.

6. Quieting title $\S$ 35(2)—Affidavit of purchaser at execution sale seeking to quiet title, that he could not state dates and parties from whom he obtained realty because records were destroyed, held insufficient (McEnerney Act).

In action to quiet title under McEnerney Act June 16, 1906 (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78), providing for quieting title to realty in case of loss or destruction of public records, mere statement in affidavit of purchaser at execution sale, that reason affiant could not state dates and parties from whom he obtained realty was because all deeds and records in his possession were destroyed by fire on April 19, 1906, held not sufficiently to show reason for such disability.

7. Quieting title $\S$ 19—Statute providing for quieting title in case of loss or destruction of public records must be substantially complied with (McEnerney Act, $\S$ 4).

Because McEnerney Act June 16, 1906 (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78), providing for establishing and quieting title to realty in case of loss or destruction of public records, is remedial and should be liberally construed to effect its purposes, does not dispense with necessity of substantially complying with its requirements.

8. Adverse possession $\S$ 88—Quieting title $\S$ 29—Claim of title under void execution deed did not ripen into valid title because judgment debtors took no steps to remove cloud of which they had notice.

Void sheriff's deed to purchaser at execution sale, who was never in possession of realty, and only paid taxes thereon, could not ripen into title because of failure of judgment debtors to take any steps to remove cloud on their title created by the void deed, though they had notice thereof.

9. Adverse possession ⚡13—To constitute "adverse possession," adverse claimant must be in actual, continuous possession for five years.

To constitute "adverse possession," adverse claimant must be in actual possession of the realty for continuous period of five years.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Adverse Possession.]

10. Execution ⚡255—Execution sale will not be set aside without refunding purchase money applied to debtor's benefit.

Under the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity, execution sale will not be set aside at the instance of judgment debtor without refunding to purchaser the purchase money which has been applied to judgment debtor's benefit.

11. Executors and administrators ⚡231—Judgment creditor's failure to present claim against deceased judgment debtor's estate did not extinguish debt.

Judgment creditor's failure to present his claim against estate of deceased judgment debtor did not operate as an extinguishment of the debt.

12. Money paid ⚡1—Voluntary payment of another's debt is not recoverable, in absence of promise of repayment.

The general rule is that there can be no recovery for the voluntary payment of the debt of a third person without request and with no promise of repayment by person whose debt is paid.

13. Execution ⚡255—Purchaser at execution sale held not entitled to reimbursement for taxes and assessments paid by him as condition precedent to setting aside such sale.

Persons claiming under judgment debtor were not required, as condition precedent to setting aside judicial sale under void execution, to reimburse purchaser at such sale for taxes and assessments against realty paid by him.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Samuel B. Stanley and another, executors of the last will and testament of Fanny L. Stanley, deceased, and others, against Delbert Westover, sometimes known as D. L. Westover. From the judgment, both parties appeal. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed, with directions.

Grant & Zimdars and William H. Bryan, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. S. Hutchinson and Walter Slack, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. This action was brought by plaintiffs, respondents appellants, hereinafter referred to as the Stanleys, against the defendant, appellant respondent, hereinafter referred to as Westover, to set aside a judgment rendered by the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, on October, 1907, wherein D. L. Westover was plaintiff and all persons, etc., were defendants, numbered 2490, and adjudging the Stanleys to be the owners of the real property described in the complaint filed in this action.

Judgment in this action went for the Stanleys, that they were the owners of the said real property, subject to a lien thereon in favor of Westover for taxes paid by Westover that were assessed against the land in controversy during the years 1919 to 1924, inclusive, amounting to some $1,832.39, and the sum of $165 paid by stipulation, without interest, and the further sum of $3,424.85 paid by Westover for taxes, sewer assessments, and Twin Peak tunnel assessments on said real property up to May 14, 1917.

The Stanleys appeal from that portion of the judgment which awards Westover the $3,424.85, and Westover appeals from that portion of the judgment that decrees title in said real property to be in the Stanleys and from that portion of the judgment that fails to allow him additional amounts for taxes, assessments paid out by him on said real property, and $853.01 paid on execution sale in case of Mason v. Stanley.

It is conceded:

That Fanny L. Stanley was the owner of the real property described in the complaint on February 1, 1897. That she died on July 8, 1898, leaving a will by which she devised the said real property to her two sons, Samuel B. Stanley and Joseph P. Stanley, and her daughter, Fanny Stanley Andreen, and appointed her said two sons her executors. That at the time of her death she resided in the city of San Francisco, and the said will was, during the year 1898, duly probated in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco and said sons were appointed executors of said estate, and that said estate is still pending in said court.

[1] On March 19, 1897, one F. M. Mason recovered judgment in the superior court of Mendocino county, Cal., against the said Fanny L. Stanley for the sum of $653.22, and thereafter, on April 8, 1897, duly filed a transcript thereof in the office of the county recorder of said city and county of San Francisco.

On May 19, 1898, said Mason assigned the said judgment to the Sonoma Lumber Company in partial satisfaction of a debt owing by Mason to said company; Westover at that time being a large stockholder of said company and the general manager thereof.

On May 21, 1898, said Westover had an execution issued on said judgment, which was levied upon said real property on June 20, 1898. That said real property was noticed for sale and was sold under said execution on July 20, 1898, and at said sale Westover purchased same, but, payment of purchase money not having been made, the said execution was returned unsatisfied.

Another execution was issued on said judgment on March 11, 1899, was levied upon said real property on March 14, 1899, and advertised for sale for April 7, 1899, and at that time was sold to Westover for the sum of $853.01, and thereafter, on September 19, 1900, a deed for said property was duly executed by the sheriff under said execution sale to Westover, who held it as trustee for said Sonoma Lumber Company. That in 1902 the said Sonoma Lumber Company was discontinued and the claim of said company to said real property was distributed to said Westover.

It is manifest that the sale under this levy of the execution was wholly void and conveyed no title, for the reason that Fanny L. Stanley had died on July 8, 1898, and the levy of the execution under which the sale was made was after her death, to wit, on March 14, 1899, and the deed executed to Westover by the sheriff under said execution was a nullity. Code Civ. Proc. § 686; Code Civ. Proc. § 1505; Smith, Adm'r, etc., v. Reed, 52 Cal. 345.

On July 13, 1907, Westover commenced an action in the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco, being No. 2490, in which action said Westover was plaintiff and all persons claiming any interest in or lien upon the property described in the complaint, or any part thereof, were defendants, and he therein prayed that he be declared the owner of the eleven twenty-fourths of the real property therein set forth.

This action purported to be instituted under the provisions of "An act to provide for the establishment and quieting title to real property in case of loss or destruction of public records," approved June 16, 1906, and being commonly known as the McEnerney Act. St. 1906 (Ex. Sess.) p. 78. It is this judgment that plaintiffs seek to set aside and cancel in this action.

Section 1 of said act provides that, whenever the records in the office of the county recorder of any county shall be lost or destroyed in whole or in any material part by flood, fire, or earthquake, any person who claims an estate of inheritance, or for life in, and who is, by himself or his tenant, or other person, in the actual and peaceable possession of any real property in such county may bring and maintain an action in rem against the whole world in the superior court for the county in which such real property is situate to establish his title to such property and determine all adverse claims.

Section 2 of said act provided that the action shall be commenced by the filing of a verified complaint, in which the party so commencing shall be named as plaintiff and the defendants shall be described as all persons claiming an interest in or lien upon the real property therein described, or any part thereof, and shall contain a statement of the facts enumerated in section 1 of the act, a particular description of the real property, and a specification of the estate, title, or interest of the plaintiff therein.

In his complaint filed in that action, Westover stated that he claimed an estate in fee simple absolute, and by himself was in actual and peaceable possession of the said real property, except that in his complaint it was described as eleven twenty-fourths of a strip of land described by metes and bounds and designated as being a portion of block No. 124, block 125, and block 126 of Sunset district.

Section 3 of said act provides that, upon the filing of the complaint a summons must issue under the seal of the court, and, among other things, must set forth a particular description of the property.

Section 4 provides that the summons shall be published in a newspaper of general circulation published in the county in which the action is brought at least once a week for a period of two months, and that to each publication thereof there shall be appended a memorandum in substance as follows:

"The first publication of this summons was made in (here insert name) newspaper on the — day of —, A. D. (inserting the date)."

Section 5 of said act provides that at the time of filing his complaint the plaintiff shall file with the same his affidavit fully and explicitly setting forth and showing the character of his estate, right, title, interest, or claim in, and possession of, the property, during what period the same has existed and from whom obtained; that he does not know and has never been informed of any other person who claims or may claim any interest in or lien upon the property, or any part thereof, adversely to him, or, if he does know, or has been informed of any such person, then the name and address of such person.

The court found:

That the evidence supports the findings that at the time Westover began said action he had no right, title, or interest of any kind in the real property in controversy in this action; that at the time he commenced said action he was not in the possession of the real property in controversy in this action, either actual or otherwise, and had never been in such possession; that prior to the commencement of this action he did know that others claimed an interest in the said real property, but at time of filing said action had forgotten same.

That prior to 1898 Joseph P. Stanley held a power of attorney from his mother, Fanny L. Stanley, and by virtue of said power of attorney had conveyed to Joseph Hutchinson as security for loans made to Fanny L. Stanley various properties of Fanny L. Stanley, including the real property which is the subject of this action in the instant case. Joseph Hutchinson was an attorney at law, and acted as attorney for the said executors of the estate of Fanny L. Stanley.

That, at the time of the death of Fanny L. Stanley, Westover knew that the title to said real property stood in the name of Joseph Hutchinson, and during all other times until the death of Joseph Hutchinson, which occurred in 1910, knew that it so stood.

That some time between the years 1900 and 1903 Westover called on Joseph Hutchinson with reference to the payment of taxes assessed against the said real property, claiming that Hutchinson should pay the same, and was advised by Hutchinson that he was not responsible for the taxes, and shortly thereafter Westover called on Hutchinson again and sought to persuade him to pay them. And in the year 1906 or the early part of 1907 Westover called on Hutchinson at his office regarding the redeeming of said real estate from a sale of said real estate which had been made for the taxes of 1904. Joseph Hutchinson died in 1910, and at the time of his death had no interest in said real property.

That Westover knew prior to the sale under the first execution issued in the case of Mason against Fanny L. Stanley that the interest of said Fanny stood in the name of Hutchinson, and was informed and had knowledge as early as 1902 of the claim of the Stanleys in and to said real property, and knew that Fanny L. Stanley died in 1898. The court also found that neither Westover or the Sonoma Lumber Company ever filed any claim against the estate of Fanny L. Stanley.

The records of the deed by which Westover acquired his claim to said real property had not been destroyed by the fire of April 18, 1906. That said records were in the office of the county recorder of said city and county of San Francisco, and were at all times accessible to the public, and maintained as public records in the office of said recorder, and that Westover would have been able to state the dates and times and names of the parties who had deeded said property to him had he examined said records.

The court further found that Westover had forgotten that Hutchinson had any interest in said real property, and that he did not have in mind the fact of the death of Fanny L. Stanley and the claims of plaintiffs herein to said real property, and in making the aforesaid affidavit did not have the conscious intention of making any false statement in regard to said death and the said claims of the Stanleys.

It would appear from this last finding of the court in the instant case that, at the time Westover commenced his action 2490 by filing his complaint and making the affidavit, his mind was in that convenient state where it could only contain one conscious train of thought, the self-centered thought that he would procure a decree to said real property under the McEnerney Act. And so obsessed was he with this single train of thought he forgot to examine the records to see whether or not the records of his claim had been destroyed. He forgot that he was not then, nor ever had been, in the possession of said real property, actual or otherwise, and forgot that Hutchinson or the Stanleys ever had any claim to said real property.

On October 21, 1906, said action 2490 came on for hearing before the court, and Westover was sworn and testified that there were no improvements on said real property and that it was not fenced. Westover's attorney then asked permission of the court to have the hearing continued in order that Westover might put a fence around the said property, and said permission was granted, and the hearing of said case was continued until such time as Westover could build said fence. Thereafter on October 29, 1906, Westover again appeared in court and testified that he had inclosed said real property with a fence, and thereupon judgment was rendered in his favor.

We have here Westover's own sworn statement that when he filed his complaint and commenced his action No. 2490 he was not in possession of said real property, actual or otherwise, and that he had no possession of any kind of said real property until about 2½ months after he had filed his complaint in said action.

In the case of Lofstad v. Murasky, 152 Cal. at page 70, 91 P. 1011, the court, after commenting upon what was meant by the words "actual possession" as used in the McEnerney Act, said, "And upon the hearing before the court for the purpose of obtaining the decree authorized under the act he [plaintiff] must prove actual possession of the property at the time of filing his complaint * * * as it is defined by these authorities."

[2] To authorize the bringing of an action under the McEnerney Act, the public records of the county must be lost, or destroyed in whole or in part by flood, fire, or earthquake, and the party bringing the action must, at the time of bringing the action be in the actual and peaceable possession of the real property. These requirements are jurisdictional, and, unless each of them exists at the time the action is commenced, no right arises to bring an action under this act.

[3] It is a settled rule that a plaintiff's right of action must exist when he commences his action, for the rights of the parties are to be judged by the conditions existing at the time the action was begun. Cal. Jur. vol. 1, p. 377; Westerfeld v. New York Life Ins. Co., 129 Cal. 84, 58 P. 92, 61 P. 667.

At the hearing of the said case No. 2490 on October 21, 1906, when it appeared by the testimony of Westover that, when he commenced his said action against all persons, etc., he was not in the actual possession of the real property, described in his complaint, the court should have dismissed the said case for want of jurisdiction.

[4] However, it is the well-settled rule in this state that, in an action in equity brought for the purpose of vacating a judgment, valid on its face, on the ground of fraud, such fraud, to constitute a ground for equitable relief, must be extrinsic or collateral to the question examined or determined.

[5] Aside from the question of fraud in procuring the judgment in this case, we think that the judgment is void on its face for the following reasons:

(1) For the reason that the complaint in said action No. 2490 did not set forth a particular description of the real property, nor was such particular description set forth in the summons or in the lis pendens. The description of the real property as it appeared in the complaint filed by Westover in case No. 2490 described it as being block 1024, 1025, and 1026 in the Sunset district, whereas the correct description of said real property was and is Outside Lands blocks 1024, 1025, and 1026.

The court found upon this matter as follows: In all papers, documents, records, and proceedings where description of the property is made in action 2490, the premises hereinbefore referred to were erroneously described in the following respects, to wit: Said premises were described as being in portions of block 1024, 1025, and 1026 of the Sunset district, whereas a correct description of said lands should be a portion of Outside Lands blocks 1024, 1025, and 1026.

(2) Section 5 of the McEnerney Act provided that the affidavit shall be a part of the judgment roll. This section further provides that the affiant shall set forth fully and explicitly "the character of his estate, right, title, interest or claim in, and possession of the property, during what period the same has existed and from whom obtained." And it further provides "that if the plaintiff is unable to state any one or more of the matters herein required, he shall set forth and show, fully and explicitly, the reasons for such inability."

In the attempted compliance with said last-named requirement, plaintiff set forth in his said affidavit the following:

"That all deeds and records in the possession of the said plaintiff were destroyed by fire on or about the 19th day of April, 1906, and for that reason said plaintiff is unable to state the dates and times or the names of the parties who deeded said real estate described in the complaint, and hereinafter described to plaintiff. That said plaintiff has been in actual, open, notorious, and peaceable possession of said real estate for many years."

In the case of Potrero Nuevo Land Co. v. All Persons, 158 Cal. 731, 112 P. 303, the court held the affidavit to be insufficient which stated:

"That said title to said property was sold and conveyed by the state of California to one John Bensley in 1855, and by him through divers mesne conveyances conveyed to said plaintiff, who is now the owner and holder thereof and has been for the last ten years."

Commenting thereon, the court said:

"To say that one has owned an estate for ten years and more is not fully and explicitly showing how long in fact he has owned and enjoyed it. And a statement that one acquired title by 'divers mesne conveyances' from one John Bensley, to whom the state conveyed the property in 1855, is not a full and explicit showing, description, or characterization of the person 'from whom obtained.' The provision of the statute requiring a full and complete statement in these particulars is manifestly designed for the benefit of the defendants, in enabling them, by verifying plaintiff's claim, to prevent fraud and safeguard their own rights. For these reasons a full and fair compliance with the provisions is a just exaction from every plaintiff."

[6] And merely stating, as Westover did in his affidavit, that the reason he cannot state the dates and times and parties from whom he obtained said real property is because all the deeds and records in his possession, were destroyed by fire on April 19, 1906, does not show fully and explicitly the reason for such inability.

(3) Section 4 of the McEnerney Act provides that the summons shall be published once a week for a period of two months and that to each publication there shall be appended a memorandum, in substance, as follows: First publication of this summons was made in (here insert name) newspaper on the — day of —, A. D. — (inserting date). The proof of publication filed in case 2490 shows that only to the first of the eight weekly publications was the said memorandum attached.

[7] Because the act is remedial and should be liberally construed to effect the purpose contemplated does not dispense with the necessity of substantially complying with its requirements. Cal. Jur. p. 651. In his concurring opinion in the case of Potrero Nuevo Land Co. v. All Persons, 158 Cal. at page 736, 112 P. 307, Shaw, J., said: "I agree that the procedure prescribed in the act should be followed closely."

(4) It appears from an examination of Westover's complaint filed in action 2490, that he did not therein set forth that he was in the actual and peaceable possession of the eleven twenty-fourths of the real property described therein as portions of blocks 1024, 1025, and 1026 of the Sunset district. His allegations in said complaint in that respect are as follows:

"The plaintiff claims an estate in fee simple absolute and by himself is in the actual and peaceable possession of all those certain lots, pieces, and parcels of real property situate, lying and being in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, and described as follows: (Here follows description of real property not involved in this action.)

"That plaintiff is the owner of an undivided eleven twenty-fourths interest in the following described property in fee simple absolute:" Then follows a description by metes and bounds of each of the three tracts in blocks 1024, 1025, and 1026 in Sunset district, and nothing further is stated in the complaint regarding the possession of Westover.

It will be noted that Westover does not join the two descriptions by the conjunction "and"; that is to say, he does not set forth that he is the owner and in possession of certain lots, describing them, and of certain other lots, describing them. But, on the contrary, he says that he claims an estate in fee simple absolute and by himself is in the actual and peaceable possession of certain lots, describing them. Then he starts anew and says that he is the owner of eleven twenty-fourths of the following described property in fee simple absolute.

Westover claims that the Stanleys' cause of action is barred by the provisions of sections 318, 319, and 320 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon the theory that the Stanleys had not been possessed of the real property within five years previous to the commencement of their action.

The court found, and rightfully so, that the Stanleys had been in possession of said real property since a date long prior to 1896 and up to the date that this action was tried. The court further found that the action under consideration was not barred by the provisions of section 338 of said Code, nor by section 343 of said Code. The instant action was commenced on February 20, 1914, the Stanleys having no knowledge whatever of the rendition of the judgment in action No. 2490, or of any claim of Westover to said real property by reason thereof until April, 1913.

[8] Westover also claims that the Stanleys are barred from bringing and maintaining this action by reason of their laches; that as early as 1902 the attorneys representing the Stanleys had knowledge of the existence of the sheriff's deed executed to him as trustee of the Sonoma Lumber Company under the execution sale upon the judgment of Mason v. Fanny L. Stanley, and knew that all rights acquired under said deed by said company had been distributed to Westover; that said deed was of record and imparted notice of its existence to the Stanleys. But the fact is that Westover was, at no time, ever in the possession of said property, and the only thing he had ever done was to pay the taxes accruing against it.

In the case of Secret Valley Land Co. v. Perry, 187 Cal. 425, 202 P. 451, the court said:

"One cannot acquire title to the land of another by paying the taxes on it, nor will a claim of title under a void deed, although recorded, ripen into a fee by lapse of time, nor will limitations run against the owner of record in favor of a claimant not in possession, nor is it incumbent upon the owner to sue for cancellation of a void deed, or to take steps to remove a cloud upon his title. * * * If he desires to have the cloud removed the law affords a remedy, but he is not compelled to go to that expense, and his failure to do so cannot be considered laches, nor will it operate as an estoppel against him."

[9] Westover also claims title to the said real property by adverse possession. One of the elements necessary to constitute adverse possession is that the adverse claimant must have been in the actual possession of the real property for a continuous period of five years. In the instant case the court found that Westover had never been in the possession of said real property either actual or otherwise. As this finding is supported by the evidence, it disposes of Westover's claim that he has obtained title to the real property in controversy by adverse possession.

[10] Westover set up his answer that his grantor, the Sonoma Lumber Company, paid, as purchasers of the said real property under the execution sale upon the judgment of Mason v. Fanny L. Stanley, the sum of $853.01, which was applied in satisfaction of said judgment, that said company paid the taxes on said real property for the years 1899, 1900, and 1901 and that since that last-named date Westover has paid the taxes and assessments assessed against said real property, and he asked that, in the event that it be adjudged that the Stanleys are the owners of said real property, he be reimbursed for said sums so paid out.

It appears that the judgment rendered in the case of Mason v. Stanley was a valid judgment; that it was satisfied by the amount bid by Westover at the execution sale had under the said judgment.

The Stanleys set forth in their complaint facts showing that the said execution sale was void and the deed executed to Westover thereunder was a nullity, and in their prayer for relief asked that their title to said real property be quieted against all claims of Westover to said property. In other words, they attacked the validity of said deed and asked that it be held to be void.

They have come into equity asking equitable relief, which, if granted, will invalidate the aforesaid sale under execution and deed executed thereunder. Upon the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity, the general rule, according to the weight of authority, is that an execution sale will not be set aside at the instance of the debtor without refunding to the purchaser his purchase money which has been applied to the benefit of the debtor. R. C. L. vol. 10, p. 1323.

[11] The failure of Westover to present his claim against the estate of Fanny L. Stanley did not operate as an extinguishment of the debt. Whitmore v. S. F. Savings Union, 50 Cal. 149; Bull v. Coe, 77 Cal. 63, 18 P. 808, 11 Am. St. Rep. 235.

In the case of Keohane v. Keohane, 38 Cal. App. at page 408, 176 P. 387, Lennon, C. J., said:

"A party seeking to quiet his title to the realty or remove a cloud thereon will as a condition precedent to the relief be compelled to do equity." * * * "A court of equity setting aside a judicial sale under a void execution as a cloud on title should decree that the purchase money be refunded."

[12, 13] Westover claims that, having paid all taxes and assessments assessed against said real property, he should, in the event that the Stanleys are adjudged to be the owners of said real property, be reimbursed for same. No case has been called to the attention of the court where the owner of property has been required to reimburse one who has paid the taxes accruing against it, as a condition of quieting his title, except in this case where he seeks to remove a tax deed or sale as a cloud on his title or to obtain a judgment which would in effect invalidate such sale or deed.

It is a general rule that there can be no recovery, for the voluntary payment of the debt of a third party without request and with no promise of repayment by the party whose debt is paid. McGlew v. McDade, 146 Cal. 553, 80 P. 695; Huddleston v. Washington, 136 Cal. 514, 69 P. 146; Curtis v. Parks, 55 Cal. 106. In the case of Iowa Homestead Co. v. Valley Railway Co., 17 Wall. (84 U. S.) 153, 21 L. Ed. 622, the court held that, while the taxes on the lands involved were the debts of the defendants, their refusal or neglect to pay them did not authorize the contestant to make them its debtor by stepping in and paying the taxes for them without being requested so to do; that, if the appellants, owing to their great confidence in their title, have risked too much, it is their misfortune, but they are not on that account to have the taxes voluntarily paid by them refunded by the successful party to the suit.

Pomeroy, in his work on Equity Jurisprudence, in interpreting the maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity, said, in section 385:

"That whatever be the nature of the controversy between two definite parties, and whatever be the nature of the remedy demanded, the court will not confer its equitable relief upon the party seeking its interposition and aid, unless he acknowledge and concede, or will admit and provide for, all the equitable rights, claims, and demands justly belonging to the adverse party and growing out of or necessarily involved in the subject-matter of the controversy."

In the instant action the payment of the taxes did not grow out of, nor was it necessarily involved in the subject-matter of the controversy. It was projected into the case by the answer of Westover and partakes of the nature of a counterclaim. The payment or nonpayment of taxes was foreign to the issues that were involved in the case now under consideration.

It is true that the court found that the taxes were paid by Westover, based upon the facts heretofore found; that he claimed to be owner of said property and not in pursuance of any scheme or design to defraud plaintiffs or any one. But, in the case of Iowa Homestead Co. v. Valley Railroad Co., supra, the court said:

"It seems that the appellants, during this litigation, paid the taxes on a portion of these lands, and claim to be reimbursed for this expenditure in case the title is adjudged to be in the defendants, on the ground that they paid the taxes in good faith and in ignorance of the law. But ignorance of the law is no ground for recovery, and the element of good faith will not sustain an action where the payment has been voluntary, without any request from the true owners of the land, and with a full knowledge of all the facts."

Under our view of the case, the court erred in that portion of its judgment which required the Stanleys to reimburse Westover for any taxes or assessments upon said real property that accrued and were paid by him prior to the date of the stipulation of November 24, 1919.

That portion of the judgment of the trial court to the effect that the Stanleys are the owners of the real property in controversy and quieting their title to same against the claims of Westover is affirmed, and that portion of the said judgment that decrees the payment by the Stanleys to Westover of the taxes and assessments accruing against said real property and paid by him prior to the date of the stipulation of November 24, 1919, is reversed, and the trial court is hereby directed to enter judgment in favor of Westover for the amount of all taxes paid by him under the stipulation of November 24, 1919, also for the sum of $165 paid by him pursuant to stipulation of the parties, and also for the aforesaid sum of $853.01, being the amount bid by him at the execution sale under the judgment in the case of Mason v. Stanley, with interest on said last-named sum of $853.01 from April 7, 1899, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and that said amounts so adjudged in favor of said Westover be made a lien on the real property involved in this controversy.

We concur: HART, Acting P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

93 Cal. App. 113

WESTOVER v. ALL PERSONS, etc.★
(Civ. 3499.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 6, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 4, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 4, 1928.

Quieting title § 47(1)—Court held without authority to try action to quiet title without proof that parties to prior actions had been personally served (McEnerney Act, §§ 6, 8, 14).

Where judgments under McEnerney Act June 16, 1906 (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78), providing for quieting title to realty in case of loss or destruction of public records, had been entered prior to commencement of another action under same act involving same property, trial court was not authorized to proceed with trial of later action until proof was made that all persons who appeared in first actions or their successors in interest had been personally served with papers mentioned in section 6 of said act, as required by section 14, though bill of exceptions did not disclose whether time to plead had expired under section 8.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Delbert L. Westover, otherwise known as D. L. Westover, against all persons claiming an interest in or lien on the real property herein described or any part thereof, to establish title. From the judgment, plaintiff and defendants Samuel B. Stanley and another, as executors of the last will and testament of Fanny L. Stanley, deceased, and others appeal. Reversed.

J. S. Hutchinson and Walter Slack, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Grant & Zimdars and William H. Bryan, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. This action was brought by plaintiff, respondent appellant, under the provisions of an act to provide for the establishment and quieting title to real property in case of loss or destruction of the public records, approved June 16, 1906, and commonly known as the McEnerney Act St. 1906 (Ex. Sess.) p. 78.

The plaintiff will be hereinafter referred to as Westover, and the defendants as the Stanleys.

Judgment went in this action for the Stanleys that they were the owners of the real property described therein subject to lien thereon in favor of Westover for taxes and assessments paid by Westover, that were assessed against the said real property during the years of 1919 to 1924, inclusive, amounting to $1,832.39, and the sum of $3,424.85 paid by Westover for taxes, sewer assessments, and Twin Peak tunnel assessments on said property up to May 14, 1917.

The Stanleys appeal from the portion of the judgment which awards Westover the $3,424.85, and Westover appeals from that portion of the judgment that decrees title to said property to be in the Stanleys and from that portion of the judgment that fails to allow him additional amounts for taxes and assessments paid out by him on said real property.

This case and the Civil No. 3498, Samuel B. Stanley and Joseph Stanley, etc., et al. v. Delbert L. Westover, 269 P. 468, were tried at the same time, and the evidence in each is, in the main, practically the same, and the judgments are identical.

In the instant case, Westover sets forth in his complaint that he is the owner of all of three tracts of land described by metes and bounds, being part of blocks 1024, 1025, and 1026, Outside Lands. Upon the trial of this case, it was proven that Westover was not, at the date of the commencement of the action, the owner of the whole of said three tracts, but only claimed an interest in eleven twenty-fourths thereof, and that one Frank A. West owned the other thirteen twenty-fourths. It was further established that prior to the commencement of this action the said Frank A. West had brought suits under the provisions of the said McEnerney Act, and has secured judgments decreeing title to him to twelve twenty-fourths and to one twenty-fourth of said real property. It further appeared that in this action the said Frank A. West had never been served with the summons and papers mentioned in section 6 of the said McEnerney Act.

Section 14 of the said McEnerney Act provided:

"Whenever judgment in an action hereby authorized shall have been entered as to any real property, no other action relative to the same property or any part thereof maintained under this act shall be tried until proof shall first have been made to the court that all persons who appeared in the first action or their successors in interest have been personally served with the papers mentioned in section 6 of this act either within or without this state more than one month before the time to plead expired."

It is provided by section 8 of said act that the time to plead expires within three months after the first publication of the summons.

This appeal was brought up on a bill of exceptions, and, while there is no showing in said bill of exceptions as to when the first publication of the summons was made in the case now under consideration, and consequently it does not appear just when the time to plead expired, yet, it having been established that judgments under the said act had been entered, prior to the commencement of this action, affecting the real property in controversy in this action, the trial court was not authorized to proceed with the trial in the instant action until proof was made to the court that all persons who had appeared in said first actions, or their successors in interest, had been personally served with the papers mentioned in section 6 of said act. This was not done, and therefore the court was without authority to proceed with the trial.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HART, Acting P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

92 Cal. App. 550

PEOPLE v. LE BARON. (Cr. 1018.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 14, 1928.

Poisons 4—That possession of narcotics was joint is no defense in prosecution for violation of State Poisons Act.

The fact that possession of narcotics was joint held not to constitute a defense in prosecution for violation of the State Poisons Act.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

On application for rehearing. Petition denied.

For former opinion, see 268 P. 651.

Edward Bickmore, of Merced, and Edwin V. McKenzie and J. H. Sapiro, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant petitions for a rehearing of the above-entitled cause and states that in its original opinion this court misapprehended the testimony in certain particulars. The petition states that there is not any testimony showing that Dewie Dale found the hypodermic needles in a room occupied by the defendant and her husband alone. The record clearly shows that the chief of police stated that the hypodermic needles were found in a room which the defendant said was occupied by her. It is true that the defendant stated the same room had been occupied part of the time by Dewie Dale, but the defendant herself admitted that when she was at the house she occupied said room. The fact that Dewie Dale occasionally occupied the room does not militate in the least against any inference to be drawn from the fact that the defendant and her husband occupied said room whenever they were at the house.

The defendant also states that the toilet in which the narcotics were found was not connected directly with the room above referred to, but was connected with the room at the "other" end of the hallway. The testimony is not clear upon this proposition; but it is of little importance when compared with all the circumstances of the case taken together.

We do not propose to go over the petition for a rehearing in detail. It merely repeats the argument made in the original briefs. We are satisfied that the testimony and the circumstances developed thereby go beyond the mere corroboration of the testimony of Dewie Dale as required by the statute, and that the jury were well warranted in finding from all the circumstances that the defendant and her husband had possession of the narcotics referred to. As stated in the original opinion, it might be true that the possession of the narcotics was joint; that is, jointly held by defendant, her husband, and Dewie Dale for their purposes. As likewise stated, however, that fact would not be a defense in the case of the defendant. On all other points, we adhere to the conclusions announced in the original opinion.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

held contingent on her survival of her husband, since the 1923 amendment to section 1401 (St. 1923, p. 29, § 1) did not enlarge wife's interest in community property previously acquired.

3. Husband and wife ⇨273(1)—Wills ⇨6—Wife's attempt to devise community property held ineffectual, since such property on wife's death belonged to husband without administration, notwithstanding statutory amendment (Civ. Code, §§ 172a, 1401; St. 1923, p. 29, § 1).

Wife's attempt to devise community property acquired at a time when her right therein was contingent on surviving her husband held ineffectual, since under Civ. Code, § 172a, and § 1401 (prior to 1923 amendment [St. 1923, p. 29, § 1]), such property on wife's death belonged to husband without administration, and 1923 amendment could not enlarge wife's interest in community property acquired previously.

4. Wills ⇨3—Law at time community property was acquired, and not at wife's death, determines whether wife has devisable interest (Civ. Code, § 1401, as amended by St. 1923, p. 29, § 1).

Law at time community property was acquired, and not at the time of wife's death, determines whether she has a devisable interest, under Civ. Code, § 1401, as amended by St. 1923, p. 29, § 1.

5. Descent and distribution ⇨68—Right to inherit from ancestor is mere expectancy.

The right of an heir to inherit from his ancestor is a mere expectancy, and is not in any sense a vested interest prior to ancestor's death.

6. Constitutional law ⇨94—Statutes governing right of inheritance may be amended without infringing upon any vested right of heir.

Statutes governing rights of heirs to inheritance may be changed in any manner without infringing upon or violating any vested right of an heir, since the right of an heir to inherit from his ancestor is a mere expectancy.

7. Descent and distribution ⇨6—Statutes in force at time of death control disposition of intestate's property.

Statutes governing the right of inheritance in force at time of intestate's death control the disposition of his estate.

8. Husband and wife ⇨273(1)—Husband held not to take community property, on wife's death, by descent or succession, and hence statutory amendment giving wife power to devise community property was not controlling (Civ. Code, § 1401; St. 1923, p. 29, § 1).

Where community property was acquired prior to 1923 amendment of Civ. Code, § 1401, husband held not to take the community property, on the death of the wife, by descent or succession, and hence 1923 amendment (St. 1923, p. 29, § 1), providing that spouses might devise one-half of the community property, which amendment was in effect at the time of the wife's death, was not controlling.

204 Cal. 557

McKAY v. LAURISTON et al. (S. F. 12691.)

Supreme Court of California. July 18, 1928.

1. Husband and wife ⇨247—Amendment giving spouses power to make testamentary disposition of half community property held not to enlarge wife's interest in community property previously acquired (Civ. Code § 1401, as amended by St. 1923, p. 29, § 1).

Amendment in 1923 to Civ. Code, § 1401 (St. 1923, p. 29, § 1), providing that upon the death of husband or wife one-half the community property belongs to the surviving spouse and the other half is subject to testamentary disposition, held not to enlarge wife's interest in community property acquired before the amendment became effective.

2. Husband and wife ⇨265—Wife's interest in community property acquired in 1918 held contingent on her survival of husband (Civ. Code, §§ 172a, 1401; St. 1923, p. 29, § 1).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 172a, 1401, wife's interest in community property acquired in 1918

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Claude F. Purkitt, Judge.

On rehearing. Former opinion adopted, and judgment affirmed.

For former opinion, see 263 P. 1013.

James J. Harrington, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Richard Fitzpatrick, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. A rehearing of this case was granted, for the reason that this court desired to consider, before the final determination of this appeal and in connection with it, the case of Stewart v. Stewart, then pending on its second appeal to this court, and in which many of the same questions were involved as are presented by the appeal in the present proceeding. The decision of this court on the second appeal in the case of Stewart v. Stewart, 269 P. 439, has this day been filed.

In the consideration of the questions involved in the two cases and after a careful study of the arguments presented therein, we have come to the conclusion that our former opinion herein is a correct statement of the law applicable to the facts and subject-matter of this action. We accordingly see no necessity of making any substantial change in our former opinion.

It is contended by at least one of the amici curiæ appearing herein that the doctrine announced in Re Rowland, 74 Cal. 523, 16 P. 315, 5 Am. St. Rep. 464, was repudiated by this court in Re Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 44 P. 734, in so far as it was held in Re Rowland that "the husband does not, upon the death of his wife, as to the community property, take by descent or succession, but holds the community property as though acquired by himself, and as if his deceased wife had never existed." The case of In re Burdick, supra, makes no reference to the case of In re Rowland, and while there is language to be found in Re Burdick which is directly contrary to the doctrine expressly enunciated, in Re Rowland, we find that the question as to whether the husband succeeded to the community property in his own right, or by succession as heir of his wife, was not before the court in Re Burdick. The court in that case was dealing solely with the interest of the wife in the community property. The language, therefore, relied upon in Re Burdick as overruling In re Rowland was not necessary to the decision of any issue therein, and cannot, therefore, be regarded as declaratory of the law upon the subject-matter in reference to which it was employed. We find that, while the case of In re Burdick has frequently been cited and considered by the appellate courts of this state, it has never, in any decision of which we have any knowledge, been referred to as an authority in support of the claim that the husband upon the death of his wife succeeds to the community property as her heir. In 5 California Jurisprudence, p. 364, we find the following statement of the law upon this question:

"He [the husband] does not take the property by succession or descent, but holds it as owner, and, it has been said, as if his wife had never existed."

In support of this proposition of law there is cited In re Rowland, supra, and Johnston v. S. F. Savings Union, 75 Cal. 134, 16 P. 753, 7 Am. St. Rep. 129. No reference is made to In re Burdick, supra, as laying down a contrary doctrine. Evidently the author of the subject of community property in this most useful and valuable compilation on the laws of California did not regard the decision in Re Burdick as repudiating or in any manner affecting the doctrine enunciated in Re Rowland. It is true that the Legislature in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 694), by an amendment to the Inheritance Tax Act (St. 1917, p. 880) provided that the community property, "which goes to the husband" upon the death of the wife, should not be subject to an inheritance tax under the provisions of said act. It took similar action at its session held in 1925. St. 1925, p. 471.

It is suggested by counsel that in the opinion of the Legislature the property thus going to the husband on the death of his wife might have been liable for the payment of a tax as property to which the husband succeeded as heir of his wife; hence the adoption of this amendment for the purpose of relieving him from the payment of said tax. As early as 1905 the statutes of this state (St. 1905, p. 341) provided for the collection of an inheritance tax on all property which shall pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state, provided the value of the property passing exceeded certain specific exemptions mentioned in the statute. Under the statute enacted in 1905 it was held in Estate of Moffitt, 153 Cal. 359, 95 P. 653, 1025, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207, that the surviving wife's share of the community property passed to her as the heir of her husband upon his death, and was therefore liable to the payment of an inheritance tax. We know of no reported case, however, that has held the husband liable upon the death of the wife for the payment of an inheritance tax on the community property acquired prior to her death.

We understand it has been the uniform practice of the officers of this state charged with the collection of this species of taxes, from the date of the enactment of the earliest statute imposing such taxes down to the present time, to regard the community property, after the death of the wife, as the absolute property of the husband, and that the same was not liable for any tax upon the death of the wife. Had the husband succeeded upon the death of his wife to any interest in the community property as her heir, he would have, until the amendment of the statute in 1923, been liable for the payment of an inheritance tax thereon upon her death. The fact that this tax was never exacted from the husband can be accounted for only upon the theory that the administrative officers of this state, whose duty it was to enforce the payments of such taxes on all persons liable therefor, were during all these years of the opinion that the husband received no part of the community property from his wife as her heir, and was therefore not liable to the payment of any inheritance tax thereon.

It is quite evident that neither these officers nor their legal advisers relied upon In re Burdick, supra, as establishing the law of this state that the husband succeeded to the community property as the heir of his wife. This fact may be of slight consequence in determining the legal effect of this decision, but, coupled with the further fact that this decision has never been cited as an authority on this particular point in any case in any court of this state, leads to the conclusion that In re Burdick has never been regarded as an authority sustaining the doctrine that the husband succeeds to any of the community property upon the death of his wife as her heir. We are satisfied that the doctrine that the husband does not take any part of the community property as heir of his wife, which doctrine was approved in Re Rowland, supra, is the law of the state, and has been for many years, as to all community property acquired prior to or during the year 1918, the date the property herein involved was acquired.

The opinion heretofore rendered and which we hereby adopt and approve as the opinion of this court at this time, is as follows:

It appears by written stipulation of the parties hereto, and admissions made by the pleadings herein, that certain real property, described in the complaint and situated in the city and county of San Francisco, was acquired as community property by the plaintiff on the 9th day of November, 1918, at which time plaintiff and Hattie A. McKay were husband and wife. No change in the ownership of said real property was made up to the 16th day of August, 1926, on which date the said Hattie A. McKay died, leaving a last will and testament by the terms of which she sought to devise an interest in said real property to her husband, the plaintiff herein, an undivided one-half, and to the defendants Heneretta Lauriston and Mary Frances De Mello the other undivided one-half thereof. Said defendants were named as executrices of said last will and testament, and in due time and after proceedings duly had in the probate court of the city and county of San Francisco, said will was admitted to probate, and said Heneretta Lauriston and Mary Frances De Mello were appointed by said court executrices thereof. This action is brought by plaintiff to quiet his title to said real property, he claiming to be the sole owner of the whole thereof. The defendants, individually and as such executrices, assert that they are the owners by virtue of said last will and testament of an undivided one-half of the interest of the said Hattie A. McKay in said real property at the time of her death. The court gave judgment in favor of plaintiff, quieting his title to the whole of said real property against all claims of said defendants. From this judgment the defendants have appealed, and the same is before us upon the judgment roll in which is incorporated said stipulation of the parties above referred to. The only question involved in this proceeding is whether Hattie A. McKay at the time of her death was the owner of any interest in said real property which she could devise by will and testament. It is conceded that if the said Hattie A. McKay had any interest in said real property at the time of her death, which was subject to her testamentary disposition, she acquired said interest and continued to retain the same by virtue of the fact that said real property became upon its purchase in November, 1918, community property and remained such during her lifetime, and that at the date of said purchase and up to the time of her death she was the wife of Patrick J. McKay, the respondent. At the time said real property was acquired by Patrick J. McKay, section 1401 of the Civil Code read as follows:

"Upon the death of the wife the entire community property, without administration, belongs to the surviving husband, except such portion thereof as may have been set apart to her by judicial decree, for her support and maintenance, which portion is subject to her testamentary disposition, and in the absence of such disposition, goes to her descendants, or heirs, exclusive of her husband."

In 1923 said section 1401 was amended, and at the date of the death of said deceased read as follows:

"Upon the death of either husband or wife, one-half of the community property belongs to the surviving spouse; the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the decedent, and in the absence thereof goes to the surviving spouse, subject to the provisions of section one thousand four hundred two of this Code."

There is no claim that said real property or any part thereof had ever been set apart to Hattie A. McKay by judicial decree or otherwise, for her maintenance or support, or for any purpose whatsoever. It is also apparent that the provisions of section 1402 of the Civil Code have no direct bearing upon the question of the ownership of Hattie A. McKay of an interest in said real property.

At the time said real property was conveyed to plaintiff, section 172a of the Civil Code read as follows:

"The husband has the management and control of the community real property but the wife must join with him in executing any instrument by which such community real property or any interest therein is leased for a longer period than one year, or is sold, conveyed, or incumbered; provided, however, that the sole lease, contract, mortgage or deed of the husband, holding the record, title to community real property, to a lessee, purchaser or incumbrancer, in good faith without knowledge of the marriage relation shall be presumed to be valid; but no action to avoid such instrument shall be commenced after the expiration of one year from the filing for record of such instrument in the recorder's office in the county in which the land is situate."

In the recent case of Stewart v. Stewart, 199 Cal. 318, 249 P. 197, this court after an exhaustive review of the decisions of this court, as well as those from other jurisdictions where the community property law prevails, considered and determined the right of the wife in community property acquired under the laws in force in this state immediately following the adoption of said section 172a and the amendment in the same year of section 172 of the Civil Code, relating, in its amended form, to community personal property. In that case we held that under the laws of this state as in force in the year 1918, relative to the rights of the wife in community property acquired while such laws were in effect, the wife had no present vested interest in the community property during the continuance of the marriage relation, except that she might by resort to appropriate judicial remedies protect and safeguard the community property against the inconsiderate and fraudulent acts of the husband. In the course of the opinion in that case this court gave utterance to the following language:

"It is most earnestly contended by and on behalf of the respondent herein that the changes in the laws relating to community property effectuated by these two latter amendments were such as to create in the wife, if such had not theretofore existed, a vested interest in an undivided one-half of the community property immediately upon the acquisition of such property by the spouses or either of them, and to continue thereafter during the existence of the marriage relation. We are unable for the following reasons to give our approval to that contention. The Legislature in framing these two amendments which, taken together, worked a revision of the former section 172 of the Civil Code did not state therein 'in plain language,' as it was pointed out in the second Spreckels Case it might easily have done, 'that the purpose of these amendments was to vest in the wife during the marriage a present interest or estate in the community property.' The Legislature did not even by said amendments to the Civil Code go so far as it had done in its revision of the inheritance tax law, coincidentally adopted, so as to state that the 'one-half of the community property which goes to the surviving wife on the death of the husband * * * shall not be deemed to pass to her as heir of her husband but shall * * * be deemed to go, pass or be transferred to her for valuable and adequate consideration.' Had the Legislature seen fit to so declare in the language employed by it in the coincident statute, no doubt could have existed as to its intent to work such a radical change in the former and long-established status as to render the interest of the wife in the community property thereafter to be acquired a present vested estate and interest therein from the date of its acquisition. The Legislature did not do this nor anything like it. All that the Legislature by these amendments did do or attempt to do was to cast about the interest of the wife in both the real and personal property of the community during the continued existence of the marriage relation added safeguards and protection against the fraudulent or inconsiderate acts of the husband in the exercise of his control and dominion over these properties of the nature of those already provided for in earlier statutes and especially in and by the 1891 amendment to section 172 of the Civil Code. It follows, to our minds, irresistibly that the same reasoning which was applied to the earlier amendment of section 172 of the Civil Code equally applies to those changes in and revision thereof accomplished by the Legislature in 1917. Additional force is, if needed, given to this conclusion when the particular provisions of section 172a as added to the Code in that year are subjected to careful consideration; for it is made to therein appear that the sole lease, contract, mortgage or deed of the husband holding the record title to community real property to a lessee, purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith, without knowledge of the marriage relation, shall be presumed to be valid and shall be so unless an action to avoid such instrument shall be commenced within one year from the recordation thereof. This provision renders the conveyance of the whole of the community real estate to a purchaser or incumbrancer thereof in good faith voidable but not void; a condition entirely inconsistent with the existence of a present and vested ownership in the wife of an undivided one-half of such property, and also with an intent on the part of the Legislature by said amendments to effectuate such a radical change in a long-established rule of property. We are, therefore, clearly of the opinion that the amendments to the Civil Code, adopted in 1917, did not operate to change such rule to the extent of creating in the wife a present vested interest in the property of the community during the continuance of the marriage relation."

The real property in controversy was acquired by the plaintiff under precisely the same legal conditions as was the real property involved in the case of Stewart v. Stewart. Accordingly, Mrs. McKay took no present interest therein which she could dispose of by last will and testament.

[1] It is claimed, however, by appellants that by the subsequent amendment of section 1401 of the Civil Code in 1923, which section was in force as thus amended at the date of the death of said Hattie A. McKay, she was given power to make testamentary disposition of one-half of the community property. There is no question but that by said section 1401 of the Civil Code, as amended in 1923, the wife at her death has been given the power to dispose by will of whatever interest in community property she may have at the time of her death. We have already seen, however, that at the time said real property was acquired the provisions of the Code then in force gave to the wife no right in the community property which she could dispose of by will. Could a subsequent statute or an amendment to the statute in force at the time the property was acquired invest the wife with a right which she did not possess prior to the enactment of said statute or amendment? This question has frequently been before the courts of this state, and particularly in proceedings where the nature and extent of the interest of the wife in the community property of herself and husband have been the subject of controversy. It has been consistently and repeatedly held by this court, beginning with the case of Spreckels v. Spreckels, reported in 116 Cal. 339, 48 P. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170, down to cases of recent determination that amendments whereby it was sought to lessen, enlarge, or change in any manner the rights of the respective spouses in community property will not be given retroactive effect so as to affect the respective rights of the parties in community property acquired prior to the enactment of such amendments. Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 P. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170; Estate of Frees, 187 Cal. 150, 201 P. 112; Roberts v. Wehmeyer, 191 Cal. 601, 218 P. 22; Schubert v. Lowe, 193 Cal. 291, 223 P. 550; Estate of Drishaus, 199 Cal. 369, 249 P. 515; Stewart v. Stewart, 199 Cal. 318, 249 P. 197.

The decisions of the District Court of Appeal upon this question have been to the same effect. Clavo v. Clavo, 10 Cal. App. 447, 102 P. 556; Jacobs v. All Persons, 12 Cal. App. 163, 106 P. 896; Scott v. Austin, 57 Cal. App. 553, 207 P. 710; Scott v. Austin, 58 Cal. App. 643, 209 P. 251; Copp v. Rives, 62 Cal. App. 776, 217 P. 813.

[2-4] At the time of the purchase of said real property the respondent took the absolute title thereto subject to whatever rights his wife had therein by virtue of the fact that the same was the community property of himself and his wife. This right of his wife was the right to receive upon the death of her husband, and subject to his debts, one-half of the community property. In other words, the wife was given a right in the community property contingent upon her surviving her husband, and upon the happening of this contingency such right would have ripened into a vested interest in her in and to the said community property. Her death, however, prior to that of her husband, made the happening of this contingency impossible and thereupon the entire estate belonged to the husband without administration. Civ. Code, § 1401, prior to its amendment in 1923. These rights of the respective spouses in the community property attached to the property and were acquired by the parties at the time of the conveyance of the property, and, as we have seen, said rights cannot be impaired or destroyed by subsequent legislation. The courts, as above noted, have uniformly held that any legislation affecting the rights of the parties in such cases will not be given a retroactive construction, but that the law in force at the date of the acquisition of the property is determinative of the rights of the parties therein. It is plain, therefore, that the right of Hattie A. McKay in said real property at the time of her death must be determined by the law in force at the time said property was acquired by the respondent and herself, and that as the law then in effect gave her no right to make any testamentary disposition of any of said community property or any part thereof, the provision in her last will and testament by which she sought to devise to appellants an interest in said real property is ineffectual to vest title in appellants to any part or portion of said real property.

[5-7] Appellants further contend that the statute under which the husband succeeds to the community property is a statute of succession and inheritance, and therefore the law in effect at the death of the wife governs the disposition of the property of her estate. There is no question but that the right of an heir to inherit from his ancestor is a mere expectancy and is not deemed in any sense to be a vested interest in any property of his ancestor prior to the death of the latter. Statutes governing this right may be amended in any manner the Legislature may see fit, without infringing upon or violating any vested right of the heir. It is equally well settled that the statutes governing the right of inheritance in force at the time of death control the disposition of property left by an intestate. Did the community property acquired by McKay in 1918, upon the death of Mrs. McKay, become the property of respondent by descent and inheritance, or was he the sole owner thereof at all times since its purchase, subject to a half interest therein in his wife, in case she survived him? If a wife had any interest in said real property which would, upon her death, descend to her husband as her heir, then the husband would take the same by descent and inheritance, and the law in force at the time of her death would govern. The decisions of this court, however, have been to the effect that the husband does not, upon the death of the wife, succeed to the community property by de-ascent or succession. This was definitely decided in the early case of In re Rowland, 74 Cal. 523, 16 P. 315, 5 Am. St. Rep. 464, in which case this court employed the following significant language:

"The estate in expectancy of the wife in the community property is dependent upon her survivorship; and in the event of her death before her husband, it is deemed never to have existed. If we are correct in this, the husband does not, upon the death of his wife, as to the community property, take by descent or succession, but holds the community property as though acquired by himself, and as if his deceased wife had never existed."

While In re Rowland and many of the later cases enunciating this same doctrine were decided by this court in construing the sections of the Code prior to the amended form in which they were in force in 1918, at the time the McKay property was acquired, yet in more recent decisions, and particularly in Stewart v. Stewart, supra, the same doctrine has been adhered to as was enunciated in the earlier cases. We quote again from the Stewart Case:

"We are, therefore, clearly of the opinion that the amendments to the Civil Code, adopted in 1917, did not operate to change such rule to the extent of creating in the wife a present vested interest in the property of the community during the continuance of the marriage relation."

[8] Therefore, if, under the law of this state as it stood after the various amendments up to and including those enacted in 1917, the wife had no vested interest in the community property during the continuance of the marriage relation, and upon her death her mere expectancy or inchoate interest therein ceased and terminated, after her death there was no property, nor any interest in any property, to which either the husband or any other person could succeed to by descent or succession or by any other means or method. Accordingly it must be held that the respondent did not, upon the death of his wife, take interest in the community property by descent or succession. On the other hand, it is plain that whatever interest the wife had in said community property ceased and terminated at her death and thereupon the husband was the sole owner of said community property. The contention, therefore, of appellant, that the law in force at the death of Mrs. McKay controls the descent and disposition of said community property, cannot be sustained for the conclusive reason that the husband took no interest in said property by descent or succession. On the other hand, whatever interest the parties had in said property became fixed and determined by the law in force at the time said property was acquired by them; their rights therein thus acquired could not be diminished, enlarged, or in any way affected by subsequent legislation; and as said property at the time it was acquired by Mr. and Mrs. McKay became their community property, upon the death of Mrs. McKay said property in its entirety belonged to McKay without administration. It follows, therefore, that the plaintiff was, at the commencement of this action, the sole owner of said real property, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; TYLER, Justice pro tem.

204 Cal. 667

HOTCHKISS et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR ALAMEDA COUNTY et al.
(S. F. 13097.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 3, 1928.

1. Mandamus ~~to~~ 16(1)—Mandate will not lie to compel performance of a useless act.

Writ of mandate will not be granted to compel the performance of a useless act.

2. Exceptions, bill of 53(5) — Mandate to compel judge to settle bill of exceptions preparatory to appeal must be denied, where facts alleged in petition for writ showed appeal would have to be dismissed (Code Civ. Proc. § 942).

Where, from facts alleged in petition for writ of mandate to compel settlement of bill of exceptions preparatory to appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 942, it appeared that appeal would have to be dismissed, mandate must be denied.

In Bank.

Application by O. E. Hotchkiss and Constance Lake for writ of mandate, to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Alameda County, and Hon. T. W. Harris, Judge thereof. Petition denied.

Geo. F. Witter, of Oakland, for petitioners.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] Petitioners filed an application for writ of mandate to compel the respondent to settle a proposed bill of exceptions preparatory to an appeal from a judgment against sureties on an appeal bond entered on motion after the affirmation of the judgment appealed from. Code Civ. Proc. § 942. From the facts alleged in the petition for the writ, it appears that, on timely motion, the appeal of the sureties from the judgment will have to be dismissed. Duerr v. Sloan, 50 Cal. App. 512, 516, 195 P. 475. See, also, Meredith v. Santa Clara etc. Ass'n, 60 Cal. 617, 621, and Gray v. Cotton, 174 Cal. 256, 258, 162 P. 1019.

Mandate will not lie to compel the performance of a useless act. The petition is therefore denied.

205 Cal. 6

TULARE IRR. DIST. et al. v. LINDSAY-STRATHMORE IRR. DIST.
(Sac. 4001.)

Sloss & Ackerman, of San Francisco, W.
G. Irving, of Riverside, and Power & McFad-zean, of Visalia, for respondent.

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 8, 1928.

1. Costs ⇐266—Judge's disqualification on first trial does not prevent allowance of costs to prevailing party on second trial.

Disqualification of judge on former trial does not prevent allowance of costs to prevailing party on second trial, if such costs are otherwise properly chargeable.

2. Costs ⇐266—Bill of exceptions at second trial, including costs under stipulations at first and second trials, sufficiently showed costs at first trial were chargeable.

Where bill of exceptions at second trial set forth pleadings and memorandum of costs claimed by plaintiff on account of proceedings in both trials pursuant to stipulation for costs entered into at first and second trials, it sufficiently appeared from bill, in absence of some showing to contrary, that costs on former trial were necessarily incurred and were legally chargeable pursuant to stipulation.

3. Costs ⇐266—Bill of exceptions settled by successor to judge at first trial could not be disregarded in determining costs at second trial under record of stipulation at first trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 653; Supreme Court Rule
No. 27).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 653, providing that judge may settle bill of exceptions before or after he ceases to be judge, and Supreme Court Rule No. 27, providing that bill of exceptions may be settled by successor in office of judge who dies, bill of exceptions settled by successor in office of trial judge at first trial could not be disregarded in determining costs to be taxed at second trial, where record of stipulation for costs at first trial was before judge at second trial on motion to tax costs.

4. Costs ⇐266—Bill of exceptions, showing verified memorandum of costs, constituted prima facie showing of necessary costs, and is controlling unless controverted.

Bill of exceptions, showing that memorandum of costs was duly verified, constituted prima facie showing that items therein were necessarily expended or incurred, and, unless controverted, should control decision of trial court, where charges appear on face thereof to be for proper and necessary disbursements.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by the Tulare Irrigation District and others against the Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation District. From an order taxing costs, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

W. R. Bailey, of Visalia, Wheaton A. Gray, of Los Angeles, and Farnsworth, Burke & Maddox, of Visalia, for appellants.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from an order taxing costs. The main action is one to determine conflicting claims to water rights. It was commenced on July 15, 1916. Upon issue joined, two trials were had. The first trial was commenced on October 16, 1917, before the honorable W. B. Wallace, since deceased. After the cause was submitted for decision, the court indicated that judgment would be ordered for the plaintiffs; whereupon the defendant instituted proceedings in this court to prohibit the trial judge from making any further order in the cause, on the ground that he was disqualified on account of interest in the subject-matter of the litigation. The peremptory writ was granted. Lindsay-Strathmore Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 182 Cal. 315, 187 P. 1056. The second trial commenced on November 28, 1921, before the honorable Albert Lee Stephens, judge presiding. Before judgment was entered on the second trial, a petition for a writ of prohibition to test the validity of a contemplated injunctive order pending appeal was filed in this court, and the peremptory writ was denied. Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 649, 242 P. 725. On May 16, 1925, findings of fact and conclusions of law in favor of and awarding costs to the plaintiffs herein were signed and filed. On May 21, 1925, the plaintiffs served and filed their cost bill aggregating $22,534.80. In this cost bill the plaintiffs included their items of costs on the first trial in the total sum of $11,875.40, which was made up of the following items: $820 on account of one-half of the reporter's per diem; $8,912 on account of one-half of the cost of the reporter's transcript; and $2,143.40 on account of witness fees and mileage. On the defendant's motion to tax costs, the court entered an order striking out the items of costs claimed by the plaintiffs on account of the first trial, and taxed the costs at the sum of $10,659.40. This appeal is from that portion of the order which struck out the costs incurred at the first trial.

Two bills of exceptions were prepared and settled, the first by the honorable Frank Lamberson, one of the regular judges of the superior court in and for the county of Tulare and the successor in office of Judge Wallace. This bill of exceptions was settled on September 20, 1926, and set forth, among other things, the record of a stipulation, made in open court and entered in the minutes, between counsel for the respective parties, on October 27, 1917, and during the course of the first trial. That stipulation was to the effect that the official reporter transcribe three copies of the testimony and proceedings taken and to be taken during the trial, one copy for each side and one copy for the court; "each party to pay one-half of the cost thereof, the prevailing party to recover the amount so paid by it as costs expended herein." The second bill of exceptions was settled by the honorable Albert Lee Stephens, judge presiding, and set forth, among other things, the complaint, the answer, and the plaintiffs' memorandum of costs and disbursements, which includes in detail the items claimed by the plaintiffs for reporter's fees and costs, witness fees and mileage, on account of the proceedings in both trials.

The motion to tax costs by striking out all of the items pertaining to the first trial was made on the following grounds:

"A. Because each such item and every part thereof is not legally chargeable as costs in this action, and not a necessary disbursement therein. B. And also because the proceeding in which each and all such items and expenses are alleged to have been incurred was coram non judice, and one of which the above-entitled court did not have jurisdiction; all its acts in said proceeding, including the taking of testimony and evidence, being null and void."

The motion was based on the papers, records, and files, including minute entries and minute orders entered by the clerk of the superior court in said action and on "the papers, records, files, orders, and judgment of the Supreme Court of the state of California, in the case of Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation District v. Superior Court of County of Tulare, State of California, decided on the 20th day of February, 1920, and reported in 182 Cal. commencing at page 315, 187 P. 1056." No affidavit or other evidence was presented to the trial court to show that the items complained of were not necessarily incurred or were not proper disbursements on the former trial.

[1] The record shows that in the trial court the defendant placed its sole reliance on the contention that the costs on the first trial were not legally chargeable, in that they were incurred on a trial which could result in no legal judgment because the trial judge was disqualified. However, it is not now contended that the disqualification of the judge on a former trial would prevent the allowance of costs to the prevailing party on the second trial, if such costs are otherwise properly chargeable. That such costs are allowable is settled by the case of Meyer v. City of San Diego, 132 Cal. 35, 64 P. 124. See, also, Senior v. Anderson, 130 Cal. 290, 62 P. 563; Stoddard v. Treadwell, 29 Cal. 281.

[2-4] In support of this appeal, the defendant relies on the familiar rule that all intendments are in favor of the ruling of the court, and that any alleged error must appear on the face of the record on appeal, and it is contended that the Lamberson bill of exceptions may not be considered in deciding the appeal on its merits, and that error is not shown by the Stephens bill of exceptions, which, it is argued, must be held to comprise the entire record on appeal. Considering the Stephens bill of exceptions alone, it appears therefrom that the items for reporter's fees and transcript in the proceedings before Judge Wallace were claimed "pursuant to stipulation of October 27, 1917," and that the items for similar costs in the proceedings before Judge Stephens were claimed "pursuant to stipulation of November 28, 1921." The costs claimed pursuant to the stipulation last mentioned were allowed and are not questioned. The record in the Stephens bill of exceptions with reference to the stipulation is precisely the same as the record of the stipulation in the proceedings before Judge Wallace, except only as to the date. In other words, the record as to the one item is the same as the record as to the other item, and no reason appears why the one was allowed and the other rejected, except the untenable reason that the costs on the former trial were not legally chargeable. It is not contended by the defendant that the stipulation of October 27, 1917, was not entered into, but only that, without the aid of the Lamberson bill of exceptions, the record does not show that it was entered into. We think it sufficiently appears from the Stephens bill of exceptions, in the absence of some showing to the contrary, and there was none, that the costs on the former trial were necessarily incurred, and that they were legally chargeable pursuant to stipulation. Furthermore, we would not feel justified in disregarding the Lamberson bill of exceptions. Its sole purpose was to set forth the record of the stipulation of October 27, 1917. This stipulation was entered in the minutes in the proceedings before Judge Wallace. Section 653 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a judge may settle a bill of exceptions after, as well as before, he ceases to be such judge; that, if the judge dies, or if there is no mode prescribed by law for the settlement of a bill of exceptions, it shall be settled and certified in such manner as the Supreme Court may, by its order or rules, direct. Rule XXVII of this court, in effect at all of the times here in question, provided that, when the judge before whom an action was tried is dead, any unsettled bill of exceptions may be settled and certified by his successor in office. It appears on the face of the Lamberson bill of exceptions that Judge Wallace was dead at the time the said bill was settled, and that Judge Lamberson was his successor in office. Although the stipulation of October 27, 1917, was not entered into in the proceedings before Judge Stephens, the record of said stipulation was before him on the motion to tax costs, and there would appear to be no doubt that the bill of exceptions settled by him appropriately could have set forth the record of said stipulation. However, when said record was incorporated in a bill of exceptions settled by the successor in office of the deceased judge, we think the statute and the rule of the court were applicable and were complied with. The Stephens bill of exceptions shows that the memorandum of costs was duly verified. As such it constituted a prima facie showing that the items therein were necessarily expended or incurred, and, unless controverted, should control the decision of the trial court where, as here, the charges appear on the face thereof to be for proper and necessary disbursements. Fay v. Fay, 165 Cal. 469, 132 P. 1040; Miller v. Highland Ditch Co., 91 Cal. 103, 27 P. 536.

No satisfactory reason appears on the record before us, with or without the Lamberson bill of exceptions, why the defendant should not be held to its stipulation. The order appealed from is therefore reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment for costs in favor of the plaintiffs in the sum of $22,534.80.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Catherine Hartzell against C. I. Doolittle and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

George B. Toland, of Los Angeles, for appellant Doolittle.

Lucas F. Smith, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Jas. W. Bell, of Los Angeles, for defendant Barlow.

CURTIS, J. [1] This appeal is from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendants. The defendant Doolittle alone has appealed, and filed a brief in support of his contention that the judgment is erroneous. No appearance herein has been made by the respondent, and we have not been favored by any brief or points and authorities in her behalf.

The sole contention of appellant is that the evidence is not sufficient to support the findings. Appellant makes a number of assignments as to the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. The first of these is that there is no evidence that "the real property was not of the reasonable value of the price paid by respondent." Under representations made by the appellant to the respondent regarding certain real property, the respondent decided to purchase the same, and there was executed and delivered to her an assignment of a certain writing which she was informed was an agreement of sale of said real property. What she in fact received for the money paid out by her under the representations of appellant was an agreement of sale made by one Barlow to Mrs. E. H. Tomlinson. This agreement had been assigned by Mrs. Tomlinson, and through various subsequent assignments became the property of S. H. Roberts, from whom the respondent, under the advice of appellant, purchased the same, and received from said Roberts and wife a written assignment of said agreement. The property described therein was described as real property situated in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, and particularly described as "lot 51 as of the map hereto attached and made a part of this agreement." It appears that this map had never been filed for record in the office of the county recorder of said county, and that said agreement further provided that the agreement itself should never be filed for record, and, in case it was so filed, it should become null and void. By an act of the Legislature of this state, it is provided that no person shall sell or offer for sale any lot or parcel of land by reference to any map or plat unless the map or plat has been filed for record in the office of the

205 Cal. 17

HARTZELL v. DOOLITTLE et al.
(L. A. 9071.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 13, 1928.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨39—Contract for sale of real property, described according to map which was not filed for record, held unenforceable and void (St. 1907, p. 290, as amended).

Agreement for sale of real property, describing property according to map which had never been filed for record in the office of the county recorder, held unenforceable and void, under St. 1907, p. 290, and amendments thereto, as containing no legal description of property.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨44—Evidence held to sustain finding that purchaser of contract for sale of real estate was without business experience and unacquainted with property.

Evidence held to sustain finding that purchaser of contract for sale of real property through broker was without business experience and unacquainted with city where property was located.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇨44—Evidence held to sustain finding that broker misrepresented location of property to purchaser of sale contract.

Evidence held to sustain finding that broker negotiating sale of contract of sale of real property misrepresented to purchaser the location of property.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨44—Evidence held to sustain finding that broker acted in bad faith in sale of contract of sale of real estate.

Evidence held to sustain finding that broker negotiating sale of contract for sale of real estate acted in bad faith in reference to sale thereof.

county recorder of the county in which the land is situated, and that any violation of the provisions of said act is made a misdemeanor. Stats. 1907, p. 290, and amendments thereto. The effect of the provisions of this act upon the agreement assigned to respondent was to render said agreement unenforceable and void. Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 262, 191 P. 14; Wallace v. Zinman, 200 Cal. 585, 588, 254 P. 946. The agreement, therefore, contained no legal description of any real property. More than that, it was void. The value, therefore, of the real property which appellant assumes was described therein, becomes of no consequence, as the respondent acquired no interest therein by the agreement assigned to her, and which she purchased upon the advice and representations of the appellant.

[2] The contention of appellant that the evidence does not show that appellant acted as agent for respondent is so lacking in merit that we deem it unnecessary to further discuss it. Almost the same statement might be made regarding appellant's claim that there is no evidence to show "respondent unacquainted with Los Angeles and without business experience." It was shown that respondent was a resident of San Francisco. She had made two visits to Los Angeles prior to her last visit there, on the occasion of which she made the supposed investment in said real property. One of these visits was eighteen years before her third visit, when she remained about two months. Her second visit was twelve years before her last visit. She remained, on the occasion of this visit two years, when she returned to San Francisco. There was, therefore, an interval of ten years between her second and third visit. She was in Los Angeles only from February to June, 1923, when she met appellant, and the purchase of the contract from Roberts followed a few days thereafter. This evidence we think, is sufficient to support the court's finding that respondent was unacquainted with Los Angeles. The evidence further shows that respondent had been, for some time previous to her third visit to Los Angeles, in the employ of the government as disbursing clerk in the quartermaster's department and in the treasury department at San Francisco, and at the time of the trial was employed as a stenographer with the Defense League. Outside of a few investments made by respondent, through banks in San Francisco, in various stocks, some of which she sold at a loss, the evidence shows that respondent was without business experience.

[3] As to the contention of appellant that there was no misrepresentation by him as to the location of the property in which respondent is supposed to have purchased an interest, appellant concedes that respondent testified that appellant told her that it was "on a main highway, or a short cut, from Pasadena to Long Beach," but that her testimony was disputed by appellant. The evidence shows that the property was not located as represented by appellant to respondent. The latter's evidence is therefore sufficient to support the finding as to misrepresentation made by the appellant regarding the location of the property.

[4] Finally, appellant contends that the evidence does not show that appellant acted in bad faith in reference to the contract. We think the evidence is sufficient to support the findings in this respect. Appellant was a licensed real estate agent, and held himself out as qualified to advise prospective purchasers of real estate, and expressly so represented himself to respondent. Upon his first meeting with respondent, he designedly or otherwise impressed the respondent with confidence in his ability to make investments which would result profitably to those who entered into them through his advice. After a brief acquaintance, the respondent met appellant at the latter's office in the city of Long Beach. On the occasion of this visit, appellant told respondent that he had the best buy that had ever come into his office, "and, if they had the money, they would go right out and get it themselves." Upon inspecting what was supposed to be the property which respondent was to purchase, she desired to wait and consult her friends in San Francisco about the investment, but appellant persuaded her to act at once, telling her: "It will probably be gone before morning. You can't let anything like this wait. You have to put down some money to hold it." As a result of these importunities by appellant, respondent was induced to make a payment on the same day on account of the purchase price of said real property, and in a few days thereafter consummated the transaction by paying to Mr. Roberts a sum of money in the neighborhood of $1,420, and received from him the assignment of the agreement of sale, which, as we have already seen, was illegal and without any value. Respondent had informed appellant that she knew absolutely nothing about real estate, and would have to leave the whole matter to his judgment. Appellant received a commission of $150 from Roberts for making the sale, but did not inform respondent that he was acting as the agent of Roberts. We think, on the whole, that there is sufficient evidence to support the finding that appellant did not act in good faith toward respondent in his dealings with her in this transaction. He knew respondent relied solely upon him in this entire matter, and he owed her a duty to see that she secured a reasonably safe and legal investment. As we have already seen, the court found that the appellant had falsely represented to respondent that the property which respondent supposed she was purchasing was situated on a main highway from Pasadena to Long Beach. This alone was sufficient to indicate bad faith on the part of appellant toward respondent.

Other assignments as to the insufficiency of the evidence are made by appellant, but they either go to immaterial issues or they are without merit.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.

such a situation not irrevocably committed to the filing date affixed by the clerk. 2 Cal. Juris. p. 684, § 390; Duncan v. Times-Mirror Co., 109 Cal. 602, 42 P. 147.

Motion denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

204 Cal. 679

MARCHETTI et ux. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al. (Sac. 4058.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 6, 1928.

204 Cal. 678

PEOPLE v. GORDON. (Cr. 3128.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 6, 1928.

Criminal law § 1111(1)—Appeal will not be dismissed for failure to file statement of grounds when filed in time but marked as filed thereafter (Pen. Code, § 1247).

Appeal will not be dismissed for failure to file statement of grounds of appeal within time required by Pen. Code, § 1247, where it is shown from the record that order directing preparation of clerk's and reporter's transcripts, reciting therein that required statement had been made and filed, and order confirming such proceedings were made within time, though not marked "Filed" until thereafter; appellate court in such situation not being irrevocably committed to filing date affixed by clerk.

In Bank.

M. M. Gordon appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Superseding opinion 265 P. 879.

Laird L. Neal and Burke, Catlin & Burke, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PRESTON, J. Motion to dismiss appeal for alleged failure to file, within the time required by Penal Code, § 1247, statement of grounds of appeal.

Judgment was imposed on defendant on November 16, 1927. On November 21, 1927, the court gave and made an order directing the preparation of clerk's and reporter's transcripts, which recited therein that the required statement above referred to had been made and filed as a part of the application therefor. On November 22 there was made and filed a second order confirming these proceedings, in that it directed that, on the appeal, the original exhibits might be used. It is true that the order for preparation of the transcripts was not marked "Filed" until November 29th, and the same is true of said statement of grounds of appeal, but it is demonstrable from the record that the filing date should have been attached at least on November 21st, which was in due time. We are in

1. Negligence § 93(1)—Automobile driver's negligence cannot be imputed to guest not having any control over driver.

Negligence of driver of automobile cannot be imputed to guest therein, in absence of evidence that guest exercised some control over driver or possessed power to supervise manner of machine's operation.

2. Automobiles § 224(3)—Railroads § 327 (12)—Guest in motor vehicle approaching crossing is not bound to warn driver of approaching train.

Guest in motor vehicle approaching railroad crossing is under no legal obligation to warn driver of presence of tracks or of approaching train, where view is unobstructed, and driver is reasonably competent, but guest has right to assume that driver will exercise due care.

3. Death § 58(1)—In action for death, it is presumed deceased exercised due care.

In action for death, resulting from defendant's negligence, there is a presumption that deceased used due care and did all that reasonably was required of him for his protection.

4. Automobiles § 245(87)—Railroads § 350 (21)—Guest in automobile, killed in crossing collision, view of which was obstructed, held not contributorily negligent as matter of law for failure to look and warn driver.

In action against railroad and driver of automobile for death of guest in automobile, resulting from crossing collision, at point where view of trains from highway was obstructed, deceased, who merely sat in car, looking straight ahead, without assuming to exercise any control over its operation, was not as matter of law guilty of contributory negligence for failure to look and warn driver.

5. Negligence § 136(14)—Defendant's negligence is generally fact question for jury.

Negligence of defendant is generally question of fact for jury.

6. Trial § 139(1), 143, 165—Motion for nonsuit admits truth of plaintiff's evidence, and should be denied, if there is evidence tending to support plaintiff's action or if evidence is conflicting.

Motion for nonsuit admits truth of plaintiff's evidence, and, if there is any evidence tending to support plaintiff's action or if evidence is conflicting, nonsuit should be denied; evidence being interpreted most strongly against defendant.

7. Trial ⚡165—Plaintiffs, on motion for nonsuit, are not concluded by testimony of adverse parties called by plaintiffs for cross-examination (Code Civ. Proc. § 2055).

Plaintiffs, on defendants' motion for nonsuit, are not concluded by testimony of adverse parties called for cross-examination by plaintiffs, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2055; court being required to accept evidence most favorable to plaintiffs.

8. Railroads ⚡350(5, 9, 11)—Negligence of railroad held question for jury, in action for death at obstructed crossing, under evidence of failure to maintain automatic signals or give warning of train's approach, and excessive speed.

In action against railroad for death of guest in automobile at crossing of main traveled highway, view of which was obstructed, evidence of negligence of railroad in failing to equip crossing with automatic signals, and of failure of railroad's employees to sound bell or whistle, and of excessive speed of train at the time it entered the crossing, made question of negligence for jury.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by Angelo Marchetti and wife against the Southern Pacific Company and others. From an order granting a nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

David F. Bush, of Oakdale, and Frank J. Creede, of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. M. Walthall, of Modesto, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. Action by plaintiffs to recover damages for the death of their minor son, Dan Marchetti. The defendants Duree and Adair were the engineer and fireman, respectively, in charge of the train of the defendant the Southern Pacific Company at the time of the collision which resulted in the death of plaintiffs' son.

[1] The deceased at the time of his death was 18 years of age, and was then and for some time had been in the employ of W. L. Rodden, who was engaged in farming and stock raising near the city of Oakdale, in the county of Stanislaus. William J. Connors was also in Rodden's employ as his foreman. The deceased was killed in a collision with defendants' train while riding as a passenger in Connors' machine, as the two were traveling along A street, in said city. At the close of plaintiffs' evidence, the court granted a nonsuit, and, from the order granting the same, the plaintiffs have appealed. The opinion of the trial court, given at the time of granting the nonsuit, is set out in full in the record. It appears therefrom that the order was granted solely upon the ground that the evidence showed that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence which proximately caused his death. In this we think the court was in error. The evidence bearing upon this point was undisputed. The deceased was riding with Connors under the latter's direction, and had no control whatever over the operation of the automobile in which they were riding. There can be no question of Connors' negligence in driving the machine onto the railroad crossing without taking the proper precautions to observe whether a train was or was not approaching. The negligence of the driver of a machine, however, cannot be imputed to a passenger therein, in the absence of any evidence showing that the latter exercised some control over the driver or that he possessed the power to supervise or direct the manner in which the automobile should be operated. Bryant v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 737, 164 P. 385; Irwin v. Golden State Auto Tour Corp., 178 Cal. 10, 171 P. 1059; Nichols v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 630, 174 P. 319. In this case there was no such evidence. The deceased, as we have before stated, was simply going with Connors, in the latter's machine, for the purpose of attending to some matter of business regarding their employer's property. Connors was the foreman of his employer, and the deceased was subject to his orders. Connors had entire control of the machine, and was operating the same without any assistance or direction on the part of the deceased. If the deceased, therefore, was guilty of contributory negligence, it must have been by some act either of commission or omission on his part which of itself constituted contributory negligence. There was no evidence in the case tending to show any such act of negligence on the part of the deceased. All the witnesses agree that the deceased was simply sitting in the machine at the side of Connors, and that he was looking straight ahead of him while they were traveling along A street and just before their machine collided with the defendants' train. No witness testified, nor is there any evidence from which it may be inferred, that the deceased exercised or attempted to exercise any control or direction over the operation of the automobile by Connors.

[2-4] Respondents argue, however, that the evidence shows that, as the deceased was looking straight ahead, he could not have been looking to his left and along the railroad track on which the train was approaching, and that this failure of the deceased to look for the approaching train constituted contributory negligence on his part, which would defeat a recovery in this action. This argument, we think, is satisfactorily and completely answered by the following statement of the law on this subject, found in 3 Cal. Jur., pp. 853 and 854:

"A passenger in a motor vehicle approaching a railway crossing is under no legal obligation to warn the driver, either of the presence of the tracks or of an approaching train; the view being unobstructed and the driver reasonably competent and vigilant. And, while it is the passenger's duty to look and listen, it is not his duty to stop for a successful observation, since he has no authority over the driver, but is wholly subject to the latter's action. The passenger has a right to suppose that the driver, on approaching a railway crossing with which he is familiar, will exercise due care for the protection and safety of his passengers, and that, even when so near the crossing as to be in apparent danger of collision with an on-coming train, he will or may take some action which will avert an accident. Nor is the passenger obliged, even when the danger of collision becomes suddenly imminent, to displace the driver, seize the operating levers, and endeavor to avoid the impending catastrophe. Nevertheless, it has been said that the passenger must look out for himself, and may not, in a place of danger, as on approaching a railway crossing, rely blindly on the driver. But a passenger in a machine operated by another cannot be said as a matter of law to have been negligent in not calling the chauffeur's attention to the danger of a collision."

Respondents contend that under the authority of Thompson v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 748, 134 P. 709, and Parmenter v. McDougall, 172 Cal. 306, 156 P. 460, that a passenger in a vehicle operated by another is bound to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and that, if such passenger is aware that the operator is carelessly rushing into danger, it may be incumbent upon him to take steps for his safety. These cases undoubtedly contain a correct statement of the law upon the subject of a passenger's duty in case of known danger. They have little or no application to the present case, for the reason that it does not appear that there was anything that could have been done by the deceased which would have averted the collision. Had he looked in the direction the train was approaching, he could not, owing to the obstructions between him and the railroad right of way, have seen it until it had almost reached the street upon which he was traveling. Furthermore, had he seen it in time to have warned the driver, there is no assurance that the latter could have brought his machine to a stop before reaching the railroad track. There is a presumption that the deceased used due care and for his protection did all that reasonably was required of him. There is absolutely no evidence in this case to overcome or dispel this presumption. It was error, therefore, for the trial court to have granted defendants' motion for a nonsuit on the ground that the evidence on the part of plaintiffs showed that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence.

[5-8] Respondents contend, however, that, notwithstanding such error, the order should be sustained on the ground that there was no evidence that the defendants were negligent in the operation of their train at the time of the collision. Ordinarily negligence is one of fact to be determined by the jury. Runkle v. Southern Pacific Milling Co., 184 Cal. 714, 195 P. 398, 16 A. L. R. 275; Lampert v. Southern Pacific Co., 183 Cal. 326, 191 P. 527. "A motion for nonsuit admits the truth of the plaintiff's evidence and upon such motion the evidence should be interpreted most strongly against the defendant. If there is any evidence tending to sustain the plaintiff's action, or if the evidence is conflicting, a nonsuit should be denied without passing upon the sufficiency of the evidence." 19 Cal. Jur. 740. In the present action there was evidence tending to show that the crossing made by the railroad right of way and A street was dangerous to those traveling along A street. While the defendant company had placed the ordinary warning signs found at railroad crossings at the crossing where the collision happened, it had not equipped the same with any automatic signal, although some two years before, and probably just after A street was paved, the city authorities had requested the company to do so. It was held in Green v. Southern Pacific Co., 53 Cal. App. 194, 202, 199 P. 1059, 1062:

That the law imposed "upon a railroad company the duty to use reasonable care, corresponding to the circumstances constituting the probable danger, to avoid injury to persons lawfully traveling upon the public highway crossed by the company's tracks and trains. It then becomes a question for a jury to decide whether or not it was negligence for the company to run its cars across the highway without providing a flagman or some means of warning to travelers at the place of crossing. And, where the facts in evidence prove that usually or frequently there are obstructions which interfere with the opportunity to see moving trains while travelers on the highway are approaching a much-traveled crossing, it cannot be held that as a matter of law it is not negligence to run trains there without warning signals other than those usually given by engines and cars."

The evidence in this case shows that A street is the main traveled highway, for persons entering the city of Oakdale from the north by automobiles, and that there is a considerable amount of travel thereon. On the lot of land located along the northerly line of A street and extending to the railroad right of way there was, on the day of the collision, a grove of large olive trees, and near the southwest corner of this lot and about 60 feet east of the center line of the right of way is a shed or barn. These trees and building obstruct the view of persons traveling westerly on A street to such an extent that they are unable to observe the railroad track north of the street until they pass by the barn or building on said lot. These obstructions also prevent those operating trains on said track and coming from the north from observing persons or objects on A street east of the barn or building until they are practically within the crossing. This was the evidence given by the engineer. The evidence was also in conflict as to the extent and number of warnings given by the railroad crew as they approached this crossing. There were two eyewitnesses to the accident, Mr. and Mrs. White. Mr. White testified that the only whistle he heard was given when the train was 200 or 300 feet from the crossing. He testified that he saw before this whistle was sounded, "the exhaust such a whistle would make," but did not hear any sound of the whistle at that time. He also said he saw the bell on the engine moving, but could not hear any sound, as the engine of his automobile was running. Mrs. White, who was in the automobile with her husband, said that she heard no sound either of the whistle or the bell, but that she was under great excitement at the time, as she saw the two men, the deceased and Connors, approaching the railroad crossing on A street from the east at the same time the train was approaching the crossing from the north. Mr. and Mrs. White were traveling easterly on A street, and, when they saw the train coming from the north, they stopped their automobile some 50 or 60 feet west of the track, and remained there until after the collision. The only other witness, besides the two trainmen, who testified upon this subject, was L. D. Hardwick, who kept a filling station on A street, about 300 feet east of the right of way. He said he heard no bell and only one sound from the whistle, and immediately afterwards he heard the crash. While the two trainmen, who were called for cross-examination under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, testified that they gave the required signals, both by ringing the bell and sounding the whistle, the plaintiffs, especially upon a motion for a nonsuit, would not be concluded by their evidence; it being the duty of the court upon a motion for a nonsuit to accept the evidence most favorable to the plaintiffs.

A third consideration bearing upon the negligence was the evidence in regard to the speed the train was traveling at the time and just before it entered the crossing. While the witnesses generally gave the speed at about 25 miles per hour, which might or might not be considered by the jury as a negligent rate of speed under all the facts and circumstances in evidence in the case, one witness, Mrs. White, testified that it appeared to her that the train was gaining on the car in which Connors and the deceased were traveling, and that, at the time Mr. White stopped his car, the distance the locomotive was from the crossing "was as much again" as the distance the Connors machine was from the crossing; that "the locomotive gained on the automobile at every instant, the locomotive entirely crossed the crossing before it collided with the machine." The evidence, without much, if any, conflict, was that the automobile was traveling, at the time Mrs. White observed it, at 25 miles per hour. The inference might be reasonably drawn from her testimony that the locomotive was traveling at a speed of 50 miles per hour at the time it entered the crossing and at the time of the collision. Taking this evidence as a whole, we do not believe the court would have been justified in holding that, as a matter of law, it failed to show that the defendants were negligent in the operation of the train across A street. It at least tended to show negligence on defendants' part, which proximately caused the injury to deceased, and this is all that is required, when considered upon a motion for a nonsuit.

The order granting defendants' motion for a nonsuit is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, Justice pro tem.; PRESTON, J.

204 Cal. 646

QUIST et al. v. EMPIRE WATER CO.★
(Sac. 4028.)

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 30, 1928.

1. Waters and water courses ⇨232—Water company, acquiring water rights under agreement requiring distribution to certain lands, held trustee, with mere naked legal title for use of beneficial owners.

Water company, acquiring certain water rights and system of irrigation by reason of conveyance from land company, as part of and to carry out scheme of subdivision, under agreement that water company as agent had right to take water and to distribute same to lands through its water system, held a trustee, with mere naked legal title for use of beneficial owners, and a mere agent of land company for purpose of distributing the waters in accordance with the agreement.

2. Waters and water courses ⇨247(1)—Evidence held to sustain finding that water company was about to sell shares of stock in water system.

Evidence, in suit to enjoin water company from disposing of certain shares in water system and in water and water rights represented thereby, held to sustain finding that defendant was about to sell and transfer such shares to an irrigation company.

3. Waters and water courses ⇨247(2)—Owners of land in irrigation district held entitled to injunction to restrain water company from disposing of stock in water system.

Owners of land within irrigation district held not to have such a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law so as to preclude injunction to restrain water company from disposing of shares of stock in water system and water and water rights represented thereby; mandamus being an inadequate remedy because of fact that rights to perpetual water right could not be adjudicated therein.

4. Equity ⇨43—Mere fact that there may be remedy at law does not oust jurisdiction of court of equity.

Mere fact that there may be a remedy at law does not oust the jurisdiction of a court of equity, in that, to have such effect, the remedy must also be speedy, adequate, and efficacious to the end in view, and must reach the whole mischief and secure the whole right of party in perfect manner at present time.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Suit by George Quist and others against the Empire Water Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Scarborough & Bowen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Clark Clement, of Lemoore, and M. L. Short, of Hanford, for respondents.

TYLER, Justice pro tem. Suit to enjoin and to restrain defendant corporation from disposing of certain shares of stock in a water system and the water and water rights represented thereby.

The complaint is somewhat voluminous. The facts show that in 1902 defendant, Empire Water Company, hereinafter designated as the water company, acquired certain water rights and a system of irrigation and diverted from Kings river waters for irrigation and other purposes. In January, 1906, the Empire Investment Company, hereafter described as the land company, was the owner of a large tract of land, comprising some 18,712 acres, situated in Kings county, which it desired to subdivide for purposes of sale. The land company at the same time owned 8½ shares of capital stock in a company known as the Lemoore Canal & Irrigation Company, hereinafter designated as the canal company, which shares it conveyed to the water company as a part of and to carry out the scheme of subdivision. On the 8th of January, 1906, the land company, for the purpose of furthering its plan, entered into a certain agreement with the water company. This agreement sets forth the ownership of the real property by the land company, and it recites that all of said lands are riparian to Kings river; that the water company is the owner of a complete water distribution system over and through said tract of land by means whereof the entire tract is irrigable; that the water company also has the right, as the agent of the land company to take from the said river the water to which the lands of the tract are entitled as riparian to the river and to distribute the same to the lands through its water system; that the water company owns 8½ shares of the capital stock of the canal company and the water to which said shares are entitled. The contract then provides that both the land company and the water company mutually desire to create, establish, and maintain a binding and permanent arrangement whereby the water system shall be properly maintained, and that all the water of both companies, through and by means of such system, be perpetually delivered and distributed to all the landowners of said tract by said water company, and that, in the delivery and distribution thereof, such available water shall be prorated and divided to each subdivision in certain proportionate shares, at the rate of $1 per acre. It further provides that the rights and benefits granted and the duties and liabilities imposed upon each purchaser shall remain appurtenant to and binding upon each subdivision and not to be separated except by written agreement by the interested parties.

On the day the contract was made, the land company, by deed, conveyed to the water company all of its ditches, canals, weirs and rights of way over the lands. The deed contained a provision which empowered the water company, as agent of the land company, to take the water of Kings river flowing over the lands or to which such lands were entitled, and to distribute the same over the tract through the system of the water company in accordance with the terms of the contract made between the parties. The deed expressly provided, however, that it was not the intention of the land company to convey to the water company any riparian or water rights, but that such waters and water rights in said river to which said lands were entitled by reason of their riparian character should remain a part of and be appurtenant to said lands; the water company having only the right to take and distribute the same as the agent of the land company and its assigns and successors in interest. Then follow allegations to the effect that all the lands described in the complaint are agricultural in character and have been used for raising crops and other purposes and cannot be so used without irrigation or without the use of the 8% shares of the capital stock of the canal company. Under this arrangement, the lands were sold, and each and every parcel conveyed by the land company to plaintiffs or their predecessors in interest contained the recital that the land company granted to the purchasers all appurtenances, water, and water rights thereunto belonging, including that proportion of the waters of Kings river to which the tract owned by the grantor was entitled as riparian to the river, subject, however, to the rights and privileges of the water company under its contract with the land company.

The complaint then charges that the water company, in violation of the rights of plaintiffs, and for the purpose of depriving them of the benefits of the 8% shares of the capital stock of the canal company and of the water which plaintiffs are or may be entitled thereunder, is attempting to sell to a neighboring irrigation district the said shares of stock and the water rights represented thereby for the sum of $69,000, and, unless prevented, such sale will be consummated, and the waters diverted, to the irreparable damage of plaintiffs. It is then alleged that plaintiffs have no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law, and an order is prayed for permanently restraining defendant from selling to the irrigation company the shares above referred to. Defendant company, by answer, admitted with certain qualifications, all of the averments of the complaint. It denied the allegations to the effect that defendant threatened and was about to sell the water stock, or that such act would cause plaintiffs irreparable injury by depriving their lands forever of the water represented by the shares in question, and it also denied that plaintiffs have no speedy and adequate remedy at law. The action was tried and findings made in favor of plaintiffs, and judgment was entered restraining defendant from selling said shares of stock or the water or water rights obtained thereunder. It is here claimed that the evidence is insufficient to justify certain of the findings.

The portions objected to are, in substance, as follows: (1) That the water company was the mere agent of the land company and its successors and assigns for the purpose of distributing water represented by the shares of stock; that it held title to such stock as trustee, and plaintiffs own a pro rata interest in such shares. (2) That defendant water company is about to sell and transfer such shares and the water rights and use thereof represented thereby. (3) That the sale will cause irreparable injury by depriving plaintiffs' lands forever of the use of the water represented by the shares of stock. (4) That plaintiffs have no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law.

[1-4] Defendant, appellant herein, contends that it is the owner in fee of its water system and the shares of stock in the canal company, together with the water rights attached thereto, and does not hold such property as trustee or in trust for plaintiffs, but does, on the contrary, own and operate the entire system, subject only to the duty or obligation to furnish and deliver water to plaintiffs' lands upon the payment of the water rate provided for in the water contract. There is no merit in this claim. Upon this subject, as pointed out in the findings, the record shows that the parties stipulated at the trial that each of the plaintiffs had a substantial interest in and right to the use of the waters obtained by the defendant under the shares of stock in question, and that such right or interest is legally, and also by virtue of the contract, appurtenant to the lands owned by each of the plaintiffs. The water agreement and the deed under which the land company transferred its ditches and the shares of stock in the canal company in order to carry out the scheme were also in evidence. By the terms of these instruments the water which defendant company was obligated to supply was of two sorts—that deliverable upon the stock of the canal company and that which was riparian to the land. No distinction whatever was made in the contract between the riparian and canal waters. Under the water agreement, defendant company was expressly made the agent of the landowners for the purpose of distributing the riparian waters, and it was manifestly the intention of the parties when the land company transferred to defendant the water shares for the use and benefit of its lands, and as appurtenant thereto, to likewise make it its agent as to these waters for the same purpose. No distinction whatsoever is made in the contract as to the different sorts of waters; they being referred to throughout the contract as the waters. Both sorts of waters being appurtenant to and part of the land itself, defendant has no interest or title therein other than its right to convert and distribute them in conformity with the terms of its agreement. Having no interest or title in or to the waters it is beyond its power to make any legal conveyance of the same. Upon this subject the court found defendant to be the mere agent of the land company for the purpose of distributing the waters in accordance with the agreement. It also found that the effect of the agreement was to make defendant a trustee of the water stock and to clothe it with the mere naked legal title for the use of the beneficial owners. The evidence fully supports this finding, which finding is in accord with the conclusion of this court in Stratton v. Railroad Commission, 186 Cal. 119, 122, 198 P. 1051, where it had occasion to analyze this identical contract. The view was there expressed that defendant company was a mere instrumentality for the purpose of diverting and distributing the waters to which the owners were entitled under the terms of their agreement with the land company.

Nor does the fact that the duty or obligation which was imposed upon the water company was likewise imposed upon "its successors and assigns" give rise, as claimed, to any different conclusions. By the employment of the term in question, it was manifestly the intention of the parties to have the successors or assigns of the water company bound by the agreement in the event of a sale of its water distributing system, a duty that the successors were required to perform irrespective of this covenant if they bought with notice. Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 93 P. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359; South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land Co., 152 Cal. 579, 93 P. 490. Equally without merit is the claim that there is no evidence to support the finding that defendant water company is about to sell and transfer to an irrigation company the shares in question and the water rights and use thereof represented thereby. It appears therefrom that there are 53 shares of stock in the canal company, including the shares in question, and that there is a tentative agreement existing for the sale of the same to the irrigation company at $8,000 per share or $424,000 for the entire issue. The court found it to be the intention of the canal company by the sale to divert the water represented by the shares upon lands other than the tract in question, and this is the only reasonable inference that can be drawn from the testimony.

Nor is there any merit in the further claim that such diversion would not cause irreparable injury to plaintiffs, or that plaintiffs have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law. It was stipulated at the trial that the question of damages was not to be considered. The case was tried under the stipulation, upon the theory that, if the plaintiffs could be or would be deprived of the water appurtenant to their lands by the sale of the water stock by the defendant, the plaintiffs, and each of them, would suffer very serious damage sufficient to justify the issuance of an injunction, and there was evidence to show that without the waters represented by the shares there would be an insufficient supply to irrigate the lands in question. It is plain under all the circumstances of the case that mandamus would be an inadequate remedy to plaintiffs, because of the fact that their rights to a perpetual water right could not be adjudicated in such a proceeding. Townsend v. Fulton Irr. Dist., 17 Colo. 142, 29 P. 453. The undoubted purpose of plaintiffs is, by this proceeding, to obtain a judgment settling their rights so as to determine for all time any claims and contentions that may arise in the future. To such a decree they are entitled. The mere fact that there may be a remedy at law does not oust the jurisdiction of a court of equity. To have this effect, the remedy must also be speedy, adequate, and efficacious to the end in view. 10 Cal. Jur., § 10, p. 467. It must reach the whole mischief and secure the whole right of the party in a perfect manner at the present time and not in the future. Otherwise equity will interfere and give such relief and aid as the exigencies of the case may require. Dingley v. Buckner, 11 Cal. App. 181, 104 P. 478. Here the action is one primarily to prevent a sale of trust property. It may be conceded that defendant is entitled to sell its water system, but it has no authority to sell the shares therein owned by plaintiffs or the water and water rights represented thereby, which it does not own, and which are appurtenant to plaintiffs' lands.

The judgment restraining such sale is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; LANGDON, J.

205 Cal. 22

CAMPBELL v. MILLER et ux. (L. A. 9282.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 13, 1928.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨44—Evidence held to sustain finding that purchaser at time of purchasing real property knew of existence of lease thereon and took title subject thereto.

Evidence in action to recover on note given as part payment for real property held to sustain finding that defendant at the time of purchasing such property knew of the existence of a lease thereon and purchased such property with knowledge thereof and with agreement that title was to be taken subject to terms of lease.

2. Evidence ⇨441(8)—Rule that deed cannot be varied by parol evidence has no application to escrow agreement.

Where evidence explaining that deed was taken subject to existing lease on property was not in parol but was in a writing signed by purchaser pursuant to transfer through escrow, rule to effect that deed cannot be varied by parol evidence has no application.

3. Evidence ⇨441(8)—Admitting escrow agreement explaining that deed was subject to existing lease held not obnoxious to law providing written agreement supersedes previous negotiations (Civ. Code, § 1625).

Admission of evidence consisting of escrow agreement to effect that deed was subject to existing lease on property held not obnoxious to provisions of Civ. Code, § 1625, to effect that a written agreement supersedes all negotiations or stipulations concerning its matters which precede or accompany execution of instrument.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Addie S. Campbell against E. H. Miller and wife, wherein defendant named filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

William M. Rex, of Los Angeles, for appellant E. H. Miller.

Kemp, Partridge & Kemp, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. [1] Action brought to recover the amount due on a promissory note, given as part payment of certain real property, sold by the plaintiff to the defendant E. H. Miller, who will be referred to hereafter as the defendant. Alice A. Miller, the other defendant, is his wife, and her only interest in said real property is by reason of this relationship. By an amended answer and cross-complaint defendant sought to recover damages for an alleged breach of an implied covenant of the grant deed, executed by plaintiff to defendant E. H. Miller and conveying to said defendant the said real property. Said breach consisted, according to said amended answer and cross-complaint, of an outstanding lease of said premises, executed by plaintiff prior to said conveyance, whereby plaintiff leased said premises as a storeroom for a term extending some two years beyond the time of the purchase thereof by said defendant. The court found that "the said defendants had full notice and knowledge of the existence of the said lease and purchased the said premises with such full knowledge and with the agreement that they took the title thereto subject to the terms of said lease." Judgment was in plaintiff's favor for the full amount sued for. From this judgment the defendant has appealed, and the sole point made by him for a reversal of the judgment is that the evidence does not support the above finding of the court.

There was substantial evidence before the trial court to show that defendant E. H. Miller was well acquainted with the said real property before the purchase thereof by himself; that he owned the adjoining property; and that he knew of the lease of said premises at the time of said purchase. The transfer of the property from plaintiff to him was consummated through escrow. At the same time defendants were selling half of said real property to a third party, and this second transaction was also carried on and completed through escrow. The escrowed instructions with plaintiff and also those with said third party were each signed by defendant E. H. Miller, and the former contained the following provision: "I waive your securing lease through escrow; rent to be adjusted outside of escrow." And the latter escrowed instruction contained a similar statement in these words, "I waive your securing lease through escrow; no rent to be adjusted through this escrow." After the execution and delivery of the deed the defendant for some months collected the rents due under the lease from the tenant in possession. Some two months after the date of the deed defendant called upon plaintiff and asked for said lease, which was given him by the plaintiff. After this suit was brought, the defendant called upon plaintiff's attorneys and secured a stay of proceedings in the action upon the promise that he would be able in a short time to secure the money and pay the note in suit. Up to this time defendant never made any claim that he purchased the property free of said lease, nor did he make any objections to plaintiff or her attorneys as to the existence of the lease. This evidence is amply sufficient to support the finding of the court that at the time he purchased said real property he knew of the existence of said lease and purchased said real property with knowledge thereof. It is also sufficient in our opinion to support the finding that he purchased said real property "with the agreement that he took title thereto subject to the terms of said lease." If we shut our eyes to the conduct of defendant E. H. Miller subsequent to the purchase, when he accepted rent from the lessee, secured the written lease from plaintiff, without making any objections that it was an incumbrance on the property he purchased, and promised and agreed after suit was instituted to pay the amount due on the note provided an extension of time was granted in which to make said payment, and look solely to the agreement of the parties at the time they were negotiating for the sale and purchase of said real property, we are convinced that we will find sufficient evidence to support the finding last referred to. We refer particularly to the written escrow instructions, which were signed by the parties and under which the grant deed to defendant was prepared and executed. These refer to the lease upon the premises, and contain an express waiver by defendant that the escrow holder need not secure this lease and that the rent thereunder would be adjusted outside the escrow. It is difficult to understand what the parties meant by this language unless they intended that the sale should be made subject to the lease. The agreement that the rent should be adjusted outside the escrow was a clear indication that the lease should continue on the property after its purchase by defendant and that the rent due under the lease would be adjusted, undoubtedly by the plaintiff receiving her pro rata share of the rent of the property up to the date of the purchase, and the defendant to receive the rent thereafter. If defendant under this agreement was to receive the rent of the property after the purchase, then the lease was not to terminate upon the purchase. While the escrow agreement does not specify the term of the lease, yet it mentions the lease, and, as there was only one lease of the premises, it must be assumed that it was the lease under which the tenant in possession held the premises, to which the parties referred in their escrow agreement. Defendant contends that he was entitled to rest upon his grant deed and the implied covenant therein against incumbrances suffered by the grantor. Ordinarily this would be so, but in the present instance, by an agreement in writing under which the deed was drawn and thereafter executed and delivered, he expressly waived this implied covenant and agreed to accept the title to the property subject to the lease.

[2] Defendant has cited authorities to the effect that the deed cannot be varied by parol evidence. This rule has no application to the facts in the present action for the reason that the evidence by which it is sought to explain the deed was not in parol but was in a writing signed by the defendant, directing the omission from the deed of the very matter upon which he now seeks to rely. In Mann v.

Montgomery, 6 Cal. App. 646, 92 P. 875, the grantee sought to recover damages for the breach of the implied covenants in a grant deed by reason of the existence of a lease upon the premises at the time of their purchase. It was held that as the grantee required and obtained an assignment of the lease, the deed and assignment must be construed as one instrument, and the deed must be held subject to the lease.

[3] For a like reason the admission of this evidence was not obnoxious to the provisions of section 1625 of the Civil Code, which provides that a written agreement supersedes all negotiations or stipulations concerning its matters, which precede or accompany the execution of the instrument. Savings Bank of So. Cal. v. Asbury, 117 Cal. 96, 48 P. 1081; Sivers v. Sivers, 97 Cal. 518, 32 P. 571. In the first of these two cases this court said:

"The rule that an agreement in writing supersedes all prior or contemporaneous oral negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter has no application to a collateral agreement upon which the instrument is silent, and which does not purport to affect the terms of the instrument."

If this rule of the Code has no application to a collateral agreement, it certainly would not apply to escrow instructions under which the deed was prepared and the purpose of which was to direct and specify the subject-matter or contents of the deed.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.

204 Cal. 687

FERAUT v. CITY OF SACRAMENTO et al.
(Sac. 4019.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 8, 1928.

1. Injunction §118(3)—Complaint to enjoin enforcement of zoning ordinance, alleging only that plaintiff was prevented from using property for other than limited residence purposes, held demurrable.

Complaint in action to enjoin enforcement of a municipal zoning ordinance, alleging only that plaintiff was prevented from using real property for business and commercial purposes, while other persons were permitted to use property for such purposes in other districts more thickly populated and densely settled and exclusively devoted to residence purposes, held demurrable, as failing to state any fact or facts that would tend to invalidate ordinance.

2. Municipal corporations §601—Zoning ordinance held not illegal because establishing commercial zone directly across street from residence zone.

Municipal zoning ordinance held not illegal because of fact that commercial zone is situated directly across street from residence zone, on ground that it thereby favored those owning property on side of street permitting use for commercial purposes.

3. Municipal corporations $\S$ 601—Zoning ordinance held not invalidated because property in business district directly across street from residential district was greatly enhanced in value, because of classification.

The fact that property situated within business zone directly across street from residence zone was greatly enhanced in value by the sole reason of its being classified as commercial property, and that said residence property opposite the commercial property was greatly reduced in value, held not to invalidate zoning ordinance, since every exercise of police power affects adversely property interest of somebody.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 601—City council, in establishing zones, has large discretion in determining what property is commercial.

Determination as to whether property placed in residential zone is as a matter of fact commercial rests largely in discretion of city council.

5. Municipal corporations $\S$ 601—That placing property in residence district immediately across street from business district depreciated value held immaterial.

Fact that zoning ordinance establishing residence district across street from business district operated to depreciate value of property in residence district held immaterial, as being what might legitimately follow from proper and legal inclusion of property in a zone or district different from that in which adjacent property was included.

6. Municipal corporations $\S$ 601—System adopted in creating municipal zoning districts held sufficiently general, uniform, and comprehensive.

System employed in establishing municipal zoning districts, including territory along river and railroads as industrial property and adjacent territory, as business property, with certain small areas in residential district known as business property, held sufficiently general, uniform, and comprehensive.

7. Municipal corporations $\S$ 601—Municipal authorities have large discretion in adoption of proper system of zoning.

The adoption of a proper system of zoning is largely in the power and discretion of municipal authorities.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by Ella Feraut against the City of Sacramento and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hughes, Bradford, Cross & Prior and Bradford, Cross & Prior, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

R. L. Shinn, of Sacramento, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. Action against the city of Sacramento and its officers by a property owner of said city to enjoin the enforcement of a zoning ordinance enacted by the city council of said city. A general demurrer to plaintiff's complaint was sustained by the trial court, and, upon her refusal to amend said complaint, the court entered its judgment in favor of defendants. From this judgment plaintiff has appealed. The facts recited herein are those set out in the complaint. The city of Sacramento, on April 19, 1923, passed a general zoning ordinance, in which the territory within its limits was divided into five separate districts, therein designated as first residential, second residential, commercial, light industrial, and heavy industrial. It was further provided in said ordinance that no land or buildings in the commercial district should be used for any other purpose than for stores and other commercial purposes specifically named therein, and that all land and buildings in the second residential district should be restricted to family dwellings, apartment houses, hotels, and other noncommercial purposes, except that in hotels or apartment houses containing a certain number of rooms or apartments 25 per cent. of the lot area might be devoted to retail business generally carried on in such buildings. Under the terms of said ordinance, plaintiff's said land was included in the second residential district. Plaintiff desired to erect a building upon her said land, to be used as a store, and made application therefor upon blanks provided for that purpose by the building inspector. She was informed by the building inspector that by reason of said ordinance she was prohibited from erecting a store building on her said lot, as the same was located in the second residential district, and her said application was denied. The building inspector informed plaintiff that, if she attempted to erect such a building upon her said lot without such a permit, she would be prosecuted by the municipal authorities for the violation of said zoning ordinance. Thereupon plaintiff instituted this action. The ordinance referred to is set out in full in the complaint, and as a part thereof is a map of the city of Sacramento, on which are delineated the respective zoning districts into which said city is divided, and the location of plaintiff's said lot in said city. Plaintiff's lot is situated on the south side of J street, which is one of the main thoroughfares of said city and one of the two main arteries from Sacramento to Fair Oak, Folsom, and other communities lying easterly of said city. This map shows plaintiff's said lot to be located in a large residential district extending on either side of said J street. None of the property along J street within 2,000 feet of plaintiff's property on either side of said street is located within other than a residential district except two contiguous blocks on the north side of said street, one of which blocks is immediately opposite plaintiff's property. That portion of said two blocks facing on J street, with a depth of 100 feet or more, is zoned as business property. Upon that portion of these two blocks zoned as business property, and within 250 feet of plaintiff's lot, there is located a gas station, grocery store, drug store, butcher shop, hardware store, dry goods store, a delicatessen, "and what is now or formerly was a sanatorium." It appears from the complaint, we think, that this commercial district opposite plaintiff's property was in existence at the time of the adoption of the ordinance. Plaintiff has alleged a number of reasons, some of which rest upon pleaded facts, others upon mere legal conclusions, why said ordinance is invalid, and her first contention is that she should be permitted to prove these allegations of her complaint, and thus show the invalidity of the ordinance in the respects wherein its validity is questioned, and that without such an opportunity she is deprived of her substantial rights. This would be true only in case the facts so pleaded are sufficient to show the invalidity of said ordinance. If the facts so alleged are not sufficient for that purpose, then plaintiff's complaint fails to state a cause of action, and the general demurrer was properly sustained.

[1] Plaintiff asserts that her complaint was drawn to plead a situation analogous to those considered in Re Application of Throop, 169 Cal. 93, 145 P. 1029, Curtis v. City of Los Angeles, 172 Cal. 230, 156 P. 462, and Pacific Palisades Ass'n v. Huntington Beach, 196 Cal. 211, 237 P. 538, 40 A. L. R. 782. The first of these cases involved the validity of an ordinance of the city of South Pasadena, dividing said city into districts or zones, and providing that a stone crusher should not be operated in district No. 3, while the same might be carried on in district No. 2. This court held that:

"An ordinance which prevents the operation of a stone crusher in a sparsely settled territory of 2,163 acres, 500 of which are undeveloped and practically uninhabited and allows its operation in a small area of 11.65 acres in the center of a city surrounded by 'poorer classes of residences,' does not subserve the ends for which the police power exists."

In Curtis v. City of Los Angeles, supra, the validity of a city ordinance was involved which prohibited the establishment of a livery stable in a certain district of the city. It was held that the ordinance, in that it absolutely prohibited the maintenance of stables within a small district of the city which was comparatively sparsely settled, while permitting their maintenance in other districts more thickly populated and densely settled, and as exclusively devoted to residence purposes as was the sparsely settled district, was oppressive, discriminatory, and void. In the case of Pacific Palisades Ass'n v. Huntington Beach, supra, a general demurrer was sustained to the plaintiff's complaint, and this court, after reviewing the decisions of this and other jurisdictions upon the question of a municipality's power to regulate by ordinance an enterprise of that character within said municipality, held that:

"It is apparent from the averments of the complaint that appellant has attempted to plead a situation analogous to those considered in the two decisions of this court last cited. [In re Application of Throop and Curtis v. City of Los Angeles.] It has been fairly successful, and presents a case in which a property owner is prohibited by the municipality from installing machinery and operating an oil well on its property, while in other districts of the city, more thickly populated and densely settled, and devoted to residence purposes, the conduct of like operations is permitted. * * * For these reasons, appellant should be accorded the opportunity to establish, if it can, the unreasonableness and discriminatory character of the ordinance, which it alleges amounts to an unwarranted and arbitrary interference with its constitutional rights."

It is alleged in the complaint in the present action:

"That said zoning ordinance is not uniform in its operation, in this: That it prevents plaintiff from using her said real property for business and commercial purposes and prevents her from using it for any other purpose than limited residence purposes, while it permits other persons, firms, and corporations to use for business and commercial purposes property owned or rented by them in other districts more thickly populated and densely settled and exclusively devoted to residence purposes."

This allegation, plaintiff contends, contains a statement of sufficient facts which, if true, entitles her to the relief prayed for. Her contention, then, is that the complaint shows that the ordinance, while it prohibits her from using her property for business purposes, permits business to be carried on in residential sections of the city which are more densely populated than the district in which her property is located, and therefore the ordinance is not uniform in its operation, and accordingly is illegal. We think none of the three cases cited by plaintiff, and above referred to, support this contention of plaintiff. Each of these cases refers to some special and exceptional use to which property may be put, and they have but little application to the powers of municipal authorities to enact a general zoning ordinance. We do not understand that in dividing the territory of a city into industrial, business, and residential districts the authorities are controlled entirely by the density of population of these respective districts. There are other considerations which the city may well follow in determining whether certain territory within the city may be included in one or the other districts or zones. In one section of the city there may be railroad or water facilities which render such section naturally adapted to business purposes. Another section of the city, on account of its peculiar location, may be adapted to residential purposes. Can it be contended that, simply because the latter section of the city is less thickly populated than the other, the authorities are without power to set apart or zone the same for residential purposes? Yet this is at the most all the above-quoted allegation of the complaint shows in reference to plaintiff's property—that is, that it is located in a less populous district than other localities in said city where business is permitted.

In Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 497, 234 P. 388, much the same question arose. In that case the ordinance involved purported, among other things, to zone property along Wilshire boulevard. By the ordinance, one block on either side of La Brae avenue, which intersected Wilshire boulevard at right angles, was zoned as business property. The remainder of the property in the immediate vicinity of the intersection of those streets and facing on Wilshire boulevard was zoned as residential property. This court sustained said ordinance, and, after referring to the fact that one portion of the property along Wilshire boulevard had been zoned as residential property while adjacent property at the intersection of La Brae avenue and Wilshire boulevard had been included in a business district, said (page 512 [234 P. 394]):

"In this situation it may not be said that the ordinance is void for the reason that petitioners' property is zoned for residential uses, whereas business structures are permitted in other localities within the city similarly circumstanced as the property of the petitioners."

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the foregoing quoted allegation of the complaint fails to state any fact or facts which would tend to invalidate the ordinance.

[2] Under proper allegations, the complaint shows that plaintiff's property is situated directly across the street from business property, as zoned by said ordinance. Plaintiff contends that in this respect the ordinance is illegal, in that it favors those who own property on the north side of the street at the expense of those property owners whose property is located on the south side of said street. There is no merit in this contention. Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra; Brown v. City of Los Angeles, 183 Cal. 783, 192 P. 716.

[3] The further allegation is found in the complaint:

"That the property on the north side of J street between Thirty-Eighth and Thirty-Ninth streets, is, by the sole reason of its being classified as commercial property, greatly enhanced in value, and it exceeds in value the property on the south side of said street at least 100 per cent.; whereas, said property on the south side of J street, opposite said commercial property, is by reason of its being opposite said commercial property greatly reduced in value, and rendered practically undesirable as residence property."

Plaintiff contends that the facts set forth in this allegation are sufficient to warrant the granting of the relief demanded by her complaint. A similar claim was made as to the ordinance considered in the case of Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra, 195 Cal. 512 (234 P. 394), but this court held the claim untenable in the following language:

"The fact that the inclusion of the petitioners' property in zone B rather than in zone C depreciates its value is not of controlling significance. Every exercise of the police power is apt to affect adversely the property interest of somebody. Spector v. Building Inspector of Milton [250 Mass. 63] 145 N. E. 265, 267."

[4] Plaintiff makes further contentions as to the invalidity of the ordinance, all of which we may assume are based upon proper and sufficient allegations of fact in her complaint. These contentions will be considered in the order in which they are presented in her brief.

The first of these contentions is that the property of plaintiff is as a matter of fact commercial, notwithstanding the fiat of the city council. This is a matter largely in the discretion of the city council, and courts are loath to substitute their judgment for that of the municipal authorities. Miller v. Board of Public Works, 195 Cal. 477, 234 P. 381, 38 A. L. R. 1479; Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra. There are no special allegations in the complaint to support this contention, except that plaintiff's property is situate opposite and across the street from property within a business district.

The contention that residential uses are forced to abut on business areas is conclusively answered in the Zahn Case, as is also the further contention that a monopoly is created in favor of business establishments which are situated across the street from plaintiff's property.

The further contention is made that plaintiff is not "pioneering" a commercial district in an exclusive residential district, but is seeking a store in a proven commercial district. The allegations of the complaint upon which plaintiff relies to support this contention are that her property is located opposite and across the street from property which is zoned for business uses. This presents the same question as was presented in the Zahn Case, where the petitioner's property, which was included in a residential district, was situated opposite and across the street from property zoned for business uses. There is no merit in this contention.

There are further claims made by plaintiff of the invalidity of the ordinance which we think find no support in the allegations of the complaint. The first of these are "that the property of plaintiff is in effect confiscated to an ultra-æsthetic idea." We think from what we have already said that it plainly appears that there has been no confiscation of plaintiff's property. That being so, the contention that the municipal authorities were actuated by ultra-æsthetic ideas in the enactment of the ordinance becomes of no moment.

[5] Equally without merit is the contention "that said zoning ordinance is unequally administered to the practical financial ruin of appellant." The complaint shows no damage to plaintiff or to her property, but what might legitimately follow from the proper and legal inclusion of her property in a zone or district different from that in which adjacent property is included. Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra, 195 Cal. 512, 234 P. 388; Spector v. Building Inspector of Milton, supra.

[6, 7] Finally, plaintiff contends "that the system in vogue in Sacramento is not a general, uniform, and comprehensive one." As already noted, the complaint shows that by the ordinance in question the city of Sacramento was divided into five zones or districts. The ordinance includes the whole of the territory within the municipality. The Sacramento river bounds the city on the west, and the Southern Pacific Railroad runs in a general easterly and westerly direction through the northern limits of the city. The Western Pacific Railroad runs parallel to, and some 15 or 16 blocks south of, the tracks of the Southern Pacific Company. The area along the river front and adjacent to the railroad tracks is included in industrial districts, both heavy and light. Between the lines of these two railroad companies, and extending from Second street on the west to Twenty-First street on the east, and from E street on the north to Q street on the south, the territory therein is largely zoned as business property. East of Twenty-First street to Thirty-First street is included in the second residential district, except the property along J street, which for a block on either side is zoned as business property, and except also a few small areas therein, which are also zoned as business districts. East of Thirty-First street to the city limits for about 30 blocks the territory of the city is mainly zoned for residential uses. There are a few small areas in this territory which are zoned as business property. Three of these face on J street, one of which is located opposite plaintiff's property, another is located on the south side of J street between Forty-Eighth and Fifty-First streets, and a third on the same side of the street between Fifty-Sixth and Fifty-Seventh streets. There are other remote sections of the city, but it is not necessary to go into details regarding the manner in which they are zoned. Since the adoption of the general ordinance, there have been a number of amendments thereto adopted by the city whereby property originally located in a residential district has been rezoned as business property. None of these amendments, however, has affected plaintiff's property; nor so far as is shown in the complaint have they related to any property fronting on J street or in the neighborhood of plaintiff's property. Plaintiff claims that by reason of these changes in the residential sections of the city, and the creating thereby of business districts therein, the residential sections of the city have become "spotted," and "that the system in vogue in said city is not a general, uniform, and comprehensive one, but is a haphazard one." We think the general plan adopted by said ordinance for the zoning of said city, as briefly set forth above, cannot be criticized as lacking in those essentials which go to make up a general, uniform, and comprehensive system for the zoning of a modern city. The adoption of a proper system of zoning is largely in the power and discretion of the municipal authorities, and courts are loath to substitute their judgment for that of the duly constituted authorities of the city. "It is only when it is palpable that the measure in controversy has no real or substantial relation to the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare that it will be nullified by the courts." Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra, 195 Cal. 490, 234 P. 385, 38 A. L. R. 1479. The only particular in which the complaint charges that the present system of zoning is not general, uniform, and comprehensive is that, by the original ordinance and subsequent amendments thereto, the city has permitted small areas scattered throughout the residential sections to be zoned for business uses, and thereby permitted or caused the residential districts to become "spotted." This practice we think is in almost universal operation. It was followed in the ordinance considered in the Zahn Case, and was expressly approved and commended by this court, 195 Cal. 511, 234 P. 388.

We think we have considered and disposed of all the points made by the plaintiff in her assault upon the ordinance. In our opinion the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a decree nullifying the ordinance. The general demurrer thereto was properly sustained.

The judgment is accordingly affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, Justice pro tem.; PRESTON, J.

204 Cal. 668

MOODY v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 12781.)★

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 4, 1928.

Petition for Rehearing and Modification Denied Aug. 30, 1928.

1. Master and servant ⇐367—One who renders services in course of independent occupation, following employer's desires only in result of work done, is "independent contractor" (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 8 [b]).

One who renders service in the course of an independent employment or occupation, following his employer's desires only in the results of the work and not in the means whereby it is to be accomplished, is an independent contractor within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) § 8 (b), excluding independent contractors from status of employees.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Independent Contractor.]

2. Master and servant ⇐367—Employer's direction of work and control of place and manner of doing it determines whether workman is employee or independent contractor (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 8 [b]).

Decisive test in determining whether relationship is that of employee or independent contractor under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) § 8 (b), involves consideration of who has right to direct the work and who has general and complete control in determining when and how it shall be done.

3. Master and servant ⇐367—Nurse summoned by hospital management to care for patient held not entitled to compensation for infection sustained, because "independent contractor" and not employee (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 8 [a, b]).

Graduate nurse summoned by hospital management to take charge of patient at hospital, whose hours of employment and wages were governed by the operating schedule maintained between hospital and nurses' association, held independent contractor and not employee of patient under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) §§ 8 (a, b), 19 (d), as regards recovery of compensation for infection, incurred while on the case, since nurse was not subject to patient's orders with reference to methods of treating him.

In Bank.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Ida M. Dracket against Fred S. Moody. From an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in claimant's favor, the employer brings certiorari. Award annulled, and opinion of District Court of Appeal (260 P. 967) superseded.

Lloyd Baldwin and R. P. Wisecarver, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. Certiorari to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of Ida M. Dracket and against Fred S. Moody. Briefly, the facts are that petitioner, Fred S. Moody, while suffering from an infection, which caused a high fever and delirium, was ordered sent to the hospital by his physician, who requested the hospital to assign petitioner a room, to prepare the operating room, and to call in a special nurse. In response to the doctor's request, the respondent Ida M. Dracket, a professional nurse, was summoned by the hospital management to take charge of the case, her name being taken from a waiting list of nurses kept by the hospital. There was no agreement or understanding as to the nature of her duties or the right to control her services. Her hours of employment and the wages she was to receive were covered by an operating schedule maintained between the hospital and the nurses' association. The operation was performed, and petitioner's delirium continued for a period of a week or ten days thereafter. After attending the patient for a week, the respondent complained of a soreness in her thumb, and was immediately retired from the case. The soreness developed into an infection, and she remained at the hospital as a patient for over two months. She filed a claim with the Industrial Accident Commission for compensation for injuries arising out of and in the course of her employment by petitioner, and was granted an award for a temporary total disability from November 8, 1926, and continuing indefinitely. Petitioner seeks to have the award annulled, contending that the relationship of master and servant does not exist in this case; that the disputable presumption of employment based on personal service, embodied in section 8(b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) has no application to the facts here; and that the status of the respondent nurse at the time she became inoculated with the infection was not that of an employee, but that of an independent contractor, exercising an independent calling, and retaining the entire control over the method and manner of doing her work, in accordance with her learning, skill, and training.

The sole question to be considered therefore in this proceeding is whether a graduate nurse, attending a patient in her professional capacity, becomes an "employee" of the patient, within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, or is to be considered an "independent contractor." The commission contends that, having found that the respondent was performing service for petitioner at the time she became infected, it was presumed that her status was that of an employee; that, under section 19(d) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, the burden of showing that she was an independent contractor was upon petitioner; and that that burden of proof was never discharged and therefore the presumption was never overcome.

[1, 2] Section 8 (b) of the Compensation Act, above referred to, provides that:

"Any person rendering service for another, other than as an independent contractor, or as expressly excluded herein, is presumed to be an employee within the meaning of this act."

Many definitions of an "independent contractor" have been made, but they are not essentially different. Franklin Coal & Coke Co. v. Industrial Comm., 296 Ill. 329, 334, 129 N. E. 811. The following definition may be regarded as a correct statement of what constitutes an independent contractor: One who renders service in the course of an independent employment or occupation, following his employer's desires only in the results of the work, and not the means whereby it is to be accomplished. Brown v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 174 Cal. 457, 460, 163 P. 664; Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 99, 78 P. 337; Barton v. Studebaker Corp., 46 Cal. App. 707, 189 P. 1025; North Bend Lumber Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 76 Wash. 232, 242, 135 P. 1017. "It is well settled that, where one person is performing work in which another is beneficially interested, the latter may exercise over the former a certain measure of control for a definite and restricted purpose, without incurring the responsibilities, or acquiring the immunities, of a master, with respect to the person controlled." Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 811, 159 P. 721, 723. The decisive test of the relationship is: Who has the right to direct what shall be done, and when and how it shall be done? Who has the right to general control? Lassen v. Stamford Transit Co., 102 Conn. 76, 128 A. 117, 118; see, also, Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 191 Cal. 404, 407, 216 P. 578, 43 A. L. R. 1304. In other words, the test of what constitutes independent service lies in the control exercised. The test of control means complete control, and we must carefully distinguish between authoritative control and mere suggestion as to detail. Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, supra.

[3] We have found but one or two cases in the reports of the various states involving the status of a graduate nurse. "Ordinarily a trained nurse, performing her usual duties with the skill which is the result of training in that profession, does not come within the definition of a servant, but rather is one who renders personal services to an employer in pursuit of an independent calling." Parkes v. Seasongood (C. C.) 152 F. 583. The professions of doctor and nurse are so closely allied that decisions applicable to one would appear to apply equally well to the other. In the great majority of instances the inference, that it is the implied intention of the parties to contracts for the services of a medical practitioner that he is not to be under the employer's control with respect to the details of his work, is corroborated by the consideration that the employer is a person who does not possess the technical skill which would qualify him to exercise such control, and that it would for that reason, be highly inexpedient for him to attempt to exercise it. 19 A. L. R. 1186. "There is no more distinct calling than that of the doctor, and none in which the employee is more distinctly free from the control or direction of his employer." Pearl v. West End Street R. Co., 176 Mass. 177, 57 N. E. 339, 49 L. R. A. 830, 79 Am. St. Rep. 302. It is obvious that the judgment of the doctor, or nurse, must frequently be contrary to the wishes of the patient, and, in the exercise of their independent calling, it is their undisputed right to follow their own judgment without interference on the part of the patient. As was said in Quinn v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 94 Tenn. 713, 30 S. W. 1036, 28 L. R. A. 552, 45 Am. St. Rep. 767:

"It was necessary that these surgeons should bring to their work, not only their best skill, but the right to exercise it in accordance with their soundest judgment and without interference. Not only was this the right of these surgeons, but it was as well a duty that the law imposes. If the railroad authorities had undertaken to direct them as to the method of treatment of the injured man, and this method was regarded by them as unwise, they would have been 'bound to exercise their own superior skill and better judgment, and to disobey their employers, if in their opinion the welfare of the patient required it.' Railway Co. v. Artist, 9 C. C. A. 14, 60 F. 365 [23 A. L. R. 581]."

It is admitted here that the respondent nurse would have refused to obey orders given her by the petitioner with reference to the methods of treating him even had his condition permitted him to give such directions. She would take orders from the patient with respect to minor services looking to his comfort, but that measure of control falls far short of that complete and authoritative control which is the decisive test of the relationship of master and servant. In accordance with that test it would appear that the right to control and direct the work of the respondent nurse was not reserved to the petitioner, and that she must be deemed to be an independent contractor within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

The respondent contends that to hold contrary to its finding in this instance would be, in effect, to read into section 8 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act an exclusion of professional workmen, when such was not the intention of the Legislature. We cannot agree with this contention. The mere fact that the employee is one who carries on a separate and independent employment does not make him an independent contractor, although it is a circumstance to be taken into consideration as tending to show that he is an independent contractor. 39 C. J. 1319. When, in addition to this circumstance, there is lacking, as in the present instance, the essential element that the master or employer shall have control and direction, not only of the employment to which the contract relates, but of all its details (Pilger v. City of Paris Dry Goods Co. [Cal. App.] 261 P. 328), the relation of master and servant, or employer and employee, cannot exist, and the person performing the service must be deemed to be an independent contractor. Under the facts of this case, therefore, it follows that the respondent commission had no jurisdiction to make the award.

The award is annulled.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J;
PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS,
J.; LANGDON, J.

93 Cal. App. 358

CHAPLIN v. AMADOR et al. (Civ. 6322.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 30, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 27, 1928.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 931(1), 1011(1)—Findings upon conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal and all reasonable inferences are indulged to support them.

Findings of trial court upon conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal, and all reasonable inferences are indulged in support of findings.

2. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition $\S$ 70(1)—Motion picture actor held entitled to prevent another from adopting his rôle, garb, and mannerisms for purpose of deceiving public.

Motion picture actor held entitled to restrain another from imitating his rôle, garb, and mannerisms for purpose of fraud and deception of public; no question of monopoly or ownership of trade-name being involved.

3. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition $\S$ 97—Injunction restraining defendant from dealing in motion pictures likely to deceive public, in which defendant appeared with rôle and costume similar to plaintiff's, held not too broad.

Injunction restraining defendant from dealing with motion pictures likely to deceive public, in which defendant counterfeited plaintiff's rôle, and enjoining use of similar name, style of dress, and mannerisms in imitation of plaintiff's motion pictures, held not erroneous as too broad, where motion picture complained of was planned and executed to secure patronage on basis of plaintiff's reputation.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 110—Order denying new trial is not appealable.

Order denying motion for new trial is not an appealable order.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Hudner, Judge.

Action by Charles Chaplin against Charles Amador and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Ben M. Goldman and J. J. Lieberman, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lloyd Wright and Charles E. Millikan, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant Charles Amador from a judgment entered against all of the defendants, perpetually enjoining and restraining them, their servants, agents, and employees, and all persons acting in privity with them from, (a) disposing of, advertising, or dealing in a motion picture called "The Race Track"; (b) from using the name "Charles Aplin" or "Charlie Aplin," or any other name similar to that of plaintiff in connection with said motion picture, or any motion picture, in imitation of the motion pictures of plaintiff, which will be likely to deceive the public in believing that plaintiff is acting the rôle therein hereafter referred to; (c) from advertising, selling, or dealing in any motion pictures which are an imitation of the motion pictures of plaintiff, or style of dress, costume, or mannerisms constituting an imitation of the plaintiff in his name or in his playing or acting the part or character or rôle of Charlie Chaplin, and which are so like the motion pictures acted in and produced by the plaintiff, and in which the plaintiff plays the principal or leading or any part in such rôle, as to be likely to deceive the public in believing that said motion pictures are the motion pictures produced and acted by plaintiff, or which would have the likely effect of so deceiving.

The complaint alleges the fame of plaintiff as a motion picture star in the rôle in question, a valuable subsisting good will in such characterization; that he originated, perfected, and featured said make-up, garb, and mannerisms; described the nature of the garb, make-up, and mannerisms of the character; that defendants have produced some films in imitation of plaintiff's said rôle, and have dubbed Amador therein as "Charlie Aplin"; that the same is a fraudulent scheme and conspiracy to damage plaintiff and the public, etc.

The answer, in effect, is a general denial, and also alleges that plaintiff himself appropriated said make-up, garb, etc., and is himself a direct imitator of others in connection with said rôle.

The case was tried by the court, and findings were made in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, and judgment entered accordingly.

The record reveals that Charles Chaplin, commonly known to the public as "Charlie Chaplin," late in the year 1913 originated and perfected a particular type of character on the motion picture screen. In this character, Chaplin has generally worn a kind of attire peculiar and individual to himself, consisting of a particular kind or type of mustache, old and threadbare hat, clothes, and shoes, a decrepit derby, ill-fitting vest, tight-fitting coat, and trousers and shoes much too large for him, and with this attire, a flexible cane usually carried, swung, and bent as he performs his part. This character, and the manner of dress, has been used and portrayed by Charles Chaplin for so long, and with such artistry, that he has become well known all over the world in this character to such an extent that a display of his picture with the word "Charlie," or even with no name at all, has come to mean the plaintiff.

Late in the year 1920, or early in 1921, the defendants F. M. Sanford and G. B. Sanford, as producers, and the defendant Charles Amador, the appellant herein, as actor, entered into a plan or scheme, the purpose of which was that a series of twelve motion pictures would be produced in which the defendant Charles Amador, under the name of Charlie Aplin, would perform the leading role. In this scheme Amador was to be dressed in imitation of Chaplin and was to be featured in these pictures under the name of Charlie Aplin, which was an imitation of the name of Chaplin. One of the first steps in carrying out this scheme was the sending of letters by defendants to various states' rights distributors of motion pictures throughout the country. One of these letters contained the following announcement:

"We announce the production of twelve two-reel record breaking comedies featuring Charlie Aplin in the well-known character, famous the world over."

This letter was sent over the name of Sanford Productions, F. M. Sanford, manager. Similar letters were sent throughout the country on the letterhead of Sanford Productions, one of them reading in part as follows:

"Our comedian is a world beater in this famous character. There never was a better drawing card. A—Charlie Aplin—contract will soon be of big value in your territory, so wire us at once."

On the left-hand margin of this last letter were printed three views of "Charlie Aplin" in "this famous character."

Along with one of these letters there was sent a card having on one side of it a picture of Amador as "Charlie Aplin," and having on its reverse side printed matter taken from a San Diego paper, which in part is as follows:

"Aplin, whose name is like that of Charlie Chaplin, who looks like him and acts like him, and who is a regular fellow with it all, came down here for the Sanford Productions.

* * *

One picture, called by the defendants "The Race Track," was completed and taken to New York by F. M. Sanford for the purpose of showing it to states' rights distributors. This film was shown to a distributor by the name of Ochs, who considered it so manifestly an imitation of Chaplin's character and Chaplin's name that he refused to negotiate for it. Learning of this, the plaintiff filed a suit for injunction, and obtained a preliminary injunction pending the trial of the suit, and defendants were restrained from exhibiting said picture.

At the very opening of the trial, counsel for the defendants made this statement:

"The defendants are not contesting the rights of plaintiff in the exclusive use of his name or any other name similar to plaintiff's name. We have no desire to use the name of Charles Aplin or Charlie Aplin, or any other name similar in spelling or pronunciation or appearance to plaintiff's name. To that extent, without prejudice to the other issues in the case, the defendants are prepared to permit a decree in that respect, but, so far as the other issues in the case are concerned, we shall strenuously oppose them."

The court found, among other things, as follows:

"* * * That the plaintiff is the first person to use the said clothes, as described herein and as described in the complaint, in his performing as an actor in motion pictures, and it is true that he originated, combined, and perfected the manner of acting and mannerisms mentioned herein as used in motion pictures, and it is also true that the plaintiff is the first person to originate, use, combine, and perfect in motion pictures that certain form of acting, those mannerisms, facial expressions, and movements of his body hereinabove mentioned and described."

[1] Appellant first contends that there is no evidence that plaintiff originated the rôle or its separate parts. The evidence upon this question is conflicting. It has been repeatedly held that the findings of the trial court upon conflicting evidence are conclusive and binding upon this court, and all reasonable inferences are to be indulged in support of the findings. The authorities supporting this rule are legion, among them being Gjurich v. Fieg, 164 Cal. 429, 129 P. 464, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 111; Wilbur v. Wilbur, 197 Cal. 1, 239 P. 332.

With this rule in mind, we have made a careful examination of the entire record, and we are fully convinced that there is abundant evidence to support all the findings of the trial court. We see no reason, however, to go into a detailed analysis of the large volume of evidence embodied in the record. The finding that plaintiff originated and combined the rôle is supported by evidence of managers of theaters, motion picture houses, actors, and motion picture producers.

No other finding is attacked by the appellant as being unsupported by the evidence.

Appellant's second contention is stated in his brief as follows:

"Isn't the sole issue monopoly, on the one hand, or means to prevent confusion or deception, on the other hand? We respectfully submit that, even though the court accepted the findings, still the law is not and cannot be that the judgment and decree of the court, as framed, can stand."

[2] The question of monopoly is in no way involved in this action. Plaintiff is not seeking to prevent the appellant, Charles Amador, from appearing in motion pictures, but only seeks to prevent him from imitating the plaintiff in such a way as to deceive the public and work a fraud upon the public and plaintiff. The case of plaintiff does not depend on his right to the exclusive use of the rôle, garb, and mannerisms, etc.; it is based upon fraud and deception. The right of action in such a case arises from the fraudulent purpose and conduct of appellant and injury caused to the plaintiff thereby, and the deception to the public, and it exists independently of the law regulating trade-marks, or of the ownership of such trade-marks or trade-names by plaintiff. It is plaintiff's right to be protected against those who would injure him by fraudulent means—that is, by counterfeiting his rôle—or, in other words, plaintiff has the right to be protected against "unfair competition in business." We think the following authorities fully support our conclusion in this regard: Banzhaf v. Chase, 150 Cal. 180, 88 P. 704; Modesto Creamery v. Stanislaus Creamery Co., 168 Cal. 289, 142 P. 845; Bradford Baking Co. v. Weber Baking Co., 43 Cal. App. 570, 185 P. 417; Weinstock-Lubin Co. v. Marks, 109 Cal. 529, 42 P. 142, 30 L. R. A. 182, 50 Am. St. Rep. 57; and International News Service v. Associated Press, 248 U. S. 215, at pages 234-236, 39 S. Ct. 68, 63 L. Ed. 211, 2 A. L. R. 293.

In the case of Weinstock-Lubin Co. v. Marks, supra, the court said:

"Equity will not concern itself about the means by which fraud is done. It is the results arising from the means, it is the fraud itself, with which it deals. The foregoing principles of law do not apply alone to the protection of parties having trade-marks and trade-names. They reach away beyond that, and apply to all cases where fraud is practiced by one in securing the trade of a rival dealer; and these ways are as many and as various as the ingenuity of the dishonest schemer can invent."

The same reasons apply with equal force to the case at bar, and demonstrate that the plaintiff is entitled to his injunction preventing defendant from imitating the rôle which plaintiff originated, and thereby injuring plaintiff and deceiving the public into the belief that appellant, Amador, under the name of Charlie Aplin, is really the plaintiff, Charlie Chaplin.

A careful review of the evidence, containing the various exhibits of plaintiff and defendant, convinces us that defendant's imitation of plaintiff would be likely to deceive the public, and that the whole plan and scheme of the defendants was undertaken with a view of deceiving the public and injuring plaintiff in his business, and, if permitted to be carried out, it would undoubtedly have that effect.

[3] Appellant further complains that the injunction is too broad. We think this contention is without merit. The injunction in its last analysis, as far as defendant, who is the only appealing defendant, is concerned, simply enjoins him from imitating the plaintiff in such a way as will deceive and defraud the public. We are in full accord with the view of the learned trial judge who, in denying a new trial, said:

"Regarding 'The Race Track' picture, the court is convinced that defendants deliberately planned and executed an imitation of plaintiff, designed and calculated to deceive the public into believing that defendant Amador, posing as 'Aplin' was 'Chaplin,' and thereby did secure patronage that might not otherwise be obtained, and depriving plaintiff thereof, and that the imitation inheres in the entire picture so as to render it impossible of elimination. Regarding the other injunctive features, they amount to no more than restraint of imitation; and, to avoid their effect, defendants need do no more than avoid the imitation and deception."

We see no need of discussing this case further. We think, as above stated, that the evidence is ample to support all the conclusions reached by the trial court, and that its decision and judgment was right and proper, and should be affirmed.

[4] Appellant also appeals from the order denying a new trial. The order denying a new trial is not appealable, and for that reason the attempted appeal therefrom is dismissed. 2 Cal. Jur. 173, 174.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 177

MERRITT v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 6043.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 16, 1928.

1. Contempt ☞63(4)—Order of contempt must on its face recite facts showing contempt.

The order adjudging one guilty of contempt must on its face recite facts showing contempt.

2. Divorce ☞269(11), 311—Evidence in contempt proceeding held insufficient to sustain finding divorced husband had ability to pay alimony and support child.

Evidence in contempt proceeding held insufficient to support finding that divorced husband had ability to comply with order of court requiring payment of alimony and money for support of child.

3. Divorce ☞269(9)—Necessary expenses of divorced husband may be considered in determining net income as basis for determining ability to pay alimony.

Though a divorced husband cannot escape payment of alimony by living luxuriously and thus depreciating his ability to pay, he is entitled to live in such a manner as to be able to earn and draw his salary, and necessary expenses may be considered in arriving at net income as basis for determining ability to comply with order.

4. Prohibition ☞10(2)—Writ of prohibition is available to prevent sentence for contempt, when manifest court will proceed notwithstanding lack of jurisdiction.

Writ of prohibition is available to prevent trial judge from sentencing petitioner for contempt of court for failure to pay alimony, in case it is manifest from previous orders or decisions of court that it will proceed notwithstanding a lack of jurisdiction.

Application by Hulett C. Merritt, Jr., for a writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles and the Honorable Daniel Beecher, judge thereof. Writ granted.

Russell & Heid, of Tulare, and Theodore Hull, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Young & Young, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This is an application for the writ of prohibition to prevent the respondent judge from sentencing petitioner for contempt of court. In an action for divorce, wherein the petitioner was defendant, he was ordered, on December 1, 1926, to pay to the plaintiff in that action (he having stipulated that the order might be made) as permanent alimony the sum of $750 per month, and the further sum of $250 per month for the support and maintenance of a minor child. He was also ordered to carry a life insurance policy in the principal sum of $50,000, the annual premium on which was $616.60 for the year 1928, and to pay plaintiff the sum of $35,000 in cash. Petitioner has another daughter by a previous marriage for whose support he is also under order to pay the sum of $100 per month. Petitioner having failed to pay the $1,000 due on March 1, 1928, for the support of his wife, who is plaintiff in the divorce suit now pending and mother of the child of the marriage there sought to be terminated, the respondent court did on March 8, 1928, make its order requiring petitioner to appear and show cause why he should not be punished for contempt. After hearing the testimony of petitioner, the respondent judge made an order on March 16th finding him guilty of contempt, and continuing the matter for sentence to March 27, 1928. On the last-named date further testimony of the petitioner was taken, and the matter of imposing sentence was continued until March 30th. It is to prevent this sentence that the writ is sought.

The petitioner contends that the court is without jurisdiction to impose the sentence for two reasons: First, because there is no finding in the minute order to the effect that petitioner had the ability to pay; and, second, that the undisputed testimony shows that he did not have the ability to pay. The respondents deny both of these assertions, and take the position that petitioner cannot avail himself of the prohibitive writ, but must await the sentence and then seek his relief through either the writ of certiorari or habeas corpus.

The minute order makes no mention whether petitioner had the ability to make payment. It is said, however, in a bill of exceptions which it has been stipulated may be considered on this hearing as the record of testimony offered and received at the hearing and orders and findings of the court, that the respondent judge "made a finding that said Hulett C. Merritt, Jr., was able to comply with the orders of court theretofore made in the above-entitled matter with reference to the payments of alimony and moneys for the care, education, and maintenance of the minor child of the parties hereto, found the said defendant guilty of contempt and continued the hearing to March 30, 1928, for sentence."

[1] It is undeniable that the order adjudging one guilty of contempt must on its face recite facts showing the contempt. Bakeman v. Superior Court, 37 Cal. App. 785, 174 P. 911, and cases there cited; Overend v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 280, 63 P. 372. The ruling necessary upon this precise question is so obvious, in view of the authorities, that it would require no further comment, were it not for the recital in the bill of exceptions that the trial court found that petitioner had the ability to pay. May we consider this statement in the bill?

It will be observed, first, that the stipulation by which we are authorized to consider the statement referred to recites that it "is the record of testimony introduced and orders and findings of the court on said contempt proceedings." There is no finding and nothing except the statement that a finding was made. There can be no doubt that the only thing which remains for the trial court to do is to fix the penalty and issue the commitment. If the court had taken these steps, it is apparent that the record would not support the judgment in the absence of a finding in the order adjudging petitioner guilty. Such is the effect of the authorities already cited, and such is the deduction of reason. Any other course would leave open to conjecture the question of jurisdiction, contrary to established procedure. From these observations it is apparent that the order adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt is in effect a judgment. It is said in 14 California Jurisprudence, at page 84, that—

"Whether an order is in legal effect a judgment seems to depend upon whether it is a final determination of the rights of the parties as the result of adversary proceedings in which issues are framed and the parties are given an opportunity to present their contentions on the merits."

Accordingly, it has been held that orders in probate are in effect judgments when they meet the test thus stated. Estate of Harrington, 147 Cal. 124, 81 P. 546, 109 Am. St. Rep. 118. Also considerable light is shed upon the effect of this order by the case of People ex rel. Day v. Bergen, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 267, wherein it was held that, where the warrant of commitment contained words which were not contained in the order adjudging the contempt, the words so inserted were unauthorized, and the warrant was set aside, the court saying:

"We are bound to suppose that the language of the order, convicting the defendant of the contempt, deliberately and accurately expresses the full intention of the court which made it."

And again:

"An order of this character * * * must be strictly construed and is not to be extended by implications and intendments. * * *"

The only reasonable interpretation which we can ascribe to the statement in the bill of exceptions that the court found that petitioner had the ability to meet the payment required by the order is that it silently determined that to be the fact, without including it in the order. We are of the opinion that we can look to the face of the order only for the necessary support for the sentence which the respondent court threatens to impose.

[2, 3] But a finding that he was able to pay was impossible in view of the state of the testimony. The only witness to testify at the hearing was the petitioner. If, as is said in Myers v. Superior Court, 46 Cal. App. 206, 189 P. 109, his testimony was "false, then there is absolutely no evidence before the court," and the "court was without jurisdiction to make the order in question." Further, if his testimony is to be taken as true, he has no property other than his salary. On March 1st he received his salary of $1,250, out of which he paid $280 income tax, $500 to his former wife on account of the alimony, $100 under order of court to another daughter, approximately $204 for groceries, cleaning, and laundry bill, with $10.53 in the bank, and the remainder of $155.47 unaccounted for, except that he has two servants for whom he pays at the rate of $80 per month each, and by the explanatory statement that on account of his position as "manager of the Tajus ranch" he is compelled "to do quite a bit of entertaining for" his "father's guests, which costs $400 to $500 a month." While it is true that he has been remarried, he testified that his wife paid for her servants out of her own independent means. He also testified that his father has refused to pay his living expenses since February 1st. Manifestly this testimony fails to show that petitioner had the ability to pay the sum of $500, which was the amount unpaid when the order was made on March 16th, and also fails to show that he had the ability to pay $250, the balance remaining on March 27th; the petitioner having secured an advance on his salary payable April 1, 1928, between the 16th and the 27th, and applied it to the payment of alimony. It is quite true that he cannot live luxuriously and thus depreciate his ability to pay, and it is equally true that he must live in such a manner as to be able to earn and draw his salary. The courts have uniformly recognized necessary expenses as legitimate in order to arrive at the net income as a basis for determining one's ability to comply with the order. Snook v. Snook, 110 Wash. 310, 188 P. 502, 9 A. L. R. 262; Holcomb v. Holcomb, 53 Wash. 611, 102 P. 653. The testimony, being insufficient to support a finding that petitioner had the ability to comply with the order of the court, certainly cannot support a recital that such a finding was made, even if the recital were regarded as a finding.

[4] There remains for consideration the question raised by respondents, that prohibition will not lie, but that petitioner must wait until sentence has been pronounced and then seek the writ of review or habeas corpus. We think counsel's contention in this regard cannot be upheld. The prohibitive writ has been made use of in similar instances, as follows: People v. County Judge, 27 Cal. 151; Gordan v. Buckles, 92 Cal. 481, 28 P. 490; Knutte v. Superior Court, 134 Cal.

660, 66 P. 875; and Bakeman v. Superior Court, supra. The last-cited case is very similar to the one before us, and its authority, supported by reason, would be a sufficient answer to respondents' assertion. However, we find the rule succinctly stated in Commercial Bank v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 395, 220 P. 422, as follows:

"The trial of contempt proceedings has sometimes been stayed by a writ of prohibition where it is manifest from previous orders or decisions of the court that it will proceed notwithstanding a lack of jurisdiction."

The instant case is one of those thus described.

The peremptory writ will issue.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

93 Cal. App. 448

PEOPLE v. VASQUEZ et al. (Cr. 1661.)*

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 6, 1928.

As Modified Aug. 18, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 4, 1928.

Criminal law §829(18)—Refusal of instruction with reference to alibi held erroneous under circumstances, notwithstanding instruction was given on reasonable doubt.

In prosecution for robbery, wherein defense consisted of considerable evidence tending to establish an alibi, refusal of instruction relating to such defense and requiring acquittal in case defense on such point raised reasonable doubt in minds of jury as to presence of defendant at time and place of commission of crime held erroneous, in view of fact that evidence was not entirely satisfactory in its sufficiency to support conviction, notwithstanding instruction was given on reasonable doubt.

York, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Louis Vasquez and others were convicted of robbery, and they appeal. Reversed.

Cassius D. Blair, of Los Angeles, for appellant Vasquez.

J. R. Wilder, of Los Angeles, for appellant Morales.

Theodore C. McKenna, of Los Angeles, for appellant Melendez.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Hugh McIsaac, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. In the lower court each of the three defendants was charged in each of two counts in the information with the commission of the crime of robbery. On the trial each of the defendants was convicted on the first count; while, as to the second count, defendant Melendez only was convicted. The appeals herein are from the several judgments and orders denying the motions for a new trial.

The defense consisted of considerable evidence which tended to establish an alibi. Prejudicial error is predicated upon the refusal by the court to give to the jury the following instruction requested by each of the defendants:

"When a person on trial for a crime shows that he was in another place at the time when the crime alleged was committed, he is said to prove an alibi. The defense interposed by the defendant in this case is what is known as an alibi; that is, that the defendant was in another place at the time of the commission of the crime. The court instructs the jury that such a defense is as proper and legitimate as any other, and all the evidence bearing on that point should be carefully considered by the jury. If, in view of all the evidence, the jury have a reasonable doubt as to whether the defendant was in some other place when the crime was committed, they should give him the benefit of that doubt and acquit him. As regards the defense of an alibi, the jury are instructed that the law does not require the defendant to prove that defense beyond a reasonable doubt to entitle him to an acquittal. It is sufficient if his defense upon that point raises a reasonable doubt in your minds of his presence at the time and place of the commission of the crime charged."

As calculating in some measure to offset the failure of the trial court to instruct the jury with reference to the law relating to the alibi of the defendants, attention is directed to an instruction given to the jury to the effect that the burden rested with the prosecution to prove the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt.

In the case of People v. Fong Ah Sing, 64 Cal. 253, 28 P. 233, the propriety of the giving of an instruction in substance such as was requested by the defendants herein is clearly indicated. Likewise in the case of People v. Wong Loung, 159 Cal. 520, 534, 114 P. 829.

The case of People v. Visconti, 31 Cal. App. 169, 160 P. 410, 411, is nearly an exact parallel to that of the instant case, in that therein the trial court gave a general instruction to the effect that, before the defendant could be convicted, the jury must believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant committed the crime of which he was charged; but at the same time refused to give an instruction requested by defendant on the alibi presented by him, in substance as in the instant case, that he was not obliged to establish that defense by a preponderance of the evidence, or even beyond a reasonable doubt, but that it was sufficient to entitle him to a verdict of acquittal if the evidence raised in the minds of the members of the jury a reasonable doubt as to the pre-ence of the defendant at the place where the crime was alleged to have been committed at the time referred to in the information. It was held that the action of the trial court in refusing the requested instruction constituted prejudicial error entitling the defendant to a reversal of the judgment. An application for hearing in the Supreme Court after decision by the District Court of Appeal was denied. However, the Supreme Court took occasion to state that, in view of the provision of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, the refusal "in all cases" by the trial court to give such an instruction as was under consideration would not necessarily be deemed sufficient cause for reversal of the judgment; but that, as to the case before the court, it would be assumed that the District Court of Appeal "concluded, in view of the circumstances of this particular case, as shown by the record, that the refusal of the trial court to permit the requested instruction operated substantially to the prejudice of the defendant."

The only discoverable authorities in this state which indicate a ruling which might be considered as contrary to, or which would cast a doubt upon, that so positively announced in People v. Visconti, 31 Cal. App. 169, 160 P. 410, 411, are People v. Winters, 125 Cal. 325, 57 P. 1067, and People v. Perrin, 67 Cal. App. 612, 227 P. 924.

In the former case, while an instruction similar in some respects to the instruction refused herein was criticized, no ruling was made to the effect that the trial court would be justified in refusing to give a proper instruction covering the legal principles relating to an alibi, even though, as here, an instruction were given to the effect that the burden of proving the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt rested with the prosecution; but, in the latter case, it was held that, where the trial court instructed the jury that it was incumbent upon the prosecution to prove the allegations of the information beyond a reasonable doubt, and that, if the jury believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that at the time and place specified in the information defendant knowingly and designedly committed the acts of which he was charged, it was not prejudicial error on the part of the trial court to refuse to instruct the jury with reference to the alibi defense of the defendant. As authority for such ruling, the case of People v. Buck, 151 Cal. 667, 91 P. 529, is cited in the opinion of the court. An examination of that authority discloses the fact that the defendant therein was charged with the crime of murder, and that "his sole defense was insanity." One of the instructions requested by the defendant related to the credit which was properly attachable to the testimony of nonexperts as to the sanity of the defendant. The concluding clause of such requested instruction was as follows:

"You are not to be bound by the statement or testimony of such witnesses, neither are you justified in disregarding them. It is your duty to give them such weight as they are entitled to."

The trial court refused to give to the jury that part of the instruction just quoted. In ruling that such refusal was not error, the Supreme Court used the language quoted in the case of People v. Perrin, as follows:

"No reason occurs to us why so mere a commonplace should not have been allowed to stand, but there seems as little reason why it should have been requested. It must be presumed that a jury always understand that it is their duty to give to any evidence submitted to them the weight to which it seems entitled, and the refusal of the judge to make that comment on any particular item or line of evidence cannot be supposed to prejudice the party offering it."

In considering the force of such language as applied to facts like those in the instant case, it should be remembered that a considerable difference exists between the sufficiency of the evidence necessary to justify an acquittal in an insanity case and a case where the defense consists of evidence tending to establish an alibi. The authorities are agreed that, where the defense of insanity is interposed, it is incumbent upon the defendant to establish the fact by a preponderance of the evidence (8 Cal. Jur. 180, 368); but, when the evidence introduced by the defendant consists of an alibi, he is not required to prove it beyond a reasonable doubt, nor even by a preponderance of the evidence. It is necessary only that all the evidence in the case raise a reasonable doubt in the minds of the members of the jury as to the presence of the defendant at the time when and the place where the crime was committed. 8 Cal. Jur. 187. With so much in mind, the case of People v. Perrin, 67 Cal. App. 612, 227 P. 924, is somewhat weakened as an authority in the instant case to the effect that the refusal of the trial court to give the requested instruction relating to the law applicable to the alibi of defendants did not amount to prejudicial error. It is manifest that a marked difference exists between the rule which requires the prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt each of the material facts going to establish the guilt of the defendant, and the rule which entitles the defendant to an acquittal if by the evidence he succeeds in producing a reasonable doubt as to an essential fact. The one is necessarily a positive psychological condition which in its effect approaches a practical demonstration of a truth; while the other, although it may be said to be established, nevertheless, as compared with the former, is immeasurably weaker, and may be dependent upon a lesser, if not an unsettled and negative condition. It results in the instant case that, because the jury was instructed that, "if upon consideration of the whole case you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendants, * * * you should so find, * * * " was not the equivalent of instructing the jury, as requested by the defendants, that if it had "a reasonable doubt as to whether or not the defendants were in some other place when the crime was committed, they should give him the benefit of that doubt and acquit him."

Especially as against the two defendants herein, Vasquez and Morales, the case as presented was so weak that it somewhat strains good judgment to declare that it was satisfactory in its sufficiency. As to defendant Melendez, while the case was much stronger, nevertheless the evidence was not of a character greatly to be desired either in quantity or quality. In such circumstances, it is not at all improbable that, had the jury been fully and fairly instructed with reference to the law applicable to the alibi interposed by the defendants, a verdict of guilty might not have been returned against them. To quote substantially the language appended by the Supreme Court to the opinion in the case of People v. Visconti, 31 Cal. App. 169, 172, 160 P. 411, this court concludes:

"In view of the circumstances of this particular case as shown by the record, that the refusal of the trial court to permit the requested instruction operated substantially to the prejudice of the defendants."

It becomes unnecessary to devote attention to other alleged errors occurring at the trial.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial as to each of the defendants are reversed.

I concur: CONREY, P. J.

I dissent: YORK, J.

BARRETT v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.★ (Civ. 6298.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 19, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 13, 1928. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 17, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇐757(3)—For court to consider grounds for reversal, appellant must point out evidence and portion of record supporting its contention (Code Civ. Proc. § 953c).

To consider grounds urged for reversal of judgment, it is incumbent on appellant to point out to the appellate court the evidence and portion of the record supporting its contention, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 953c.

2. Appeal and error ⇐757(1)—Appellant, not quoting testimony, printing instructions or showing that requested instructions were not covered by court's charge in brief, held not entitled to consideration of grounds for reversal (Code Civ. Proc. § 953c).

Appellant filing opening brief only, which contained no quotations from typewritten transcript of testimony, but merely general statements as to what witnesses were claimed to have testified, with scattering references to pages of transcript, and did not contain instructions complained of, nor show that substance of requested instructions or law applicable to subject thereof was not fully covered in court's charge, did not comply with requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, and hence was not entitled to consideration of grounds urged for reversal of judgment.

3. Appeal and error ⇐901—Judgment and proceedings on which based are presumed regular, and appellant must affirmatively show error.

All presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the judgment appealed from and proceedings on which it is based, and hence it devolves on appellant to show affirmatively existence of error for which he asks reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Charles W. Barrett against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal or affirm the judgment. Motion to affirm granted, and judgment affirmed.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

James F. Brennan, of San Francisco, John J. McMahon, of Los Angeles, and William F. Herron, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WARNE, Presiding Justice pro tem. Respondent made a motion herein to dismiss the appeal or affirm the judgment appealed from "upon the ground that appellant herein has not printed in its brief on file herein, or in any supplement appended thereto, or at all, any portions of the evidence or record herein, and that no evidence is set forth in said brief of appellant sufficient to advise respondent or the court concerning appellant's ground of appeal or sufficient to justify a reversal of said judgment, or to show any error in any ruling of the trial court, or to show error anywhere in the record and proceedings herein." Respondent contends that appellant has failed to comply with the requirements of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, which contains the following provisions:

"In filing briefs on said appeal, the parties must, however, print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court."

The suit was brought to recover damages against the appellant for injuries sustained when his automobile, in which he was riding in the nighttime within a thick gray fog, collided with a gray-colored stone pier in the middle of the state highway about four miles north of the city of Santa Barbara. The said pier is used to support an overhead bridge which the railroad of the appellant crosses. A jury returned a verdict in favor of respondent, awarding him damages. Judgment was entered accordingly and appellant appeals.

The grounds urged for a reversal of the judgment are as follows:

(1) Plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

(2) That the construction and maintenance of the stone pier in the center of the state highway was duly authorized and did not constitute a public nuisance.

(3) Defendant was not guilty of negligence.

(4) The judgment is excessive.

(5) The court made numerous errors in excluding and admitting testimony and in giving instructions by plaintiff and in refusing practically all of the instructions requested by the defendant.

[1, 2] To properly consider these points on their merit, it was incumbent upon appellant to point out to this court the evidence and portion of the record supporting its contention. The typewritten transcript contains 308 pages of testimony. Appellant's brief does not contain a single quotation therefrom. Appellant rests content with the filing of an opening brief only, wherein it has stated the testimony favorable to its contention in the form of general statements as to what a witness is claimed to have testified to with scattering references to the pages of the transcript. No pretense is made of quoting the testimony. For instance, appellant says that the verdict was excessive, and in his brief all that is contained on the subject is as follows:

"The verdict in this case is for $67,700. The injuries sustained by the plaintiff, aside from a paralysis of one of the nerves in his tongue, are not such as to warrant any very considerable amount of damage. Plaintiff testified that the trachea was cut, and that he was unable to swallow on account of scar tissue, and that the tongue was paralyzed. This, with the opening statement of counsel to the same effect, no doubt impressed the jury. It appears, however, from the testimony of Dr. L. W. Hotchkiss, the surgeon who attended him, that the injuries as testified to by plaintiff were seriously exaggerated. The trachea was not cut at all, and only the nerve on one side of the tongue was injured."

This is characteristic of the entire brief. Nor have the instructions complained of been printed in the brief. Nor is there any showing that the substance of the requested instructions or the law applicable to the subject upon which the request was made was not fully covered in the court's charge to the jury. Respondent contends "that the appellant's brief absolutely misconstrues the testimony"; in other words, that appellant has placed its own construction upon the evidence rather than quote the evidence as it actually stands to allow the court to place the proper construction upon it. An examination of the record would seem to bear respondent out in this respect. In so doing, appellant has not complied with the requirements of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the very recent case of Filmer v. Davis, 266 P. 985, this court said:

"While the precise wording of the section requires the appellant to print such parts of the record as he desires to call attention to, the decisions above referred to, as well as the very nature of the matter, require that appellant print enough of the record to enable the appellate court to determine the merits of the appeal without examination of the typewritten transcript, except perhaps in case of a dispute developed in the briefs as to what the official record actually contains."

[3] From a reading of appellant's brief, we are unable to say that any error was committed in this case. As was said in the case of Scott v. Hollywood Park Co., 176 Cal. 680, 681, 169 P. 379:

"All presumptions indulged in are in favor of the regularity of the judgment and proceedings upon which it is based, hence it devolves upon appellant to affirmatively show the existence of the error upon which he asks for a reversal."

See, also, Estate of McPhee, 156 Cal. 335, 104 P. 455, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 899; Marcucci v. Vowinkel, 164 Cal. 693, 130 P. 430; McKinnell v. Hansen, 34 Cal. App. 76, 167 P. 887; Miller v. Oliver, 174 Cal. 407, 163 P. 355; Estate of Berry, 195 Cal. 354, 233 P. 330.

In Estate of Berry, supra, at page 359 thereof (233 P. 332), the court said:

"The result is not only that it was the plain duty of appellants to print in their brief or in the supplement thereto all portions of the record necessary to be considered by this court before arriving at a conclusion that the judgment should be reversed, but also that because of their failure so to do, this court would be fully justified in affirming the judgment appealed from without further consideration of the record. Appellants seem to believe that they have performed their duty fully in this respect when they have printed the portions of the evidence upon which they rely. They overlook the fact that in order to determine whether or not the evidence is sufficient to sustain a given finding, we must have before us not only the evidence but also the finding. If we had the finding before us and should conclude that the evidence was insufficient to support it, we still could not determine whether or not such finding was essential to support the judgment unless we had before us the pleadings or at least an accurate statement of the issues framed thereby."

In Jeffords v. Young, 197 Cal. 224, 229, 239 P. 1054, 1056, the court says:

"It has been reiterated approximately one hundred times in the decisions of this court and of the District Courts of Appeal that it is incumbent upon an appellant who relies upon a typewritten transcript to print in his brief or in a printed supplement thereto sufficient of the record to justify a reversal of the judgment or order appealed from. 2 Cal. Jur. 643 et seq. Furthermore, as we pointed out some months ago (Estate of Berry, 195 Cal. 354, 233 P. 330), since the 1923 amendment [St. 1923, p. 748] to the section last cited, an appellant who fails to do this incurs thereby the risk that the order or judgment appealed from may be affirmed upon motion."

We have examined the entire record, and we find that no one of the points made by the appellant is well taken. If the motion to affirm had not been made, the court would have been constrained to have affirmed the judgment.

We are of the opinion that respondent's motion to have the judgment affirmed should be granted.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

93 Cal. App. 147

BUE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SHASTA COUNTY et al. (Civ. 3611.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 10, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 9, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 6, 1928.

1. Certiorari $\S$ 28(2)—Costs $\S$ 32(1)—Successful defendant is entitled to costs as matter of course, and refusing costs under mandatory statute is jurisdictional and reviewable by writ of review (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1024).

Successful defendant is entitled to his costs as a matter of course, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1024, and allowance of costs where statute makes it mandatory is jurisdictional question, and refusal to award costs required by statute may be corrected by writ of review.

2. Costs $\S$ 31—Where cross-complaint submitted as independent action was consolidated with main action, and recovery in both actions was denied, each party was entitled to costs (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 852, 1024).

Where in justice court action cross-complaint was under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 852, treated as complaint in separate action, and both actions were tried jointly without any attempt to present defendant's cause of action as counterclaim under section 855, and where recovery was denied in both actions, respective parties were each entitled to judgment for costs, under section 1024, in action wherein he was respectively a defendant.

3. Costs $\S$ 31—Where defendant in justice court sought recovery on cross-complaint as independent action, but cases were tried together and neither recovered, jury fees were divided (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 852, 1024).

Where case presented by cross-complaint in justice court was treated as separate action, but tried jointly with the main action on account of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 852, and recovery was denied moving party in both cases, plaintiff and defendant seeking independent recovery were each liable for one-half the jury fees, under section 1024.

4. Costs $\S$ 31—Where defendant converted cross-complaint in justice court into independent action and cases were tried together, neither party recovering, taxing of witness fees depended on which cause testimony related to (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 852, 1024).

Where defendant, who originally asserted cross-complaint in justice court, sought recovery as under independent action under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 852, but cases were tried together and neither was allowed affirmative recovery, taxing of witness fees would depend on whether the expenses were incurred in the prosecution or defense of cause of action asserted by plaintiff or in prosecution or defense of that asserted by defendant; each party being entitled to recovery of costs, in so far as he was a defendant, under section 1024.

Application by Salve Bue for a writ of certiorari to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Shasta County, and Walter E. Herzinger, Judge, to annul the portion of a judgment denying costs. Writ granted, and part of judgment annulled, with directions.

Carter & Smith, of Redding, for petitioner. Baker & Ross, of Redding, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This matter is before us upon an application for a writ of review seeking an order of this court annulling and setting aside that portion of a judgment entered in respondent court on the 9th day of February, 1928, wherein it was adjudged that neither party to the action hereinafter named should recover costs.

The record shows that on or about the 4th day of March, 1927, one Harry W. Glover commenced an action in the justice's court of township No. 6, in the county of Shasta, against the petitioner herein, to recover the sum of $204.07 to cover damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff in an automobile collision caused by the negligence of the petitioner therein named, Salve Bue, as defendant. Thereafter, and on August 26, 1927, the petitioner herein filed in said action an answer to the complaint filed by the said Harry W. Glover in said justice's court, and also a cross-complaint, in which the petitioner, Salve Bue, named the said Harry W. Glover and Oscar Hill, defendants. In his cross-complaint the petitioner alleged that he had been damaged in the sum of $200 by reason of the automobile collision which is described as the same collision as that set forth in the complaint filed by Harry W. Glover, wherein the said Salve Bue alleged and claimed that said collision was due to the careless and negligent manner in which an automobile owned by the said Harry W. Glover had been driven and managed by his agent, Oscar Hill, named as one of the cross-defendants.

Thereafter Harry W. Glover filed an answer to said cross-complaint and also a notice of motion to strike out said cross-complaint, on the ground that a cross-complaint is not permissible as a pleading in a justice's court. Following the proceedings herein stated, it was stipulated and agreed between the parties that the cross-complaint might be treated as a complaint in a separate action in the justice's court, and that both actions might be tried jointly. Thereupon the actions were so tried, and judgment was entered in the justice's court that neither party was entitled to recover from the other upon the alleged causes of action set forth in the complaints of the respective parties. Thereafter both parties appealed to the superior court of the county of Shasta, where the cause was then tried before a jury, and the jury returned a verdict that neither party was entitled to recover from the other, and judgment was thereupon entered, concluding with the following words:

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that neither said Harry W. Glover nor Salve Bue, the parties in this action above named, shall recover anything from the other party, and that each of said parties shall pay his own costs of suit incurred herein."

The application of the petitioner seeks to have reviewed and stricken out that portion of the judgment referring to costs.

[1, 2] There seems to be no controversy between counsel that under the provisions of section 852 of the Code of Civil Procedure a cross-complaint is not permissible in an action begun and tried in a justice's court, nor does there appear to have been any attempt made on the part of the petitioner, either in the justice's court or in the superior court, to present his cause of action against the plaintiff as a counterclaim in defense of the plaintiff's cause of action, as provided for in section 855 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The parties, by stipulation and agreement, have proceeded upon the theory that the pleadings presented two separate and distinct actions, and that trial should be had upon the theory that two separate and distinct actions were being tried at the same time, upon the same testimony, and in this manner, submitted to the jury. Under the provisions of section 1024 of the Code of Civil Procedure there is no question but that a successful defendant is entitled to his costs as a matter of course. It is unnecessary to cite authorities to this effect, as both counsel are agreed as to the law, which we think is well settled.

Allowance of costs where the statute makes it mandatory is also a jurisdictional question, and a refusal to award costs where the statute awarded them may be corrected by a writ of review. This appears to be conceded by counsel for the respective parties. The difficulty arises in the application of what we have just stated to be the law. In the proceedings before us, both the petitioner, Salve Bue, and Harry W. Glover, appear to have been actors, and also to have been defendants. In so far as either party was an actor, he was not entitled to recover costs. In so far as either party was a defendant, he is entitled to recover costs. Under these circumstances, the respective parties were entitled to a judgment for costs in the action wherein he was, respectively, a defendant.

[3, 4] Following this reasoning, it is apparent from the record before us that the petitioner, Salve Bue, should not have been required to pay the entire expenses of the jury, as appears to be the case by his cost bill filed herein. The jury fees having been incurred in the trial of both actions, the apportionment thereof is a matter of simple division. As to the taxing of the costs of witness fees, some difficulty may be encountered, but trial courts as well as appellate courts exist for the purpose of solving difficulties and adjusting disputes, and therefore no reason is presented why such costs should not have been ascertained and taxed against the party liable to repay the same under the law. The taxing of the witness fees would seem to depend upon the mere matter of ascertaining whether such expenses were incurred in prosecution of the cause of action set forth by a respective party, or in defense of the cause of action set forth by the opposite party, and allowed and taxed accordingly, or disallowed and not taxed accordingly. As to the jury fees, as we have stated, it is apparent that the petitioner, under the law, should have been awarded judgment for at least one-half thereof. As to the witness fees, nothing is before us upon the record upon which we can express any opinion as to the amount that should be taxed against either party. That the court adopted the convenient method, as stated by counsel for respondent, is doubtless true, but we cannot accept mere convenience as a correct statement of the law or a correct method of procedure.

It is therefore ordered that the writ of review herein be granted as prayed for, and that portion of the judgment reading as follows: "And that each of said parties shall pay his own costs of suit incurred herein"—be annulled and set aside and the trial court directed to proceed to ascertain and adjust the costs between the respective parties, and enter judgment in favor of each party, in the amount to which it may be found that he is justly entitled.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

93 Cal. App. 214

McKINNON v. FULLERTON et al.
(Civ. 6301.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 19, 1928.

1. Cancellation of instruments §53—Finding that gift deed was made in consideration of defendants furnishing plaintiff with home during lifetime and delivered in escrow held not finding of delivery of deed of gift vesting title in grantees.

Findings by trial court, in action to set aside deed, that parties entered into contract for making gift deed in consideration of defendants furnishing plaintiff with home during lifetime, and that deed was delivered in escrow to be held during life of plaintiff, did not constitute finding that deed of gift had been delivered to escrowee and title vested in grantee without being subject to further conditions, but merely that deed was deed of gift in form only.

2. Appeal and error §101(1)—Findings based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

Findings based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. Appeal and error §1012(1)—Weight of evidence held for trial court in action to set aside deed.

In action to set aside deed, weight of evidence was for trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by James H. McKinnon against Jessie B. Fullerton, substituted for Mary Ann Fullerton, deceased, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry C. Reynolds and Dunn, White & Aiken, all of Oakland, for appellants.

Asa V. Mendenhall, of Oakland, for respondent.

WARNE, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from the judgment declaring a certain deed executed by respondent to his daughter, Mary Ann Fullerton, one of the defendants, to be null and void, and from the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial. The defendant Jesse B. Fullerton is the husband of the defendant Mary Ann Fullerton. Since the trial of this action the said Mary Ann Fullerton has died and this appeal is prosecuted by her husband Jesse B. Fullerton.

The court found the facts to be as follows:

"That on or about the 3d day of February, 1921, the plaintiff and the defendants Mary Ann Fullerton and Jesse B. Fullerton entered into a verbal contract with the said plaintiff, by which they agreed that, if the plaintiff would make a gift deed to the defendant Mary Ann Fullerton of all the real property hereinafter described, and deliver said deed to some one in escrow, with instructions to the escrow holder to deliver the said deed to said defendant Mary Ann Fullerton upon the death of said plaintiff, the defendants Mary Ann Fullerton and Jesse B. Fullerton, as consideration for said deed, would furnish and supply the plaintiff during his lifetime with a pleasant and peaceable home. * * *

"That, pursuant to the contract aforesaid, the plaintiff did, on or about the 3d day of February, 1921, prepare, subscribe, and acknowledge before a notary public in proper form a deed of gift of all the real property aforesaid to said defendant Mary Ann Fullerton, and thereupon the plaintiff delivered said deed to said defendant True Van Sickle, in escrow, and instructed him to hold said deed until the death of the plaintiff, and after said death to deliver said deed to the defendant Mary Ann Fullerton. That the said defendant True Van Sickle has ever since had and now has the possession of the said deed.

"That said plaintiff has complied with all the terms of the said verbal contract on his part to be performed.

"That the defendants Mary Ann Fullerton and Jesse B. Fullerton have each failed, neglected, and refused to comply with the terms of said contract, and still do fail, neglect, and refuse to comply with the terms thereof in this, to wit, that the defendants last above named have failed, neglected, and refused to furnish or supply the plaintiff with a pleasant and peaceable home, and that thereby the consideration for said deed has failed.

"That, since the said defendants Mary Ann Fullerton and Jesse B. Fullerton have failed, neglected, and refused to comply with the terms of said contract, the plaintiff has demanded of said defendant True Van Sickle that he redeliver the said deed to the plaintiff, and that he has refused and still does refuse to deliver to the plaintiff the said deed.

"That, when the defendants Mary Ann Fullerton and Jesse B. Fullerton agreed to furnish and supply the plaintiff, during his lifetime, with a pleasant and peaceable home, they, nor did either of them, intend to do as they had agreed.

"That, if said deed is left outstanding or in the possession of the said escrow holder, it will cause serious and irreparable injury to the plaintiff, and now does cast a cloud upon the plaintiff's title to said real property, and will continue to do so unless the same be delivered up and canceled."

Appellant contends that the trial court found the deed in question to be a deed of gift, and that, the deed having been delivered to the escrowee, title vested in the grantees, and therefore was not subject to any further conditions.

[1-3] We do not understand the findings to so hold. As we understand the findings, the deed was a deed of gift in form only; it having been executed in consideration of appellant's promise to provide respondent with a pleasant and peaceful home. It is also urged by appellant that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. We have examined the record in the case, and think it suffices to say that there is evidence to support the findings. Findings based upon conflicting evidence will not be disturbed upon appeal. It was for the trial court to weigh the evidence. This rule is so well settled that we do not consider it necessary to cite authorities.

It is our opinion that the order and judgment appealed from should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 182

ANDREEN v. ESCONDIDO CITRUS UNION.
(Civ. 6318.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 17, 1923.

1. Appeal and error — 989—Appellate court, in case verdict is attacked for insufficiency of evidence, can only determine whether conclusion is supported by substantial evidence.

When a verdict is attacked for insufficiency of evidence, power of appellate court begins and ends with inquiry whether conclusion reached by jury is supported by substantial evidence, and, in case testimony on material point is in conflict, it must be assumed jury resolved conflict in favor of prevailing party.

2. Negligence — 134(1)—Evidence held to sustain recovery for negligent fumigation of lemon orchard.

Evidence, in action for damages claimed to have resulted from fumigating lemon orchard in a careless and negligent manner and under unfavorable climatic conditions, held sufficient to sustain recovery.

3. Negligence — 124(2)—Evidence of failure to procure license held admissible, in action for damages for negligent fumigation of lemon orchard (Pol. Code, § 2322a[8], as amended by St. 1923, p. 1200).

In action for damages for negligent fumigation of lemon orchard, evidence that defendant and its employees had failed to procure license, as required by Pol. Code, § 2322a(8), as amended by St. 1923, p. 1200, held admissible as relevant and material to show negligence, though cause of action was not for violation of statute.

4. Pleading — 236(5)—Permitting amendment of complaint to conform to proof held not abuse of discretion.

Trial court held not to have abused discretion in permitting complaint to be amended to set forth a general allegation of negligence to conform to proof; such court having wide discretion in permitting pleadings to be amended in such manner, and discretion will not be disturbed unless abused.

5. Negligence — 136(25)—Causal connection between failure to procure license to fumigate orchard and injury from negligent fumigation held fact question for jury (Pol. Code, § 2322a[8], as amended by St. 1923, p. 1200).

Question as to whether there was causal connection between failure to procure license to fumigate orchard, as required by Pol. Code, § 2322a(8), as amended by St. 1923, p. 1200, and injury to lemon trees claimed to have been fumigated in careless and negligent manner, held question of fact for jury.

6. Negligence — 134(11)—Evidence held to show causal connection between failure to procure license to fumigate orchard and injury from negligent fumigation (Pol. Code, § 2322a[8], as amended by St. 1923, p. 1200).

Evidence in action for damages for negligent fumigation of lemon orchard held to show a clear causal connection between failure of defendant and employees to procure license, as required by Pol. Code, § 2322a(8), as amended by St. 1923, p. 1200, and resulting injury.

7. Appeal and error — 1032(1)—Merely showing error does not create presumption that error was prejudicial.

There is no presumption that error is prejudicial or that injury is done by merely showing error.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by Oscar E. Andreen against the Escondido Citrus Union. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. N. Turrentine, Wright & McKee, and C. M. Monroe, all of San Diego, for appellant.

Luce & Swing, of San Diego, and A. R. Honnold, of Escondido, for respondent.

PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant Escondido Citrus Union, a corporation, from a judgment entered against it upon a verdict of a jury in the sum of $2,250.

Plaintiff brought this action for damages, charging that his lemon orchard was damaged by being fumigated by the agents of defendant in a careless and negligent manner and under unfavorable climatic conditions.

The defendant and appellant is a California corporation. The stock of the corporation is held by respondent and the various owners of citrus orchards in the vicinity of Escondido, San Diego county, Cal. Stock of the corporation is sold to citrus growers upon the basis of one share of stock for every 100 trees owned by them. The corporation operates a packing plant, and markets the crops of its members, charging for such services only the necessary expense of such operations. No dividends are paid; the corporation being operated for the benefit of its members. It maintains a "fumigation crew" and the necessary equipment and paraphernalia for fumigating orchards. The fumigation work is done only for the members of the corporation and at actual cost.

It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiff is the owner of 9 acres of citrus trees, upon which there are 605 lemon trees and 31 orange trees, and that on September 24, 1924, the defendant, through its agents and employees, caused the plaintiff's orchard to be fumigated with hydrocyanic gas. The complaint further alleges that this fumigation was done without the consent and against the will of plaintiff and in a negligent manner; the particular negligence being that the fumigation was done at a time when climatic conditions were not favorable to fumigation, there being a fog at the time of such fumigation, and that the fumigation was negligently and improperly applied, in that the mixture was too strong and was applied in excessive quantities and in an unskillful manner. It was further alleged on information and belief that the employees of defendant doing such work were boys and young men, unskilled in the work of fumigation, without supervision, and paid for the work by defendant at a certain price per tree. The complaint further alleged that plaintiff had suffered by reason of loss of his crop and in the further respect that his trees had become permanently damaged and set back and, as a consequence, the market value of his orchard had been lessened. A further claim was made for punitive damages, but this claim was abandoned and not submitted to the jury.

The answer of defendant denied specifically and in detail all of the material allegations of the complaint.

The jury returned a general verdict in favor of plaintiff and assessed the damages at $2,250. The defendant made a motion for a new trial upon a number of grounds, among them being the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. This motion was denied by the trial court.

Many contentions are made for a reversal of the judgment. Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of the jury, for the reason that it fails to furnish sufficient data from which damages could be calculated.

[1] When a verdict is attacked for insufficiency of the evidence, our power begins and ends with the inquiry whether there is substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which in and of itself will support the conclusion reached by the jury. If upon any material point the testimony is in conflict, it must be assumed that the jury resolved the conflict in favor of the prevailing party. The authorities supporting this rule are legion, among them being Gjurich v. Fieg, 164 Cal. 429, 129 P. 464, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 111; Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, 228 P. 25; Rocha v. Rocha, 197 Cal. 396, 240 P. 1010; and Union C. Co. v. Madera, etc., Irr. Co., 179 Cal. 774, 178 P. 957.

[2] With this rule in mind, we have made a careful examination of the entire record, and we are fully convinced that there is abundant evidence to support the verdict of the jury in its entirety. We see no reason, however, to go into a detailed analysis of the great volume of evidence embodied in the record, which contains 1,006 typewritten pages.

The testimony shows that appellant insisted on fumigating the orchard of respondent over his protests and against his wishes; that notice was served on respondent to fumigate or spray his orchards by the horticultural commissioner within 15 days from the receipt of the notice, in order to eradicate black scale; that within 8 days after the notice was received, and while respondent was trying to spray his orchard with an oil spray, appellant moved into the orchard during the temporary absence of respondent and began fumigating the trees with hydrocyanic acid gas. The fumigation was done negligently and unskillfully by appellant; appellant was particularly negligent in doing the work during a fog. A number of witnesses, including officers of the appellant corporation and county officers, who saw the orchard after it had been fumigated by appellant, testified that the orchard had been burned and damaged by the fumigation. All the witnesses for both the respondent and appellant stated that the fumigation was conducted during a fog, and all of the "fumigation crew" admitted that there was a fog and that it varied from light to heavy during the fumigation. Even the witnesses for appellant, who visited the orchard within 6 months after the fumigation, admitted that the orchard was damaged by the fumigation in a greater or less degree. There is evidence of loss of crop and evidence of damage to the trees amply sufficient to support the amount of damages awarded by the jury.

[3] Appellant also contends that the court erred in admitting evidence that appellant and its employees had failed to procure a license as required by section 2322a of the Political Code (St. 1923, p. 1200). The complaint, as originally filed, contained the following allegation:

"That the said defendant corporation and its said employees doing said work of fumigation were engaged in doing the work of fumigation for hire, and that said defendant corporation, the defendants herein, and their said employees were not authorized and licensed to do such work of fumigation as is provided and required by section 2322a of the Political Code of the state of California as the same exists and is amended."

Before the case was tried, the appellant made a motion to strike the paragraph just quoted from the complaint upon the ground that the same was irrelevant and redundant. This motion was granted. The case came on for trial in another department of the superior court of San Diego county and before another judge, who permitted respondent to prove that neither the appellant nor its employees had procured a license authorizing them to engage in the business of fumigating orchards, as required by section 2322a(8) of the Political Code. The court also permitted the respondent to amend his complaint to set forth a general allegation of negligence to conform to the proof.

[4] Appellant argues that the court, having previously stricken out all reference to the failure of appellant and its employees to procure a license, no evidence on the subject should have been admitted. We need not pause here to consider the correctness of the first order striking the above-quoted paragraph from the complaint, for we are now only concerned with two questions: First, was the testimony complained of relevant and material? We think it was. The cause of action here alleged was not a violation of the statute, but it was the negligence of appellant and its employees, and evidence that the statute had been violated was simply offered to show negligence. Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co., 154 Cal. 663, 98 P. 1063, 16 Ann. Cas. 5061. Second, did the court abuse its discretion in permitting the complaint to be amended? We think not. The court has a wide discretion in permitting pleadings to be amended to conform to the proof, and its discretion in that matter will not be disturbed unless there is some abuse of discretion such as has prevented defendant from fairly and fully presenting its case. 21 Cal. Jur. p. 181, and cases there cited.

[5] Appellant further argues that there was no causal connection shown between the failure of defendant or its employees to procure a license and the injury complained of. This was a question of fact for the jury. 19 Cal. Jur. 734; Baillargeon v. Myers, 180 Cal. 507, 182 P. 37; Thomas v. German Gen., etc., Soc., 168 Cal. 183, 141 P. 1186. The trial court realized this was the rule when it gave the jury the following instruction:

"It is a general rule of law that a violation of a statute is in itself negligence provided such violation contributed directly in causing the injury complained of. * * * Applying this rule to the present case, if you find from the preponderance of the evidence that the defendant, without first having secured a certificate as above provided, was, at the time it fumigated plaintiff's orchard, engaged for hire in the business thus prohibited, and that this violation of the statute contributed directly in causing the injury complained of, if any injury there was, such violation in itself constitutes negligence."

[6] We think, however, the facts in the instant case show a clear causal connection between the violation of the statute and the injury. The foreman in charge of the fumigation of respondent's orchard was not at all familiar with the "fumigation regulations" adopted by the horticultural commissioner of San Diego county; neither was he familiar with any of the documents or circulars on the subject issued by the Department of Agriculture of the United States, or those issued by the University of California. The evidence further shows that he did not follow any recognized practice of fumigation. Had he submitted himself to the examination provided by law, his lack of knowledge and skill would either have prevented him from procuring a license, or he would have been required to familiarize himself with the well-recognized methods of fumigation before he would have been licensed to do such work.

The facts bring this case within the rule laid down in Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co., supra. In that case, the defendant employed an elevator boy to operate the elevators in its building, who had not received a license as required by the ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, and the court held that the employment of this unlicensed operator by the defendant was negligence per se, and that, where an accident occurs through the carelessness of the operator, the defendant was liable, and that there was a causal connection between the violation of the statute requiring a license and the injury inflicted through the negligence of the unlicensed person.

[7] Appellant further contends that it was not in the business of fumigating for hire, because it only fumigated orchards owned by its members, and therefore not bound by the provisions of section 2322a of the Political Code, and also that this section is unconstitutional. We deem it wholly unnecessary to pass upon these questions in this case; for, if it be conceded, for the sake of argument, that all evidence relative to a violation of section 2322a of the Political Code was erroneously admitted, still there would be left abundant evidence to support the verdict and judgment, and show that the fumigation was negligently and unskillfully done. There is no presumption that error is prejudicial or that injury is done by merely showing error. Section 475, Code Civ. Proc.; Peavey v. Mutual Realty Corporation (Cal. App.) 255 P. 858; Gill v. Southern Pacific Co., 174 Cal. 84, 161 P. 1153. Therefore under no theory could appellant have been prejudiced by the admission of such evidence. The great preponderance of the evidence supports the verdict of the jury, and the record, considering the size thereof, is exceptionally free from error. The judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 221

BANDINI PETROLEUM CO. et al. v. HARTMAN et al. (Civ. 6076.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. July 19, 1928.

Appeal and error §479(1)—Defendants, perfecting appeal and filing undertaking before issuance of order to show cause, held entitled to supersedeas to restrain enforcement of decree.

Where defendants, after decree requiring them to permit inspection of corporate books and records and before order to show cause as to why they should not comply with judgment or be adjudged in contempt, had perfected an appeal and filed an undertaking staying execution as ordered by trial court, they were entitled to a writ of supersedeas to restrain the court from enforcing the decree; the perfecting of such appeal completely answering the question presented in the order to show cause.

Application by the Bandini Petroleum Company and others for a writ of supersedeas against George O. Hartman and the Superior Court of the State of California within and for the County of Los Angeles. Writ granted.

Wm. L. Murphey, and Haas & Dunigan, all of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Henry W. Mahan, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. The petitioners herein pray a writ of supersedeas to restrain the superior court of Los Angeles county from enforcing a decree directing the Bandini Petroleum Company to permit respondent Hartman to inspect and make notes from its corporate books and records, and from enforcing an order to show cause why petitioners should not be held in contempt of court for refusing to comply with such decree.

It is recited in the petition, and is not denied, that Hartman filed in said superior court an action wherein it appeared that he owned six shares of stock of the petitioning corporation which he had purchased for $6, and that, as such stockholder, he demanded, and after trial was granted, permission to inspect the corporate records. The trial was had on November 3, 1927, and on that date the trial court announced judgment for the plaintiff, at which time the petitioners' counsel stated that the defendants intended to appeal, and requested that the amount of undertaking on appeal and to stay execution be fixed. The court thereupon, without objection of the plaintiff's counsel, fixed the amount of undertaking in the sum of $1,000. On February 23, 1928, findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment were filed, and on April 10, 1928, the defendants (petitioners here) served and filed their notice of appeal, ordered the transcript, and also filed a written order of the court fixing the amount of bond to stay execution, together with an undertaking in the amount specified on the date of trial and in the order last mentioned. No notice of entry of judgment was ever served upon the petitioners, but on April 27, 1928, there was served upon them an order to appear and show cause, if any they had, why they should not be adjudged in contempt of court for having failed and refused to permit the plaintiff Hartman in said suit to inspect their books and records.

The respondents rely entirely upon the contention that a writ of supersedeas was not sought in this court until May 2, 1928, whereas judgment was entered on February 23, 1928, and that the petitioners had in fact been in contempt of the superior court for a period of more than two months prior to the time relief was sought in this court. Hence it is argued, the contempt having already been committed, the petitioners ought not to be heard upon their petition herein. The petitioners contend, however, that they promptly stated in open court their intention to appeal from said judgment, and that, although no notice of entry thereof was served, they did in fact perfect their appeal within a reasonable time thereafter, and that, having done so, they ought not to be held in contempt of court nor compelled to permit an inspection of their books pending such appeal.

In Sisson v. Guaranty Mortgage Co. (Cal. App.) 265 P. 1031, it was said that in such a case an appeal would not of itself stay execution of the judgment, but that, since the defendants might be damaged by its enforcement pending the appeal, a stay would not be improper if they should furnish good and sufficient undertaking to secure the plaintiff against loss in the event of an affirmance. The petitioners in the instant proceeding furnished bond as ordered by the court below, and have also furnished further undertaking in this court, to stay execution pending appeal and pending the determination of this proceeding.

As to the merits of the case, it is obvious that, while on April 27th petitioners were ordered to show cause before the superior court why they should not comply with said judgment or be adjudged in contempt for a failure to do so, they had previously and on the 10th day of the same month, by perfecting an appeal and filing an undertaking staying execution as ordered by the trial court, completely answered the question there presented, and had also challenged the validity of the judgment itself. If the judgment be held invalid, the defendants would not be in contempt of court for having denied the plaintiff an inspection of their books and records. If it be affirmed, the law provides ample remedy.

The respondents cite, in support of their defense to the application herein, Ex parte Cottrell, 59 Cal. 417. It there appeared, however, that the petitioner in a habeas corpus proceeding, who had been incarcerated for failure to obey an order increasing alimony, had not furnished any undertaking to stay execution of the order, although he appealed therefrom.

It is ordered that a writ of supersedeas issue, staying proceedings in the superior court until the disposition of the issues presented upon appeal.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

93 Cal. App. 484

PEOPLE v. JOHNSTON. (Cr. 1682.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 10, 1928.

1. Automobiles $\S$ 355(13)—Evidence that defendant unlawfully operated automobile upon highway, causing pedestrian's death, held sufficient to support conviction for manslaughter.

In action for manslaughter caused by the unlawful operation of an automobile upon a public highway resulting in collision with pedestrians thereby killing one of parties struck, evidence that defendant failed to stop after collision and that he was intoxicated held sufficient to support conviction.

2. Automobiles $\S$ 357—Instruction that automobilist unlawfully and feloniously striking and leaving pedestrian without giving aid is liable for probable result held sufficient without words "knowingly" and "willfully."

Instructing jury in effect that an automobile driver who by his unlawful and felonious conduct strikes and leaves a pedestrian without giving aid is liable for the natural and probable result of his unlawful act held sufficient without inclusion of the words "knowingly" and "willfully."

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

William Johnston was convicted of manslaughter, violating section 141, Motor Vehicle Act, and driving an automobile while intoxicated, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Benno M. Brink, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Waldamar Augustine, of San Francisco, for the People.

CRAIG, J. On the night of February 3, 1928, at about 9:30 o'clock, appellant, while driving an automobile in a southerly direction on Vermont avenue, near Forty-Eighth street, in the city of Los Angeles, struck Mrs. Florence Gillette and a lady companion and ran over them, as a result of which the former died almost instantly. He was charged by information, consisting of three counts, with (1) manslaughter; (2) violation of section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 562) for failure to stop and furnish the information required by said section or to render aid; and (3) driving a vehicle upon a public street while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. He was found guilty upon all three counts, and was sentenced to serve in the penitentiary at San Quentin under the first two counts the time prescribed by law, and 90 days under the third count. This appeal is from the judgments rendered.

[1] The principal ground of appeal is an alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and judgment upon either one of the counts. It is insisted that as to the verdict of manslaughter there is no evidence that the defendant was engaged in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or of an unlawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without care or circumspection, when the acts were committed which resulted in the death of Mrs. Gillette; that there was no evidence that defendant caused Mrs. Gillette's death, or that he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor at the time of the collision. It is asserted that "the only possible theory upon which the jury could have convicted on the charge of manslaughter is that the defendant was driving his machine while under the influence of intoxicating liquor at the time of the accident."

Two eyewitnesses testified that they saw a Ford automobile knock down two elderly women as they started to walk across Vermont avenue at Forty-Eighth street; that they were hit in the pedestrian zone; that it ran over them, turned westerly on Forty-Ninth or Fiftieth street, and made no effort to stop. The witness Morgan followed the machine in his car and obtained the license number; it was that driven by Johnston, and he was traced to his room, and was arrested at about 11:30 p. m. This witness also testified that Johnston increased his speed after striking the women, and continued to increase it up to about 40 miles an hour after turning westerly. A Mrs. Rose Ex stated that she was sitting in another car across the street from the accident, and that her attention was attracted by screams. It appears that another Ford car, which followed the defendant, ran over Mrs. Gillette's lower limbs below the knees. The autopsy surgeon testified that death was caused by crushing of the chest and abdomen.

One of the arresting officers swore that he found the defendant in bed, asleep, at about 11:30 p. m., and that it took some time to awaken him; that he then smelled of liquor, walked unsteadily; that his speech was more or less incoherent, and that "he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor"; that

Johnston admitted having been driving the Ford car, but said that he did not know where; that he had had a few drinks, and did not remember being farther south than Sixteenth street or Venice boulevard. The police surgeon testified that when the defendant arrived at the station house at 12:30 his breath was alcoholic, though he was not intoxicated, but that it would have been possible for him to have been intoxicated an hour before.

It remained for the jury to determine from the evidence, the salient portions of which are detailed above, and under the instructions of the trial court, as to whether or not the defendant was intoxicated when he knocked down and ran over the pedestrians, and we think the evidence was unquestionably sufficient to support their affirmative verdict in this respect. That he failed to stop, and that Mrs. Gillette came to her death as a result of the accident, are facts established by uncontradicted testimony of witnesses who were at the scene at the time. The question as to whether or not he struck the deceased was one as to which he claims there is a reasonable doubt raised by the evidence and circumstances. Granting that such a doubt might have been justified, we cannot say that the failure of the jury to so view the evidence was wholly unwarranted. Such a question is nearly always one as to which no direct evidence can be produced, and which must be determined through deduction and inference. It is idle to argue that there is an entire absence of facts established from which the jury could reasonably be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was cognizant of the fact that he had struck the deceased. The point does not warrant a restatement of the evidence in that behalf.

That the automobile which followed appellant's machine did not cause Mrs. Gillette's death seems obvious from the facts herein set forth. Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice. Pen. Code, § 192. Since there is ample evidence tending to prove that Johnston drove on a public thoroughfare while intoxicated, the jury were justified in concluding that he committed a lawful act in an unlawful manner and was guilty of the offense charged in the first count.

[2] It is argued that the trial court erred, in instructing the jury that one who unlawfully strikes and leaves a pedestrian without stopping to render aid is liable for the natural and probable result of his unlawful act, by not including therein the words "knowingly" and "willfully." The entire instruction reads as follows:

"It is the law that if a person while driving an automobile on a public highway, by his unlawful and felonious conduct strikes another and causes him or her to be thrown to the pavement of a public highway and leaves the person so struck lying on the highway in a helpless condition, the person thus causing the condition of the injured person is liable for the natural and probable result of his unlawful acts, and, if, as a result thereof, the injured person is struck and killed by a vehicle driven by another person driving an automobile, the person who originally struck the injured person and left him upon the highway is as fully responsible under the law as if his own act had inflicted the fatal injuries."

The plain purport of this instruction was to inform the jury concerning the responsibility of the defendant, as involved in the charge of manslaughter, and that it had no direct application to the charge contained in the second count. Viewed in this light, we think it is not subject to criticism. Of course, the entire law pertaining to any charge is not expected, nor is it required, to be stated in one instruction. For the purposes of this instruction, the provision therein that the conduct in question should be unlawful and felonious is sufficient without defining these terms, and especially the word "felonious." No other point merits consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

93 Cal. App. 465

STACY-JUDD v. STACY-JUDD.
(Civ. 3541.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 7, 1928.

1. Divorce ⇨133(1)—Decree granting husband divorce for desertion held supported by evidence.

In action for divorce by husband on ground of wife's failure and refusal to return after leaving on trip, evidence held sufficient to support decree granting husband divorce for desertion.

2. Divorce ⇨37(19)—Repentance of offending spouse does not destroy cause of action for desertion, where statutory period has elapsed, unless injured spouse voluntarily accepts offer of condonation (Civ. Code § 102).

Where statutory period for desertion has elapsed, repentance on part of offending spouse does not have effect of destroying other's cause of action for desertion, unless such other of his own free will accepts the offer of condonation, and desertion is cured, under Civ. Code, § 102, only where deserting spouse returns before the expiration of the period.

3. Divorce ⇨133(3)—Evidence in divorce action sustained finding that wife left husband with intent to permanently separate from him without husband's consent.

In husband's action for divorce on ground of wife's desertion, evidence held to sustain finding that wife left husband with deliberate intention of permanently separating and that such permanent separation was without husband's consent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action for divorce by Robert B. Stacy-Judd against Anna Veronica Stacy-Judd. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jerome H. Kann, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff and the defendant are husband and wife. This is a suit by the plaintiff for a divorce from the defendant, on the ground of willful desertion. The complaint, which was filed on the 10th day of September, 1924, after alleging the fact of the intermarriage of the parties in January, 1917, and the fact of the plaintiff's residence in the state of California and of the county of Los Angeles for more than one year prior to the commencement of this action, proceeds:

"The said plaintiff further alleges that on or about the 19th day of September, 1921, in the city of Calgary, in the province of Alberta, Canada, the said defendant, without cause or provocation on the part of this plaintiff and against his will and without his consent, willfully left and separated herself from said plaintiff with the intent to desert the said plaintiff, and that the said defendant ever since the said date has lived, and still continues to live, separate and apart from the said plaintiff against his wish and without his consent."

The complaint further states that "there is no issue of the said plaintiff and said defendant," nor (it is likewise further stated) are there "any community or other property rights between the said plaintiff and the said defendant."

A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and the defendant thereupon answered, denying the essential allegations of the complaint and then declaring:

"That it is true that plaintiff and defendant have been living separate and apart for some time, but defendant alleges that such separation was not caused by any act or wish of the defendant herein and that such separation was contrary to and against the will and consent and wish of this defendant and the same has been caused and continued on account of the conduct of the plaintiff towards the defendant, and not otherwise. This defendant further alleges that she never at any time deserted or abandoned the said plaintiff or separated herself from him, either without his consent, or otherwise, or at all, and that she has only lived separate and apart from the said plaintiff because of his refusal to live with or support this defendant."

The statement in the complaint that there is no issue of said marriage and the further statement that there are no community or other property rights of the parties are not denied, and the truth of those allegations of the complaint, therefore, stand admitted by the pleadings. And there is no evidence in the record of children born to them or of any community rights between the parties.

The court made findings, upon which it predicated its interlocutory decree, declaring that the plaintiff is entitled to a divorce from the defendant. The latter appeals from said decree.

The points urged here are that the findings and the interlocutory decree are without sufficient evidentiary support, but that, if there was a voluntary separation by the defendant from the plaintiff with intent to desert the latter, the evidence shows that the former, before the expiration of the statutory period (one year) required to constitute a cause of action for desertion, offered in good faith to fulfill the marriage contract, and solicited condonation, which was refused by the plaintiff. Civ. Code, § 102.

The findings and the decree are afforded sufficient evidentiary support. It may be conceded for the purposes of this decision that upon the ultimate questions of fact there is a substantial conflict.

The plaintiff is an architect by profession and the defendant a school teacher. They intermarried on the 10th day of January, 1917, at the city of Minneapolis, in the state of Minnesota. At that time plaintiff resided at Minot, N. D. Plaintiff testified that after his marriage with defendant he made up his mind to leave Minot and seek a location elsewhere; that, carrying out this determination, he went to Calgary, Canada, in January, 1920, and, after being there "a week or two," decided to locate at that place, and did take up his residence there. He continued:

"I decided to stay in Canada, and I established a home there, and later went back to Minot, packed up various goods, and we drove back to Calgary June, 1920. About three weeks after she arrived she told me she had made a contract with the school board in Minot, N. D., to return there for the winter season and I objected to that, but I allowed her to go, and she went for the September opening of school and left me for 3½ or 4 months. Then I wrote her urging her to return, which I think she did, just before Christmas. When Mrs. Judd came in June, I had been living in a flat. I did not have my own home and had not established a home there because my furniture was still in Minot and my home was really in Minot, N. D. I bought a house in Canada in April, 1921, after Mrs. Judd returned from North Dakota from her school. We lived together until the 19th of September, 1921, about a year, I think. She and her mother left for Minnesota the 19th of September, 1921, and I consented for her to go; no question about that. I took them to the train. I gave her $100 for her expenses. * * * The train left at 11:15. I drove them down to the station in my automobile. I left Calgary, Canada, I think, in September, 1922, a little over a year after she left. I came down to this coast and drove back again and decided Los Angeles was the best place and I just got out of Canada in September, 1922. After September 19, 1921, I wrote to my wife many times. I received other letters which I have not produced in court. I could not state how many. I received the fourteen written and printed cards and the letters evidenced by the registered receipt. The next time I saw my wife after September, 1921, I think was the fall of 1923, probably it was 1924. In the meantime I sued for divorce in North Dakota on the ground of desertion, based on the separation of September 19, 1921. I went to my lawyer in Calgary and he advised me to bring the action in North Dakota, which I did. He said that the action would be better there because at the time I had no intention of leaving Calgary and it would have done my business no good anyhow, and when I journeyed down to Fargo, N. D., I was notified by my attorneys that Mrs. Stacy-Judd, my wife, had decided to put in an answer and my attorneys advised me to take the case out of the court there and wait until I came to California and stay there a year and start over again."

Plaintiff further testified that he did not know that his wife was going to Minneapolis with her mother on the 19th of September, 1921, until within a few hours of the time they departed. Defendant then stated to the plaintiff:

That she intended to take her mother home and would remain at Minneapolis for two or three weeks and then return to Calgary. "After that time elapsed," continued plaintiff, "I began to wonder whether she was coming back or not, because on her departure I noticed a great many items taken out of the house"—that is, as he explained, "all the silverware, a lot of china, glass, bed linen; in fact, there was practically nothing left but the furniture itself—no other items. But, as she had left the previous year for a period of four months, I thought probably I might induce her to come back, so I wrote at various times to Mrs. Stacy-Judd, urging her to return."

"Q. What did she reply? A. I don't remember having a reply at all. And then about a month or five weeks before Christmas I thought I would make a final effort, and I redecorated the house, spent quite a lot of time there, and got together a lot of items, and at that time I also had my mother, and I sent her a long telegram urging her to return; that was just prior to Christmas; and I did not get an answer at all until, I think the letter was dated the 10th of January, 1922, wherein she said she had no intention—"

"Q. Just a minute. Was there any particular argument prior to the time she left as you stated? A. No, sir; none at all."

"Q. I show you a letter purporting to be dated January 10, 1922, signed, 'Anna,' and ask you to look at the signature and letter and state in whose handwriting both are? A. Mrs. Stacy-Judd's."

"Q. Is this the letter you received by ordinary course of mail? A. Yes, sir."

The letter referred to, with a few statements contained therein, as given here, deleted because not being of importance, reads:

"Minneapolis, Minn., 3701 Park Ave., Jan. 10—22."

"Dear Robin: Your letter and telegram rec'd and it is hard to answer them. In the first place let me state that I too am troubled with my heart caused from worry and trouble during my married life and trying to summon up the courage and strength to return to my unhappy married life."

"When I left Calgary for my visit here, I felt crushed and heart-broken, but thought that time and a complete change would give me enough strength to make one more trial, but I find that I have not the vitality to face it all again. I'm trying not to hold it against you, Robin, for it may be natural for you to be selfish and to possess an ungovernable temper along with other faults. You have made many promises, but am sorry to say you have failed to keep them. You may think you care for me, but back of it all is self. No, Robin, you ceased to care for me shortly after our marriage. Even on our honeymoon you didn't consider my wishes. I can never remember your doing one thing just to please me alone; there was always a selfish motive lurking near. * * *

"You often threw it up to me that I didn't have the nerve to leave you, and I said unless you changed your ways I would be obliged to prove to you that I had. You told me last winter that you lost 'all interest' in me, and you certainly proved it many times. Right up to the last minute we were in Calgary you were so unkind and selfish. You didn't get on the train or even wait until it pulled out. I'm trying hard to forgive all this, but I can never forget!!"

"I won't go into the details any longer, but let it suffice to say that it is all for the best that we should part. Life is short the longest. So you have my permission to get a divorce, marry again, and start life anew. As for me, I have no intention to even marry again for it is indeed far too risky. All I want is peace and contentment. No one to hawl me out publicly—swear at me—keep me up all hours and bore me all evening, etc."

"I have taken a long time in which to make my decision and this is final. My folks refuse to have anything to say on the subject."

"Robin, please do not try to see me as it will do no good, for you have killed all my love for you. You can get your divorce on desertion if you wish one."

"When you stop to think it over you are better off than I am to begin life over again. You never worry for any length of time and then you have our little home—the furniture and the car, while I have gone out into the world as any servant would, with just my few belongings. * * *"

On February 19, 1923, the defendant wrote and addressed the following letter to plaintiff:

"Minneapolis, 625 E. 32d St., Feb. 19, '23."

"Dear Robin: I rec'd a letter from Mr. Shure telling me that the case was dismissed in N. D. Will you please tell me if you intend starting one again in Cal. as soon as your domicile is established there. Also tell me if you paid the taxes on that piece of land up to date."

"Sincerely,

Anna."

The "piece of land" spoken of in said letter consisted of about an acre of land in North Dakota which plaintiff, before the separation of the couple, had conveyed to defendant by a deed of gift. The defendant, not having received an answer to the above letter, addressed the following letter (undated but registered at Minneapolis) to plaintiff:

"Minneapolis, 625 E. 32d St.

"Dear Robin: Two weeks ago I wrote asking you two questions, and as you haven't answered them I thought perhaps either you were ill or it never reached you, as I put no return on it. I would not be able to tell if you rec'd it. So I thought it best to write again and this time register it.

"I asked you if you had paid the taxes on that small piece of land for this year, and if not I'll pay it. I didn't want to ask them at Minot about it. Then the other question was if you are going to start another case in Cal. as soon as it is possible. This last I want to know very much, Robin, so please be rather nice to me and answer my questions, and I may help you to obtain what you wish so much for.

"I hope your health is alright now.

"Sincerely,

Anna."

Again the defendant addressed a letter to plaintiff, at Minneapolis, under date of August 29, 1923, which is as follows:

"Minneapolis, Minn., 625 E. 32d St.,

"Aug. 29, 23.

"Dear Robin: You said in your letter that you held no rancour nor bitterness toward me and yet when I was kind enough to inquire if you or your mother were injured in that earthquake shock you never answered nor allowed your mother to do so. For I'm sure she would have been polite enough to have written at least one line.

"Robin, please play the game like a good sportsman and tell me if you have started the case there in Los Angeles, and if so about what time I'll be served.

"Come on, Robin, just for old time's sake answer this.

"Sincerely,

Anna."

The above letters, it will be noted, were written subsequent to the expiration of the one-year period during which willful desertion must exist before it becomes a legal ground for divorce. The plaintiff testified that in no letter received by him from the defendant was there any proposal or suggestion of reconciliation or an offer to return. It appears that the defendant went to Los Angeles in October, 1923, "to see," so she testified, "if I could make up with him," but found that he would not talk to her on the subject of reconciliation. This, it will be observed, was two years after the date (September 19, 1921) she left Calgary for Minneapolis with her mother, and, obviously, only a few months short of two years after defendant's letter to plaintiff under date of January 10, 1922, was written, in which she positively declared that she had decided not to return to and live with the plaintiff, and that such decision was final. The plaintiff testified, however, that, after her arrival in Los Angeles, the defendant had a number of conversations with him, either in person or over the telephone, and that in none did she express a desire for a reconciliation, but on every such occasion discussed the matter of a money settlement only.

Richard Roberts testified:

"I met the defendant at the Hollywood Branch of the Pacific Southwest Bank, where I was manager at the time. Mrs. Judd came to the office and stated she had left Mr. Judd in North Dakota on account of his inability to support her and she was down trying to arrange a monetary settlement with him. She said she had not been happy with him. This was in the spring of 1925."

Mrs. Hallie Hayward, residing in Los Angeles, and an acquaintance of the defendant, testified that the latter was at the witness' home a short time after the complaint herein was filed (September 10, 1924); that during the course of the conversation the defendant stated she "had come out to California, I think it was in the summer previous"; that some friends had written her before she went to Los Angeles and "told her that her husband was doing a very good business, and she said that she had given the better part of her life to him, and she felt that some recompense was owing to her, and she had made up her mind that if he was getting along he ought to support her"; that she further said:

That "she had been unable to live with him because she had come from a home where she had everything, every luxury, and when she married Judd she was under the impression that he was a wealthy young bachelor, and after she married him she found out that he hadn't any money; that she had not been accustomed to do housework, and she did not like it, and she said that in order not to go around in rags she had to teach school."

The witness continuing, stated that defendant further said:

That "she preferred teaching school to keeping house, and disliked living with him so much that she would rather be occupied."

She (defendant) in that conversation also declared that her family disliked Judd.

Mrs. Ann Stevens, who was present at the conversation between the defendant and Hayward, upon being asked by counsel for the plaintiff as to the purport of said conversation, testified:

"Well she (defendant) merely said that she heard Mr. Judd was doing well out here, and she came out here to get a money judgment, but she would not live with him, and when she went back with her mother she went with the expectation of never returning; she always lived in luxury, and she thought when she married him he was a man of wealth, and after she married him she found out he was poor, and he could not give her the things she wanted, and so she went out to teaching school, which she preferred to housekeeping, and her mother was well to do, and she knew she had a good home to go to."

Herman Vanderhoogan, a building contractor, was acquainted with the plaintiff in Calgary, Canada, and had met the defendant there in her husband's office. The witness had done some work on plaintiff's house in Calgary. He (the witness) went to Los Angeles in 1922, arriving there on November 10th of that year. He testified:

"That in the year 1924 he met the defendant in the plaintiff's office in Hollywood. In 1925 he met her in the Pacific Southwest Bank in Hollywood; that he was in the lobby of the bank waiting for a party with whom he had an engagement, and the defendant, being also in the lobby of the bank at that time, "noticed me, and walked up to me, and started talking about what she had previously told me in the (plaintiff's) office. She said she was absolutely dissatisfied with Mr. Stacy-Judd and she could not get what she wanted; she wanted a settlement in good, real hard cash, and she could not get any money out of him, could not get any care, and he had never kept her; it was absolutely—he was absolutely no good, and she could not live with him."

Vanderhoogan also corroborated the testimony of the plaintiff to the effect that, prior to the latter's receipt of defendant's letter of the 10th day of January, 1922, he was having his house in Calgary remodeled and repaired so that it would be in good condition on the return of the defendant to Calgary.

[1] The foregoing statement of the evidence presented by the plaintiff is sufficient to confirm the statement above made that the findings and the decree are amply supported.

The defendant testified that she endeavored in every way to effect a reconciliation between her husband and herself, but that she refused to entertain any proposition looking to that result. She said that the letter written by her to the plaintiff under date of January 10, 1922, was intended as a "blurr"; her motive being the hope that thus she would bring him to his "senses" and cause him to resume their marital relations and live happily together. She then, rather inconsistently with that statement, testified that she did not intend to mail the letter, but that, while she was temporarily absent from home or the room in which she had left the letter, her sister mailed it with other letters. But there was introduced in evidence no letter written and sent by the defendant to the plaintiff in which she expressed a willingness to return, or a desire or wish that their differences be forgotten and thus their reconciliation effected. There were, it is true, several post office receipts of registered letters sent by the defendant to plaintiff, but the letters themselves were not produced. Besides, with the exception of one or two of these, said letters were sent to and received by the plaintiff after the expiration of one year from the time that the defendant deserted the plaintiff. The defendant testified that the registered letters contained, substantially, an acknowledgment by her of her error in leaving the plaintiff and a direct offer on her part to return to and live with him. But, as seen, the defendant contradicted her testimony as to that matter, hence, as to any of the registered letters sent by defendant to the plaintiff prior to the expiration of the statutory period for desertion which defendant claims contained an offer by her to return to and resume marital relations with the plaintiff, there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, which it was the sole function of the trial court to settle. Section 102 of the Civil Code reads as follows:

"If one party deserts the other, and before the expiration of the statutory period required to make the desertion a cause of divorce, returns and offers in good faith to fulfill the marriage contract, and solicits condonation, the desertion is cured. If the other party refuse such offer and condonation, the refusal shall be deemed and treated as desertion by such party from the time of refusal."

As the counsel for the plaintiff well says in his brief:

"In order that a desertion may be cured it is essential under said section, first, that the return of the guilty spouse be made prior to the expiration of the statutory period of one year; second, that the offending party return; third, that the guilty party offer in good faith to fulfill the marriage contract; and, fourth, that the guilty party solicit condonation."

[2] It is settled law that repentance on the part of the offending party cannot have the effect of destroying a cause of action for desertion already accrued, unless the injured party of his own free will accept such offer of condonation. Of course, this means that the injured spouse is not compelled to accept an offer to return made after the expiration of the statutory period in such cases.

In Walker v. Walker, 14 Cal. App. 487, 112 P. 479, it is said:

"In Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 468, the wife had manifested no intention to return to her husband until after the statutory period constituting desertion had elapsed. The court said: 'Her repentance did not obliterate the offense. If it had been accepted and acted on by the plaintiff, by receiving her and renewing the cohabitation, it would be regarded as a condonation. But he may, after the lapse of the statutory period, refuse to accept the offer. Bishop (section 530), in speaking of the offer to return, says that if it is made in good faith within the period prescribed by the statute to complete the offense, it will bar the suit. "But after the time has expired and the right of action has fully accrued, the injured party is not obliged to accept such an offer; it comes too late."'"

See, also, Kenniston v. Kenniston, 6 Cal. App. 657, 92 P. 1037.

Respecting the element of good faith as one of the essentials of an offer of the guilty party to return, it is said in Peretti v. Peretti, 165 Cal. 717, 719, 134 P. 322, 323:

"But while the law, where one spouse deserts the other permits the delinquent spouse to repent and seek reconciliation and restoration and if refused makes it thereafter desertion on the part of the otherwise innocent spouse, the offer of the spouse originally at fault to resume conjugal relations must be made in good faith. Whether good faith exists in making such an offer is a question of fact, and the determination of that question by the trial court will not be disturbed if there is any ground for supporting it."

In Kusel v. Kusel, 147 Cal. 52, 54, 81 P. 297, it is said that, under the terms of section 102 of the Civil Code, to cure desertion, it is necessary that, with the offer to fulfill the marriage contract, condonation must be asked for or solicited.

The plaintiff, it appears, upon receiving from defendant the letter of January 10, 1922, delivered it into the hands of an attorney, with directions to the lawyer to prepare and file a complaint in a suit for divorce against the defendant. It is here contended by the defendant that those acts on the part of the plaintiff constituted a refusal by the latter to accept the defendant's offer for reconciliation. But this contention is inconsistent with the trial court's sufficiently supported findings. In other words, the contention proceeds upon the assumption of a return and offer by the defendant to renew marital relations, which elements, according to the findings, supported as we have said by the evidence, are absent from this case.

[3] Another contention by the defendant is that the evidence shows that the separation was by or upon mutual agreement of the parties. Of course, the findings are also inconsistent with that contention. While it is true that the plaintiff, after learning (only a few hours before the hour of their departure) that the defendant and her mother intended to leave Calgary for Minneapolis acquiesced in the defendant's plan to make that journey, still it is clear that the evidence, viewed as a whole and upon a rational consideration thereof, warranted the court in finding, as in legal effect it did find, that the defendant, when she left Calgary for Minneapolis, did so with the deliberate intention or purpose to separate permanently from the plaintiff and so desert him. Plaintiff's approval of her act in departing from Calgary at the time mentioned was, according to his testimony, which the trial court had the legal right to accept, upon her representation to him that she merely desired to accompany her mother to her (the mother's) home in the American city named, and that she (defendant) would return to the plaintiff at their Calgary home in two or three weeks. Moreover, as seen, the plaintiff testified that, unbeknown to him, the defendant (who had undoubtedly been contemplating that journey to Minneapolis for some time prior to her departure therefor) had gathered together and packed in a form convenient for shipment, or carriage in some manner, nearly, if not quite, all the household equipments contained in the Calgary house of the parties, and shipped or carried them with her to her mother's Minneapolis home. These circumstances, together with the fact that she did not return to plaintiff, but instead of so doing wrote and sent him her letter of January 10, 1922, in which she declared that her decision not to return to or live with the plaintiff was final and that (in effect) any appeal he might make to her for a resumption of the marital relation between them would be futile, constitute a singularly strong showing of her intention to desert the plaintiff, an intention of which the latter, so he testified, had no knowledge or suspicion until it was revealed to him by the defendant's said letter to him. Thus it was further shown to the evident satisfaction of the trial court that the plaintiff did not acquiesce in or agree to or approve the act of the defendant in separating from him in the sense of a separation which, if existing for the period of one year, would give to the innocent spouse a cause of action for divorce on the ground of willful desertion.

There are no further points requiring consideration. There is no substantial merit in the appeal. The decree appealed from is accordingly affirmed.

I concur: FINCH, P. J.

93 Cal. App. 228

BANK OF ITALY v. MacGILL et al. (Civ. 3544.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California. July 23, 1928.

1. Mechanics' liens — 281(3)—Evidence held to sustain finding that mortgagee at time of execution of mortgage had knowledge of work being done and materials furnished on lots (Code Civ. Proc. § 1186).

Evidence held to sustain finding that mortgagee at time of execution of mortgage had knowledge of work being done and materials furnished on lots covered by mortgage, notwithstanding that materials were not actually placed or delivered upon lots on which buildings were erected, but were piled or placed upon an adjoining lot; Code Civ. Proc. § 1186, authorizing mechanics' liens, not requiring that lumber company should pile lumber actually delivered for building on lot where it was to be erected.

2. Mortgages ⇨151(3)—Mechanics' liens held prior to mortgage executed after beginning of work and commencement of delivery of materials (Code Civ. Proc. § 1186).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1186, authorizing mechanics' liens, when building improvement or construction is commenced, mechanics' liens pursuant to work and delivery of materials commenced before execution of mortgage on premises are prior to such mortgage.

3. Mechanics' liens ⇨213—Mechanics' liens held not waived by reason of execution of trust deed as additional security for materialmen and person performing work on premises (Const. art. 20, § 15).

Mechanic's lien under Const. art. 20, § 15, being a matter of constitutional right, the execution of a trust deed as additional security for person performing work on lots and materialmen held not to constitute a waiver of mechanics' liens, in absence of showing consent to be bound by or to limit any rights by reason of declaration of trust or express waiver of rights as lienholders.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Separate actions by the Bank of Italy, administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Sarah Ann Flint, deceased, against B. D. MacGill, the Hammond Lumber Company, A. E. Harshman, and others, wherein defendant Hammond Lumber Company filed a cross-complaint. From the judgment, plaintiff and defendant Harshman appeal. Affirmed.

Wood, Janeway & Pratt, S. T. Hankey, and Homer C. Mills, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, and C. Newell Carns, of Lankershim, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This appeal involved three actions brought by the plaintiff to foreclose three separate mortgages and actions by the defendant Hammond Lumber Company, a corporation, and C. B. Kahl, to foreclose certain liens. Judgment was entered covering the respective cases establishing the priority of the mechanic's lien. From this judgment the plaintiff Bank of Italy, as administrator, and Harshman appeal. All the actions were tried as one and are presented upon one transcript. The appeals are taken upon the judgment rolls alone.

The transcript shows that the defendant B. D. MacGill was, on and prior to the 10th day of February, 1923, and also on and prior to the 24th day of February, 1923, the record owner of the title to the lots involved in this action. On the 10th day of February, 1923, the said B. D. MacGill executed three separate mortgages on three separate lots, each being for the sum of $3,000, in favor of the Scarborough Company, which mortgages were thereafter recorded on the 24th day of February, 1923, and some time prior to the beginning of this action assigned to the plaintiff herein. While the title to the lots in question stood in the name of B. D. MacGill, one A. E. Harshman was the real owner of all of said lots. At a date not stated, but prior to the 24th day of February, 1923, the said A. E. Harshman entered into a contract with the defendants Hammond Lumber Company and C. B. Kahl for the furnishing of certain labor and materials for the erection of a building upon each of the three lots involved in this action. At a date not stated, but prior to the 24th day of February, 1923, the defendant C. B. Kahl commenced work under his contract upon each one of the three lots included in the mortgages assigned to the plaintiff in this action. Likewise prior to the 24th day of February, 1923, the defendant Hammond Lumber Company began delivering building materials for the erection upon each of said lots of buildings, which material was thereafter used in the erection of buildings upon each of said three lots. The building material, however, was not placed upon the lots on which the buildings were actually erected, but was placed upon adjoining lots.

On or about the 12th day of February, 1924, the defendant A. E. Harshman, by an arrangement with the defendants Hammond Lumber Company and C. B. Kahl, and apparently for the purpose of obtaining sufficient material and the performance of labor to complete said buildings, transferred all his interest in and to the lots involved in this action to one W. T. McAllister; said conveyance being made subject to all the liens and incumbrances upon said property. The conveyance also covered a large number of lots other than the three lots involved herein. Thereupon the said W. T. McAllister executed a trust declaration in the following words and figures:

"This trust agreement, dated this 12th day of January, 1924, is to certify that the undersigned, W. T. McAllister, has taken title to the following described real estate in Los Angeles county, California, to wit:

"Lots 63, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 72, 123, 124, and 125 of tract 5906, as per map recorded in Book 62, pages 13, 14 and 15, of Maps, in the office of the county recorder of said county.

"Lots 52, 53 and 54, block A, of tract 5006, and 126, 128, and 130 of tract 5906, subject to possession until sold; lots 2 and 4, block 3, in Emery Park tract, and lot 1, block 4, in Emery Park tract; also contract of sale with Meyer-ing Land Company for purchase of lots 5 and 7, block 11, Emery Park tract, and lot 27, block 12, Emery Park tract; also order for deed on Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, whereby the trustee is about to take title to lot 127 of said tract 5906; also notes and trust deeds as follows:

"Emma Fay, lot 129 in said tract 5906, for $1,750.00; Annie Richardson, lot 131 in said tract 5906, for $1,750.00; Walter and Pansy Williamson, lot 132 in said tract 5906, for $1,650.00;

"And that he will hold, dispose of and convey the same, together with any other property received hereunder and any and all securities and moneys or other property received or derived in any way, therefrom in trust for the use and benefit of the following named beneficiaries according to their respective interests as follows, to wit:

"First. First, and in priority over any other interests hereunder, Hammond Lumber Company and others furnishing materials and labor to the extent of actual cost of labor and materials used to complete houses, garages, and improvements on above lots and other accounts, including interest at seven (7%) per cent. per annum, from their due dates, all such bills and accounts to be first approved by C. S. Anderson. For checking said construction work and accounts during the progress of the work, the Hammond Lumber Company may employ a suitable person to be on the job at a salary not exceeding that usually paid a carpenter foreman, upon advising the trustee in writing that this course appears to be required to safeguard their interests, and thereupon the trustee shall out of the trust funds reimburse the said company the cost of such employment as a part of his current expenses hereunder. The accounts payable to the Hammond Lumber Company hereunder include three thousand three hundred ($3,300.00) dollars, which covers amount of accepted orders on mortgagee, and accepted by said mortgagee, on the following completed jobs now due: Lots 52, 53, and 54, block A, tract 5906; lots 29 and 30, block E, and lots 11 and 12, block F, all in tract 4689—which shall be the first item paid said company, and for the purpose of conserving the cash available for construction work, and agreeable to said company, such accounts may be deferred in favor of other accounts payable under this paragraph until after May 1, 1924.

"Second. Thereupon, and subject to the above, this trust is to cover each of the miscellaneous accounts of A. E. Harshman in favor of said Hammond Lumber Company and others furnishing material for said job, and interest thereon at seven (7%) per cent. per annum from January 2, 1924, as per statements hereto attached and approved by said Harshman subject to credit of three thousand three hundred ($3,300.00) dollars, when paid under preceding paragraph and any collections from collateral held by said company, the release of which collateral shall be made upon full payment hereunder.

"The present amount of money held by the Scarborough Company is thirteen thousand five hundred sixty-four and 12/100 ($13,564.12) dollars, as verified by W. T. McAllister, and the trustee is to expend this amount for the completion of the buildings and payment of accounts approved by said C. S. Anderson, covering the lots mentioned in this agreement. Should there be any surplus remaining in this fund after the buildings have been completed, it is agreed that the trustee shall cause such surplus to be paid to Hammond Lumber Company, who are then to credit the same to the general account of Harshman as reported by statement of Hammond Lumber Company attached hereto.

"Third. Thereupon, and subject to the above, A. E. Harshman, the balance and remainder of the trust property and income therefrom. All compensation of the trustee and his attorney, as such shall be chargeable to and deducted solely from the amount payable under this item third. In the event there is no surplus to be distributed to said A. E. Harshman hereunder, then the said expense shall be paid by the said A. E. Harshman. Distribution shall be made from time to time as funds are received from sales or otherwise, and at the same time, and whenever it shall be required by the trustee to convey title to any lot or lots held hereunder, any lien or claim held by or under the beneficiaries hereunder, in respect to labor or materials furnished for any building or improvement on any of the trust property required to be conveyed free therefrom, shall be duly released and waived in consideration of the beneficial rights hereunder.

"The trustee shall have full power to manage and control the trust property and to deal fully and expeditiously therewith, the purpose hereof and powers respecting real estate being subject to the provisions of the Civil Code of California; to sell, transfer, and convey any of the real estate at any time held by him hereunder, at such price, not less than the scheduled price approved by said C. S. Anderson, hereto attached, and upon such terms and conditions as the trustee may determine, and to take in part payment therefor the note or notes of the purchaser, secured by first or second mortgage or deed of trust upon the property sold and conveyed by him and/or other property, and to take in part payment therefor, to an extent not exceeding one-third of the sale price in any case, any other real estate of the purchaser, at such valuation as he shall determine, and to exercise all the rights of owner and holder of such notes, securities, or other property, and to sell, assign, pledge, transfer, or otherwise dispose of and turn to account any notes, securities, or other property, at any time held by him hereunder; to cause any real estate to be transferred to a third person for the purpose of providing for the refunding of any loan secured thereby; to pay all taxes, liens, or charges of whatever nature at any time existing against any of the trust property; and to pay or satisfy any debts or claims on such terms and upon such evidence as the trustee may determine. It shall not be the duty of the purchaser of any part of said property to see to the application of the purchase money paid therefor; nor shall any one other than C. S. Anderson who may deal with said trustee be privileged or required to inquire into the necessity or expediency of any act of said trustee, or of the provisions of this instrument.

"The trustee shall be entitled to deduct from the income or proceeds of sale arising hereunder, any commissions at the board rate, costs or expenses incurred by him incidental to the execution of the trust hereunder, and likewise to be reimbursed therefrom all sums of money to the payment of which he, by reason of being trustee, may be held liable or subjected by way of damages, penalty, or fine.

"The trustee may resign his trust at any time by written instrument executed by him and delivered to any one or more of the beneficiaries, and, in the event of vacancy in the office of trustee, however, caused while this trust shall subsist, and so often as the same shall occur, Hammond Lumber Company, W. B. Scarborough Company, and A. E. Harshman, of Los Angeles, Cal., or any two of them are hereby authorized and empowered by any writing executed and acknowledged by them in the manner provided for the execution of deeds to real estate in the state of California, to nominate and appoint any person to be trustee thereof, in the place of the trustee previously acting hereunder, and thereupon, and so often as a new trustee shall be so appointed, the trust property and all powers, authorities, and discretions herein given to the trustee shall immediately vest in the new trustee so appointed as fully and effectually as if he had been the original trustee hereunder.

"This trust agreement shall not be placed on record in recorder's office of said Los Angeles county, and the recording of the same shall not be considered as notice of the rights of any person hereunder, derogatory to the title of said trustee or his successor in trust. Three years from date, if any property remains in this trust, the trustee shall convert the same into cash by selling such property at public auction, upon notice of sale, published at least once a week for three successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation, published in the city of Los Angeles, Cal., and distribute the proceeds to the beneficiaries hereunder, after deducting the expenses incidental thereto.

"In witness whereof, said W. T. McAllister has hereunder affixed his signature and seal the day and date above written.

"W. T. McAllister. [Seal.]

"In the presence of Alva E. Harshman.

"Accepted: C. S. Anderson for Hammond Lumber Co."

Only two questions are involved, which are: First, whether or not the Hammond Lumber Company furnished materials previously to the recording of the plaintiff's mortgages; second, whether or not the defendants Hammond Lumber Company and C. B. Kahl waived their right to mechanics' liens.

[1] The findings of the court are to the effect that the defendant C. B. Kahl had begun work upon the lots in question, and that there were visible evidences upon the lots in question of the work being performed by C. B. Kahl prior to the time when the mortgages in question were recorded by the plaintiff's assignor. The court also found that the Hammond Lumber Company had begun the delivery of building materials for the erection of buildings upon the lots in question prior to the date of the recording of the mortgages now held by the plaintiff. The point made by the appellant as to the delivery of materials is that materials delivered by the Hammond Lumber Company were not actually placed or delivered upon the lots on which the buildings were erected, but that the lumber and other building material was piled or placed upon an adjoining lot, and therefore that the plaintiff's mortgages should be given priority.

Appellant's argument in this behalf is interesting but not very convincing. Section 1186 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which gives a materialman a mechanic's lien, does not provide that a lumber company shall pile the lumber actually delivered for the building upon the lot where the building is to be erected. That section reads:

"The liens provided for in this chapter are preferred to any lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance which may have attached subsequent to the time when the building, improvement, or structure was commenced, work done, or materials were commenced to be furnished; also, to any lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance of which the lienholder had no notice, and which was unrecorded at the time the building, improvement, or structure was commenced, work done, or the materials were commenced to be furnished."

By this section, the lien attaches as soon as the work is begun or as soon as materials are commenced to be furnished. In the case at bar, the findings show that work had been begun upon the premises on which the buildings were to be erected. It is true that the work begun upon the lots in question was work being done by the defendant C. B. Kahl, but the work, as found by the court, being upon the lots adjoining, on which the lumber was piled, gave visible evidence and information to anyone as to the lots upon which the buildings were to be erected, and for which buildings the materials were being delivered. We cannot shut our eyes to what is common knowledge to every one who lives in a city, that building materials are not piled upon the lot where the building is to be erected or is being erected, but is ordinarily and commonly delivered upon and piled upon the streets. We can see no logical distinction between delivering materials upon the streets and upon adjoining lots. If work is being done upon the lots, indicating, as found in this case, where the buildings are to be erected, all persons having to do with the lots are immediately placed upon notice.

[2] The court having found that labor was being performed by the defendant C. B. Kahl and materials also being furnished by him, and also that materials were being furnished by the defendant Hammond Lumber Company prior to and at the time of the recording of the mortgages upon which plaintiff bases its actions, it becomes wholly unnecessary for us to review the argument based upon the case of McClain v. Hutton, 131 Cal. 132, 61 P. 273, 63 P. 182, 622, and sections 1186 and 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure as they read at the time of the decision of the case of McClain v. Hutton and the subsequent amendments thereto, for the simple reason that whether there was or was not any contract between the owner of the lots and the contractor is wholly immaterial. The court has found that the priority of the mechanic's liens asserted by the lumber company and by

C. B. Kahl rests upon the fact of the priority of the beginning of their work and the commencement of the delivery of materials. Under section 1186, Code of Civil Procedure, that is all that is necessary to give priority.

[3] This brings us to the only question having any merit presented by these appeals, to wit: Have the defendants Hammond Lumber Company and C. B. Kahl waived their mechanic's liens? The title to the lots involved, and which were apparently placed under the control of the said W. T. McAllister, was not vested in either one of the defendants. The fact must also be taken into consideration that a large number of lots were included in the trust declaration, and therefore we conclude were covered by the deed of conveyance made to McAllister. The deed referred to is not set out in the findings, and, as these appeals are based upon the judgment roll alone, we cannot assume anything as to the contents of the deed which would be detrimental to the interests of the respondents upon these appeals. It cannot be assumed that this deed was made conditional upon the waiver of any mechanic's lien to which the defendants then had a right or might subsequently acquire by reason of their performance of labor and the furnishing of building material. There is nothing in the record which would place the defendants Hammond Lumber Company and C. B. Kahl in the position of mortgagees having only one right of action, to wit, to foreclose a mortgage under section 726, Code of Civil Procedure. This is not a case where the mechanic's lienholder has taken a mortgage upon the identical lot upon which he asserts a mechanic's lien. It appears to be held under such circumstances that, limited by section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, to one form of action for the foreclosure of a mortgage, the acceptance of a mortgage by the mechanic's lienholder waives his mechanic's lien by reason of the fact that his remedy, being limited to one form of action under the section referred to, is inconsistent with the further assertion of a mechanic's lien. In the case at bar, the testimony not being before us, we must conclude that there was nothing in the deed of conveyance made by Harshman to McAllister which limited the right of action then possessed or subsequently acquired by either one of the materialmen. The declaration of trust, as we have stated, shows that W. T. McAllister had taken title to a large number of lots for the purpose of paying off all of the mortgages and liens that might be upon the three lots in question. The liens were to be discharged and paid off according to their priority. The record does not show that C. B. Kahl ever agreed to the declaration of trust, and, while it does show that one C. S. Anderson apparently signed for the Hammond Lumber Company, we do not find anything that indicates the existence of an intention on the part of either one of the materialmen to surrender their liens until they had been paid in full for the amount of their claims. While the declaration of trust purported to limit the action of the trustee to a period of three years, there is not a word which indicates that the materialmen agreed to any postponement of the assertion of their right to mechanic's liens. No question is made as to the validity of the liens, as to their having been filed within the time allowed by law or of the commencement of foreclosure proceedings thereon. The one point only is urged—that of waiver. Before considering this question, it is proper to state that the decisions are not at all harmonious upon just what act amounted to a waiver, nor are the decisions of those states where a mechanic's lien rests upon the common law alone of much assistance in determining whether there has or has not been a waiver. In the state of California a mechanic's lien is a matter of constitutional right (section 15, art. XX, State Constitution), and by the Code provisions becomes a matter of record. Thus all of the decisions of other states which have to do with secret liens or of which the public can have no notice until an action to foreclose the same has been brought are not of any weight in this state other than in so far as most of them hold that, in determining whether a lien has or has not been waived, the question of intention enters largely into the consideration. In this state the rule that prevails is well stated in 17 California Jurisprudence, p. 161, § 107, to wit:

"Grave reasons must be shown in every case to justify a holding that a mechanic's lien has been lost or destroyed. The mere circumstance that a claimant has taken additional security does not preclude the enforcement of the lien, nor may the conclusion that the additional security was meant as a substitute for the right of the lien, be reached, unless the fact plainly appears from the nature of the contract between the parties."

Following this statement a number of illustrations are given as to when materialmen have not lost their liens. In states having no constitutional provision such as ours, there is a diversity of opinion as stated, and this diversity is shown by the text in 40 Corpus Juris, p. 322, as follows:

"In some states the rule is that a mechanic's lien is waived by taking any other security for the debt, while in other states the taking of other security is not a waiver of the mechanic's lien, unless there is an express agreement to that effect, or such was the intention of the parties, or the security is inconsistent with the existence or enforcement of the lien."

And, further, the same text-writer, on page 323 of the same volume, lays down the rule:

"It has been held that the lien is waived by taking a mortgage on the property subject to the lien, but a considerable number of authorities take the position that a waiver does not result where the parties do not so intend, and the rights of third parties are not infringed," etc.

It may be here stated that there was absolutely nothing in the so-called declaration of trust, assuming that it is binding upon the parties, that limits or infringes upon any of the rights of the plaintiff in the actions under review. As we have stated and as shown by the decision in the case of Simons Brick Co. v. Hetzel, 72 Cal. App. 1, 236 P. 357, the rights of the materialmen related back to the date when they began doing work and furnishing material, which was prior to the accrual of the rights under which the plaintiff claims, and therefore the taking of additional security by the materialmen would not infringe upon the rights of the plaintiff, but would rather tend to safeguard those rights and leave to the holder of the mortgages a more valuable security than otherwise would exist. It may be here stated that the record does not show that anything was ever done by the trustee or any other person in and by virtue of the declaration of trust, and apparently it was abandoned by all parties.

The cases cited by the appellant to the effect that the taking of additional security is a waiver of a lien are all reviewed by the Supreme Court in the case of Martin v. Becker, 169 Cal. 301, 146 P. 665, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 171, and are held to be inapplicable by reason of the constitutional provision to which we have referred. The Martin Case makes plain that the reason which applies to a waiver of a secret or common-law lien has no application when applied to a lien that must necessarily, for both its creation and enforcement, be made a matter of public record. The opinion in the Martin Case, in referring to the taking of additional security, uses the following language:

"Grave reasons indeed must be shown in every case to justify a holding that such a lien is lost or destroyed. Certainly the mere circumstance that the prudent mechanic or materialman has taken additional security for his debt should not be held so to operate. Nor should any conclusion that such additional security was meant to be a substituted security for the right to the lien be found except in the clearest case. Before such a conclusion is reached, it should plainly appear from the nature of the contract between the parties that the security was in fact substituted and not cumulative. And, finally, no argument for the destruction of such a lien can be based upon the theory of its secrecy, when in this state no secrecy at all exists."

The determination of the case of Martin v. Becker, as we read it, turned upon the question whether the taking of a mortgage by Hubbard from the contractor Becker operated as a waiver of the lien asserted by Hubbard by reason of the provisions of section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure, limiting the form of action for recovery of a debt secured by mortgage. It was there held that Hubbard's right of action to obtain payment was not limited, and therefore that he had a right to enforce his lien. In the case at bar, as we have stated, the conveyance was not made to the materialmen. If they acquired any additional security, it was based entirely upon the declaration of W. T. McAllister. The record is silent as to whether the Hammond Lumber Company ever consented to or ratified or agreed to be bound by, or to limit any of its rights by reason of such declaration, nor does the declaration bear the signature of the defendant C. B. Kahl. But, assuming that both of the materialmen were agreeable to the taking of the additional security, we do not find any language therein from which it necessarily must be concluded that the materialmen intended to waive any rights as lienholders or intended to limit any right of action which they might have to enforce liens upon the three lots in controversy. If the transaction as disclosed by the record constituted any security whatever, it simply gave to all parties additional property from which the amount of their claims might be realized. This is not sufficient to justify the conclusion that any existing rights were intended to be waived. The right to enforce the mechanic's liens against the three lots upon which the buildings were erected would not be inconsistent with the right of all parties to have additional property sold by the trustee and the proceeds applied to the payment of the indebtedness of A. E. Harshman.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

93 Cal. App. 317

FRANCIS v. FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND. (Civ. 6367.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 27, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 24, 1928.

1. Injunction ⇨251—Evidence sustained finding that plaintiff, suing for damages on bond given for restraining order, employed attorneys who defended former suit.

In action to recover damages on bond given for restraining order, evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff employed attorneys defending former suit, whose fees were sought to be recovered, though the attorneys gratuitously represented other parties who were defendants in the former suit.

2. Injunction ⇨251—Evidence sustained finding of plaintiff's payment of attorneys, in suit to recover attorneys' fees as damages under bond for temporary restraining order.

In action to recover attorneys' fees as damages under bond given to secure temporary restraining order, evidence held to sustain finding that attorneys were paid by plaintiff, though check used for payment was drawn by club of which plaintiff was president.

3. Gifts ~~to~~ 47(1)—Transaction by which president of club paid attorney with club's check did not raise presumption that club made gift to president of proceeds.

Where president of club hired attorney to defend suit and paid him with check executed by the club, it was not presumed that the club acted as a volunteer or was making a gift to its president.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Leon C. Francis against the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James H. Boyer, of Oakland, for appellant.

John L. McVey, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. An action in equity was commenced entitled Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, a Corporation, v. Leon C. Francis et al. A temporary restraining order was taken out. To obtain the restraining order, the plaintiff gave an undertaking in the sum of $500, which was executed and delivered by this defendant. Later the action was dismissed, and one of the defendants in that action commenced this action to recover $500 alleged to be his damages. The action last mentioned was tried before the court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and, from a judgment entered thereon, the defendant has appealed and has brought up a bill of exceptions.

It is conceded that, in the injunction action, attorneys appeared for the defendants and obtained the above-mentioned judgment of dismissal, that they were paid $500, and that the payment was a reasonable sum for the services so performed. While the foregoing facts are admitted, some others are attacked under the claim that the findings are not supported by the evidence. The findings were general. It is necessary, therefore, to set forth at least parts of the pleadings. The plaintiff alleged, among other things:

"That the plaintiff herein, upon being served with the said temporary restraining order and order to show cause aforesaid, was compelled to employ, and did employ, Frank W. Hooper and John L. McVey, attorneys at law, duly licensed and entitled to practice as such in all the courts of the state of California, to appear for and represent him upon the hearing of said temporary restraining order and order to show cause, and said attorneys did appear for and represent the said plaintiff herein in the matter of said temporary restraining order and order to show cause at the time and place set forth in said temporary restraining order and order to show cause. * * * That the plaintiff herein was compelled to, and did, pay to said Frank W. Hooper for his services aforesaid the sum of $250, and was compelled to, and did, pay to said John L. McVey for his services aforesaid the sum of $250, and the said sum of $500 was and is the reasonable value of the services of said attorneys as aforesaid."

[1] The defendant contends that the allegation as to who employed the attorneys is not sustained by the evidence. We think the contention is not well founded. The plaintiff testified that he employed the attorneys, and Mr. Hooper, who was one of the attorneys, testified that they were employed by the plaintiff. No other witnesses were called. The mere fact that the attorneys gratuitously represented all of the other defendants does not rebut the direct evidence which we have cited.

[2, 3] The defendant makes the additional point that the plaintiff did not pay the attorneys. That contention rests on the following facts: The attorneys were paid by being handed a check. It was delivered into the hands of Mr. Hooper, one of the attorneys, by the plaintiff. It was a check drawn by "East Bay Club of Alameda County," and was countersigned by "Leon C. Francis, President, and J. J. Coons, Secretary." The check was made payable to Frank W. Hooper. The witness Leon C. Francis testified that the check was loaned to him. The defendant asserts that was the conclusion of the witness. However, he did not make that objection during the trial, but cross-examined the witness on the subject. It is certain the money represented by the check was the property of the East Bay Club. The record is wholly silent as to that body making any gift of the money to any one. We may not indulge in any presumption to that effect. When thereafter the trial court made a finding that all of the allegations of the complaint were true, that finding was in effect a finding "that the plaintiff herein was compelled to and did pay to said Frank W. Hooper for his services aforesaid," etc. The finding so made is supported by the evidence. As we understand the defendant, it contends that the East Bay Club of Alameda was voluntarily standing back of the defendants in the injunction case without any agreement to be reimbursed for moneys advanced. But, if such was the fact, the record before the trial court, and which has been brought up, does not show any such donative agreement on the part of the East Bay Club. We may not presume that the club acted as a volunteer or was making a gift. Provident, etc., Ass'n v. Davis, 143 Cal. 253, 256, 76 P. 1034.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 224

KRAMER v. REYNOLDS et al. (Civ. 3548.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 19, 1928.

1. Statutes $\S$ 93(8)—Statute authorizing holding of court in cities of over 50,000 located more than 15 miles from courthouse held valid (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 142, as amended by St. 1925, p. 218, $\S$ 2).

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 142, as amended by St. 1925, p. 218, $\S$ 2, authorizing superior court to sit in cities of over 50,000 located more than 15 miles from county courthouse, held valid, legislative classification not being disturbed unless palpably arbitrary or unreasonable.

2. Chattel mortgages $\S$ 157(2)—Evidence held to sustain finding that one purchasing property from mortgagor, who held under undated bill of sale, had knowledge of outstanding chattel mortgage.

Evidence held to sustain finding that purchaser of personal property from mortgagor had knowledge of existing unpaid chattel mortgage thereon, in mortgagee's foreclosure suit, though date of bill of sale of property given in connection with mortgage did not definitely appear.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1010(1)—Appellate Court may not interfere where evidence in record sustains trial court's finding.

Where there is evidence in record to sustain trial court's finding, Appellate Court is not at liberty to interfere.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by Rose Kramer against Sadie Reynolds and E. C. Redman. Judgment for plaintiff, and, from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, defendant last named appeals. Affirmed.

Frank H. Snyder, of Glendale, for appellant.

Adolph B. Rosenfield, of Long Beach, for respondent.

Ralph H. Clock and Geo. A. Hart, both of Long Beach, amici curiæ.

WEYAND, Justice pro tem. [1] The trial of this cause was had by a department of the superior court of Los Angeles county, sitting at Long Beach, a city within Los Angeles county. The appellant E. C. Redman objected to a trial by the said court, sitting at Long Beach, contending that section 142 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as that section was amended in the year 1925 (St. 1925, p. 218, $\S$ 2), is unconstitutional and void in so far as it attempts to give legal authority to hold a session of the superior court of Los Angeles county in the city of Long Beach. This objection should be considered before proceeding to a consideration of the merits of the case.

Section 142, Code of Civil Procedure, was amended in the year 1923 (St. 1923, p. 78, $\S$ 2), and as it was thus amended it provided that in counties of the first class (the class to which Los Angeles county belongs), a session of the superior court could be held in a city such as Long Beach. This section of the Code, as it then stood, was considered in the case of In re Brady, 65 Cal. App. 345, 224 P. 252, and was held to be unconstitutional, in so far as it attempted to authorize a session of the superior court in the city of Long Beach. In this decision it was pointed out that if the section had been so worded as to apply to all the counties of the state of California, it would not be subject to attack on that ground.

The amendment of 1925 changed the said section in that very particular, making it general, and applying its provisions to all the counties of the state of California. The Brady Case, above cited, cannot now be considered as interpreting the present law.

The city of Long Beach, as ascertained by the last United States census, had a population of over 50,000 therein, and its city hall was more than 15 miles from the Los Angeles county courthouse. These conditions, in any county of the state, warrant the superior court of such county in holding a session of said court in any city in such county where these conditions are present.

In Anastasion v. Superior Court of Sacramento County et al., 194 Cal. 93, 227 P. 762, the whole matter of classification was considered in a lengthy opinion by the late Justice Lennon. It is there said:

"Every presumption is in favor of the validity of the legislative act and the legislative classification will not therefore be disturbed unless it is palpably arbitrary in its nature and neither founded upon nor supported by reason."

The present section is founded upon reason, as it attempts to provide for a session of the superior court within a populous city which is situated a distance from the county courthouse. We can see nothing in the section, as it is now worded, that makes it void.

[2, 3] Passing then to the merits of the case, we find it to be an action for the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage upon some apartment house furniture and furnishings situated in Long Beach, Los Angeles county. In the early part of September, 1923, the plaintiff, Rose Kramer, owned this property. She gave a bill of sale of this property to the defendant Sadie Reynolds and received from said Sadie Reynolds a chattel mortgage thereon for the sum of $2,500. This is the chattel mortgage attempted to be foreclosed herein. The evidence clearly discloses that prior to the actual passing of the instruments, negotiations had been pending between the two parties last above named. The bill of sale and the mortgage were each made out by the proper party and placed in escrow with a banking institution in said city. The bill of sale was undated, as to the day of the month of September, 1923. An exchange of the instruments was effected with the bill of sale thus undated. The mortgage given by defendant Reynolds was dated September 11, 1923.

The original complaint herein was filed November 29, 1924. Appellant E. C. Redman was not named as a party defendant therein. By an amended complaint filed March 25, 1925, it was alleged that the appellant Redman claimed an interest in the said furniture, but that the said Redman acquired such interest well knowing that the said property was subject to the lien of the mortgage above referred to.

The defendant Sadie Reynolds was served with summons and complaint on December 1, 1924, and she failed to appear in the action. It might here be noted that she did not appear as a witness in the trial of the cause. An answer in behalf of the defendant Redman was filed April 24, 1925. There it was alleged that Redman acquired the title to said personal property by bill of sale from the defendant Sadie Reynolds on January 15, 1925, for a valuable consideration, and "as being clear of and unincumbered by said chattel mortgage." He further claims by said answer that on the date of his alleged purchase he relied upon a bill of sale dated after the execution of the mortgage and executed by Rose Kramer to Sadie Reynolds. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant Redman appeals from such judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

In the brief of appellant Redman it is well said "the vital issue of fact upon the trial concerned the bona fides of appellant, in his purchase." Redman was an attorney at law, and at times immediately preceding the alleged purchase of the property from Sadie Reynolds represented said Sadie Reynolds. In the month of December, 1924, it is admitted, he received letters from the attorneys of Rose Kramer, relating to a proposed settlement of the matters involved in the foreclosure suit then pending. In some unexplained manner this bill of sale had thereon, when produced in court at the trial, the date of execution as being September 15, 1923. This bill of sale also had indorsed thereon a statement as follows:

"I paid Rose Kramer on September 15, 1923, $2,500 cash for the articles herein inventoried, at which time I was given and received this bill of sale. [Signed] Sadie Reynolds."

As before stated, defendant Sadie Reynolds did not appear as a witness, and no testimony from her was before the trial court.

As to the bona fides of appellant in his alleged purchase of the furniture, the court found that on January 15, 1925, when defendant Sadie Reynolds transferred the property to defendant E. C. Redman, said Redman had full knowledge of the note and mortgage sued on and that the same was a valid and subsisting lien on the said property. This finding of the trial court had the effect of branding the entire transactions whereby Redman became the apparent owner of this property free from the lien of the chattel mortgage as a fraudulent transaction. This fraud, if such it was, in the nature of things, could have been committed only by Sadie Reynolds, or by defendant Redman, or by both defendants conniving together.

We believe there is ample evidence in the record to sustain the trial court. Where there is such evidence, an appellate court is not at liberty to interfere.

Many cases are cited by appellant as to purchases of property from one holding a release of a prior incumbrance, and the kindred subjects, but all such law and citations are to no purpose, when underlying the whole matter is the finding of the trial court that good faith was wanting.

We do not feel it necessary to quote from decisions in support of the conclusions above reached, as to the merits of this matter.

The judgment herein is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

205 Cal. 1

HOGAN FINANCE & MORTGAGE CO. v. MEAD. (L. A. 9495.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 8, 1928.

1. Replevin ⇨72—Evidence in claim and delivery held to sustain finding that defendant had placed automobiles involved in hands of third person on consignment.

In action in claim and delivery for the recovery of certain automobiles, evidence held to sustain finding that defendant had placed automobiles in the hands of a third person on consignment with authority to sell the same in the usual course of business and account to consignor in case of disposition of any of such cars.

2. Fraudulent conveyances ⇨137(1)—Purported sale of automobile held ineffective against creditor attaching car while owner retained possession (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Purported sale of automobile held, under Civ. Code, § 3440, ineffective as against creditor of owner attaching car at time that owner had possession thereof.

3. Sales ⇨219(2)—Consignee of automobiles for sale could not by assignment of purported conditional sale contracts transfer title.

Consignee of automobiles for sale in the usual course of business, having no title thereto, could not, by assigning purported conditional contracts of sale, transfer title thereto.

4. Estoppel ⇨96—Purchaser of conditional contracts of sale of automobiles without check on cars held wanting in due care necessary to protect itself against fraud (Civ. Code, § 3543).

Purchaser of conditional contracts of sale for automobiles without any check of what cars seller was handling held wanting in due care within Civ. Code, § 3543, necessary to protect itself against fraud in forgery of purported conditional contracts of sale, as against consignor of cars for purpose of sale in usual course of business.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by the Hogan Finance & Mortgage Company against C. S. Mead, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Greenberg, D'Orr & Beilenson, Gilligan & Cobb, Greenberg & Beilenson, and Lawrence Cobb, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Morin, Newell & Brown, Stanley K. Brown, and J. W. Morin, all of Pasadena, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendant, C. S. Mead, on his cross-complaint in an action in claim and delivery.

The defendant and cross-complainant was a distributor of Chevrolet automobiles in Pasadena. One I. H. Weaver was a retail automobile dealer located at San Gabriel. The plaintiff was engaged, among other activities, in purchasing and financing contracts for the purchase of automobiles, dealing directly with automobile dealers. Weaver entered into an agreement with Mead to handle Chevrolet cars at San Gabriel. Under this agreement Weaver received numerous cars from Mead and sold them to customers in the San Gabriel territory. Whether Weaver purchased the cars, taking title in himself, or received them on consignment, is the crucial point in the case. There was no agreement in writing between these two contracting parties as to whether the transaction between them should constitute a sale or a consignment other than as might be inferred from the documentary evidence as to what took place between them. This documentary evidence is found in a promissory note payable on demand in the principal sum of the price to Mead for each car. A note was executed by Weaver to Mead on each car at the time the car was delivered to Weaver, and the note had appended to it beneath the signature of the maker the words, "secured by," followed by the description of the car by model, motor number, and serial number.

In December, 1924, Weaver became involved financially and had disappeared. At that time Mead had in his possession five of said notes on which no payments had been made. He went to the Weaver Garage at San Gabriel, found therein the motorcars described in said five notes, and removed them to his place of business in Pasadena. He also commenced an action against Weaver on the sixth demand note different in form but authorizing suit thereon in the event of nonpayment. The car described in this note was not found by Mead, but in said action he attached a sixth car, the possession of which was then in Weaver. After judgment in said action Mead purchased said car at execution sale.

On December 15, 1924, the plaintiff commenced the present action, describing in the complaint the six cars hereinbefore mentioned and a seventh car which is not now involved herein. At the commencement of this action the plaintiff, by furnishing the necessary bond, required the sheriff to take possession of all of said cars. The defendant did not file a re-possession bond, and upon the expiration of the statutory period said cars were delivered to the plaintiff, who subsequently sold them to third parties.

The trial court found that at the time of the commencement of this action Mead was the owner of the automobiles in question; that Mead had placed said automobiles in the hands of Weaver on consignment with authority in Weaver to sell the same in the usual course of business and to account to Mead in case of the disposition of any of said cars. Whether this finding is supported by the evidence is the important question.

[1] It must be conceded that the notes themselves, unaided by other evidence, might support the inference that the parties intended that the transaction should be a sale and not a consignment. On the other hand, it must also be conceded that this inference is not controlling or conclusive if the agreement of the parties evidenced an intention that Weaver was to be a sales agent or consignee and that the promissory notes were to be the evidence of the amounts for which the consignee should be bound to account to the owner or consignor. The original agreement was an oral agreement between Mead and Weaver. Weaver was arrested on December 9, 1924, and was thereafter sentenced to state's prison. He was not a witness at the trial of this action. Mead testified: That Weaver came to him and wanted to know if there were not some way whereby Weaver could handle Chevrolet cars at San Gabriel. That he was agreeable, but that he soon found out that Weaver did not have sufficient money to buy the cars. That Weaver said, "Isn't there any way that I could make arrangements about the cars?" And that Mead said, "Yes, I will consign you cars; take cars on consignment, and I will hold a note against those cars." That when Weaver took a car he signed a note, and when he made a sale he would report it and take up the note. The evidence of the circumstances attending the making of the original oral contract followed by the execution of the notes would, it may be assumed, support a finding to the effect that the transactions were purchases and that title passed to Weaver, but the opposing inferences in favor of the finding that was made by the court are also deducible from the evidence. Under this state of the record it cannot be held that there was no substantial evidence to support the finding complained of.

[2] The evidence is undisputed that the defendant was the purchaser of the sixth car at the execution sale. It is admitted that title to this car had passed to Weaver. There is no dispute that Weaver purported to convey his title thereto to the plaintiff, but he retained and had possession of the same at the time of the commencement of the attachment suit. Mead was a creditor of Weaver under the note sued on in that action. The purported sale of this car to the plaintiff was therefore ineffective as against Mead under the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code.

[3] After Weaver had received the other five cars involved in this controversy he drew up purported conditional contracts of sale thereof and forged the signatures of the purchasers. He thereupon sold for cash this forged paper and assigned his right, title, and interest thereunder and in and to the cars themselves to the plaintiff. In the assignment he guaranteed to the plaintiff the full payment of the contract price at which the cars were supposed to have been sold and represented title in the cars to be in himself. It is under these forged instruments that the plaintiff claims title. It is obvious that if Weaver had no title to these cars, as the court found, he could not transfer title to the plaintiff, unless he was authorized to do so, which the evidence shows was not the case.

[4] Furthermore, the court found in favor of Mead on every element of estoppel advanced by the plaintiff. From the evidence it appears that Mead was diligent at all times in his transactions with Weaver, by often and periodically checking the cars on Weaver's showroom floor and by keeping close account of all of his dealings with Weaver. On the other hand, the evidence discloses that the plaintiff purchased said conditional contracts of sale without any check of what cars Weaver was handling. It even appears that in one instance Weaver sold to the plaintiff three different contracts of sale covering the same car. In this respect it would appear that the plaintiff was wanting in the due care necessary to protect itself against the fraudulent transactions of Weaver. Section 3543 of the Civil Code is applicable in favor of Mead and against the plaintiff on this phase of the case.

It is unnecessary to discuss the many authorities cited by the respective parties, as the supported findings of the court in connection with the foregoing observations are deemed determinative.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.

205 Cal. 11

MEISNER v. McINTOSH. (S. F. 12347.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 10, 1928.

1. Judgment $\S$ 253(1)—Recovery, in action for damages for fraud, in excess of amount demanded in complaint, held unauthorized, though answer was filed (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 580).

Where plaintiff in action to recover damages for fraud claimed damages only in amount of \$1,000, entry of judgment in excess of amount claimed was error, though answer was filed, and judgment was required to be reduced to sum demanded in complaint, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 580, which permits court to grant plaintiff any relief consistent with case made by complaint and embraced within issue where answer is filed.

2. Deeds $\S$ 59(3)—Grantor's execution and recording of deed, without grantee's knowledge or consent, held not to constitute delivery.

Grantor's execution of deed to property located near property previously sold grantee, together with recording of deed, all without knowledge, acquiescence, or consent of grantee, did not constitute delivery either express or implied.

3. Fraud $\S$ 34—Plaintiff's reconveyance of other property, to which defendants executed and recorded deed in plaintiff's name, without his consent, held not condition precedent to plaintiff's recovery for fraud.

In action for damages for defendants' fraud in purporting to convey property to which they had no title, plaintiff's reconveyance of other property, to which defendants executed and recorded deed in plaintiff's name, without plaintiff's consent, held not condition precedent to recovery.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 989—Affidavits filed on motion for new trial are not considered in determining whether evidence supported findings.

Substance of affidavits filed on motion for new trial, which tended to contradict plaintiff's testimony, cannot be considered in connection with contention that evidence did not support findings for plaintiff.

5. New trial $\S$ 106—Refusal of defendants' motion for new trial held not abuse of discretion, notwithstanding accompanying affidavits which tended to contradict plaintiff's testimony at trial.

Refusal of defendants' motion for new trial held not abuse of discretion, though affidavits were filed with the motion, which tended to contradict plaintiff's testimony at trial, since such evidence should have been offered at the trial.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by Lloyd A. Meisner against Margaret McIntosh, individually and as administratrix of the estate of John McIntosh, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Superseding former opinion in 267 P. 102.

Wm. F. Rose, of San Francisco, for appellant.

James H. Boyer, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1] This appeal was decided in department, and thereafter a motion to hear the same in bank was granted. At the time of the granting of said motion we were in doubt as to the correctness of that portion of the department opinion which held that the judgment was valid, notwithstanding it exceeded the amount alleged in the complaint to be due from the defendants. By the complaint the plaintiff sought to recover damages for fraudulent representations made by the defendants whereby he was induced to convey certain real property of the fair market value of $1,000. There was evidence produced at the trial to the effect that said real property was of the fair market value of $1,525. The trial court found in accordance with this evidence and rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff for this amount together with other amounts hereinafter referred to. No amendment to the complaint to conform to this evidence was made or filed. Appellants contend that as the plaintiff alleged that he was damaged only in an amount of $1,000, it was error for the court to find, and upon such finding to award a judgment, in the sum of $1,525, or in any amount exceeding the sum of $1,000. In this we think appellants are right. The authorities overwhelmingly support appellants' contention. "The rule is firmly established that irrespective of what may be proved a court cannot decree to any plaintiff more than he claims in his bill or other pleadings." 15 R. C. L. 604. "A judgment cannot be properly rendered for a greater sum, whether by way of debt or damages, than is claimed or demanded by plaintiff in his declaration or complaint." 33 Cor. Jur. 1164. "The judgment is for $7,470 and costs. The plaintiff prayed for the sum of $6,000, the value of the property, and $500 damages, and the prayer follows the ad damnum clause of the complaint, which alleges that plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $500 by reason of the detention. In the absence of an amendment to the complaint, therefore, the court could not allow any damages beyond the amount prayed for." Burke v. Koch, 75 Cal. 356, 360, 17 P. 228, 229. The judgment was accordingly modified by striking out the amount thereof and inserting the sum of $6,500. The judgment was not by default, but was rendered after a trial of the action upon its merits. "The finding of damage is for an amount greater than the complaint avers. Still, the finding necessarily establishes that plaintiff was damaged to the amount which he claims. The judgment may, therefore, be modified, and it will still be supported by the finding in question." Kerry v. Pacific Marine Co., 121 Cal. 564, 573, 54 P. 89, 92 (66 Am. St. Rep. 65).

The only decision of our courts which is in apparent conflict with the foregoing authorities is that found in the case of Kimball v. Swenson, 51 Cal. App. 361, 196 P. 781, where the court held that under section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that in any case, where an answer is filed, the court may grant the plaintiff any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue that, "the relief 'embraced within the issue' was the damage for appellants' conversion. The answer having joined issue on this point, the judgment properly followed the measure of damages prescribed by the Code for such cases." The following authorities are relied upon in the opinion as supporting the doctrine therein announced: O'Donnell v. Krammer, 65 Cal. 353, 4 P. 204; Johnson v. Polhemus, 99 Cal. 240, 244, 33 P. 908; Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Ingersoll, 158 Cal. 474, 480, 111 P. 360. None of these cases is directly in point, as in none of them was the direct question involved which is presented for determination in the present action. In Kimball v. Swenson, supra, the court said:

"They (the parties thereto) thus put in issue the question of damages, not merely as alleged in the complaint, but according to the measure specified in the Code."

From this it appears that the case was tried upon the theory that the pleadings were sufficient to raise the question as to whether or not the plaintiff therein was entitled to recover the full amount of damages measured by the provisions of the Code applicable thereto. This is further apparent from a later statement in the opinion as follows:

"The case was tried upon the theory that respondent was entitled to recover upon whichever basis the jury should determine, and at one stage of the proceedings counsel agreed that the measure fixed by the Code applied to the case at issue."

Where a case is tried upon the theory that the pleadings are sufficient to raise certain issues included in the findings, the parties thereto are estopped from thereafter raising the objection that the pleadings do not support the findings. Silvers v. Grossman, 183 Cal. 696, 192 P. 534; Cross v. Bouck, 175 Cal. 253, 165 P. 702. There is no showing that the present action was tried upon any such theory.

The authorities first cited, in our opinion, sustain the contention that the judgment in so far as it exceeds in amount that averred in the complaint is erroneous, and should be modified accordingly.

In all other respects, we think that the department opinion has correctly determined the questions considered, and we hereby adopt the same as the opinion of this court:

"This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against her for $2,361.56 in an action for damages for fraud. The facts as found by the trial court are: That on the 27th day of March, 1924, and at the time of the transfer thereof to defendant Margaret McIntosh, plaintiff was the owner and in the possession of a certain described parcel of real property in Berkeley, Cal., then having a fair market value over and above all liens and incumbrances of the sum of $1,525, which facts were then known to John McIntosh and Margaret McIntosh. That in the months of March and April, 1924, and many times prior thereto, at said county of Alameda, state of California, for the purpose and with the intent of cheating and defrauding plaintiff, defendants represented to said plaintiff that said John McIntosh and Margaret McIntosh were the owners of a certain described piece or parcel of real property in the county of Calaveras, state of California, consisting of 160 acres, and in the month of April, 1924, and prior to the sale of said property to plaintiff, said John McIntosh, acting for himself and as the agent of said Margaret McIntosh, pointed out to this plaintiff a spring of water, and stated to this plaintiff that said spring of water was located on said 160 acres of land then claimed to have been owned by said John McIntosh and Margaret McIntosh. That many times prior to the 1st day of April, 1926, said Margaret McIntosh and John McIntosh offered to trade said land in Calaveras county, Cal., to plaintiff, subject to the incumbrances thereon, for said property in the city of Berkeley owned by plaintiff, together with the promissory note of plaintiff, payable to said John McIntosh and Margaret McIntosh, in the sum of $580. That, relying upon said representations of said John McIntosh and Margaret McIntosh, and because thereof, said plaintiff accepted said proposal of exchange. That plaintiff believed in and relied upon said representations, offers, and promises made to him by said Margaret McIntosh and John McIntosh, and because thereof, thereafter, subsequent to the 27th day of March, 1924, executed a grant deed granting and conveying to said Margaret McIntosh said real property owned by plaintiff in said city of Berkeley, and on said last named date plaintiff also executed to said Margaret McIntosh and John McIntosh, his said promissory note in the sum of $580. That plaintiff received no other consideration, and neither said John McIntosh nor Margaret McIntosh parted with anything for the transfer and conveyance by plaintiff of said Berkeley property to Margaret McIntosh and the execution and delivery of said note for $580 except the said deed purporting to convey to plaintiff said land in Calaveras county, California. That neither said John McIntosh nor said Margaret McIntosh on the 27th day of March, 1924, or at any time thereafter, owned any right, title, or interest in or to said land in Calaveras county, and said spring of water was not on said land, but was situate on other and adjoining land, which latter property was at no time owned by John McIntosh and Margaret McIntosh, or either of them; all of which facts were at all times herein mentioned well known to said John McIntosh and Margaret McIntosh and unknown to plaintiff for more than one year subsequent to the execution of said deeds. That prior to discovering that said John McIntosh and Margaret McIntosh were not the owners of said real property in Calaveras county, or any part thereof, and that said spring of water was not on said or any land owned by said defendants, and without knowledge of the falsity of said representations made to him as aforesaid, and within six months after the execution by him of said note, said plaintiff paid to said John McIntosh and Margaret McIntosh said sum of $580, named as the principal sum in said promissory note, together with the interest accrued thereon, and said note was thereupon returned to plaintiff. That no part of said sums has been repaid to plaintiff. That on or about August 15, 1924, said Margaret McIntosh and John McIntosh sold, transferred, and conveyed said real property situate in Berkeley, previously granted to them by plaintiff, to Earl W. and Virginia E. Weber, who ever since have been and now are the owners thereof.

"An examination of the record discloses that the contention of appellant that the evidence does not support the findings is without merit. The testimony of the plaintiff supports the findings made by the trial court.

[2, 3] "It appears that after plaintiff discovered the fraud which had been practiced upon him and threatened to commence criminal proceedings, defendants executed a deed purporting to convey to plaintiff a 200-acre tract of land, located about a mile from the quarter section which they had sold to him; that John McIntosh caused said deed to be recorded and gave instructions to the recorder to mail said deed to plaintiff. It also appears that the preparation and recording of this deed was all without the knowledge, acquiescence, or consent of plaintiff. Under the circumstances, there was no delivery of this deed to plaintiff. Delivery cannot be made without the consent, express or implied, of the grantee. There is, therefore, no merit to appellant's contention that a reconveyance should have been made by plaintiff as a condition precedent to his recovery in this action. * * *

[4, 5] "Certain allegations were made in affidavits filed by defendant upon her motion for a new trial, which allegations either directly or indirectly tended to contradict the testimony of plaintiff in certain particulars. Of course, the substance of these affidavits cannot be considered in connection with the contention of the appellant that the evidence does not support the findings. At the most the allegations in the affidavits would but create a conflict in the testimony and such allegations were not before the court at the time of making its findings. As to the refusal of the trial court to grant the motion for a new trial, we are of the opinion that its discretion was properly exercised in this matter, as the defendant should have produced at the trial any testimony available to contradict that offered by the plaintiff."

The judgment is modified by reducing the same to the sum of $525, together with interest on said sum at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from March 27, 1924, to date of judgment. As so modified the judgment is affirmed.

It is further ordered that appellants recover their costs on this appeal.

WITTER et ux. v. BANK OF MILPITAS et al.*
(S. F. 11707.)

Supreme Court of California. July 18, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 16, 1928.

1. Mortgages $\S$ 355—Mortgagor, knowing that debt was due, but permitted to make payments, was not lulled into security requiring personal notice of sale under trust deed.

Where attempt was made to set aside sale under trust deed, and it appeared that trustee bank, in order not to cause mortgagors to be unduly inconvenienced, had permitted them to make tardy and inadequate payments, always cautioning them that time of loan would not be extended, and repeatedly informing them that whole amount of debt with interest had been declared due and payable and would be called in, held that mortgagors had not been lulled into security requiring personal notice of sale.

2. Mortgages $\S$ 354—Notice to mortgagor provided in trust deed is sufficient to authorize sale under deed.

In making sale under trust deed, it is sufficient to authorize sale if such notice be given mortgagor as is required by the trust deed.

3. Mortgages $\S$ 369(7)—Evidence held to sustain finding beneficiary of trust deed had not waived provision authorizing it on interest default to consider whole debt due, and require trustee to sell.

Finding that trust deed provision, on default of payment of interest on secured debt, beneficiary could consider whole debt due and payable, and, on written application, require trustee to sell, had not been waived, held warranted by the evidence.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Sale under trust deed will not be disturbed, where findings against contention of unfairness were supported by conflicting evidence.

Findings against plaintiffs' contention that unfair advantage was taken of them in sale under trust deed will not be disturbed, where record showed that as to some of the findings there was no evidence contradicting them, and, as to others, evidence was conflicting.

5. Mortgages $\S$ 341—Sale under trust deed is not void merely because trustee was officer in beneficiary corporation.

Sale made under trust deed by trustee who is also officer in beneficiary corporation is not void merely because of trustee's relation to beneficiary.

6. Mortgages $\S$ 369(7)—Evidence held to show that trustee did not wrongfully withhold portion of proceeds of sale paid for necessary work on premises authorized by trust deed.

Where plaintiffs, in attack on sale made under trust deed empowering trustee to care for property, claimed that portion of proceeds from sale was wrongfully withheld, evidence held sufficient to show trustee had not wrongfully withheld portion of proceeds paid for such care.

7. Mortgages $\hookrightarrow$ 342—Where beneficiary under trust deed was empowered to appoint new trustee, and it did so, sale by new trustee carried title.

In attack on trustee's sale under trust deed, which provided that beneficiary could at any time appoint successors of trustees named in instrument who should have same power as original trustee, and beneficiary appointed such other trustee who conducted sale, held such sale was good, since, on appointment, new trustee became vested with title to trust premises.

8. Mortgages $\hookrightarrow$ 369(1)—Statutes authorizing court to appoint expert to investigate and testify, and statutes as to mode of transfer, held inapplicable to action to set aside foreclosure of trust deed (Civ. Code, §§ 1091–1135; Code Civ. Proc. § 1871 as added by St. 1925, p. 305).

In attack on sale made by trustee under trust deed, where plaintiff invoked Civ. Code, §§ 1091–1135, providing mode for transfer of real property, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1871, as added by St. 1925, p. 305, empowering court to appoint expert to conduct investigation and report to court, held statutes were inapplicable.

9. Mortgages $\hookrightarrow$ 354—Notice of sale under trust deed that should have read "front door of county courthouse," but omitted word "house," held cured by reference to recorded deed containing correct information.

In attack on trust deed providing that, in making sale, trustee should publish time and place of such sale at "front door of county courthouse," and notice, as published, omitted word "house," and was worded "front door of county court," but contained exact reference to book and page where deed was recorded, which contained correct information, held that reference in deed cured slight defect in published notice.

10. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 662(1)—Where record contained no evidence contrary to finding of court, contention that finding was not sustained by evidence held unavailing.

Where sale under trust deed was attacked on ground that notice was not published in newspaper of general circulation, and notice was published in paper decreed by superior court to be newspaper of general circulation two years prior to date of sale, but record contained nothing to show that finding was not sustained by evidence, it cannot be so argued.

11. Mortgages $\hookrightarrow$ 357—Where there was no request to adjourn sale under trust deed, plaintiffs cannot complain because there was but one bidder.

In attack on sale made under trust deed, where only one bid was made, and no request was made that sale should be adjourned, plaintiff may not complain, in absence of other facts supporting claim, that sale should have been adjourned.

12. Mortgages $\hookrightarrow$ 363—Sale under trust deed was not nullity because representative of beneficiary made bid without written instructions; writings subsequently made being sufficient.

In attack on sale made under trust deed, where plaintiffs contended that attorney for beneficiary appeared at sale, and made bid, which was nullity because he had no written instructions at time, and no writing was issued or money passed, held, it was not necessary to have written instructions, or that contract be executed on doorsill of courthouse at time of sale, but writings subsequently made were sufficient.

13. Mortgages $\hookrightarrow$ 349—Sale made by trustee under trust deed, not conducted by licensed auctioneer, held at "public auction" within meaning of deed.

In attack on sale made under trust deed on ground that sale was not made at public auction, and was therefore void because not conducted by licensed auctioneer licensed by city of San Jose, under Charter art. 1, div. 2 (St. 1915, p. 1874), where no ordinance was introduced to show that auctioneers were licensed or regulated, words "public auction" must be taken in ordinary sense, and in that sense sale complied with terms of deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Auction.]

14. Mortgages $\hookrightarrow$ 360—Trust deed, authorizing two trustees to make sale, neither directed nor required that two attend sale, and sale by one was good.

In attack on sale made under trust deed by one trustee on ground that it was void, where trust deed authorized two trustees to make sale, held, that sale was good, since trust deed neither directed nor required two should attend sale, nor that both as in a duet conduct the auction.

15. Mortgages $\hookrightarrow$ 360—Notes need not be taken up by trustees selling under trust deed, where deed does not so provide.

Attack on sale made under trust deed on ground it was without consideration, since notes were not taken up by trustees, was not good, since, if makers wanted notes surrendered to them, it was their duty to apply therefor.

16. Mortgages $\hookrightarrow$ 364—Requirement for payment of price in cash at sale under trust deed did not require beneficiary purchasing to actually transfer cash to trustee and receive it back in payment of debt (Civ. Code, § 3532).

Beneficiary purchasing at trust deed sale held not required to actually pay cash to trustee and receive it back in payment of debt, notwithstanding cash provision of trust deed; Civ. Code, § 3532, not requiring idle acts.

17. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 762—Errors of law first raised in closing brief will not be considered.

Errors of law, first discussed in closing brief, will not be considered, since they should have been presented in opening brief.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by George F. Witter and wife against Bank of Milpitas and others to set aside a sale under deed of trust. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs moved for new trial, which was denied. From a judgment for defendants, and denial of new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion 262 P. 808.

George F. Witter, of Oakland, for appellants.

C. L. Witten and William H. Johnson, both of San Jose, for respondent Bank of Milpitas.

L. D. Bohnett, of San Jose, for respondents Ramstad.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] This action to quiet title and to set aside a trustees' sale and deed covering certain real property was instituted in March, 1924, approximately five years subsequent to such sale. The trial court found all material issues in favor of the defendants, and judgment was accordingly entered. Upon appeal, the judgment was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 2. 262 P. 808. The appellants' petition for hearing herein was granted in order that this court might more fully consider the contention that appellants were, under the circumstances disclosed by the record, entitled to the relief sought because of the failure of the respondent bank to give them personal notice of the contemplated sale of the property under the power contained in the trust deed. Incidentally there is no provision or requirement in the trust instrument for the giving of such personal notice. It appears that the respondent bank did not immediately, upon breach, exercise its right to direct a sale of the premises involved, but, on the contrary, gave the appellants every opportunity over an extended period of time to meet their obligation. Having heretofore accepted whatever benefit may have accrued to them as a result of the respondent bank's delay in asserting its right to direct a sale, the appellants now state that such conduct served to lull them into inactivity, and caused them to rest secure in the belief that no sale would be made until they had been personally notified thereof. We have examined the record, and conclude that this contention cannot be sustained. The trial court found, and the finding is amply supported by the evidence, that the respondent bank did not by its conduct lull the appellants into inactivity or a sense of security. The only notice specified in the trust instrument called for publication of notice of sale "at least once a week for three weeks" in a newspaper having a general circulation in the county wherein the property is situate. That the sale was in strict accordance with the terms of said instrument was found by the trial court. The authorities indicate that it is sufficient if such notice be given as is required by the trust deed. Kennedy v. Dunn, 58 Cal. 339, 340; Balfour-Guthrie Co. v. Woodworth, 124 Cal. 169, 171, 173, 56 P. 891; Sargent v. Shumaker, 193 Cal. 122, 130, 223 P. 464; Baldwin v. Brown, 193

Cal. 345, 351, 352, 224 P. 462; 25 Cal. Jur. 81, § 65. We are of the opinion that this rule is applicable to the present case. As intimated, our examination of the record has disclosed nothing that would justify the application to this case of the equitable principle relied upon by the appellants, requiring personal notice of sale when the trustor has been lulled into security by the conduct of the beneficiary. The appellants, over a period of three years, permitted the payments upon the principal and interest of their debt to fall in arrears without any apparent exertion to liquidate said obligation. The respondent bank, in order not to cause them any undue inconvenience, permitted the appellants to make tardy and inadequate payments, always cautioning them, however, that the time of the loan would not be extended, and repeatedly informing them that the whole amount of the debt and interest had been declared due and payable and would be "called in." As pointed out above, this action was commenced approximately five years after sale under the power and subsequent to an agreement upon the part of the respondent bank to sell the property to third parties, the respondents Ramstad. There would therefore appear to be little, if any, equity in the appellants' favor.

With this prefatory statement, we adopt as the decision of this court the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, above referred to, written by Mr. Justice Sturtevant, and concurred in by Mr. Justice Nourse and Mr. Presiding Justice Koford. It reads:

The plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendant bank and its grantee to set aside a sale made by the trustees under a deed of trust. The defendants appeared and answered, and a trial was had in the trial court before the court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the defendants, and a judgment was entered thereon. The plaintiffs made a motion for a new trial, the motion was denied, and the plaintiffs have appealed, bringing up a bill of exceptions. The portions of the record necessary to the consideration of any given point will be stated in connection with the discussion of the point.

[3] 1. The plaintiffs complain because they were not given actual notice of the intended sale. The trust deed did not contain a provision requiring actual notice. On the contrary, the sixth paragraph provided that, if the debtor failed to pay his interest at the time provided, in that event the beneficiary might consider the debt as immediately due and payable, and that the trustees on the written application of the beneficiary might proceed to sell the property. The plaintiffs contend that the defendant bank waived the provision just referred to by its conduct. They call to our attention that, from the time the loan was negotiated, they were frequently in arrears in the payment of interest, etc., and, notwithstanding that fact, their payments were accepted when tendered, and they cite and rely on the rule stated in Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 295, 110 P. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126. The defendants do not question the doctrine of that case, but contend that the facts of the case at bar do not bring it within the rule. They call to our attention the conversations and correspondence set forth in the bill of exceptions. Turning to the bill of exceptions, it will be noted at once that the plaintiffs received their loan from the bank on the 19th day of January, 1915. It will also be noted that, by reason of the nonpayment of interest, the bank wrote to the plaintiffs on June 9, 1916, exercising its option to declare the principal due and payable. That act was never canceled. Thereafter numerous letters were sent to the plaintiffs by the defendant bank asking for its money. Excepting only the last payment, from the day the notes were signed until the very last payment, the payments made were made when the plaintiffs were in default, and no single payment paid all interest then due. The last payment paid the interest five days in advance. During the same time the plaintiffs were promising to pay, asking for extensions, and representing that they were negotiating a sale of the property so that they could take up the loan. On July 29, 1918, the bank wrote the plaintiffs that they could have an extension of time providing they paid up the interest due July 19, 1918, back taxes, and kept the interest paid up promptly, and kept some one on the place to take proper care of it. The letter closed with the statement: "You have ten days from date in which to make the payment as above provided." The interest mentioned was not paid until December 14, 1918. The discussions continued as above stated, and in October, 1918, Mr. Witter had a conversation with Mr. Reed, the vice president of the bank, regarding the possible foreclosure. Referring to that conversation, the plaintiff testified that Mr. Reed said no foreclosure would be undertaken without notice to the plaintiffs. Mr. Reed testified that he never made the statement. In December, 1918, the bank again threatened foreclosure in a letter addressed to Mr. Gehring, attorney for Mrs. Blais, who held a second trust deed. Mr. Gehring informed the plaintiffs. They handed to him a check for the interest. He delivered the check to the bank, and, at the time of the trial, he testified that on accepting the check "they said the loan was satisfactory." There was no evidence that Mr. Gehring was acting for the plaintiffs, nor that he repeated to them "that they (the bank officials) said the loan was satisfactory." The court found against the plaintiffs on the issue of lulling them into inactivity. The finding is sustained. Sargent v. Shumaker, 193 Cal. 122, 134, 223 P. 464. The payment last mentioned paid the interest to December 19, 1918. No further payments were made, and, on February 4, 1919, the board of directors of the defendant bank ordered its agents to cause a sale of the premises.

[4] 2. The plaintiffs contend that an unfair advantage was taken of them. They assert that they learned the foreclosure had taken place on March 24, 1919, and that on March 28, 1919, Mr. Gehring and Mr. Blais called at the bank and offered to pay plaintiffs' indebtedness, and the bank refused the offer. They call to our attention that on March 27, 1919, the defendant bank adopted a resolution to sell the property to A. G. Ramstad for $8,500, whereas the bank had foreclosed on it for $6,425.05. The plaintiffs cite and rely on Winbigler v. Sherman, 175 Cal. 270, 165 P. 943. In that case, at page 275 (165 P. 946), the court quotes with approval as follows:

"Where the inadequacy is palpable and great very slight additional evidence of unfairness or irregularity is sufficient to authorize the granting of the relief sought."

In their brief the plaintiffs cite many probative facts. Before we proceed to consider those probative matters, it is necessary to consider the state of the record. Those probative facts were introduced in response to the allegations of the complaint of the plaintiffs, wherein the plaintiffs had alleged separately: (1) Numerous irregularities on the part of the trustees; and (2) numerous fraudulent acts on the part of the trustees and the defendant bank. The trial court made findings in response to each of said allegations. Each and all of those findings are against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs contend that such findings are not supported by the evidence. As to some of the findings, there was no evidence contradicting them, and as to some of the other findings the evidence was conflicting. This court may not disturb them.

[5] In connection with this point we understand the plaintiffs to contend that Mr. Giacomazzi could not act as trustee because he was an officer of the defendant bank. They cite and rely on Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 17, 28 P. 788. The case cited is not helpful. It was on an altogether different set of facts. The rule applicable is stated in Copsey v. Sacramento Bank, 133 Cal. 659, 66 P. 7, 204, 85 Am. St. Rep. 238; and Herbert Kraft Co. v. Bryan, 140 Cal. 73, 79, 73 P. 745.

[6] The plaintiffs say that the claim of the bank, "including costs and expenses of sale, was $6,425.05"; that the property was sold for $6,525.05; and they assert that the trustees have wrongfully failed to pay them the balance claimed to be $100. Between the date of the execution of the notes and the date of the sale the property was vacant at times and in need of care. The trust deed authorized the bank or the trustees, "4.

* * * to enter, hold, protect, repair, and care for said property, including improvements, trees, vines and crops thereon, as they or either of them see fit * * * all at the trust and charge of said trustors. * * *

It also authorized the trustees, after sale made, out of the proceeds to pay "6. * * * first the expenses of sale and these trusts including reasonable compensation for their services, counsel fees of $200, and cost of certificate or abstract of title to time of sale, all to accrue on any default of said trustors hereunder, next all amounts with interest due from said trustors pursuant to paragraph fourth of this instrument. * * *

The attorney for the bank, Mr. Witten, made the bid. He testified:

"The amount of the bid made by me was $6,525.25, and was made up of principal and interest, $6,300.05, advertisement, $25.00, attorneys' fees, $200.00. One hundred of my fee went to pay a party who had done work on the orchard."

There was no cross-examination and no contradictory evidence. It is clear that the trustees do not wrongfully withhold $100 or any other sum.

[7] 3. The third point made by the plaintiffs is that there was no devolution of title. The point involves a consideration of the following fact: The deed of trust, as originally executed, conveyed the property to M. Lynn and A. L. Crabb as trustees. It also provided that, in the event of a default, the trustees could sell the property. Furthermore, it provided (omitting irrelevant parts):

"Said beneficiary may, at any time by instrument in writing appoint a successor, * * * or discharge and appoint a new trustee in the place of any trustee named herein or acting hereunder, * * * who shall have all the estate, powers, and duties of said trustee predecessor."

By an instrument in writing dated March 6, 1917, the bank appointed E. P. Giacomazzi in the place and stead of M. Lynn. Thereafter Giacomazzi and Crabb conducted the trustee sale and conveyed the property. Lynn did not join nor did he execute a deed. Under the facts it was not necessary. Wood v. Gridley, 217 Ill. App. 579. At page 585 the court said:

"Upon the appointment being made under the power, the new trustee becomes vested, ipso facto, with the title to the trust premises and is clothed with the same power as if he had been originally named in the will. No conveyance need be made to him by the former trustee, or by the former trustee's heirs or representatives, if he be dead. Craft v. Indiana, D. & W. Ry. Co., 166 Ill. 580 [46 N. E. 1132]; Reichert v. Missouri & I. Coal Co., 231 Ill. 238 [83 N. E. 166, 121 Am. St. Rep. 307]; Edwards v. Edwards, 22 Ill. 121; 39 Cyc. 312, and cases cited."

[8] The plaintiffs invoke sections 1091-1135 of the Civil Code and section 1871 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as added by St. 1925, p. 305. Those sections have no application to the facts.

[9] 4. The trust deed provided that in making a sale the trustees should "publish the time and place of such sale * * * at public auction at the front door of the county courthouse in the county of Santa Clara. * * *" The notice as published omitted the word "house," and was worded "front door of the county court in San Jose." There is no claim that the sale as made was not made at the front door of the county courthouse at San Jose in the county of Santa Clara. The notice as published contained an exact reference to the date, parties, and the book and page of the recordation of the trust deed. That deed contained the correct information. That reference cured the slight defect of which the plaintiffs complain. Lau v. Scribner, 197 Mich. 414, 163 N. W. 914, and cases there cited. See, also, Hinds v. Clark, 173 Cal. 49, 54-55, 159 P. 153.

[10] 5. In this same connection it is contended that the notice was not published in a newspaper of general circulation. The notice was published in the Daily Record. A decree of the superior court adjudging the Daily Record to be "a newspaper of general circulation" was introduced in evidence. The trial court made findings on the issue against the plaintiffs. As we understand, the plaintiffs contend that the adjudication was made two years prior to the date of the sale, and that the adjudication is no evidence that the Daily Record was, at the time of the sale, a newspaper of general circulation. There was no evidence that the judgment determining the status of the Daily Record had been vacated. There is nothing in the record, therefore, from which it can be argued that the findings made by the trial court on this branch of the case are not sustained by the evidence. In re Simpson, 62 Cal. App. 549, 217 P. 789.

[11] 6. In making their sixth point, the plaintiffs state that the trustees did not do their duty, and continue the sale for want of bidders. They point out that there was only one bidder, the officer of the bank; they call attention to the fact that it is their claim that the property was sold for a little over $6,000 when it was of a value of nearly $25,000; and they argue that to uphold the sale would be to uphold a set of facts that was tantamount to a fraud. The argument would be impressive, if it were sustained by the record. But the record discloses that, at the time of the sale, there was only one bid. There was no request made by any one that the sale should be adjourned to a day certain. The court found that the property was not of a value of $25,000, and that it could not have been sold for more than $8,500. That finding is supported by the evidence. In the absence of any other facts supporting the claim that the sale should have been adjourned, the plaintiffs may not complain. Freeman on Void Judicial Sales, § 32.

[12] 7. It is next contended that there was no sale. That fact was alleged in the plaintiffs' complaint, and the trial court made findings against the plaintiffs. In presenting the point to this court, we understand the plaintiffs to contend that, when Mr. Witten, the attorney for the bank, appeared at the sale and made a bid, his act was a nullity because he held no written instructions at the time, no writing was issued at the time, and no money was passed at the time. It was not necessary that he hold written instructions, nor that a contract be executed on the doorsill of the courthouse at the time of the sale, nor that money should pass at that same time and place, nor that the notes be surrendered. The writings subsequently made were sufficient. Bank of Orland v. Finnell, 133 Cal. 475, 478, 65 P. 976.

[13] 8. The eighth point made by the plaintiffs is that the sale was not made at public auction, and was therefore void. In other words, they contend that, because the auction was not conducted by a licensed auctioneer, then it was not a public auction. The power to license is vested in the city of San Jose by virtue of the terms of its charter, article 1, division 2. See Stats. 1915, p. 1874. No ordinance was introduced which shows that auctioneers are licensed at that place or which purports to regulate auctions or define what is a public auction. The words "public auction" are not defined by statute, and therefore they must be taken in their ordinary sense. Estate of Gird, 157 Cal. 534, 542, 108 P. 499, 137 Am. St. Rep. 131. Construed in that sense, the trustees fully complied with the terms of the deed.

[14] 9. The plaintiffs contend that the sale was made by one only of two trustees, and therefore void. They note the fact that the sale was actually conducted by Giacomazzi. The rest of their argument is the same as made under division 3, supra. For the reasons there stated, it is clear that the argument is without merit. Moreover, the deed of trust authorized the two trustees to make the sale. It neither directed nor required that the two should attend the sale, nor that both as in a duet conduct the auction.

[15, 16] 10. It is next contended that the sale was made without consideration. In this connection the plaintiffs make two complaints—they object because the trustees did not take up the notes and return the notes to the makers, and they object because the trustees did not require the bank to pay cash. As to the first complaint, it does not come within the terms of the trust deed. It is wholly silent on the subject. If the makers wanted the notes surrendered to them, it was their duty to apply to the bank therefor. As to the second complaint, it is quite clear that the deed provided that the sale would be for cash; however, if the beneficiaries bid at the sale, the deed contained no language that commanded the trustees to require that the bank carry to the sale a sack of cash, make its bid, obtain its deed, pay in cash, and then demand back the cash and credit it as a payment on the notes. Having determined their duty to make a sale, the trustees had the right to conduct it as they did. The idle act of carrying around the sack of cash is not mentioned in the contract, and "the law neither does nor requires idle acts." Civ. Code, § 3532. In Voorhies v. Voorhies, 66 Misc. Rep. 78, 82, 120 N. Y. S. 677, at page 681, the court said:

"1. As the deed gave to the trustee a power in trust to sell and turn over the proceeds as he chose, to the extent of all the proceeds, equity will deem it a valid exercise of his powers to turn over the real property instead. * * * The same reasoning, applied in all the cases giving the beneficiary the right of election to take the property instead of the money, applies equally to these assumed facts, if the trustee were willing to convey the property directly, instead of selling and turning over the proceeds. While the beneficiaries could not elect or compel the trustee to convey the property and thus terminate the trust, yet, when the trustee had himself determined, in the exercise of his discretion, that he would thus terminate the trust by selling and turning over the proceeds, there is no reason why he could not instead convey the property directly. This he did, by his deed of January 25, 1875, giving good title to John James Voorhies and his wife."

11. The plaintiffs contend that plaintiffs have been deprived of their property without due process of law. That point is but another method of arguing the contentions presented in the preceding divisions. For the reasons stated above, the point must be ruled against the plaintiffs.

[17] We have taken up and discussed each point made in the opening brief. In their closing brief the plaintiffs, for the first time, set forth certain errors of law. There are two reasons why we do not take up each one and discuss it. If the plaintiffs relied on said errors or any one of them, the plaintiffs, in fairness to the defendants and to the court, should have presented such points in their opening brief. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 734, § 424. In the second place, it is clear, if we make a detailed comparison, that the points stated in the opening brief were but another method of stating the errors of law which plaintiffs enumerate in their closing brief.

We find no error in the record.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

204 Cal. 673

WESTLAKE MERCANTILE FINANCE CORPORATION v. MERRITT et al.
(S. F. 12855.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 6, 1923.

1. Bills and notes $\S$ 149—Question of negotiability of draft must be determined from face of instrument.

Question of negotiability or nonnegotiability of a draft must be determined from face of instrument itself.

2. Bills and notes $\S$ 165—Drafts drawn by seller on buyer of goods, reciting that obligation arose out of purchase, "maturity being in conformity with original terms of purchase," held nonnegotiable (Negotiable Instruments Act, Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 3084, 3085, 3133).

Drafts drawn by seller on buyer of goods, reciting that "the obligation of the acceptor hereof arises out of the purchase of goods from the drawer, maturity being in conformity with original terms of purchase, held nonnegotiable trade acceptances, in view of Negotiable Instruments Act (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 3084, 3085), making instruments payable upon a contingency nonnegotiable, since underlying contract was made a part of instruments for the purpose of determining the maturity date, and holder was therefore not entitled to recover thereon as holder in due course under section 3133.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by the Westlake Mercantile Finance Corporation against Charles A. Merritt and Charles A. Parlier, individually and as copartners, doing business under the firm name and style of Merritt & Parlier. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal, 262 P. 815.

George H. Woodruff and Woodruff, Musick, Pinney & Hartke, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Elmer D. Jensen, of San Jose (H. A. Blanchard, of San Jose, of counsel), for respondents.

PRESTON, J. On April 30, 1925, under the trade-name of Aristocrat Distributing Company, one J. B. Vallen entered into a contract in writing with Chas. A. Merritt and Chas. A. Parlier, a copartnership doing business under the name of Merritt & Parlier, with reference to the sale and delivery by the former to the latter of a certain number of dishwashing machines. The contract need not here be set out other than to state that it was never fulfilled on the part of the Aristocrat Distributing Company, and there is no pretense that its covenants were observed. At the time of the making of the contract, and as a part of the transaction, Merritt & Parlier accepted two drafts or trade acceptances drawn by the Aristocrat Distributing Company, payable to themselves, alike except as to date of maturity, for $420 each, and payable 60 and 90 days after date, respectively. The material part of the earliest of these acceptances is here set forth:

"No. ——. Los Angeles, Calif., 4/30, 1925, date of sale. $420 to Merritt & Parlier, San Jose, Calif., on June 30th, 1925. Pay to the order of ourselves at Los Angeles, Calif., the sum of four hundred twenty and 00/100 dollars. The obligation of the acceptor hereof arises out of the purchase of goods from the drawer, maturity being in conformity with original terms of purchase. Accepted at San Jose, Cal., dealer's town, on 4/30, 1925, date of order. Payable through Security State Bank, San Jose, Cal., dealer's bank. Merritt & Parlier, Trade-Name of Acceptor. By Chas. A. Merritt, Authorized Acceptor. Aristocrat Distributing Co., J. B. Vallen."

[1, 2] Plaintiff, alleging itself to be a holder in due course (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3133) of these instruments, sued the defendants as acceptors thereof for the amounts specified therein. Defendant copartnership, pleading the nonnegotiability of said instruments, introduced and proved an uncontradicted defense to said obligations unless plaintiff can be said to be an innocent purchaser thereof for value. Plaintiff showed a payment of \$786.90 for said instruments and that it was ignorant of all infirmity in them. The whole question turns upon the negotiability or nonnegotiability of said drafts, and this question must be determined from the face of the instruments themselves. International Finance Co. v. Northwestern Drug Co. (D. C.) 282 F. 920. The question is further refined by the construction to be placed upon the above clause, reading:

"The obligation of the acceptor hereof arises out of the purchase of goods from the drawer, maturity being in conformity with original terms of purchase."

In other words, is said clause the expression of a contingency as to the maturity of the acceptances, or does it merely refer to the consideration for which they were given? Particularly, does the expression, "maturity being in conformity with original terms of purchase," refer to the date set up in the body of the trade acceptances, or does it refer to the underlying contract between the parties? It will be observed that these acceptances were made payable to the drawers themselves. The question further arises: For what reason were these paragraphs inserted? Without them the instruments are perfect trade acceptances, negotiable in form in every respect. If these paragraphs were not intended to make the collateral agreement a part of the instruments, then they are a fraud upon the acceptors, who had a right to believe that they would mature only as in said contract provided.

We are fortunately not without assistance in the proper construction of these instruments, for the identical question was presented to the highest courts in both the states of Minnesota and Texas. It seems that the representatives of this patented article, the Aristo dishwashing machine, have in other states been long on promises, short on performances, and quick on negotiations of the obligations executed by the credulous and unwary merchants. In Minnesota, in the case of Heller v. Cuddy, 172 Minn. 126, 214 N. W. 924, the court held the above paragraph to be "a statement of the transaction which gives rise to the instrument" (Civ. Code, § 3084), saying:

"So there is no ground for the contention that this statement in the acceptances put the plaintiffs upon inquiry concerning the terms of the underlying contract of purchase or its status at the time being with respect to performance or breach by the parties thereto. The situation is very different from that presented by an instrument which by reference makes another and underlying contract a part of itself and so becomes subject to its terms. That was the case in King Cattle Co. v. Joseph, 158 Minn. 481, 198 N. W. 798, 199 N. W. 437."

It will be seen from the above quotation that if the instruments here under consideration make the underlying contract a part of themselves, their negotiability is thereby destroyed. As above intimated, we are of the opinion that the said paragraph does make the underlying contract a part of said instruments for the purpose of determining the maturity date thereof, which may be different from that set forth in said instruments themselves. In this connection we are constrained to disagree with the opinion announced in the above-quoted case. We are in accord, however, with the reasoning set forth in Lane Co. v. Crum (Tex. Com. App.) 291 S. W. 1084, which is also a case involving the identical language here under consideration. In that case there was in the Court of Civil Appeals (284 S. W. 980), a majority opinion in accord with the Minnesota holding, to which there was a dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Stanford. The Supreme Court, however, adopted the reasoning of Mr. Justice Stanford, in the following language:

"We agree with the conclusion reached by Associate Justice Stanford in his dissenting opinion as to the legal effect of the clause just quoted. In our opinion the clause has effect to render the trade acceptances nonnegotiable under the law merchant as well as under the Negotiable Instruments Act (Vernon's Ann. Civ. St. 1925, arts. 5932-5946). The obligation of the acceptor, according to the terms of said clause, arises, not from the instruments themselves, but from a collateral transaction. For an instrument to be negotiable, the obligation of the maker must arise exclusively from the instrument. No obligation arising from a collateral transaction can be imported into the terms of the instrument without destroying the negotiability of the instrument. 8 Corpus Juris, pp. 113, 114. A negotiable instrument has been termed 'a courier without luggage,' whose countenance is its passport. This apt metaphor does not fit these trade acceptances, for the reason they are laden with the equipment of a wayfarer who does not travel under safe conduct. By their express terms, these instruments bear burdens whose nature must be sought for beyond the four corners of the instruments themselves. The clause in question is more than a mere 'statement of the transaction which gives rise to the instrument,' as permitted by paragraph 2, § 3, of article 5932 of the Revised Statutes. So far from being a mere descriptive reference to the transaction, which gave rise to the instrument, the clause, in definite terms, points to that transaction as the source of the acceptor's obligation to pay the amount named in the instrument. The legal effect of the clause is to render the paper subject to all the rights and equities of the parties to the collateral transaction from which the obligation of the acceptor arises. Parker v. American Exchange Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 1072; 8 C. J. 124."

A similar case and a similar holding is Continental Bank & Trust Co. v. Times Pub. Co., 142 La. 209, 76 So. 612, L. R. A. 1918B, 632, where the words, "as per contract," appearing in an otherwise negotiable promissory note, were held to qualify the unconditional promise to pay previously expressed therein. Similar words, however, were held not to destroy the negotiability of an instrument in National Bank v. Wentworth, 218 Mass. 30, 105 N. E. 626. The courts do not differ as to the legal principle involved, but differ as to the meaning to be assigned to the language then under review. The question has been stated as follows:

"Whenever a bill of exchange or a promissory note contains a reference to some extrinsic contract in such a way as to make the bill or note subject to the terms of that contract, as distinguished from a reference importing merely that the extrinsic agreement was the origin of the transaction or constitutes the consideration of the bill or note, the negotiability of the instrument is destroyed."

See, to this effect, Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. v. Southern States, etc., Co., 20 Ga. App. 506, 93 S. E. 157.

The principle has again been stated that by the law merchant one of the principal elements of negotiability is certainty of payment, and any words of the instrument rendering payment conditional or uncertain destroy it as a negotiable instrument. Greenbrier Valley Bank v. Bair, 71 W. Va. 684, 77 S. E. 274. In our own Code (section 3085, Civil Code) it is provided:

"An instrument payable upon a contingency is not negotiable, and the happening of the event does not cure the defect."

Somewhat in line with this reasoning is the case of Glendora Bank v. Davis et al. (Cal.

Sup). 267 P. 311, where the court held the following language to destroy the negotiability of the instrument:

"This note is given in payment of merchandise and is to be liquidated by payments received on account of sale of such merchandise."

The doctrine of such cases as Flood v. Petry, 165 Cal. 309, 132 P. 256, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 861, and Pratt v. Dittmer, 51 Cal. App. 512, 197 P. 365, which relates to cases of transfer prior to failure of consideration in executory contracts, is, in view of the construction above announced, not here involved. This conclusion renders also unnecessary a discussion of the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of the court that plaintiff had actual knowledge of the infirmity of these instruments.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

204 Cal. 609

PARKER v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.
(S. F. 12340.)

Supreme Court of California. July 30, 1928.

1. Railroads ⚡348(4)—Failure to comply with law relative to signals on approaching highway crossing is prima facie negligence of railroad company (Civ. Code, § 486).

Failure to comply with Civ. Code, § 486, prescribing duties of operators of train in ringing bell and blowing whistle on approaching a highway crossing, is prima facie negligence on the part of the railroad company.

2. New trial ⚡103—Granting new trial for newly discovered evidence not relating to issue of contributory negligence held error, in case evidence on such issue supported general verdict.

Where special findings and general verdict in action for injury to automobile passenger in collision with train were such that it could not be said that jury did not pass on issue of contributory negligence, the granting of a motion for new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence having no bearing on such issue held error, in case evidence on issue of contributory negligence was sufficient to support general verdict.

3. Railroads ⚡324(1)—Approach to railroad crossing is warning of danger which traveler must notice.

An approach to a railroad crossing is in itself a warning of danger of which traveler is bound to take notice.

4. Railroads ⚡327(1)—Motorist on parallel highway, in view of railroad track, has duty of making observation before approaching crossing.

Where view of railroad track from parallel highway is unobstructed, it is duty of motorist to see what can be seen before approaching crossing, and it is not due care to assume that trains are operated on track only in one direction.

5. Railroads ⚡350(21)—Determination of automobile passenger's duty in approaching railroad crossing is generally for jury.

Duty of passenger in automobile when approaching railroad crossing must rest upon its own facts, and determination of those facts as a general rule is one for jury.

6. Railroads ⚡350(21)—Contributory negligence of automobile passenger in collision with train at crossing held for jury.

Contributory negligence of passenger in automobile in relation to collision with train at railroad crossing held for jury.

7. New trial ⚡102(3)—Diligence in procuring alleged newly discovered evidence held insufficient to warrant new trial.

Diligence in procuring alleged newly discovered evidence held insufficient to authorize granting of new trial on such ground.

8. New trial ⚡6—Discretion of trial court in granting new trial is legal one.

Discretion of trial court in granting a new trial is a legal one, and the proper exercise thereof presents a question of law.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action by Marie N. Parker against the Southern Pacific Company and another. From an order granting a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

L. L. Cory, of Fresno, for appellants.

Fenston, Williams & Hansen and Christian Hoeppner, all of Fresno, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal by the defendants from an order granting the plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The motion was made on the usual statutory grounds, and was based on affidavits purporting to set forth newly discovered evidence. The order did not specify that the motion was granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict.

The action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff as the result of a collision between the automobile in which she was riding as a guest and south-bound passenger train No. 84 of the defendant, known as the "Fresno Flyer," at the Ashland avenue crossing near Muscatel, which is about 5½ miles north of Fresno, in unincorporated territory. The Ashland avenue crossing is a meeting point for the north-bound and south-bound trains, and at that point comprises a double track, consisting of a main line track (the easterly track) and a passing or switch track. The track beds are about 5 feet higher than the highway level. The accident occurred on a bright and clear Sunday, October 4, 1925, at about 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, which was the scheduled meeting time of the two trains at or near Muscatel. The driver of the car was Mrs. Maud Merrill Miller, at whose right the plaintiff was sitting. In the rear seat were Mrs. Miller's husband and Mrs. Johanna C. Merrill, her mother. The motorcar was proceeding from the north along the state highway on the westerly side of and parallel with the railroad right of way. The driver's intention was to cross into Ashland avenue at the point mentioned. The plaintiff testifies that they proceeded southerly toward the Ashland avenue crossing. She saw the north-bound passenger train No. 67 approaching the crossing from the south. By the time they had reached the crossing, the rear end of the north-bound train had passed over the crossing, moving slowly. Mrs. Miller turned to the left off the highway and approached the railroad tracks. The plaintiff testified that she listened and looked in both directions to hear or see if a train was approaching on either track, heard nothing and saw nothing except the departing north-bound train. Mrs. Miller proceeded to cross the tracks, and almost as soon as the front wheels were over the first rail of the main line track the automobile was struck by the locomotive of south-bound train No. 84. Mrs. Merrill was killed, and the other three occupants of the car received various injuries.

There are no natural obstructions to a clear view of a train approaching from either direction. The engineer of train No. 84 testified: "We were passing the rear end of No. 67 when they started up onto the crossing, the first that I saw of them." Train No. 67 had been proceeding along the passing track at the rate of 5 or 10 miles an hour. The crew of train No. 84, which had the right of way over the main line track, testified that the train (No. 84) was going at from 40 to 45 miles an hour. Members of the crew testified that the crossing whistle was blown at the Ashland avenue whistling post, which is 1,320 feet back from the crossing, and that the bell had been ringing continuously and was ringing at the time of the accident. The engineer testified that after the accident he shut off the bell ringer. Certain of the plaintiff's witnesses testified that no whistle or bell was heard. Three special issues were submitted to the jury: "No. 1. Did the engineer upon approaching the crossing blow the whistle on the engine at or about the whistling post?" to which the answer was "Yes." "No. 2. Was the bell of the engine ringing immediately before and at the time of the accident?" Answer: "Yes." "No. 3. Was the train of the defendant Southern Pacific Company moving at an excessive rate of speed as it approached the crossing?" to which nine of the jurymen answered "No" and three "Yes." The jury found a general verdict for the defendants. The pleadings presented the issue of contributory negligence.

It is not claimed on this appeal that there was any error during the course of the trial or that the motion for a new trial was granted on any ground other than that of alleged newly discovered evidence. The defendants contest the granting of the motion for a new trial on the grounds: (1) That the accident happened because of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, as determined by the verdict of the jury, and that the alleged newly discovered evidence had no bearing on the plea of contributory negligence; (2) that the affidavits upon which the motion for a new trial was granted were not sufficient in themselves to justify the order of the court, because the alleged newly discovered evidence was cumulative merely, and was not such as to render a different result probable on a retrial; and (3) that a want of diligence is shown in not producing the evidence at the trial.

[1-6] As to the first point, it is contended by the defendants that the general verdict determined the issues in their favor; one of these issues being the alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff. The plaintiff replies, first, that the special issues submitted to the jury and the answers thereto show that the general verdict must have been predicated upon the absence of negligence on the part of the defendants and not on the contributory negligence of the plaintiff; and, secondly, that, assuming negligence on the part of the driver of the motorcar, the evidence does not establish negligence on the part of the plaintiff, a passenger in the car. As to the first reply of the plaintiff, it is observed that the complaint charges negligence in general terms. Section 486 of the Civil Code prescribes the duties of the operators of the train in ringing the bell and blowing the whistle on approaching a highway crossing. It is therein provided that the bell must be rung at a distance of at least 80 rods from the place where the railroad crosses the highway, and must be kept ringing until it crosses the same, or the steam whistle must be sounded, except in cities, at a like distance, and be kept sounding at intervals until it has crossed the highway. Failure to comply with this regulation is prima facie negligence on the part of the railroad company. Orcutt v. Pacific Coast Ry. Co., 85 Cal. 291, 24 P. 661. But blowing the whistle "at or about the whistling post," as the jury found was done in answer to question No. 1, and the ringing of the bell "immediately before and at the time of the accident," as the jury found was done in the answer to question No. 2, were not sufficient to constitute findings that the Code section was fully complied with. In other words, the special findings are not comprehensive enough to amount to a conclusion on the part of the jury that the bell was ringing continually from a point 80 rods back from the crossing, or that the whistle was sounded at intervals for a like distance. While the special findings are, of course, not inconsistent with the general verdict herein rendered on the other hand, they would not necessarily be inconsistent with a general verdict for the plaintiff if, on the issue of the alleged negligence of the defendants, the jury had concluded, on sufficient evidence, that the defendants had otherwise acted in violation of the Code section. Under this state of the record it cannot be said that the jury did not pass upon the issue of the contributory negligence of the plaintiff. Such being the case, and as the alleged newly discovered evidence had no pertinency to the issue of contributory negligence, the trial court committed prejudicial error in granting the motion for a new trial on the ground of the newly discovered evidence alone if the evidence on the issue of contributory negligence was sufficient to support the general verdict for the defendants.

Therefore, as we are to presume that the motion was not granted on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict (Biaggi v. Ramont, 189 Cal. 675, 209 P. 892; section 657, Code Civ. Proc.), we then proceed to discover whether there is any substantial evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. In determining the responsibility of the plaintiff in the premises, the situation in which she was placed by the conduct of the driver of the car must be adverted to. It is the settled law of this state that an approach to a railroad crossing is in itself a warning of danger of which the traveler is bound to take notice. See N. Y. Oil Co. v. United Railroads, 191 Cal. 101, 215 P. 72; Griffin v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. R. Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 P. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842; Chrissinger v. Southern Pacific Co., 169 Cal. 619, 149 P. 175. When, as in the present case, the view of the railroad track from the parallel highway is unobstructed, it is the duty of the motorist to see what can be seen, and it is not due care to assume that trains are operated on the track only in one direction. Klusman v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 190 Cal. 441, 213 P. 38. The plaintiff in this case took a lively interest in her situation as her party approached the Ashland avenue crossing. She testified that when they were nearing the crossing the motorcar in which she was riding was going slowly and could, she thought, be stopped instantly; that she looked up and down the track to ascertain whether a train was approaching on the second track; that she knew there might be a train coming on the main track, and she took every precaution to observe whether a train was approaching from the north or the south; and that she saw no train except the slowly moving train No. 67 as the rear coach thereof was from 125 to 150 feet north of the crossing. Notwithstanding her realization that a train might be approaching on the main track, and that the driver might, by starting up her car to cross that track, plunge the party, including the plaintiff, into the jaws of death, she made no remonstrance and uttered no warning to the driver of the danger in entering upon the perilous position on the track. It is impossible to lay down a general rule as a test of a passenger's responsibility under such circumstances. At times it might be highly improper to suggest any course of action on the part of the driver. At other times the circumstances might be such as to charge the passenger with some duty to suggest caution or otherwise endeavor to protect himself. See Parmenter v. McDougall, 172 Cal. 306, 156 P. 460; Stewart v. San Joaquin L. & P. Corp., 44 Cal. App. 202, 186 P. 160. Each case must rest upon its own set of facts, and the determination of those facts, as a general rule, is one for the jury. Stewart v. San Joaquin L. & P. Corp., supra. On the record before us it cannot be said that the jury might not find that the plaintiff was in some degree at fault in not apprising the driver of the impending danger.

The contention of the defendants to the effect that the alleged newly discovered evidence was wholly cumulative is well taken. It bore entirely on the question of the alleged negligence of the defendants in the operation of the train No. 84, and particularly as to the giving or failure to give the required signals and as to the speed of that train. The affidavit of Ruth E. Gall set forth that on the day in question she was driving her car near the scene of the accident; that she saw quite a crowd of people assembled about the wrecked motorcar; that she stopped her car and joined the observers; that she knew, recognized, and spoke to the plaintiff, and was requested by the latter to telephone to the plaintiff's friends; that the affiant recognized among the bystanders and spoke to Miss Zena B. Bradley and her sister, Mrs. J. L. C. Smith, both of whom she theretofore had known; that in December, 1925, or January, 1926, the plaintiff called the affiant on the telephone and asked her what information she could give or what knowledge she had concerning the accident; that affiant told the plaintiff that she knew nothing of the facts of the accident or of the plaintiff's injuries; that she did not tell the plaintiff that she had seen Miss Bradley or Mrs. Smith at the scene of the accident; that several days after the trial, and on or about June 21, 1926, the plaintiff and her attorney called at the home of the affiant, at Fresno, and that then for the first time the affiant told the plaintiff of having met Miss Bradley and Mrs. Smith at the scene of the accident. Miss Bradley, Mr. and Mrs. Smith, and Sydney N. Jacobs stated in their affidavits that they were traveling in a southerly direction in an automobile on the highway north of Ashland avenue and parallel with the railroad tracks; that when they were a short way north of the same the south-bound train overtook and passed them; that no whistle was blown nor bell rung as the train passed them; and that the train was traveling about 60 miles per hour. Much evidence was introduced by both parties on the question of whether the required signals were given and as to the speed of the train. There was the positive evidence of ten or more witnesses on behalf of the defendants that the signals were given. There was also evidence that the south-bound train was traveling at the rate of from 40 to 45 miles per hour. On behalf of the plaintiff, there was evidence that the signals were not given, or, if given, were not given as required by the statute. A storekeeper near the crossing testified that he heard no whistle until the collision occurred, and that the south-bound train was going about 50 miles per hour. Witness Minoni was in the store at the time of the crash. He heard the bell and the whistle from the train on the passing track, but heard no whistle from the south-bound train until the accident occurred. The plaintiff testified that she did not hear the bell rung or the whistle blown on either train up to the time of the accident. Mrs. Miller, the driver of the car, testified that she heard the bell ringing on the train No. 67, but that she heard no signal, by bell or whistle, from the south-bound train. John M. Miller, her husband, testified that he heard no signal from either train.

[7] From the evidence taken at the trial with reference to signals, and the alleged newly discovered evidence on the same subject, if it had gone to the jury, it is difficult to perceive how the verdict would have been different. But, assuming this point to be a debatable question, we pass to the question which in itself may well be terminative of this appeal; namely, whether the alleged newly discovered evidence could not, with reasonable diligence, have been discovered and produced at the trial. The accident occurred on October 4, 1925. The plaintiff saw and spoke to her friend, Miss Gall, at the time of the accident. The plaintiff interviewed Miss Gall early in the year 1926 and asked her what she knew concerning the accident. With the reply that "she knew nothing of the facts of the accident," the plaintiff remained content, and did not pursue the subject further. She did not, as diligence would prompt, question Miss Gall concerning those who were present at the time of the accident, or the circumstances attending the same. The trial was commenced on June 9, 1926, and was concluded three days later. It was through this same Miss Gall, with whom the plaintiff conversed at the time of the accident, and who was interviewed by the plaintiff in January, 1926, that the plaintiff claims she first discovered, on June 21, 1926, that the Smiths, Mr. Jacobs, and Miss Bradley were at or near the crossing at the time the accident occurred. No reason is advanced or excuse offered for not ascertaining from Miss Gall, prior to the trial, the fact that these four persons might know something of the matters concerning which they are claimed to have had knowledge. The means of ascertaining the facts were readily available to the plaintiff through information possessed by her long prior to the trial.

[8] Diligence is a relative term. It is incapable of exact definition, and depends upon the particular circumstances of each case. Heintz v. Cooper, 104 Cal. 668, 38 P. 511; 20 Cal. Jur. 87. Conceding to the trial court a wide discretion in granting a new trial, nevertheless that discretion is a legal one, and the proper exercise thereof presents a question of law. On the record in this case, it must be concluded (1) that the alleged newly discovered evidence related solely to the alleged negligence of the defendants, whereas there was sufficient evidence upon which the jury could find against the plaintiff and for the defendants on the issue of contributory negligence; (2) that the alleged newly discovered evidence was cumulative, and it cannot be said that a different result would have been accomplished as to the issue of the negligence of the defendants if the said evidence had been before the jury at the trial; and (3), assuming that the jury might have found for the plaintiff on the new evidence as to the alleged negligence of the defendants, the proper diligence was not shown in the discovery and production thereof.

The order is reversed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.

205 Cal. 26

LOGAN v. THORNE et al.THORNE et al. v. LOGAN et al.

(L. A. 9484.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 18, 1928.

As Modified Sept. 14, 1928.

1. Husband and wife ⇨266—Husband may make gift of community property to wife without written consent of wife (Civ. Code, § 172a).

Civ. Code, § 172a, requiring wife to join with husband in executing any instrument by which community real property is leased for longer period than one year or conveyed, does not preclude husband from making gift of community property to wife without written consent of wife.

2. Husband and wife ⇨266—Amendment exempting transfer between spouses from statute requiring wife to join husband in transferring community realty did not change statute, but exempted gifts between spouses from statute (Civ. Code, § 172a).

Amendment to Civ. Code, § 172a, providing that statute shall not apply to lease or transfer of realty between husband and wife, held not to change force or effect of original section, providing that wife must join with husband in executing lease or conveyance of community realty, but was intended to exempt gift between spouses from letter of statute.

3. Husband and wife ⇨266—Wife, not signing husband's assignment to her of realty, found not in fraud of creditors, could quiet title against husband's attaching creditors.

Where husband and wife entered into agreement for purchase of realty, and husband assigned all interest in agreement to wife in writing, and court found that assignment was not in fraud of husband's creditors, wife was entitled to prevail in action to quiet title against husband's creditors attaching realty as property of husband, though assignment was not signed by wife.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Elsie M. Logan against L. C. Thorne and others, in which defendant named and another filed cross-complaint against plaintiff named and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and cross-defendants, defendants and cross-complainants appeal. Affirmed.

Davis & Thorne, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

James Westervelt, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. Action to quiet title to real property. W. G. Logan and Elsie M. Logan were at all of the times herein mentioned husband and wife. On the 27th day of January, 1919, as such husband and wife, they entered into an agreement with Elmer and Georgia M. Smith, whereby they contracted to purchase said real property from the Smiths. This agreement was somewhat complicated, but it is not necessary, as we view this case, to set forth the details thereof. Thereafter, and on January 23, 1922, the said W. G. Logan by a writing signed and acknowledged by him, assigned to his wife, Elsie M. Logan, all his right, title, and interest in and to said agreement. This assignment was not signed by Mrs. Logan. It was signed and acknowledged by her husband, but never recorded. The Smiths gave their written assent to this assignment from Logan to his wife, and on May 26, 1923, they conveyed by grant deed said real property to the said Elsie M. Logan as her separate property. On September 7, 1923, said deed was recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county of Los Angeles, in which county the said real property is situated. On December 31, 1925, the appellants L. C. Thorne and the Western Wholesale Drug Company, a corporation, filed an action against W. G. Logan, seeking to recover from him a money judgment, and caused a writ of attachment to be issued therein and levied upon said real property as the property of the said W. G. Logan. The present action was then instituted by Mrs. Logan, claiming to be the sole owner of said real property, to quiet her title against appellants, who claim under said attachment proceedings. In addition to the main question, which we will hereafter consider, the appellants at the trial of said action claimed that the conveyance to plaintiff was a fraud upon the creditors of W. G. Logan and for that reason it should be set aside. The trial court found against appellants upon this claim, and appellants now concede that, as there was a conflict of evidence regarding the question of fraud, the finding of the trial court thereon is conclusive upon this court, and that the question of fraud has been eliminated from this controversy.

The only question, therefore, involved on this appeal, is the validity of the written assignment made by W. G. Logan to his wife, whereby he transferred or attempted to transfer to her his interest in said agreement with the Smiths. Appellants rely upon section 172a of the Civil Code as in force prior to its amendment in 1925, and the case of Bone v. Dwyer, 74 Cal. App. 363, 240 P. 796. Said section read as follows:

"The husband has the management and control of the community real property but the wife must join with him in executing any instrument by which such community real property or any interest therein is leased for a longer period than one year, or is sold, conveyed, or incumbered. * * *

In Bone v. Dwyer, supra, Dwyer assigned to Bone his interest in an agreement with one Maria E. Lindahl for the purchase and sale of certain real property, which interest was the community property of Dwyer and wife. The wife did not join in said assignment. Thereafter a deed of said real property was made by the said Lindahl to Bone, the assignee of Dwyer. The action was brought by Bone against Dwyer and wife to quiet his title to said real property, and it was held, quoting from the syllabus:

"The transfer or conveyance from defendant husband to plaintiff, in whatever form or words it was made, or purported to be made, not having been signed by defendant wife, was wholly insufficient to assign, transfer or convey to plaintiff an indefeasible interest in and to the contract of purchase, or the real property therein described, and left the right of defendant wife to maintain or defend her interest or title to the premises in the same condition as though the instrument had not been executed."

It is quite apparent that the facts in the case of Bone v. Dwyer, supra, are materially different from those in the present action. In that case the purported conveyance was adverse to the interest of the wife, and was an attempt to deprive her of her rights in the community property.

[1-3] In the present action the assignment or conveyance was in favor of the wife, and by it the husband sought to augment her rights and make her the sole owner of the interest in the real property theretofore held by them as husband and wife. Section 172a of the Civil Code was enacted for the protection of the wife and of whatever rights she might have in the community property. There is nothing in said section which would preclude or prevent the husband from making a gift of the community property to his wife without the written consent of the wife. The precise question was before this court in the case of Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 145 Cal. 596, 79 P. 272, where the court in construing section 172 of the Civil Code, prior to its amendment in 1901, used the following plain and significant language:

"There can be no doubt that the husband may make a gift of the community property to the wife, and that the effect of such gift will be to transmute it into her separate estate. The provision in section 172 of the Civil Code, that he cannot make a gift of community property unless the wife, in writing, consent thereto, is a provision for her benefit and protection, and it has no application to the case of a gift by the husband directly to the wife."

The fact that section 172a of the Civil Code was in 1925 amended so as to include the following proviso:

"Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to apply to a lease, mortgage, conveyance, or transfer of real property or of any interest in real property between husband and wife"

—does not in any way change the force or effect of the original section of the Code as it stood prior to said amendment. Evidently the Legislature out of an abundance of caution enacted this amendment in order to expressly exempt gifts between the spouses from the strict letter of the section of the Code thus amended. The amendment did not in fact add anything to or change the real meaning of the section as it stood prior to said amendment. It simply expressly made a part of the section that which, before the amendment, was clearly implied therefrom.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

NATHAN v. NATHAN. (S. F. 12315.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 21, 1928.

Divorce $\S$ 40—Spouses' agreement to live apart held to preclude divorce for desertion (Civ. Code, $\S$ 99, 107).

Spouses' agreement to live apart, executed before cause of action for divorce on ground of desertion accrued, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 107, effected a separation by consent, within section 99, so as to preclude divorce on such ground.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Alfred Nathan against Hattie Nathan. Verdict for plaintiff. From an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

B. M. Jackson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Walter McGovern, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from an order granting the defendant's motion for a new trial. The action is one for divorce, and was brought on the ground of the defendant's alleged willful desertion of the plaintiff. The motion was granted on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision.

The evidence as to the alleged desertion was sharply in conflict, and no abuse of discretion in making the order complained of appears. The order would be justified, if for no other reason, upon the proper construction of a contract of separation entered into between the parties on December 26, 1924. The complaint alleged the desertion of the defendant on or about the 4th day of September, 1924. The plaintiff testified that he and his wife separated on or about that date. The defendant testified by deposition that the separation occurred on December 4, 1924. The agreement of December 26, 1924, recited the desire of the parties to confirm their separation, and it was mutually agreed that they live separate and apart one from the other. This agreement effected a separation by consent, as contemplated by section 99 of the Civil Code. Because of its terms, desertion would not result, notwithstanding the continued separation of the parties. At the time the contract was entered into, the cause of action on the ground of desertion had not accrued under section 107 of the Civil Code.

In this respect the case is distinguishable from Walker v. Walker, 14 Cal. App. 487, 112 P. 479, relied upon by the plaintiff. In that case the cause of action for desertion had accrued at the time of the execution of the agreement involved therein. That case is further distinguishable for the reason that the agreement in that case was held to be one merely adjusting the property rights of the parties; whereas the agreement in the present case not only effected a property settlement, but also confirmed and consented to the separation of the parties.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.

205 Cal. 29

PEOPLE v. MALONE. (Cr. 3122.)★

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 20, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 17, 1928.

1. Homicide $\S$ 180—Insanity not being pleaded and intoxication no defense exclusion of evidence defendant had long been drunk held not error.

In murder trial, refusal of court to permit introduction of evidence showing length of time defendant had been drunk prior to commission of the crime, drunkenness under Pen. Code, $\S$ 22, being no excuse for crime, and in absence of plea of insanity, held not error.

2. Homicide $\S$ 339—Excluding evidence showing how long before murder defendant was drunk, if error, held harmless; record showing he had been drinking for two weeks prior thereto.

Exclusion of evidence in murder trial, showing how long prior to killing defendant had been drunk, where there was sufficient and substantial evidence in the record showing he had been drinking heavily for two weeks before crime, if error, held harmless.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 829(1)—Court did not err in murder trial by refusing instructions on subject covered previously by instruction including statute provisions (Pen. Code, $\S$ 22).

In murder trial, court did not err in refusing to give offered instructions, in amplified form of Pen. Code, $\S$ 22, on subject fully covered by instructions already given, wherein provisions of the Code section were quoted.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Douglas L. Edmonds, Judge.

John Joseph Malone was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

L. V. Beaulieu, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn and John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment of conviction of the defendant upon a charge of murder in the first degree, based upon the verdict of the jury finding him guilty of that offense without recommendation, and from an order denying the defendant a new trial.

The undisputed evidence in the case showed that the defendant and his victim were husband and wife, and that they had become separated some time before the homicide, and that such separation had been caused in part, at least, by the drinking habits of the defendant. After such separation, the wife obtained employment in a drug store, which also contained a soda fountain and luncheon counter, in the city of Los Angeles, where she was engaged in waiting upon customers on the morning of December 7, 1927, when the defendant entered the place in a state of intoxication and demanded that his wife should go with him somewhere, which she refused to do, and, in connection with her refusal, reproached him with having been drinking; whereupon the defendant went out, and shortly thereafter returned, armed with a .32 Colt's automatic pistol, seeing which his wife undertook to flee, but was followed by the defendant into the kitchen, where she was fired upon and immediately slain by him, following which he attempted unsuccessfully to kill himself. Upon being brought to trial, the defendant entered a plea of not guilty, but did not enter a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, nor did the defendant during the trial rely upon insanity as a defense, but seems to have solely depended upon the undisputed showing that he had been drinking and was drunk at the time of the homicide, in an effort to mitigate the imposition of the extreme penalty for his crime.

[1, 2] The first contention on which the defendant relies upon this appeal is that the trial court was in error in refusing to permit the introduction of evidence showing the length of time during which the defendant had been drunk prior to the commission of the crime. We discover no reversible error in the ruling of the court in that regard, for the twofold reason that under section 22 of the Penal Code drunkenness is no excuse for crime, and that, while under that section evidence is admissible showing the state of the accused as to intoxication at the time of the commission of the crime, in order to determine the purpose, motive, or intent with which it was committed, the question as to how long he had been in that state of intoxication is entirely immaterial, in the absence of a plea of insanity, or any attempt on the part of the defendant during the trial to show that by reason of a long-continued state of intoxication he had reached such a besotted condition at the time of the commission of the homicide as to be practically insane. The evidence in question, not being offered for any such purpose, but merely in attempted mitigation of the crime, was properly excluded by the trial court. People v. Allen, 166 Cal. 723, 729, 137 P. 1148, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 892, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1039. Even if such evidence had been admissible, however, any error on the part of the trial court in its rejection would have been harmless, in view of the fact that there is sufficient and substantial evidence in the record showing that the defendant had been drinking heavily for about two weeks before the date of his crime.

[3] The defendant's next contention is that the trial court was in error in refusing to give certain offered instructions, which he identifies by reference to certain pages of the clerk's transcript, but which he neither quotes nor offers any argument, reason, or authority whatever for his claim that the trial court was in error in refusing to give them. It appears, however, by reference to the designated pages in the clerk's transcript, that these instructions bore upon the question as to the extent to which intoxication is an excuse for crime. These instructions purported to be merely an amplification of the provisions of section 22 of the Penal Code, and since the trial court, not only in the instruction which it gave quoted the said section of the Code, but also in other instructions fully explained to the jury the scope and meaning of the same, it is clear that the court was not in error in refusing to give the defendant's offered instructions upon a subject which had been fully covered by the instructions already given.

The record herein discloses no sufficient reason for a reversal of the conviction of the defendant for a brutal and unprovoked murder and the imposition of the death penalty following such conviction.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

93 Cal. App. 42

PEOPLE v. KUDER et al. (Cr. 3165.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1928.

1. Licenses $\Rightarrow$ 42(3)—Indictment for violation of Corporate Securities Act should expressly allege defendants' relationship to corporation whose stock was sold.

Indictment should expressly allege relationship which defendants bore to corporation, stock of which was alleged to have been issued and sold, and proceeds misapplied, in violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673).

2. Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 1186(4)—Error in upholding indictment for violating Corporate Securities Act, failing to expressly allege defendants' relationship to corporation, held not reversible, where relationship was established at trial (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Where relationship between defendants, prosecuted for violating Corporate Securities Act, and corporation, whose stock was sold and proceeds misapplied, was fully established at trial, error in not sustaining demurrer to indictment for defect in failing to expressly allege relationship between defendants and corporation did not result in miscarriage of justice, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, relating to errors in matters of pleading and procedure.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Chas. L. Allison, Judge.

On hearing. Petitions for hearing denied. For former opinion, see 269 P. 193. See, also, 266 P. 337.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

J. M. Friedlander, Corp. Com'r, H. A. I. Wolch, Asst. Corp. Com'r, and Vernon S. Gray, Deputy Corp. Com'r, all of Los Angeles, amici curiæ.

Arthur L. Veitch, of Los Angeles, for respondent Kuder.

Estudillo & Schwinn, of Riverside, for respondents Fishel.

P. N. McCloskey, of San Bernardino, for respondent Luke.

William Guthrie and R. E. Hodge, both of San Bernardino, for respondent Bedford.

PER CURIAM. The several petitions for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second District, Division 2, are denied.

[1, 2] In denying these petitions, however, we desire to state that, in our opinion, the indictment herein was defective through its failure to expressly allege the relationship which these defendants bore to the corporation, the stock of which was alleged to have been issued and sold, and the proceeds thereof misapplied, in violation of the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), and that the demurrer to the indictment should have been sustained upon that ground. Upon the trial of the cause, however, the relationship between these defendants and said corporation was fully established, and, this being so, we are of the opinion that section 4½ of article 6 of the state Constitution, which has relation to errors in matters of pleading and procedure, should be given application to this cause, since, after an examination of the entire cause, this court is of the opinion that the error complained of has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

204 Cal. 653

CITY OF PASADENA v. CHAMBERLAIN,
City Clerk. (S. F. 12883.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 3, 1928.

1. Statutes $\Rightarrow$ 68—Metropolitan Water District Act is general law (St. 1927, p. 694).

Metropolitan Water District Act (St. 1927, p. 694) is a general law, though contemplating course of action which might be confined to municipalities of particular region under present conditions.

2. Statutes $\Rightarrow$ 94(2)—Metropolitan water district act is not special law because conferring powers and benefits on residents of municipalities only (St. 1927, p. 694).

That Metropolitan Water District Act (St. 1927, p. 694) confers on residents of municipalities powers and benefits not conferred on residents or owners of property in unincorporated areas within same general territory, with special relation to distribution of water for domestic uses, does not make it a special law.

3. Waters and water courses $\Rightarrow$ 182—Metropolitan Water District Act held not unconstitutional as permitting municipality taking initiative to impose duties on or vest powers in other municipalities beyond scope of their charters; "municipal affair" (Metropolitan Water District Act; Const. art. 11, §§ 6, 12, 13).

Metropolitan Water District Act (St. 1927, p. 694) held not contrary to Const. art. 11, § 6, as permitting municipality taking initiative in formation of district to impose duties on, or vest powers in, other municipalities beyond scope of those conferred on them by their charters; formation of common purpose for acquisition and distribution of water in large quantities from sources outside such municipalities in accordance with common plan not being a merely municipal affair within sections 12 and 13.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Municipal Affairs.]

4. Waters and water courses $\Rightarrow$ 182—Metropolitan Water District Act held not unconstitutional as giving persons ultimately affected no voice in formation of district (St. 1927, p. 694).

Metropolitan Water District Act (St. 1927, p. 694) held not unconstitutional as giving persons ultimately affected no voice in formation of district, though providing that single municipality may set proceedings in motion, in view of provisions for special election in each municipality to approve initial action taken before act shall be further operative.

5. Constitutional law ⇨284(1)—Statute authorizing water district to collect general taxes within municipalities therein held not contrary to due process clause (Metropolitan Water District Act).

Metropolitan Water District Act (Laws 1927, p. 694) held not void as contrary to due process clause of state Constitution in investing such districts with power, through their properly appointed officials, to collect general taxes within municipalities uniting in formation thereof for common purpose of supplying each with water for domestic uses.

6. Waters and water courses ⇨183½—Metropolitan water district board of directors is not special commission, to which Legislature cannot delegate power of taxation (Metropolitan Water District Act; Const. art. 11, § 13).

Board of directors of metropolitan water district, created by St. 1927, p. 694, is not a special commission, to which Legislature cannot delegate power of taxation under Const. art. 11, § 13, but governing body of district.

In Bank.

Application by the City of Pasadena, a municipal corporation, for a writ of mandate requiring Bessie Chamberlain, as City Clerk, to certify to the passage and contents of a certain ordinance. Writ granted.

R. C. McAllaster, City Atty., and J. H. Howard, both of Pasadena, for petitioner.

Ray L. Morrow, of Glendale, for respondent.

Nowland M. Reid, City Atty., and Edmund J. Callaway, Deputy City Atty., both of Long Beach, and Harry F. Sewell, of Whittier, amici curiæ.

RICHARDS, J. This is a proceeding wherein the city of Pasadena, a municipal corporation, applies for a writ of mandate directed to the respondent, as the city clerk of said city, requiring her, in her official capacity, to certify to the passage and content of a certain ordinance, theretofore adopted by the city council of said city, and to transmit a certified copy thereof to the chief executive officer of each of the several municipalities referred to in said ordinance, in accordance with the terms thereof and of a certain act of the Legislature, known and referred to herein as the "Metropolitan Water District Act," approved May 10, 1927. The respondent herein has appeared to said application and has presented and argued various objections to the validity of said ordinance and of said act. A number of amici curiæ have also filed briefs herein and which will be considered in the course of this opinion.

The Metropolitan Water District Act, adopted in 1927 (Stats. 1927, p. 694), is an act entitled:

"An act to provide for the incorporation, government and management of metropolitan water districts, authorizing such districts to incur bonded debt and to acquire, construct, operate and manage works and property, providing for the taxation of property therein and the performance of certain functions relating thereto by officers of counties, providing for the addition of area thereto and the exclusion of area therefrom and authorizing municipal corporations to aid and participate in the incorporation of such districts."

The act in its body provides for the organization of so-called metropolitan water districts for the purpose of developing, storing and distributing water for domestic purposes, and which districts are to be formed of the territory included within the corporate boundary of any two or more municipalities, which need not be contiguous, and which districts are to be incorporated and organized and thereafter governed, maintained, and operated as in said act provided. Such districts when so incorporated are to be each a separate and independent political corporate entity. The act proceeds to provide that the method for the inception, organization, and incorporation of such districts shall be as follows: The legislative body of any municipality desiring to take the initiative in the formation of such district may do so by the adoption of an ordinance declaring that public convenience and necessity require the incorporation of a municipal water district and that the names of the municipalities proposed to be included within the said district are those specified in said ordinance, which shall also contain an estimate of the preliminary cost and expense of conducting the proceeding for the organization of such district and for the apportionment thereof among the municipalities proposed to be included therein. When the municipality initiating such proceeding has adopted such ordinance it shall be the duty of the clerk of the legislative body thereto to certify to the same and to transmit a certified copy thereof to the executive officer of each of the other municipalities designated therein and which other municipalities are required, within 60 days after the receipt of such certified copy of such ordinance, by the action of the legislative body thereof, to either approve or reject such ordinance without alteration or amendment. The failure of the legislative body of any such municipality to so act upon such ordinance within said period is to be deemed a rejection thereof. Within 120 days after the transmission of such ordinance and after the municipalities named therein have signified by their action or nonaction their adoption or rejection thereof, the legislative body of the initiating city shall call a special election in all of the municipalities, the legislative bodies of which have approved such ordinance, at which election the proposition of the incorporation of such metropolitan water district shall be submitted to the electors residing within such municipalities for their adoption or rejection. The ordinance calling such election shall contain the details relating to the holding thereof in each of the several cities which have approved the original ordinance. Such election may be held concurrently with or may be consolidated with any primary or general election, in which event the precinct, polling places, and election officers of such primary or general election shall be the same for such special election. The majority of the electors voting affirmatively shall be sufficient to cause the adoption of the proposition and to organize and incorporate such water district by each of the respective cities whose electors shall vote thereon and to authorize the governing body of the initiating city to transmit to the secretary of state a certified copy of such proceedings up to and including the holding of such election, together with the result thereof. Within ten days after the receipt of such certificate the secretary of state shall issue a certificate of incorporation declaring such district duly incorporated, and shall transmit to each of the municipalities therein a copy of such certificate of incorporation; whereupon the incorporation of such metropolitan water district shall become effective from the date of the issuance of such certificate or certificates, and such district shall thereupon and thereafter become vested with all the rights, privileges, and powers in said Metropolitan Water District Act provided. Section 5 of said act prescribes with much detail the powers with which such water district and the officers in charge thereof are to be invested, and, generally speaking, they are in substance the same powers with which public utility districts of various sorts have in the past by various legislative acts been invested. Particular reference to certain of these powers will hereinafter be made. The exercise of such powers is by the terms of said act to be intrusted to and performed by and through a board of directors, which shall consist of at least one representative from each municipality which has become, for the purposes stated in said act, an integral part of such water district. In addition to the powers with which said district has, as heretofore stated, been invested, the act provides for the particular powers, and the method of their exercise, which the said board of directors shall possess in order to carry forward the purposes for which such district has been organized. It is not necessary to enumerate herein these powers, nor to set forth the detail of their exercise, and this for the reason that the concluding section of said act provides that "if any section, subsection, sentence, clause or phrase of this act is for any reason held to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions of this act." We are concerned in this decision with those questions only which arise upon the threshold of the formation of the particular metropolitan water district which has been initiated by the City of Pasadena and with those limited considerations which involve the constitutionality of the act itself as distinguished from the validity of the particular portions of said act and which are to be put to trial after the organization of the district and in the course of the conduct of its various operations as provided for in said act.

[1, 2] The first contention which the respondent makes, and in which she is joined by the several amici curiæ who have appeared herein, is that the Metropolitan Water District Act is not a general law. This contention requires but brief consideration. The act purports to be a general law applicable to all portions of the state of California embracing municipalities which might desire to unite in a larger organization with the object of accomplishing a common purpose which it might not be possible or practical for such municipalities, acting singly or separately, to accomplish. The mere fact that the legislative act contemplated a course of action which might, under present conditions, be confined to municipalities of a particular region, does not militate against the validity of the act in question as a general law. The act does not by its terms attempt any classification, either of the municipalities which may take advantage of its provisions or of the area to which its operation might in the nature of things be confined; but, even had it done so, the act would be none the less a general law under the authority of our decision in the case of Wores v. Imperial Irrigation District, 193 Cal. 609, 227 P. 181, and of the cases cited therein. The respondent, however, insists that the act in question is not a general law for the reason that it confers powers and benefits upon those who reside within the corporate limits of municipalities, with special relation to the distribution of water for domestic uses, which are not conferred upon or made available under said act to those who reside or have their properties within unincorporated areas within the general territory affected by the organization of such metropolitan water district, but outside the municipalities which may elect to combine in the organization and for the purpose specified in said act. We are of the opinion, however, that there is no merit in this contention for the reason, if for none other, that the matter of the distribution of water for domestic uses in cities having compacted populations within limited areas is one which is very different in the detail of its operation and service from that which would be possible or practical in unincorporated areas occupied by a scattered as contrasted with a compacted population.

[3] The next contention which the respondent and amici curiæ urge against the validity of said act relates to the method provided therein for the initiation of the proceeding for the formation of metropolitan water districts. The respondent argues that to permit one municipality proposing to take the initiative in the formation of such water districts to impose upon other municipalities duties, or to invest such municipalities with powers in the course of the formation of such districts which are not within the scope of the duties and powers of such municipalities, as conferred upon them by the particular terms of their respective charters, would be invalid as in violation of article 11, § 6, of the Constitution, which expressly delegates to chartered cities the right to make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to their own municipal affairs. This contention raises the question as to whether the general purpose to be subserved by the organization of the metropolitan water district through the co-operation of several municipalities, as contemplated in the terms of said act, is or is not a municipal affair. It may be admitted that, generally speaking, the distribution of water within municipalities would be as to each of such municipalities a municipal affair, but it would be entirely too narrow an interpretation of the purposes and scope of the Metropolitan Water District Act to hold that because the distribution of water for domestic use in each of a number of the municipalities within a designated area is a municipal affair, the formation of a common purpose for the acquisition of water in large quantities from sources outside of such municipalities, and even outside of the area within which they exist, and the distribution of such water, when so acquired, among such cities, in accordance with a common plan, and with a view to achieving equitability in the distribution and use of such water, would in any sense be, as to each or any of such combined municipalities, a municipal affair. The impossibility or impracticability of any one or more of such municipalities acting separately and independently in the acquisition and distribution of such water would seem to argue conclusively that in achieving such object by the means provided for in said act the municipalities engaged therein could not be held to be engaged in the conduct of a merely municipal affair. The language used by this court in deciding a similar question in the case of Pixley v. Saunders, 168 Cal. 152, 141 P. 815, would seem to have exact application to this phase of the present proceeding:

"The condition above described leads inevitably to the conclusion that while generally the question of sanitation is a municipal affair, in many instances it is one of broader scope, which cannot be adequately handled by the municipal authorities of a single town. Therefore it cannot be said to be a 'local' or 'municipal affair' within the inhibition of sections 12 and 13 [of article 11] of the Constitution above quoted, and it falls within the class of public purposes such as irrigation and reclamation, for which the Legislature has the undoubted authority to provide governmental agencies or districts by general laws."

If, therefore, we are correct in the conclusion that the Metropolitan Water District Act is a general law, and if we are also correct in holding in accord with the foregoing authority, that the general purpose proposed to be accomplished by said act takes it beyond the narrow scope of dealing with a merely municipal affair, it follows irresistibly that the Legislature under the express provisions of section 6 of article 11 of the state Constitution had full power by the passage of said act to impose duties and impress powers upon municipalities other than those provided for in their charters for the purpose of accomplishing the objects contemplated by such legislative act. The objection that the Legislature had no authority to invest one municipality with the power of initiating the proceedings which were expected to result in the formation of a metropolitan water district through the favorable action of other municipalities has not even the merit of novelty, since the state Legislature has with increasing frequency in recent years in the proposed formation of irrigation districts, drainage districts, sanitary districts, water districts and like governmental agencies adopted the plan of investing a few individuals with the power of taking the initiatory steps looking to the formation of such districts affecting wide areas and large numbers or varied groups of individuals, and its action in so doing has been generally upheld.

[4] The contention of the respondent that the act under review is unconstitutional for the reason that the persons who are ultimately to be affected thereby are given no voice in the formation of such district is answered by the terms of the act itself, for, while it is provided therein that a single municipality may set in motion the proceedings for the formation of such water district, the act itself provides that after the initial action is taken, the question of whether or not the residents and electors of each and all of the municipalities within the proposed area shall approve or disapprove the action thus taken is to be committed in each separate municipality to a special election, and as to each the act is not to be further operative until a majority of the electors shall at such special election approve the initiatory proceedings which have thus far been taken.

[5] We have thus disposed of the several questions which arise upon the threshold of the proceedings which have thus far been taken looking to the formation of the metropolitan water district in question, and we therefore come to the main objection which is urged by the respondent and also by the several amici curiæ against the validity of said legislative act and of the proceedings which have thus far been initiated thereunder. This objection is that under the terms of said act the necessary cost and expenditures incident to the functioning of said metropolitan water district in the way of acquiring large quantities of water from outside sources and of providing for the distribution thereof for domestic uses among the inhabitants of the various municipalities which may elect to come within the terms and be bound by the burdens and be the recipients of the benefits of said act and of the incorporation of said water district thereunder are to be imposed in the form of taxes upon the people of these several municipalities, and are in the nature of assessments to be levied and collected upon their individual properties for benefits conferred and that the imposition of such assessments without an opportunity on the part of the property owners to be heard upon the question as to whether the burden of such assessment shall be imposed, or as to whether it is their desire that their property should receive the benefits which are to follow the imposition of such burdens, renders the entire act unconstitutional and void as contrary to the provisions of both the state and the federal Constitutions which relate to due process of law. This contention presents precisely the same question which was presented to this court in several recent cases. Henshaw v. Foster, 176 Cal. 507, 169 P. 82; Miller & Lux v. Board of Supervisors, 189 Cal. 255, 208 P. 304; In re Orosi Public Utility District, 196 Cal. 43, 235 P. 1004. An examination of these cases will serve to show that the former distinction sought to be drawn between what are governmental and what are proprietary powers to be exercised by public corporations, in so far as the maintenance of these by general taxation is concerned, is fast fading out of our jurisprudence. The most recent case, above cited, aptly expresses this tendency, wherein it says:

"We take it to be now a generally accepted proposition that, while a municipality, which undertakes to supply those of its inhabitants who will pay therefor with utilities and facilities of urban life, is performing a function not governmental, but more often committed to private corporations * * * with whom it may come into competition, it is, in fact, engaging in business upon municipal capital, and for municipal purposes."

The question presented in that case arose out of the formation of a public utility district under the provisions of the act of the Legislature relating to that subject adopted in 1921. Stats. 1921, p. 906. Under the terms of said act, public utility districts were permitted to be created in unincorporated territory having for their purpose that of supplying the inhabitants of the proposed district with light, water, power, heat and sanitation. It was with reference to such purposes that the language of the court above quoted was employed, and in its use the court indicated that whether such district was to be organized for the purpose of carrying out all or any of the foregoing purposes would be immaterial in determining whether or not the particular purpose to be subserved in the formation of such district was in the nature of a governmental purpose having for its end that of extending to the inhabitants within the area of the district to be formed the use and benefit of certain utilities which they might not be able to attain in any other way, and which from common experience we know would tend to promote the general welfare of the people within such area. The supplying of water for domestic uses within municipalities has grown of recent years to be one of the most common and well-recognized forms of municipal activities wherein public property is employed and wherein public taxation is imposed and collected upon the inhabitants of the municipalities regardless of benefits conferred upon particular property, and by the same method by which taxes are generally levied and collected for the carrying on of the governmental functions of incorporated cities and towns. Municipal corporations, whether organized under special charters or general laws, derive these particular powers from the same legal sources as those which provide for the organization of quasi municipal corporations such as that provided for in this act, and we can perceive no real distinction between the organization of a municipal corporation, strictly so-called, for the carrying forth of the purposes usually committed to such governmental agencies and the organization under legislative sanction of such other governmental agencies as municipal water districts or public utility districts or metropolitan water districts, which, while these may not exercise all of the functions committed to municipal corporations, strictly so-called, are empowered to exercise certain of these functions which have come to be recognized as at least quasi governmental in character. Nor can we perceive any substantial reason why such district when so organized may not be invested with the same powers in the matter of the levying and collection of taxes for the carrying forth of its limited purposes with which municipal corporations are invested for the carrying forth of similar, though more diversified purposes. Nor can we discover any rational theory upon which in the levy and collection of such taxes the powers of either should be limited by those rules which have been given application in the formation of that class of public agencies wherein the assessments imposed upon a particular property have such direct reference to benefits conferred as to require notice and opportunity for hearing to be given to the owners of the property to be affected by the assessments thus to be imposed. The decision last above cited expressly holds that any tax levied and imposed for the purpose of supplying capital for the foregoing municipal or quasi municipal purposes is not to be regarded as "a tax or assessment on property directly benefited by the construction of some local improvement, but is a general tax levied just as, and for the same purpose that, any general municipal tax is imposed for carrying on the governmental functions and utilitarian objects of duly incorporated cities or towns." We are constrained, therefore, to the conclusion that the Legislature in investing metropolitan water districts to be formed under the provisions of the act in question with power, through their properly appointed officials, to collect general taxes within the municipalities uniting in the formation of such districts for the common purpose of supplying each with water for domestic uses has not acted in violation of any provision of the state Constitution to which our attention has been directed.

[6] It is the further contention of the respondent, however, that even if it be conceded that metropolitan water districts to be formed under said act have been properly invested with power to impose taxes upon the property of the inhabitants of the municipalities uniting in such formation and in the manner provided for in said legislation, the act is still unconstitutional as an attempt to unlawfully delegate the power of taxation to a special commission under the provisions of section 13 of article 11 of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

"The Legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation, company, association or individual any power * * * to levy taxes or assessments or perform any municipal function whatever, except that the Legislature shall have power to provide for the supervision, regulation and conduct, in such manner as it may determine, of the affairs of irrigation districts, reclamation districts or drainage districts, organized or existing under any law of this state."

The difficulty with the foregoing contention as to the application of the above constitutional provision to the situation presented in the instant proceeding consists in the fact that the official body or board of directors to whom the management and control of municipal water districts has by the terms of said act been intrusted and which is to exercise the powers and perform functions of the governmental agency thus to be created does not come within any of the designations of commissions, corporations, companies, associations or individuals to which the inhibition of the foregoing section of the Constitution applies. On the other hand, the governing body or board of directors of metropolitan water districts are in the same sense the governing officials thereof as are the city council or boards of trustees of municipalities or of such other governmental agencies as have heretofore been invested with powers and duties of a quasi municipal character. This question was fully disposed of by this court in the case of Henshaw v. Foster, 176 Cal. 507, 169 P. 82, wherein, in interpreting the Municipal Water District Act approved May 1, 1911, together with the amendments thereto, approved May 29, 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 921), containing similar provisions and against the validity of which a similar contention was made, this court said:

"Respondents take the position that the act in question violates the above-quoted sections 12 and 13 [art. 11] because 'it delegates to some one other than the corporate authorities the power to assess and collect taxes for city and municipal purposes.' This argument, like the other objection discussed herein, is based in part upon the supposed exclusive authority conferred by section 19 of article 11 upon cities. But, as we have seen, that article applies not merely to cities and towns, but to all municipal corporations, and power to acquire and sell water may be given to municipalities larger in territory and including within themselves cities and towns or similar corporations. This is done in the statute before us not in opposition to section 12, but by general provisions which vest in the corporate authorities of the district the power to assess and collect special taxes for the purposes contemplated. The corporate authority of such a district is the board of directors, and to that board is delegated the taxing power not in relation to matters of a purely local character in the included city or cities, but having reference to the affairs of the larger municipality embracing within it the others of lesser areas. In this view of the statute there is no violation of section 13, because the Legislature does not delegate to the directors control or supervision of any of the purely local affairs of the cities, but by general law enables the inhabitants of a region, including cities, to form a district and to elect their own taxing board to raise the necessary funds for district purposes."

A similar question was before this court in the case of Doyle v. Jordan, 200 Cal. 170, 252 P. 577, and in which the foregoing language from Henshaw v. Foster, supra, was fully approved. We are therefore of the opinion that there is no merit in the respondent's foregoing contention.

Various other propositions have been urged by the respondent and more particularly by amici curiæ in their somewhat elaborate briefs, but we are of the opinion that these are practically all covered by the matters considered and decided in the foregoing opinion. Whatever questions may arise as to the validity of particular provisions of the Metropolitan Water District Act other than those herein expressly considered will come into view in the course of the administration of the affairs of this particular metropolitan water district after it shall have reached the stage of incorporation, and entered upon the administration of its diversified functions as a corporate body. It is not necessary to anticipate these questions in this the preliminary stage of its proposed incorporation.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.

mortgage lien, are not available to defendant on application for change of place of trial.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Mills against Royal G. Brown and others. From an order denying the application of defendant Addie I. Tryon for a change of the place of trial, she appeals. Affirmed.

Ira S. Lillick, of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. B. Reynolds and George E. McCutchen, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Appeal by defendant Addie I. Tryon from an order refusing to change the place of trial from the county of Sacramento to the city and county of San Francisco. She supports her demand by an affidavit of merits, containing the averment that she is a resident of the city and county of San Francisco. Defendant E. H. Tryon consented to the making of said application by his codefendant. The defendant Brown did not appear in this proceeding.

[1, 2] Briefly, the facts are that on the 1st day of October, 1925, defendant Royal G. Brown, a resident of the county of Sacramento, gave to plaintiff his promissory note in the sum of $5,647.50, and at the same time executed to her a chattel mortgage upon some 2,000 head of sheep, also the increase thereof and the wool grown upon them. The maturity date of the note was October 1, 1926. Two provisions of said mortgage were: First, it covenanted that the mortgagor would properly care for the animals, and would not sell the same or any number thereof, nor any of the increase thereof, nor any of the wool grown upon them, without the written consent of the mortgagee; and, second, that, in case of default in any of the covenants or conditions thereof, said note, together with interest accrued thereon and all other indebtedness secured by said mortgage, should immediately become due and payable, and said mortgagee "is hereby empowered to enter into the possession of the mortgaged property, may remove, sell, and dispose of said property."

In addition to pleading said note and mortgage, and the amount due thereon, the complaint alleged that on or about April 1, 1926, defendants above named wrongfully took, carried away and converted to their own use and benefit all of the wool produced and grown on said sheep so mortgaged by said defendant Royal G. Brown to plaintiff.

It is too clear for controversy that the foregoing facts authorize the maintenance of a suit by the plaintiff against defendant Brown, as well as the other defendants named. Mathew v. Mathew, 138 Cal. 334, 336,

205 Cal. 88

MILLS v. BROWN et al. (Sac. 4025.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 20, 1928.

1. Chattel mortgages $\S$ 163—Facts held to authorize suit against mortgagor, as well as other defendants, for conversion of mortgaged wool.

Execution of note and chattel mortgage, wherein mortgagor covenanted properly to care for mortgaged sheep, and not to sell them, nor their increase or wool, without mortgagee's written consent, authorized maintenance of suit by mortgagee against mortgagor, as well as other defendants named, for wrongful taking and conversion of wool.

2. Venue $\S$ 22(3)—Suit against mortgagor and others for conversion of mortgaged wool held properly brought in county of mortgagor's residence (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 395).

Presence of mortgagor being necessary for mortgagee to secure full relief demanded in suit against him and others for wrongful taking and conversion of wool grown on mortgaged sheep, venue was properly laid in county of mortgagor's residence, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 395.

3. Chattel mortgages $\S$ 163—Statutory provision for but one action to recover debt or enforce right secured by mortgage held inapplicable to action for conversion of mortgaged wool (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 726).

Provision of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 726, that but one action for recovery of any debt or enforcement of any right secured by mortgage may be brought, held inapplicable to action by mortgagee against mortgagor and others for wrongful taking and conversion of wool grown on mortgaged sheep; such action not being on debt, but to protect value of security given.

4. Venue $\S$ 41—Defects in complaint, attempting in good faith to charge all defendants, as joint tort-feasors, with conversion of mortgaged property, are not available on application for change of venue.

Any defects in complaint, wherein effort is apparently made in good faith to charge all defendants, as joint tort-feasors, with conversion of part of property on which plaintiff has 71 P. 344. It is also clear that the plaintiff cannot secure the full relief demanded without the presence of the defendant Brown, who is a resident of the county of Sacramento; hence, under the provisions of section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the venue is properly laid at Sacramento county. McClung v. Watt, 190 Cal. 155, 158, 211 P. 17. See, also, Quint v. Dimond, 135 Cal. 572, 67 P. 1034; and Hellman v. Logan, 148 Cal. 58, 82 P. 848.

[3] Appellant, in a further attempt to show that a cause of action cannot be stated against defendant Brown, seeks to invoke section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides:

"There can be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real or personal property, which action must be in accordance with the provisions of this chapter. * * *

This provision has no application whatever to the facts of this case. The action before us is not an action upon the debt, but, on the contrary, is an action to protect the value of the security given. If plaintiff should be forced to foreclose the mortgage upon the remaining portion of the property covered thereby before she could secure any other relief, she might thereby lose altogether the value of the property converted and upon which the defendants had destroyed her lien.

The case of Mathew v. Mathew, supra, is a suit by a chattel mortgagee against the mortgagor for conversion of the property, and, while there is no mention of section 726, apparently it is thereby intended to hold that said section does not interfere with the rule therein announced. In fact, the holding we here make has been clearly foreshadowed a number of times. Bank of Ukiah v. Moore, 106 Cal. 673, 39 P. 1071, was a case where the mortgage was not given the right of possession and the debt secured by the mortgage had not matured; nevertheless relief by injunction against waste and conversion by the mortgagor was given. In Harper v. Gordon, 123 Cal. 489, 61 P. 84, it was held that, where a chattel mortgage contained a special contract allowing the mortgagee to take possession of the mortgaged chattels after default, such contract might be enforced after default by an action of replevin, the court expressly holding that section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply in that case. To the same effect see Flinn v. Ferry, 127 Cal. 648, 60 P. 434, and many other cases. No possible reason exists why a writ of replevin against the mortgagor should be allowed in such a case and an action in conversion be denied. Each action is incidental to the mortgage, and, as above announced, each is for the protection of the security given.

[4] The complaint in this action is apparently an effort made in good faith to charge all of the defendants as joint tortfeasors with the conversion of a part of the property upon which plaintiff has a mortgage lien. If there be any defects in it, they are not such as are available to appellant upon a proceeding of this character. The rule in that behalf is also found in McClung v. Watt, supra, 190 Cal. at page 161, 211 P. 20, as follows:

"It is enough, however, upon the hearing and determination of the demand for a change of venue, that the cause of action purported to be stated against the corporation defendant was apparently pleaded in good faith, and is not, prima facie, so glaringly and vitally defective as to be beyond correction by amendment."

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

205 Cal. 44

ROSETTI v. CASAZZA et al. (S. F. 12431.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 21, 1928.

Master and servant $\Rightarrow$ 286(3)—Evidence held insufficient to make out case, on theory that gangplank on which laborer was moving wheelbarrow was not reasonably safe.

In action for injuries sustained by agricultural laborer, by slipping or stumbling while moving loaded wheelbarrow on gangplank, evidence held insufficient to make out a case for plaintiff, on theory that employer did not furnish reasonably safe appliance, in that gangplank was old, and that wooden cleats thereon were worn out, and defendant's motion for nonsuit was therefore properly granted.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action by Stefano Rosetti against John Casazza and others. From a judgment for defendants, after their motion for nonsuit was granted, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edward J. Lynch, of San Francisco, for appellant.

T. H. Delap, of Richmond, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the defendants, after motion for nonsuit granted. The plaintiff was employed as an agricultural laborer by the defendants, and during and in the course of his employment was directed to assist others, who were engaged in clearing out chicken manure from a chicken house and placing the same in boxes, which boxes, having been placed upon a wheelbarrow, the plaintiff was to wheel over and along a gangplank 18 inches wide and 10 or 12 feet long, which led from the doorway of the chicken house to a truck, where the same was to be unloaded. The gangplank had wooden cleats on either side, with a space in the middle for the wheel of the barrow. Upon coming out of the chicken house door with a loaded wheelbarrow, the plaintiff either slipped or stumbled, and the wheelbarrow went over the edge of the gangplank, followed by plaintiff, who fell heavily on one of the upturned iron handles thereof and was severely injured. He sues herein to recover damages for such injury, basing his complaint upon the alleged negligence of his employers in failing to provide a reasonably safe appliance for his work.

The appliance provided was one reasonably adapted to the simple purpose for which it was used, and the only evidence which the plaintiff offered tending to show negligence on the part of the defendants in the supplying and use of the same consisted in the plaintiff's statement that the gangplank was "kind of old and the cleats were kind of woreed out." His evidence entirely failed to disclose whether either of these alleged defects in the appliance caused him to slip and fall. The trial court, after hearing the evidence, arrived at the conclusion that it was insufficient to make out a case for the plaintiff, and we are satisfied that its conclusion in that regard ought not to be reversed upon appeal, in the presence of the very meager showing as to the cause of the plaintiff's injury.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; LANGDON, J.

205 Cal. 34

PALMER v. CONTINENTAL CASUALTY CO.
et al. (L. A. 9450.)★

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 20, 1928.

Hearing Denied in Bank Sept. 17, 1928.

1. Brokers ⇐4—Plaintiff, suing on broker's bond, had burden to prove misappropriation by broker during time bond was effective (St. 1923, p. 93).

One suing on real estate broker's bond, given under St. 1923, p. 93, had burden to establish fact that broker converted to his own use or embezzled money paid him by plaintiff during the time the bond was in effect.

2. Brokers ⇐4—Evidence in suit on real estate broker's bond held not to sustain plaintiff's burden of showing misappropriation occurred after bond became effective (St. 1923, p. 93).

One suing on bond of real estate broker, licensed under St. 1919, p. 1252, and required to be bonded under St. 1923, p. 93, who merely showed deposit with broker of sum of money some three months before new license and bond became effective, and that she was informed of his disappearance after effective date of bond, failed to sustain burden of showing that broker's misappropriation of money deposited occurred after the time the bond went into effect.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1071(1)—Error of court in fixing date of real estate broker's bond sued on was immaterial, where plaintiff failed to prove time of defalcation (St. 1923, p. 93).

In action on real estate broker's bond, given under St. 1923, p. 93, erroneous finding of trial court as to date when broker's license and bond became effective held immaterial, where plaintiff failed to show date of broker's defalcation.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1071(1)—Finding that broker appropriated money before date of bond sued on held not prejudicial, where there was no evidence of date of appropriation.

In action on real estate broker's bond to recover sum of money deposited with broker prior to the time the bond became effective, finding of court that broker appropriated money before the date of license and bond held not prejudicial to plaintiff, where there was no evidence as to the time of the appropriation.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; P. E. Keeler, Judge.

Action by Abbie S. Palmer against the Continental Casualty Company and others upon a real estate broker's bond. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ben M. Goldman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joe Crider, Jr., and Clarence B. Runkle, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. [1, 2] Grant McCartney was, on the 28th day of December, 1923, and for some years prior thereto had been, a licensed real estate broker under the provisions of an act of the Legislature of this state. Stats. 1919, p. 1252. On that day the plaintiff deposited with him the sum of $2,000, which sum of money he was to use in making the first payment on a piece of real property which plaintiff had agreed to purchase. He failed to use said money for that purpose, but evidently converted the same to his own use, and some time subsequent to the 6th day of March, 1924, he absconded without ever having paid any part of said money upon the purchase price of said property as directed by the plaintiff. Prior to the year 1923, no bond was required of one following the business of a real estate broker, but during that year the law was amended requiring that all applicants for a broker's license should file with the real estate commissioner a satisfactory bond in amount of $2,000, conditioned for the faithful performance by said broker of any undertaking as a licensed real estate broker under said act. Laws of 1923, p. 93. By said act, both in its original and amended form, all licenses expired on the 31st day of December of the year in which they were issued. On the 31st day of December, 1923, the defendant herein, the Continental Casualty Company, a corporation, gave and executed its bond or undertaking in compliance with the amendatory provisions of said act as surety of the said Grant McCartney, conditioned for the faithful performance by the said Grant McCartney of every undertaking entered into by him as a licensed real estate broker under said act or acts amendatory thereof, for the period commencing January 1, 1924, and ending on December 31, 1924. On January 7, 1924, Grant McCartney filed with the real estate commissioner of the state his application for a license to act as a real estate broker for the year 1924, together with said bond executed by said defendant, the Continental Casualty Company. There was opposition to the granting of his application, and it was first denied, but, upon a further showing on McCartney's part, it was granted on the 6th day of March, 1924, and sent to him by mail. It was never delivered to him, undoubtedly due to the fact that he had absconded, and was subsequently returned by the postal authorities to the office of the state real estate commissioner. The plaintiff thereupon instituted this action upon said bond to recover from the bonding company the money paid to him on December 28, 1923. At the trial, the foregoing facts were either proven or stipulated to by the parties to the action. The trial court found for the defendant, the bonding company, and the plaintiff has appealed.

It was incumbent upon the plaintiff, in order for her to recover on the bond, to establish that McCartney had converted to his own use or embezzled the money paid him by plaintiff during the time the bond was in effect. The condition of the bond was that "the said above-bounden Grant McCartney, doing business as Grant McCartney Company, will comply with the provisions of that certain act (giving its title), and will faithfully perform every undertaking entered into by him as a licensed real estate broker under the said act, and acts amendatory thereof." While this bond was executed and bore date the 31st day of December, 1923, it only purported to cover the undertakings of the principal entered into by him as a licensed real estate broker for the period beginning January 1st and ending December 31, 1924. As we have already seen, the license under which he was doing business during the year 1923 expired on the last day of that year. The bond was issued on condition that a license issue to McCartney for the year 1924. The license was not issued to him, as we before said, until March 6, 1924, and he could not legally carry on the business of a real estate broker, after his license expired on December 31, 1923, until this new license was issued, on March 6, 1924. The bond therefore did not become effective before the date of March 6, 1924, and the bonding company was not responsible for any transaction entered into by McCartney prior to March 6, 1924. In addition to the facts already recited, the evidence shows that the plaintiff paid to McCartney the $2,000 by check dated December 28, 1923, on the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles. This check was paid by the bank on January 3, 1924. The plaintiff called at McCartney's office some time in March, 1924, and he was out. She called the next day and was told that he had disappeared. The evidence does not show what day in March it was that plaintiff called at McCartney's office. It was conceded that it was after March 6th. Appellant, in her briefs filed herein, claims that it was on the 28th of March. Assuming this to be the fact, although we find no evidence to that effect, we fail to see how plaintiff has made out her case against the bonding company. The burden was upon her to establish the fact that McCartney misappropriated the money during the time the bond was effective. There is not a scintilla of evidence in the record to show the time when McCartney made this misappropriation. Appellant claims that he did not abscond until after the 6th day of March, 1924; that this fact is some evidence that he misappropriated the money subsequent to that date. This claim cannot be sustained. His absconding may have been the result of his embezzlement, but that fact offers no proof whatever as to when the embezzlement occurred. Appellant has failed to show any right to recover on the bond, and, for this reason, the judgment must stand.

[3] Appellant contends that the trial court erred in finding that McCartney's license was not effective until March 9, 1924. The uncontradicted evidence is that it became effective March 6, 1924. But this discrepancy between the proof and the findings is of no consequence whatever. Appellant, as we have before stated, failed to show the date of McCartney's defalcation. Her evidence is just as deficient upon this issue, whether we accept March 6th or March 9th as the effective date of McCartney's license. Neither is there any merit in appellant's contention that the trial court erred in finding that McCartney's application was denied on February 20, 1924. The undisputed evidence shows this to be the fact. Equally untenable is appellant's claim that the court erred in finding that McCartney was not a licensed real estate broker during the period from January 1, 1924, to March 6, 1924. We have already shown the reason why this claim is unfounded.

[4] Finally, appellant contends that the court erred in finding that Grant McCartney appropriated said sum of $2,000 to his own use prior to March 6, 1924. If it be true that there is no evidence to support this finding, it does not necessarily follow therefrom that the appellant was prejudiced by reason of said finding, for the reason that there is an entire absence of any evidence in the record as to when said misappropriation occurred. All that was necessary for the court to have found was that the money was not appropriated by McCartney after his license was issued to him on March 6, 1924. Such a finding is well within the evidence. The court went further than was necessary, and found, not only that the money was not appropriated after the license was issued, but also that it was appropriated prior thereto. It may be said, however, that, as the money was appropriated either before or after the license was issued, and as there was no evidence to prove that it was appropriated after the license was issued, it necessarily must have been appropriated before the issuance of the license. Considering the evidence in this light, the finding complained of may well be said to find support in the evidence. We find no reversible error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.

205 Cal. 42

SACRAMENTO TRANSP. CO. v. CALIFORNIA RECLAMATION CO. (S. F. 12248.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 21, 1928.

Dismissal and nonsuit $\S$ 60(1)—Court must dismiss action not brought to trial within five years after filing of answer and counterclaim, though plaintiff made motion (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 437, 583).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 583, it was court's mandatory duty to dismiss action for failure to bring it to trial within five years after filing of answer and counterclaim under section 437, though motion to dismiss was made by plaintiff.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by the Sacramento Transportation Company against the California Reclamation Company, which filed a cross-complaint. From orders granting plaintiff's motion to set aside an order entering plaintiff's default for failure to answer the cross-complaint and dismissing the action for want of prosecution, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Irving H. Frank and Nathan H. Frank, both of San Francisco (Keith Ferguson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, and Andros, Hengstler & Dorr, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco granting the motion of the plaintiff and cross-defendant to set aside an order of said court entering the default of said plaintiff and cross-defendant for failure to answer the cross-complaint, and from the further order of said court dismissing the action on the ground of failure on the part of the plaintiff to bring the same to trial within five years from the time the answer and cross-complaint were filed. The complaint herein was filed in the superior court of the county of Sacramento on January 14, 1910, and on February 15, 1910, the plaintiff filed an amended complaint, wherein it was alleged that the defendant was indebted to it for work, labor, and material of the reasonable value of \$1,989.43. Thereafter, and on March 17, 1910, the defendant filed a general demurrer to the complaint and a motion for a change of place of trial to the city and county of San Francisco, which latter motion was granted. Thereafter, and on August 31, 1915, the defendant's demurrer was overruled, and on October 11, 1915, the latter filed its answer and also filed what it denominated as both a counterclaim and a cross-complaint, but which in reality was only a counterclaim. Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 437; Thomas Fruit Co. v. Start, 107 Cal. 206, 40 P. 336; Pickwick Stages v. Board of Trustees, 189 Cal. 417, 208 P. 961. Thereafter, for approximately ten years, no action was taken by either party. On September 10, 1925, however, the plaintiff filed a general demurrer to the defendant's alleged cross-complaint, whereupon the defendant moved to strike said demurrer from the files and have entered the default of the plaintiff for failure to answer the same. The court granted the defendant's said motion, whereupon, and on May 24, 1926, the plaintiff served and filed a motion to set aside the aforesaid order of default and to dismiss the action for want of prosecution; the latter motion being made upon the ground that the trial court had no jurisdiction to enter the default of the plaintiff for its failure to answer the defendant's pleading, for the reason that, under section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the cause not having been brought to trial within five years after the filing of said answer and counterclaim, the court had no jurisdiction to do other than dismiss said action.

In the recent case of Wutchumna Water Co. v. Stevenson (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 537, upon a quite similar state of facts, this court held that, notwithstanding the fact that the defendant had on file a cross-complaint and counterclaim to which the plaintiff had not joined issue by either demurrer or answer, the trial court had jurisdiction to dismiss the action under the provisions of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure when it appeared that a sufficient period had elapsed since the filing of the defendant's answer and cross-complaint to bring the action within the provisions of said section of the Code. The difference between these two cases consists in the fact that in the case above cited the motion to dismiss was made by the defendant within the five-year period, while in the present case the motion to dismiss is made by the plaintiff beyond the five-year period of inaction after answer filed. This distinction, however, only serves to bring the case within the latter clauses of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which make it mandatory upon the trial court, either upon motion of the defendant or on its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after defendant has filed his answer, to dismiss the action. In the former case, the fact that the cross-complaint was on file upon which issue had not been joined was held not to justify the delay or interfere with the operation of the foregoing section of the Code, and this principle is equally applicable to the instant case.

The purpose of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to compel the parties to action in the direction of a speedy trial of causes after issue joined. The trial court in the instant case would have been bound on its own motion to dismiss the action upon having the facts showing an unwarrantable delay brought to its attention, and the fact that it was the plaintiff itself who made the motion is immaterial, since the duty of the court in the premises was mandatory, whether or not a motion to dismiss was made under said section by either of the parties to the action. The order is affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; LANGDON, J.

FOGARTY et al. v. DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS OF CALIFORNIA, DIVISION OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS AND SAFETY et al. (S. F. 12793.)★

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 20, 1928.

Rehearing Granted Sept. 17, 1928.

1. Master and servant §398—Claims of minors for death benefits held not barred by limitations, where guardian was not appointed until minors were brought into proceeding pending before commission (Workmen's Compensation Act, §§ 9(b), (3), (c), 11(d)).

Claims of minor brothers and sisters of deceased employee for death benefit provided by Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) § 9(c), and for accrued compensation covered by section 9(b) (3), held not barred by limitations provided by section 11(d), which did not run against minors until guardian had been appointed, where appointment of minors' father as guardian was not made until minors, as parties claimant, were brought into proceeding pending before commission.

2. Master and servant §398—Filing of minors' application for death benefits gave commission jurisdiction to determine claims of parents and dependents of deceased, whose claims were barred by limitations (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11(a)).

Under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) § 11(a), providing that filing of application with commission for any portion of benefits shall render limitations inoperative as to all further claims of persons arising from same transaction, filing of application of minors for death benefit and accrued compensation in proceedings pending before commission gave commission jurisdiction to hear claims of all persons for compensation arising from same transaction, including claims of parents of deceased, regardless of whether latter were seasonably filed or not.

3. Master and servant §417(7)—Supreme Court can only overthrow Industrial Commission's finding on question of fact, where there is no substantial evidence supporting finding.

Power of Supreme Court to overthrow finding of Industrial Accident Commission on question of fact is confined to cases in which there is no substantial evidence to support finding.

4. Master and servant §405(4)—Evidence showed employment and exposure caused rheumatism, diseased heart condition, and death, which arose in course of employment.

In proceedings to recover compensation for death of employee, evidence that employment and exposure induced acute attack of rheumatism in employee, which led to diseased heart condition, which ultimately proved fatal, showed that exposure and exhaustion from work precipitated train of symptoms resulting in death, and hence Industrial Accident Commission erred in finding that employee's illness and death were not caused or precipitated by employment or injury arising out of or in course of employment.

In Bank.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) by K. J. Fogarty and others to recover compensation for the death of Harlan Fogarty, employee, opposed by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, employer. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, denying application for adjustment of claim, petitioners bring certiorari. Annulled and remanded with directions.

Matthew A. McCullough, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

John J. Briare and Leo H. Susman, both of San Francisco, for respondent Pacific Gas & Electric Co.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for other respondents.

WASTE, C. J. The dependents of Harlan Fogarty, deceased, are seeking to have annulled an award of the respondent commission denying their application for adjustment of claim. At the time of his death, which occurred on June 24, 1926, the deceased was a minor. Commencing May 8, 1924, and for a period terminating, by reason of his disability, on June 3, 1924, Harlan Fogarty was employed by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company as a laborer and rough carpenter on the timber flume which supplies water to one of its power houses. Before he began any actual work, but on the same day that he assumed his duties as such employee, the deceased was subjected to a thorough physical examination at the hands of Dr. W. P. Sawyer, representing the employer. The examination disclosed that the deceased at the time was a normal youth of 19 years, in apparent excellent health. The examining physician testified before the respondent commission that:

"There [was] no pathology on the whole card. It [was] one of the cleanest cards of any examination I ever made."

The deceased commenced work immediately following this physical examination. On June 2, 1924, together with other workers, he was summoned to repair a break in the flume some 84 feet in length, which interrupted the flow of water to the power house. In their endeavor to complete the repair work with all possible expedition, the men worked laboriously for many hours. One shift was engaged continuously without sleep for 18 hours, another for 16 hours, and a third, of which the deceased was a member, for 38 hours. During this prolonged period the men were subjected by day to the heat of the sun's rays and by night to the cool air. There is evidence to the effect that during the night Fogarty worked in wet clothes and shoes, and "felt pain and stiffness in both knees." By reason of exhaustion and the presence of pains in his knees and ankles, he was incapable of going to his home, some distance away when the work was done, and he remained with a fellow employee during the night of June 3d. While there he received some slight care intended to relieve his plight. He was conveyed by automobile the following day to his own home. Dr. Sawyer, who, as previously noted, had examined him, was called and found the young man to be the victim of an acute attack of rheumatism, for which he prescribed salicylates, a specific for acute rheumatism. Dr. Sawyer's medical statement, introduced in evidence, shows that the knees and ankles of the deceased were at that time swollen, hot, and tender, and that he had a pulse rate of 110 and a temperature of 103.4.

Dr. Sawyer attended Fogarty until July 10th, at which time he entered the Sutter Hospital, in Sacramento, and came under the care of Dr. J. W. James. The hospital records show that deceased had a pulse rate of 120 and a temperature of 102 on that date. Dr. James found:

"Nearly all small joints swollen and tender; heart increased in all diameters; and murmur replacing first sound. Tongue heavily coated. Patient rather stupid in action."

As to the patient's past history the record noted:

"Occasional sore throat 8 years ago; had tonsils removed. Otherwise well; present illness first serious trouble."

Fogarty remained in the hospital approximately 10 days, and then visited with an aunt for 2 weeks, continuing all the while under the care of Dr. James. It appears that some years prior to his employment by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company Fogarty had been operated upon by Dr. G. E. Chappell and had his tonsils removed. In the fall of 1924 Dr. Chappell examined him, and found that he was suffering from enlarged heart and valvular trouble, as well as weakness of the heart muscle. The doctor advised him to remain at home and to do no manual labor. The rheumatic and heart condition continuing, in October, 1925, Dr. Chappell removed certain remnants of deceased's tonsils, in the hope that it might effect a cure. On March 24, 1926, the deceased was taken to the Krull Hospital, in Sacramento, where, upon examination, Dr. Chappell found his condition aggravated, and by means of an operation removed fluid from the pleural cavity. A similar operation was thereafter performed by Dr. Brown. Fogarty was continuously nursed and cared for during the following months. He died on June 24, 1926, the death certificate giving chronic endocarditis, which is a diseased condition of the membrane lining the valves and cavities of the heart, as the cause of death.

At the conclusion of the several hearings of the dependents for adjustment of their claim, the respondent commission, on September 23, 1927, made its findings and award denying the application, and discharging the employer from all liability in connection with the death of the deceased. Among other things it was found that the death of Harlan Fogarty had not been caused or precipitated by his employment, or by any injury arising out of or in the course of such employment. The applicants' petition for a rehearing was granted and the cause resubmitted without the taking of further testimony. The findings thereafter filed declared the evidence to be insufficient to establish that the deceased had received an injury arising out of and in the course of employment, or that the employment had caused any temporary disability. It was further found that the disability complained of had not been caused by any injury arising out of and in the course of said employment, or by said employment; that the deceased died from disease, and said death had not been caused or precipitated by the employment, or by an injury arising out of or in the course of said employment; that the death of the deceased had not ensued within one year from the date of the alleged injury, and that no disability payment had been made for the injury complained of, or agreement made therefor, or proceedings for its collection commenced, and that no right, therefore, accrued to the applicants to claim a death benefit as a result of the death of the deceased.

[1, 2] Because of this latter finding there is first presented for consideration the question whether the application for adjustment of claim had been timely filed. Certain of the applicants are minors, against whom the limitations of time provided by the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) § 11(d), do not run unless and until a guardian has been appointed. Therefore the respective claims of the minor brothers and sister of the deceased, both for the death benefit provided by section 9(c) and for the accrued compensation covered by section 9(b) 3 of the act, were not barred, because the appointment of their father as their guardian was not made until they as parties claimant, were brought into the proceeding then pending before the commission. We are of the view that, under the provisions of section 11(a) of the act, the filing of the application of such minors gave to the commission jurisdiction to hear and determine the claims of any and all persons for compensation arising from the same transaction, including the claims of the parents of the deceased, whether the latter were seasonably filed or not. Section 11(a), supra, provides:

"Unless compensation is paid or an agreement for its payment made within the time limited in this section for the institution of proceedings for its collection, the right to institute such proceedings shall be barred; provided, that the filing of an application with the commission for any portion of the benefits prescribed by this act shall render this section inoperative as to all further claims of any person or persons for compensation arising from the same transaction, and the right to present such further claims shall be governed by the provisions of section 20(d) and section 65(b) of this act."

This court had occasion, in the case of Great Western Power Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 196 Cal. 593, 602, 238 P. 662, 666, to interpret the foregoing section of the act. It is there declared:

"By both constitutional enactment * * * and legislative decree * * * the Industrial Accident Commission is vested with wide powers, to the end that the administration of legislation, enacted to create and enforce a complete system of workmen's compensation, 'shall accomplish substantial justice in all cases expeditiously, inexpensively, and without incumbrance of any character.' The Workmen's Compensation Act provides—section 17(c)—that there shall be but one cause of action for each transaction coming within the provisions of the act. All claims brought for medical expense, disability payments, death benefits, burial expense, liens, or any other matter arising out of such transaction, may, in the discretion of the commission, be joined in the same proceeding at any time. Going one step further, we see no reason why the Legislature may not have intended to provide, in the proviso to section 11 (a), that, when a claim for any portion of the benefits prescribed by the act has reached the point where it is necessary or expedient to submit the matter to the decision of the Industrial Accident Commission, the whole subject-matter of the controversy, including the further claims of the applicant, or of any and all other persons, should be thereby submitted to the jurisdiction of the commission for a complete determination, provided, of course, that all claims relating to the transaction be presented within the life of the continuing jurisdiction of the commission. That, we conclude, was the legislative intent, and the effect of the proviso added to section 11(a)."

Having reached such conclusion, we held in that case that the commission had jurisdiction to make an award in favor of a dependent grandparent of the deceased, even though it appeared that such claimant had not been made a party to the proceeding before the commission until after the expiration of the time limited for the institution of proceedings for the collection of the death benefit. It therefore follows that the respective claims of the parties hereto, both for accrued compensation and for the death benefit, may properly be determined by the commission.

[3, 4] This brings us to a consideration of the important point as to whether the illness and death of the deceased were compensable within the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. This court is well aware that its power to overthrow a finding on a question of fact made by the respondent commission is confined to those cases in which there is no substantial evidence to support the finding. That is the exact situation now before us. The history of the case, as testified to by the witnesses for the applicants and for the employer, presents an unbroken chain of events indicative of the fact that, whatever the condition of the health of the employee had theretofore been, the exposure and exhaustion to which he was subjected precipitated the train of symptoms which culminated in his death. In Singlaub v. Ind. Acc. Comm. (Cal. App.) 262 P. 411, it is declared to be the—

"unquestioned law that, where the death of an employee may be traced to two causes: First, to that of a primary disease; and, secondly, to overexertion in the work in behalf of his employer in which the employee is engaged, at the time of his death, the employer or his insurer is liable. In other words, notwithstanding the previous diseased condition of the employee and in the natural consequence of which the inevitable death of the employee will ensue, if satisfactorily established that the demise of the employee, though primarily caused by his idiopathic condition, nevertheless was superinduced by overexertion of the employee arising out of his employment, the liability of the employer is fixed. As is said in Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 186 Cal. 587, 594 (200 P. 17, 20): "If the disability, although arising from a chronic heart trouble, was brought on by any strain or excitement incident to the employment, the industrial liability still exists. Acceleration or aggravation of a pre-existing disease is an injury in the occupation causing such acceleration (citing cases)."

To the same effect is Knock v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 200 Cal. 456, 253 P. 712, wherein it appeared from the medical testimony adduced that, while the deceased must have been affected with a previous heart affection, the conditions of his employment were such as to have precipitated his collapse sooner than would otherwise have happened.

In the case at bar an effort was made by the employer to show that the deceased employee was the victim of a latent and pre-existing rheumatic and heart condition. The evidence is in apparent conflict on this point. There is also testimony which points to a "focus of infection" as a major causative factor. There is, however, but one conclusion which can be drawn from the whole evidence, and that is that, aside from all other factors, the employment, with its consequential exposure, was the precipitating cause, and induced the acute attack of rheumatism with which Fogarty was immediately thereafter seized, and, further, that such attack not only could, but actually did lead to the heart condition which ultimately proved fatal. It is necessary to only briefly epitomize the evidence relating to this phase of the case to demonstrate that it falls squarely within the rule of the cases previously cited.

Dr. Sawyer, the physician who examined the deceased prior to his employment by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, and later attended him, testified that at the time he made the examination he found nothing suggesting that the deceased was then suffering from or a victim of either endocarditis or myocarditis, and that there was no doubt in his mind but that the acute attack of rheumatism was brought on by the exposure, which was the sudden cause of it. Dr. Chappell, called by the employer, testified that, with all the facts before him, he would say there was a causal connection between the prolonged period of labor, with its resultant exposure and exhaustion, and the acute attack of rheumatism suffered by the deceased. Dr. R. W. Harbaugh, assistant medical director of the respondent commission, informed the referee in the proceeding that exposure to cold or wetting or sudden changes of temperature, are among the factors in determining the onset of an attack of rheumatism; that it is generally recognized that a certain kind of heart disease is directly connected with an attack of rheumatism, and he had no doubt but that that was "what happened in this particular case."

There was much evidence as to the "major" and "minor" factors of heart disease, and some of the witnesses refused to commit themselves beyond the assertion that the strain and exposure to which the employee was subjected was only "some slight factor" in precipitating the acute and fatal attack. But the record read as a whole—and we have given it a most searching scrutiny—removes any and all doubt, and sets the case beyond the realm of argument, inference, or conjecture. The employer's own witnesses established that the deceased's employment was a factor in the precipitation of the rheumatic and heart condition which ultimately led to his death. There is not a substantial contradiction on that point. The only fair inference that may be drawn from the evidence is that, if it should be conceded that the deceased was the victim of a latent and pre-existing rheumatic and heart condition, a condition which, in our opinion, was not established, the exposure and exhaustion incident to his employment accelerated his collapse. Any contrary inference is inconsistent with the verity of the record. The respondent commission, therefore, erred when it found that the deceased's illness and death had not been caused or precipitated by his employment, or by an injury arising out of or in the course of his employment.

The award is annulled, and the cause is remanded, with directions to the commission to proceed as outlined, and to further find upon the degree of dependency, in order to properly ascertain the amount of the benefits payable to the claimants.

We concur: SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

204 Cal. 618

STANDARD LIVE STOCK CO. v. PENTZ.*
(S.F. 11931.)

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 30, 1928.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨130(2)—Covenant of quiet possession in lease is not breached until eviction.

Covenant of quiet possession in a lease is not breached until there has been an actual or constructive eviction.

2. Limitation of actions ⇨47(1)—Lessee's action for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment, commenced two years from date of actual eviction, held not barred (Civ. Code, § 1927; Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 1).

Lessee's action for damages for breach of implied covenant of quiet enjoyment of a lease pursuant to Civ. Code, § 1927, commenced two years from date of actual eviction, held not barred by reason of Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 1, though foreclosure proceeding resulting in subsequent eviction was instituted more than four years before bringing of action.

3. Principal and agent ⇨146(2)—That lessor executing lease as owner was in fact merely agent held no defense in lessee's action for breach of implied covenant of quiet enjoyment.

Where lease contained nothing to indicate that lessor was executing the same other than as owner of the premises described therein, the fact that such lease was made by lessor merely as agent and trustee of true owner held no defense, in lessee's action for damages for breach of implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, since an agent is personally bound by contract purporting to be made in behalf of himself alone, notwithstanding his lack of personal interest in consideration.

4. Estoppel ⇨70(2)—Lessee's failure to claim damages for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment in foreclosure action did not estop claim therefor in subsequent action against lessor.

Lessee's failure to assert claim for damages for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment in foreclosure action, wherein lessee and owner were made defendants, together with certain other codefendants, held not to estop him from asserting claim for such damage in subsequent action against lessor, since prior to and up to time of entry of judgment in foreclosure action and eviction from premises as a consequence thereof lessee had sustained no damages, for the reason that there had occurred no breach of covenant of quiet possession.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇨130(3)—Law relating to rights of assignees of lease did not preclude action by assignee against lessor for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment (Civ. Code, § 823).

Civ. Code, § 823, relative to rights of assignee of lease relating wholly to remedies as distinguished from rights, held not to preclude assignee from maintaining action against lessor for breach of implied covenant of quiet possession.

6. Landlord and tenant ⇨130(3)—Lessee's failure to pay rent after institution of foreclosure against lessor did not preclude action against lessor for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment (Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, et seq.; Civ. Code, § 791).

Failure of lessee to pay rent after institution of foreclosure action against lessor, giving lessor only the right of his option to terminate and end the lease in accordance with provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1161 et seq., as expressly provided in Civ. Code, § 791, did not preclude lessee, after eviction by purchaser at mortgage sale, from maintaining action against lessor for breach of implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, particularly since lessee's failure to pay such rent was not made the basis of eviction.

7. Appeal and error ⇨241—Point not made one of grounds on which motion for directed verdict was predicated was not available on appeal.

Point which is not made one of grounds on which motion for directed verdict was predicated is not available to respondent on appeal.

8. Landlord and tenant ⇨130(3)—Refusal to authorize jury to find substantial damage in lessee's action for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment held error, under evidence (Civ. Code, § 3304).

Where evidence to effect that lessee appeared in defense to foreclosure action to which lessee and lessor were made parties in order to protect its rights as holder of lease, thereby being put to an outlay of expense for counsel fees and expense in defending possession, refusal of trial court, in subsequent action against lessor for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment, to commit to jury the right to find some measure of substantial damage, held error, even though recovery was limited by Civ. Code, § 3304.

9. Landlord and tenant ⇨130(3)—Landlord's bad faith as to obligations owed lessee in connection with breach of covenant of peaceable possession held for jury.

Evidence in lessee's action for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment relative to bad faith on part of lessor in respect to obligations owed to lessee held such as to require submission to jury of such issue in connection with breach of covenant of peaceable possession.

10. Landlord and tenant ⇨130(4)—Damages recoverable by lessee for breach of covenant of quiet possession are value of his term (Civ. Code, §§ 1927, 3300, 3304).

Under Civ. Code, § 1927, insuring lessee a quiet possession of premises during term of hiring against all persons lawfully claiming the same, and section 3300, relative to measure of damages for breach of obligation arising from contract, the damage recoverable by lessee in case of breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment is the value of his term, notwithstanding section 3304, which is not intended to have reference to leases of real estate or to detriment caused by breaches of covenants for peaceable possession.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by the Standard Live Stock Company against William R. Pentz. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Preston & Duncan and Robert Duncan, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, Marshall P. Madison, and Frank D. Madison, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff herein appeals from a judgment rendered and entered after a directed verdict in the defendant's favor. The action is one for the recovery of both general and special damages for the breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment in a lease executed by the defendant on November 1, 1917, to the assignor of the plaintiff, and covering a large tract of land in the county of Mendocino, chiefly adapted to the raising and breeding of stock. The plaintiff in its second amended complaint sets forth said lease in full, and also sets forth the written assignment thereof from one P. B. Noonan, the original lessee named therein, to the plaintiff, together with the written consent to such assignment on the part of the lessor. The plaintiff further avers its entry upon said premises under said lease and the performance by it of all of the covenants and agreements therein to be by it performed prior to its eviction from the premises covered thereby; and also avers its various acts and expenditures in the way of stocking and operating said premises as a stock ranch up to the time of its eviction therefrom. The plaintiff then proceeds to allege that at the time of the making and execution of said lease there were in existence two mortgages made and executed by a prior owner of said premises and then held and owned by the First Federal Trust Company, a corporation; that, said mortgages and the moneys due thereon not having been paid, the said mortgagee, on November 6, 1918, commenced an action for the foreclosure thereof in the superior court in and for the county of Mendocino, to which action both the plaintiff and the defendant herein were made parties, together with certain other defendants; that in due course in said action a decree of foreclosure and sale was duly given and made, under the terms of which the whole of said premises was sold to one W. H. Sullivan on the 8th day of November, 1919; that a deed thereto was in due course, one year later, executed and delivered to said W. H. Sullivan as the purchaser at said judicial sale; that thereupon the said purchaser demanded of the plaintiff herein that it surrender and abandon the possession of the whole of said leased premises to the said purchaser, and, this demand being refused, the said W. H. Sullivan applied to and procured from the said superior court a writ of assistance, under which writ, in the hands of the sheriff of said county, the plaintiff herein, with all of its properties then upon said premises, was ejected and removed from said premises and the whole thereof on the 28th day of February, 1921, and the said plaintiff and its said properties have ever since been excluded therefrom; that said plaintiff resisted said eviction, by all of the legal means within its power, unsuccessfully.

The plaintiff then alleges that the defendant herein at all times knew of the existence of said superior mortgages of the First Federal Trust Company and of the institution of said action for the foreclosure thereof. The plaintiff then proceeds to allege that under the terms of section 1927 of the Civil Code the lessor of said premises was obligated to secure to the plaintiff herein, as the assignee of said lease, the quiet possession of said premises against all persons lawfully claiming the same, and that such obligation became and was a part of said lease; that the plaintiff herein, immediately upon the commencement of said foreclosure action, notified the defendant herein, as such lessor thereof, and demanded that he maintain and keep the plaintiff herein in the quiet and peaceable possession of the whole of said leased lands and premises; that said defendant not only failed so to do, but, on the contrary, united with the Bank of California National Association, a corporation, and a codefendant in said foreclosure action, in filing a cross-complaint in said action, wherein the plaintiff herein was also made a cross-defendant, and wherein it was alleged that the plaintiff herein claimed some right, title, or estate in the property described in said lease and in said action, but that such claim was subsequent and subject to the right, title, interest, and estate of said corporation and also the defendant herein as the said cross-complainants in said foreclosure action; that the plaintiff herein was obliged to appear in said action to defend itself against said cross-complaint; that, when said cause came to trial upon the original complaint, and also upon said cross-complaint, it was adjudged and decreed by said court that the lease of the plaintiff herein was in full force and effect at the date of said decree and was prior to and superior to the right of the said Bank of California National Association and of the defendant herein, as asserted in their said cross-complaint, but was subject and subordinate to the right of the First Federal Trust Company, the original plaintiff in said foreclosure suit.

The plaintiff further alleges that it had paid all of the rents due and owing under the provisions of said lease up to and including the 30th day of November, 1918; that, upon the institution of said foreclosure action, the plaintiff herein offered and agreed to pay to the defendant herein the rents subsequently to accrue under the terms of said lease, provided said defendant would protect and agree to protect the plaintiff herein in the quiet and peaceable possession of said leased premises against said foreclosure action and the claims of the plaintiff therein thereunder, but that the defendant herein failed and refused so to do. The plaintiff then proceeds to allege, with much of detail, the damages, both general and special, which it sustained as the result of its aforesaid eviction from said leased premises, both as to the loss of the value of its said term and of the particular losses which it suffered in the way of the destruction of and detriment to its property due to said eviction, and the hardships with which it was executed and attended. It is not necessary to refer to these averments with much of detail for the purposes of this decision, but as a result thereof it is sufficient to state that the plaintiff herein prayed for general and special damages in the aggregate sum of $112,214.

The defendant in his answer to the plaintiff's second amended complaint, admits the making and execution of said lease, the assignment thereof to the plaintiff, his consent to said assignment, the possession of the plaintiff thereunder, and the eviction of the plaintiff from the premises by the holder of a superior title, as set forth in the plaintiff's said complaint, and denies most of the other averments therein contained. The defendant alleges that, in the making and execution of said lease to the original lessee, and in the consent to the assignment thereof to the plaintiff, he was acting throughout, not as the owner of said premises, but at all times as the agent and representative of one L. B. McMurtry, and was known by the said original lessee so to be and so to be acting. He denies, for want of information and belief practically all of the plaintiff's averments with respect to its operation of and expenditures upon said premises, as well as its alleged losses incident to its eviction therefrom. In addition to its foregoing denials, the defendant pleads the following special defenses: He alleges that the plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the provisions of section 337, subd. 1, section 338, subd. 1, and section 339, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. He sets forth certain affirmative matter intended to show that the plaintiff's assignor, in taking said lease, did not deal with said defendant as the owner of said premises, but solely as the agent and representative of L. B. McMurtry, the real owner thereof, prior to and at the time of the execution of said lease and of the assignment thereof. He then proceeds to plead certain facts with relation to the proceedings in the action for the foreclosure of the mortgage of the First Federal Trust Company upon said premises, and as to the pleadings, proceedings, and judgment rendered and entered in said action, which are averred to have the effect of res adjudicata upon the asserted rights of the plaintiff in the present action. He further pleads the pendency of another action instituted by the plaintiff herein against the Bank of California National Association, and which it is averred operates as an estoppel against the said plaintiff as to its maintenance of the present action. He therefore prays that the plaintiff take nothing by this action, and that he go hence with his costs.

The plaintiff filed a general and special demurrer to the defendant's said answer and to each of the affirmative matters set forth therein, which, upon hearing thereon, the trial court overruled. The cause then came to trial before a jury, in the course of which the plaintiff offered and there was received, over objection, a large amount of evidence having more particular relation to the elements of damage, both general and special, which the plaintiff was seeking to recover.

At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case, the defendant moved the court for a nonsuit upon several grounds. He also moved to strike out all of the evidence offered and admitted under objection on behalf of the plaintiff and having reference to the various elements of damage claimed to have been suffered by it as a result of its eviction from the leased premises. In connection with said motions, it was stipulated that the judgment roll in the case of First Federal Trust Company v. McMurtry et al., might be introduced in evidence.

The court denied the defendant's motion for a nonsuit, whereupon the defendant moved the court for a directed verdict in the defendant's favor upon all of the grounds theretofore made and argued upon its previous motions. The trial court then proceeded to grant the defendant's aforesaid motion to strike out so much of the plaintiff's offered evidence as had relation to its averments of the value of the plaintiff's term under said lease and to its special losses as a result of its eviction. The trial court also granted the defendant's motion for a directed verdict in his favor, and directed the jury to return such verdict, which, having been so returned, the court made and entered its judgment accordingly in the defendant's favor. From such judgment, the plaintiff has taken and now prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] We shall first consider the special defenses which the defendant pleaded and urged at the trial and upon his motion for a directed verdict and which he insists upon here, since, if these should be sustained, the judgment, regardless of other matters in issue, must be affirmed. The defendant urges that the plaintiff's action was barred by the provisions of several sections and subdivisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. These all have relation to the time when the plaintiff's right of action arose. It is the respondent's contention that the breach of any of the lessor's obligations, under the provisions of section 1927 of the Civil Code, to insure to the lessee quiet possession of the leased premises during the term thereof against all persons lawfully claiming the same, occurred upon the institution of the foreclosure proceeding wherein the plaintiff in that action asserted a superior right to that of both the lessor and lessee of the premises in question, and that such asserted breach occurred upon the filing of the complaint in the foreclosure action on November 6, 1918, and, since the plaintiff herein did not institute the present action until February, 1923, its action was barred by the aforesaid provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and particularly by section 338, subd. 1, of said Code. There is no merit in this contention, nor do the authorities cited in the respondent's brief sustain it. The law is too well settled to require extensive comment or citation of authority that the covenant of quiet possession in a lease is not breached until there has been an actual or constructive eviction. The rule upon this subject is stated with sufficient citation of authority in the case of McCormick v. Marcy, 165 Cal. 386, 389, 132 P. 449, 450, wherein it is said:

"There is no breach of the covenant for quiet and peaceable possession of land until there has been an eviction by the true owner, or an assertion by him of his paramount right in such a manner that the holder through the covenantor is compelled to yield possession or buy the outstanding superior title [citing cases]. As no cause of action accrues until a breach occurs, it follows that the statute of limitations upon an action for breach of this covenant begins to run only from the time of such breach."

In this case the plaintiff's actual eviction occurred on February 28, 1921. It commenced this action on February 28, 1923. The provisions of section 1927 of the Civil Code were, as we have already seen, read into the lease of plaintiff's assignor and hence constituted the covenant of quiet possession upon which the lessee and his assigns were entitled to rely until disturbed by an actual eviction. The plaintiff's action was thus commenced in time under any of the pleas of the statute of limitations urged by the respondent herein.

[3] The next affirmative defense relied upon by the respondent herein is that one L. B. McMurtry was at all times prior to the plaintiff's eviction the owner of the premises in question, and that the plaintiff's assignor well knew this fact and also the fact that, while the defendant Pentz, at the date of the execution of said lease, held a deed to said premises from said McMurtry, he was in fact and to the knowledge of all parties merely the agent and trustee of McMurtry, and hence that the plaintiff's cause of action, if any, was against McMurtry and not against the defendant herein. The facts as shown by the record herein are that some time prior to the date of the execution of said lease McMurtry had deeded the premises covered thereby to the defendant Pentz, and had thereafter taken from said Pentz a sublease of said premises; that, in the making of the lease in question to Noonan, the assignor of the plaintiff herein, Pentz purported to act as the owner of said premises; that he executed said lease as such and as a principal party thereto and not as an agent or trustee of any other person; that, in letters which passed between himself and his immediate lessee, authorizing the assignment thereof by the latter to the plaintiff herein, Pentz described himself as "the owner of Ridgewood ranch." The lease itself contains nothing to indicate that Pentz was executing the same, other than as the owner of the premises described therein, nor did the defendant offer any proof upon the trial that either the immediate lessee or its assignee, the plaintiff herein, had any knowledge that Pentz in the execution of the same was acting otherwise than as the owner of the leased premises. In Cal. Juris. vol. 1, p. 610, it is said that—

"The rule has been long and continuously settled that an agent who signs in his own name instead of that of the principal, when he intends to bind the latter, becomes himself liable, the contract being considered his own."

In the case of Hall v. Jameson, 151 Cal. 606, 91 P. 518, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1190, 121 Am. St. Rep. 137, the rule is thus stated:

"Where an agent makes a contract really on behalf of his principal, but which purports to be his promise and to bind himself alone, and he has not in fact any authority to make that particular contract for his principal, the general rule is that the agent will be personally bound by the contract, notwithstanding his lack of personal interest in the consideration. He will be conclusively presumed to have intended to bind himself."

The following cases uphold the same doctrine: Gambrill v. Dworack, 58 Cal. App. 524, 208 P. 995; Kerry v. Pacific Marine Co., 121 Cal. 566, 54 P. 89, 66 Am. St. Rep. 65; Estrella Vineyard Co. v. Butler, 125 Cal. 232, 57 P. 980; 10 Cal. Jur., p. 617, and cases cited. In the case of Standard Livestock Co. v. Bank of California, 67 Cal. App. 381, 227 P. 962, it was decided that, where a contract must be in writing under the statute of frauds and has been executed by a party thereto as a principal, no one else can be held thereon as a principal except by proof that such other person has authorized in writing such contract. There is no such showing in this case. The respondent's contention in this behalf is without merit, and the plaintiff's demurrer to this affirmative defense should have been sustained.

[4] The next affirmative defense which the defendant pleaded in the trial court and urges upon this appeal is the defense of res adjudicata. The defendant in his answer and in furtherance of this plea set forth the facts showing the institution of the foreclosure action by the First Federal Trust Company, in which action the plaintiff and the defendant in the instant action were made defendants, and that there were also certain other codefendants, including L. B. McMurtry, the original mortgagor, and the Bank of California, etc., a later incumbrancer; that the plaintiff herein appeared in said action and set forth the existence and terms of its lease therein, and asked to have the same established and its rights against certain subsequent lienholders protected therein. The trial court in that action took cognizance of the plaintiff's said lease and adjudged it to have precedence over said subsequent lien claimant. It is the contention of the respondent herein that the plaintiff herein ought there and then to have asserted its claims for reimbursement for the injuries it had suffered or might thereafter suffer as a result of the defendant's breach of his covenant of quiet possession, and that, not having done so in that action, in which both the plaintiff and the defendant herein were parties, it is estopped by the judgment therein to assert its claims for such damages in the instant case. The difficulty with the respondent's contention in the foregoing regard is that prior to and up to the time of the entry of judgment in that action and of the plaintiff's eviction from said premises as a consequence thereof, it had sustained no damages, for the reason that there had occurred no breach of the covenant of quiet possession upon which it was entitled to rely; that, by virtue of such covenant and the obligation of its lessor thereunder it had a right to assume that its codefendant, said lessor, would protect his covenant by paying off or otherwise compounding with the holder of the superior right so as to avoid the breach of the said obligation through the occurrence of an actual dispossession of his tenant. Such tenant, though possibly in peril of having his possession of the leased premises disturbed by the eventualities of said foreclosure suit, would have been premature in assuming that these would certainly occur and in asserting damages which had not yet arisen. It could not in fact do so, for the simple reason that no estimate of the nature or extent of such damages could be made until an actual and total eviction had taken place. All that the plaintiff in this action was required to do in said foreclosure suit was, as a party thereto, to assert the existence of its lease and to protect the same against subsequent lienholders. As to the protection of itself against the assertion of a superior right on the part of the plaintiff in that action, it was entitled to rely upon the protection which its covenant afforded and upon the obligation of its codefendant Pentz to see to it that such protection was accorded. This being so, there was nothing in the nature of res adjudicata in that action which could in anywise affect or foreclose the assertion of the plaintiff's rights and remedies in the present action arising out of its eviction occurring after said former action.

[5] There is one other contention of the respondent which was urged upon his motion for a directed verdict and to which the trial court gave much weight in granting such motion. The respondent insists that, since the undisputed facts showed the plaintiff herein to have been not the original lessee of the premises in question, but merely an assignee of the original lessee, it was not entitled to maintain this action or to assert any right therein arising out of a breach of a covenant of quiet possession by reason of the provisions of section 823 of the Civil Code. Said section read as follows:

"Whatever remedies the lessee of any real property may have against his immediate lessor, for the breach of any agreement in the lease, he may have against the assigns of the lessor, and the assigns of the lessee may have against the lessor and his assigns, except upon covenants against encumbrances or relating to the title or possession of the premises."

The respondent argues that, since a covenant in a lease with respect to quiet possession on the part of a lessee is one which relates to the "title or possession of the premises," it comes within the exceptions embraced in said section, and hence does not exist in favor of the assignee of a lessee. This assertion, however, involves a total misconception of the meaning and intent of said section of the Civil Code. The section by its terms relates to "remedies" as distinguished from "rights," and when so considered its meaning is clear. The remedy which a lessee of premises has against the lessor, or his assigns, for an accrued or already created breach of any agreement in the lease passes to the lessee's assigns, and may be asserted by the latter against the lessor or his assigns. The two exceptions expressed in the section are that accrued remedies for already ripened breaches of covenants against incumbrances or relating to the title or possession of the premises do not so pass but remain with the original lessee. But neither of these exceptions nor in fact the section as a whole, has any reference to breaches of the lease which have not occurred, nor to remedies therefor which have not arisen prior to the assignment of the lease. The assignment of a lease when legally accomplished transfers to the assignee thereof the right to the enforcement of every unbroken covenant which the lease contains, but does not transfer those ripened choses in action which come within the exceptions in the section of the Code above referred to. The respondent's contention in the foregoing regard is therefore without merit.

[6-8] The respondent makes the further contention that since, from the pleadings and evidence in the case, it appeared that, while the plaintiff, up to the time of the institution of the foreclosure action, had paid the installments of rent which had theretofore fallen due, it did not pay the installment thereof which, according to the terms of said lease, became due shortly after the institution of said action; and that, being thus in default in its own agreement to pay rent at the time of his eviction, it was not entitled to enforce in this action the defendant's obligation to insure him the peaceable possession of the leased premises during the term of said lease. The plaintiff made at the trial, and repeats here, several answers to this contention, but it seems to us that a sufficient answer thereto is to be found in the fact that according to the terms of said lease, the failure of the lessee to pay rent does not ipso facto work a forfeiture of the leasehold, but only gives to the lessor the right "at his option to terminate and end said lease." This amounts to no more than the right on the part of the landlord to terminate the lease in the manner provided by law; that is to say, in accordance with the provisions of section 1161 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is so expressly provided in section 791 of the Civil Code. The agreement to pay rent and the covenant of peaceable possession are not thus interdependent covenants unless expressly made so by the terms of the lease. Besides, the plaintiff's failure, if any, to keep its agreement as to payment of rent after suit commenced for the assertion of a superior title was not made the basis of its eviction at the termination of such suit, nor was it made one of the grounds upon which the motion for a directed verdict herein was predicated. The point is not, therefore, available to the respondent upon this appeal. The case stood, therefore, in this wise at the time when the defendant made and the trial court granted the motion for a directed verdict. The grounds of said motion, in so far as they were based upon the foregoing special defenses of the defendant, were not well taken; and the order of said court in granting said motion, in so far as it did so upon such grounds, was erroneous. This being so, upon the case as it stood at the time of the making and granting of the defendant's motion for a directed verdict in his favor, the plaintiff was, at the very least, entitled to a verdict and judgment for nominal damages, and, this being so, the trial court was clearly in error in directing the jury to find a verdict otherwise than in the plaintiff's favor, at least to that extent. It is, however, argued by the respondent that since, upon the state of the record, the utmost to which the plaintiff was entitled was a verdict for nominal damages, the appellate tribunal will not reverse a case upon appeal when the effect of such reversal could only amount to the eventual recovery by a plaintiff of nominal damages. There is authority to sustain this view. 2 Cal. Juris. pp. 1009, 1010, § 600, and cases cited. We are not, however, satisfied that in any view of the law governing the measure of damages recoverable in an action founded upon a breach of the covenant for peaceable possession, which is either expressed in, or which by virtue of section 1927 of the Civil Code becomes a part of every lease, the plaintiff in the state of the record in this case would or should have been limited in its recovery to merely nominal damage. There were two states of facts fairly established by the undisputed evidence in this case which would militate against such a conclusion. The first of these relates to the showing which the record contains in support of the plaintiff's averment in its second amended complaint to the effect that the plaintiff "resisted said eviction and removal from said property by all the legal means within its power."

The record discloses that the plaintiff was made a party to the action instituted by the First Federal Trust Company for the foreclosure of its superior liens; that being served with process it appeared in said action by counsel and filed an answer therein; that thereafter its codefendant, W. R. Pentz (the defendant herein) and the Bank of California National Association joined in the filing and service of an answer and cross-complaint in said action, wherein they made the plaintiff herein a cross-defendant and in which these cross-complainants sought to have it determined that the said Bank of California National Association was the owner and holder of a lien upon said premises which was superior to whatever right, title, and interest or estate the plaintiff herein had in said premises, and that said premises be sold in satisfaction of said superior lien, and that the plaintiff herein be foreclosed from all right or claim in or to said premises. The record discloses that the plaintiff herein, having been served with process as a cross-defendant in said cross-action, also appeared and answered therein by counsel, and in its said answer set forth its said lease and alleged its superior right thereunder to the asserted claims of said cross-complainants; that a trial was had upon the issues thus framed, during which much evidence was presented and as a result of which the plaintiff succeeded in having it decreed that its rights and claims as the holder of said lease were superior to the asserted rights and claims of said cross-complainants. It thus sufficiently appears that the plaintiff herein was put to an outlay of expense for counsel fees and costs in defending its possession, not only against the superior right of the plaintiff in said foreclosure proceeding, but also against the asserted superior right and claims of the cross-complainants therein, the defendant Pentz herein being one of these. It is true that the plaintiff herein had not, at the time of the making of the motion for a directed verdict herein, proffered any very definite proofs as to the exact or proximate amount of its said outlays, but it had prayed for a lump sum in damages, and, in the absence of any assault upon the sufficiency of its proofs in the foregoing regard, we think the jury might properly have made an allowance for such damages under the plaintiff's general prayer. The respondent herein had steadfastly contended that the plaintiff's utmost limit of recovery in this action is defined by the provisions of section 3304 of the Civil Code. But, even if we should so hold, we find among the items of recoverable detriment under the terms of said section that of "three any expenses properly incurred by the covenantor in defending his possession"; and, if we should not so hold, but should conclude to relegate the plaintiff to other remedies in the way of damages than those provided for in section 3304 of the Civil Code, the plaintiff would be clearly entitled to recoup in damages for its outlays in defending its possession against the assertion of a superior title. 1 Tiffany, Landlord and Tenant, p. 548. It would seem to follow irresistibly that the trial court committed reversible error in its refusal to commit to the jury the right to find some measure of substantial damages as a recompense for the plaintiff's outlays in defending its possession, both against the assertion of the superior claims of the plaintiff in the foreclosure proceeding and the asserted superior claims of the cross-complainants therein, of which the defendant herein was himself a direct actor.

[9] There is yet another aspect of this case from which, even in respondent's view of the law of the case, the plaintiff herein would have been entitled to an award of substantial damages upon the state of the record as it stood when the motion for a directed verdict was granted. The undisputed evidence in this case disclosed that the defendant Pentz was guilty of a degree of bad faith in his entire dealing and attitude toward the plaintiff, who came to be his lessee. The defendant Pentz was the brother-in-law of L. B. McMurtry, the original owner of the premises in question, and was at all times entirely familiar with the state of the title to said premises and of the extent to which said McMurtry had involved his title and ownership thereof prior to his execution of the grant deed to his brother-in-law, Pentz, which antedated the making of the plaintiff's lease. Pentz was also during all of said times the assistant cashier of the Bank of California corporation, and as such was fully familiar with the transactions of said McMurtry with the latter institution, if he did not actively negotiate the same. He was thus fully conversant with all of the perils in which the title to the premises was enmeshed at the time of the making and execution of the lease in question to the assignor of the plaintiff and also of the assignment thereof, with his express consent, to the plaintiff. He executed such lease, and consented to such assignment in his assumed capacity as the owner of the leased premises, and was therefore, as we have held, subject to all of the obligations and liabilities incident to such ownership. When the foreclosure action was instituted and the plaintiff was made a party thereto, and when the plaintiff's acquired lease and its peaceable possession thereunder were put in peril, the plaintiff herein directed the attention of its lessor, Pentz, to such peril and demanded that its lessor take steps to protect it in its peaceable possession of the premises covered by its said lease; but the undisputed evidence shows, not only that the defendant Pentz took no action looking toward the plaintiff's protection, but that, on the contrary, he actively joined with his employer and codefendant, the Bank of California, in the assertion, by way of cross-action, to which he made the plaintiff herein a party, of a superior claim on the part of the said corporation to which he and it sought to subordinate the rights of the plaintiff herein, derived from the lease which he himself had made. The record further discloses that, after the said foreclosure action had resulted in a decree and sale of said premises, the said defendant Pentz, notwithstanding his assurances to the plaintiff herein that its peaceable possession of the premises would not be disturbed, took no action of any kind to prevent or delay its eviction or to mitigate in any way the rigors and losses thereof. The plaintiff, in its second amended complaint herein, sets forth in detail the foregoing acts, neglects, refusals, and hostilities on the part of the defendant Pentz, and thus sufficiently charges the said defendant with a want of good faith in respect to his obligations owed to his lessee. There was no denial or dispute as to the foregoing facts, and, this being so, we are of the opinion that the plaintiff herein was entitled to have had submitted to the jury the issue as to the defendant's bad faith in connection with the latter's breach of his covenant of peaceable possession.

In the case of Mack v. Patchin, 42 N. Y. 167, 173, 1 Am. Rep. 506, the defendant lessor was upon quite a similar state of facts held chargeable with a want of good faith in his duty and dealing with regard to his lessee, and a judgment against him for the value of the unexpired term was upheld. The foregoing case is a leading case upon the right of a lessee to substantial damages in cases where the lessor was chargeable with a want of good faith in respect to the protection of his lessee in response to his obligation to insure the latter peaceable possession for the term of his lease. We are of the opinion that in the instant case the jury should have been permitted to pass upon the weight of the evidence as to the presence or absence of good faith on the part of the defendant in the premises, and that in the event of a finding by it of absence of good faith on the defendant's part it would have been entitled to render a verdict in the plaintiff's favor for substantial damages. This being so, it was reversible error on the part of the trial court to deny it that right by the compulsion of a directed verdict in the defendant's favor. The citation of the New York case, above referred to, brings us to consideration of the whole subject of the measure of damages recoverable in this state for the breach of covenants of peaceable possession in leases of real estate, since, if this case must be reversed and retried, the question in its entirety will necessarily arise. It is the contention of the respondent herein that the measure of damages recoverable in such cases is controlled by the provisions of section 3304 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"The detriment caused by the breach of a covenant of 'seisin,' of 'right to convey,' of 'warranty,' or of 'quiet enjoyment,' in a grant of an estate in real property, is deemed to be:

"1. The price paid to the grantor; or, if the breach is partial only, such proportion of the price as the value of the property affected by the breach bore at the time of the grant to the value of the whole property;

"2. Interest thereon for the time during which the grantee derived no benefit from the property, not exceeding five years;

"3. Any expenses properly incurred by the covenantee in defending his possession."

A reading of this section discloses that it does not directly or expressly designate leases and the right of recovery of lessees within its terms; but it is argued by the respondent that, under the other provisions of our Codes and under the authorities generally, a lease of real estate is declared to constitute "a grant of an estate in real property," and hence is to be embraced within the provisions of the foregoing section of the Civil Code. While it is true that under the provisions of certain sections of the Civil Code, such as sections 1053, 1108, 1213, 1214, and 1215 thereof, the transfer of any interest in real estate is generally designated as a "grant" thereof, it does not follow therefrom that the term "grant," wherever found in our Constitution or Codes, must be interpreted to embrace every transaction in which some interest in real estate is conveyed. That this term "grant" is one of general significance, applicable to all transfers in writing of either real or personal property, is made clear by the provisions of section 1053 of the Civil Code, but whether or not a particular transaction referred to in our Constitution or statutes is to be included within the general meaning of that term depends upon the nature of the transaction and upon the context in connection with which the term is used. This was made very clear by the decision of this court in the case of San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 161 Cal. 610, 119 P. 1073, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686, wherein the foregoing sections of the Civil Code are adverted to and the authorities are collated and reviewed. In that case the question as to the interpretation to be given to the term "grant" as used with respect to tidelands, in article 5, § 3, of the state Constitution, expressly forbidding the grant of such lands, was under review; the contention being that by the use of said term the leasing of such lands was forbidden. After an exhaustive examination of the decisions, not only of our own state, but of other jurisdictions, this court reached the conclusion that leases of such lands were not inhibited and were not to be held embraced within the term "grant" as used in that provision of the Constitution. In so deciding, this court referred with approval to the case of Simonson v. Burr, 121 Cal. 582, 54 P. 87, wherein it was held that the leasing of a homestead was not to be construed as an abandonment thereof under section 1243 of the Civil Code declaring that a homestead is abandoned "by * * * a grant thereof." The court also cites the case of Des Moines Co. v. Tubbessing, 87 Iowa, 138, 54 N. W. 68, wherein the authorities collated in American and English Encyclopedia of Law are referred to as supporting the rule that, according to the weight of authority, the term "grant" in its ordinary significance does not embrace a chattel interest in realty. From the review of the authorities, the court concludes that the meaning of the word "grant" has by judicial determination been narrowed or enlarged to meet the exigencies of particular cases and the spirit of the law in which the word is employed. In the case of Jeffers v. Easton, Eldridge & Co., 113 Cal. 345, 45 P. 680, this court held that an estate for years was personal property, that under the provisions of section 1113 of the Civil Code the covenants which are implied in transfers of property are limited to conveyances by which "an estate of inheritance or fee simple is to be passed," and that by section 765 of the same Code "the common-law distinction between freehold estates and estates for years" is preserved, and that it is expressly declared therein that "estates for years are chattels real," and that an assignment of a term for years is therefore governed generally by the rules applicable to sales of personal property.

In the light of the foregoing authorities, we are of the opinion that, in determining the question as to whether the clauses in section 3304 of the Civil Code, defining the detriment caused by the breach of a covenant of quiet enjoyment in a "grant of an estate in real property" are to be so interpreted as to include leases of real property for a term of years, is a question which depends, among other things, upon the context of this and the contiguous sections of said Code wherein the same phrase is employed. Looking to the immediate wording of section 3304 of the Civil Code, we find it stated therein that the "detriment caused by the breach of a covenant of * * * 'quiet enjoyment,' in a grant" of an interest in real estate, "is deemed to be: 1. The price paid to the grantor," etc. But in the case of the ordinary lease there is no price paid to the lessor. The consideration of the lease is the rentals therein provided to be paid at specified times during the term of the lease. In so far as such rentals cover that portion of the term during which the lessee has been suffered to remain in the peaceable possession of the premises, it has never been held that these are recoverable as such in an action brought after eviction for the reason that, as to these, the lessee has received the full return therefor prior to his eviction. It is only such rentals as a lessee may have paid in advance covering a period subsequent to his eviction that he has been allowed a recovery. These are exceptional cases which cannot be held to justify a ruling that the recovery of rentals was intended to be referred to in the section as "the price paid to the grantor." Indeed, when the entire language of subdivision 1 of this section is read, it must be apparent that it can only have reference to the purchase price of premises paid upon a grant or sale, as distinguished from a lease thereof. This is made all the more apparent by a consideration of the two succeeding sections wherein the same phrase "a grant of an estate in real property," is used. Section 3305 obviously can only have reference to such "grants" as contain or imply covenants against incumbrances and a breach thereof. But leases neither contain nor imply covenants against incumbrances, and as to leases there can be no such thing as the breach of such covenants, since the tenant is in nowise interested in what prior incumbrances the landlord may have placed upon his title to the leased premises so long as his peaceable possession is not disturbed thereby. Section 3306 of the Civil Code is equally, and even more obviously, inapplicable to leases and the rights of prospective lessees, since the detriment therein provided for embraces such items as the cost of examining the title, which need not be an outlay of a mere lessee.

[10] We conclude that, judged by the context thereof and of its accompanying sections of the Civil Code, section 3304 thereof was never intended to have reference to leases of real estate or to the detriment caused by breaches of covenants for the peaceable possession of leased premises. We are further enforced in this conclusion by a reference to section 1927 of the Civil Code. This section contains the lessor's agreement to insure the lessee the quiet possession of the premises during the term of the hiring against all persons lawfully claiming the same. It is, in fact, the lessor's covenant which is read into every lease; and, since this section insures to the lessee his peaceable possession "during the term of the hiring," it would seem logically to follow that the detriment caused by a breach of the obligation of this agreement would naturally be the damage suffered by the hirer through the loss of his term, and hence the value of his term. But no such recovery would be possible to the lessee if his detriment is to be measured in the terms of section 3304 of the Civil Code, and the substantial guaranties of section 1927 of the Civil Code would thus become meaningless.

It is important to note in this connection that the provisions of section 1927 of the Civil Code, while a portion of the unadopted Field Code of New York, were derived by the compiler of that Code, not from the laws of New York, but from the Civil Code of France. See Annotated Civil Code 1872, Commissioner's Notes; Baranov v. Scudder, 177 Cal. 458, 465, 170 P. 1122. The rule of damages for the breach of covenants of peaceable possession in leases, not only in those states wherein the civil law originally prevailed (see Dehan v. Youree, 161 La. 806, 109 So. 498; Hodges v. Fries, 34 Fla. 63, 15 So. 683), but most of the other states of the country permit the award of damages for the value of the term. When we turn to the decisions of our own court upon the question of the amount of a lessee's recovery for the breach of covenants of this character, we find that these have uniformly upheld the doctrine that a lessee is entitled to recover, among other damages for his eviction, the value of his term. In the early case of Dwyer v. Carroll, 86 Cal. 298, 305, 24 P. 1015, it was held, with special reference to section 1927 of the Civil Code, that a tenant whose peaceable possession was so far interfered with by his landlord as to amount to his eviction was entitled to recover in damages the value of his lease, citing Dexter v. Manley, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 14. In the case of McDowell v. Hyman, 117 Cal. 67, 48 P. 984, it was held that for a breach of the obligation imposed upon the landlord by virtue of the provisions of section 1927 of the Civil Code the tenant was entitled to the recovery of substantial damages covering the continuance of his term. The case of Baranov v. Scudder, supra, is instructive, for, while that was an action by a sublessee to recover damages from his immediate lessor for his eviction by the original landlord of his said lessor, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of the provisions of section 1927 of the Civil Code and to be secured in his quiet possession of his leasehold during the entire term thereof. The plaintiff sued for the recovery of damages for the value of his lease during the term thereof, and recovered such damages, and the judgment therefor was both by the District Court of Appeal and by this court affirmed. In that case of Klein v. Lewis, 41 Cal. App. 463, 467, 182 P. 789, it was decided that, for a substantial eviction of a tenant by his landlord, the former, under proper pleadings and proofs would be entitled to recover the value of his unexpired lease, together with any other loss which was the proximate and natural result of his eviction. The most recent case in this state touching the recovery allowed under the terms of section 1927 of the Civil Code is that of Pedro v. Potter, 197 Cal. 751, 242 P. 926, 42 A. L. R. 1165, which was also an action by a sublessee for the recovery of damages for his eviction, but in which case it appeared that the sublease contained an express agreement that it was made subject to the conditions of the original lease, and it was accordingly held that the termination of the original lease put an end to the term of the sublease and hence that there was no room for the application of the provisions of section 1927 of the Civil Code. There are certain other decisions in this state to which we have been referred, such as McGary v. Hastings, 39 Cal. 360, 2 Am. Rep. 456, McCormick v. Marcy, 165 Cal. 386, 132 P. 449, and Lynn v. Knob Hill Co., 177 Cal. 56, 169 P. 1009, wherein the provisions of sections 3304 and 3306 of the Civil Code were referred to as furnishing the proper rules of damages; but each of these cases arose upon a breach of the covenant of quiet possession in conveyances or agreements to convey the title to land, and hence, for reasons which we shall presently see, these cases have no application to agreements for the quiet possession of lessees under the provisions of section 1927 of the Civil Code. The respondent herein makes the final contention that section 3304 of the Civil Code is controlling as to the damages recoverable for all detriment suffered through the breach of covenants of quiet enjoyment in "grants of an interest in real estate," and that the above-quoted clause embraces not only conveyances of title to real estate, but leases thereof as well. The basis of this contention is that the Civil Code of California, as adopted in 1872, was in the main a replica of the so-called Field Code, prepared for but never adopted by the state of New York, but which was supposed to embody the existing law in New York at the time of its adoption in California, and hence, under the well-known rule of construction, this state, in adopting said Code, and particularly section 3304 thereof, took said provision with the interpretation already given to it by the courts of New York. We are thus led to the very interesting inquiry as to just what was the state of the laws of New York touching the measure of damages for breaches of covenants of quiet enjoyment at the time of the adoption in 1872 of the California Civil Code. It may be stated incidentally that the original Field Code, as to most of its provisions was framed, not upon the basis of statutory law in that state, but upon the decisions of its courts prior to the formation of said Code. The leading case touching the recovery of damages for the breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment was the case of Staats v. Executors of Ten Eyck, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 111f, 2 Am. Dec. 254. That case involved the breach of a covenant of quiet enjoyment expressed in a grant of the title to real estate, and the rule as to the measure of damages therein laid down and later follow by other New York cases was substantially and, in fact, almost literally that later set forth in the Field Code and adopted in the form of section 3304 of the California Civil Code. In the case of Kinney v. Watts, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 38, it was sought to give application of the rule declared in the previous case, and certain other cases which had followed it, to leases, but, since the court held that the rule could be given no application to the implied covenant sued upon in that case, the dictum in that case is of no value. In the case of Mack v. Patchin, 42 N. Y. 167, 1 Am. Rep. 506, however, decided in the year 1870, and which directly involved the breach of a covenant of quiet enjoyment in a lease, the New York Court of Appeals decided that, upon the breach of such a covenant, where an eviction was occasioned through the fault of the lessor, the measure of damages was the value of the unexpired term, less the rent reserved. In the case of Clarkson v. Skidmore, 46 N. Y. 297, decided in 1871, it was held that a lessee for years of mortgaged premises holding under a lease containing a covenant of quiet enjoyment, upon foreclosure and sale under the mortgage, by which his eviction resulted, was entitled to receive the value of the use of the premises for the remainder of his term, less the rent reserved. These two cases, and others which might be cited, declared the law as it stood in the state of New York at the time of the adoption of the Civil Code of California, and necessarily thereof of section 3304 of said Code, and it requires no argument to show that the rule expressed in these cases is not embraced in the rule of damages contained in section 3304 of said Code.

It fairly follows that the measure of damages embodied in that section and derived from cases which applied it to covenants in conveyances of title was not intended to be given application to leases of real estate. It may be said that the rule in the state of New York with respect to the measure of damages for the breach of the covenants of quiet enjoyment in leases has ever since been that declared in these early decisions of the court of last resort in that state, and that this will appear from the recent decision in the case of Dorb v. Modern Holding Co. (Co. et.) 183 N. Y. S. 639, decided in 1920, wherein the rule is again stated that "the measure of damages to a lessee, who is ousted on foreclosure of mortgage on the premises, is the value of the use of the premises for the remainder of the term, less the rents reserved." It may be said in conclusion that this is not only the rule in New York, but that it is the rule which has been given general adoption in most of the states of the country, and is so stated to be in the leading text-books upon the subject. Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, p. 538; Rawle on Covenants (5th Ed.) § 169, p. 237. In the latter authority it is pointed out that the earlier and harsher rule relating to the enforcement of covenants for quiet enjoyment has not only been found unsatisfactory to the courts of this country, but "that it has been relaxed or modified to meet the injustice done by it to lessees in particular cases," and has been repudiated in England, from which, according to the Staats Case, supra, it was originally derived, in the two recent and well-considered cases of Williams v. Burrell, 1 Com. Bench 402, and Lock v. Furze, 19 Com. Bench (N. S.) 96, and the rule adopted allowing a recovery to evicted lessees of the value of the term.

Having thus determined that section 3304 of the Civil Code does not provide the measure of damages in cases of this character, we are brought to the final question as to where the statutory rule governing the measure of both general and special damages for the breach of agreements for the peaceable possession of real estate by the lessee thereof under the terms of section 1927 of the Civil Code is to be found. The answer is, in section 3300 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"For the breach of an obligation arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this code, is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom."

We do not deem it necessary to discuss in detail the various questions suggested in the light of the plaintiff's pleadings and proofs upon the former trial, since these may vary upon a retrial of the cause. We deem it proper to decide, however, that the trial court was in error in its order striking out practically all of the evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiff in support of its claims for special damages for losses of property and outlays incident to its eviction. In so ruling, we do not wish to be understood as holding that all of such offered evidence was admissible, but simply that the order of the court striking out in its entirety such evidence was too broad. Upon a retrial of the cause, in the light of the applicability of section 3300 of the Civil Code to the instant case, the parties concerned and the trial court should have no difficulty in arriving at the proper rulings to be given upon the proffer of evidence in support or denial of the plaintiff's claims for damages. We have considered certain other points upon this appeal but do not consider these sufficiently important to require separate discussion.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; TYLER, Justice pro tem.; LANGDON, J.

204 Cal. 643

LA FRANCE v. KASHISHIAN et al.
(L. A. 8292.)

Supreme Court of California. July 31, 1928.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨130(1)—Lease without guaranty of ownership carries implied warranty of title and consequent quiet possession in lessee.

A lease which is silent as to guaranty of ownership of leased premises by the lessor nevertheless carries an implied warranty of title in him and consequent quiet possession in lessee during term specified in lease.

2. Evidence ⇨397(1)—Implied stipulation in contract cannot be contradicted or varied by parol evidence.

An implied stipulation in a contract is of as great force as though it were fully set forth therein, and such implied stipulation may no more be contradicted or varied by parol evidence than may be that which is clearly expressed.

3. Evidence ⇨393(1)—Parol evidence having effect of contradicting implied warranty of title of lessors in leased premises held erroneously admitted (Civ. Code, § 1625; Code Civ. Proc. § 1856).

Under Civ. Code, § 1625, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, precluding the admission of oral evidence as to terms of written contract, parol evidence having the effect of varying or contradicting implied warranty of title of lessors in leased premises held erroneously admitted.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Erwin W. Owen, Judge.

Action by George La France against G. S. Kashishian and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion, 259 P. 86.

McWhinney & Clock, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Denio & Hart, of Long Beach, Andrew F. Burke, of San Francisco, and M. C. Simpson, of Long Beach, for respondents.

Garret W. McEnerney, amicus curiæ.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against him in an action in which he sought damages for breach of an alleged implied warranty of title and of quiet enjoyment, made by his lessors, the defendants herein.

Plaintiff leased from defendants a certain piece of real property, for a term of 10 years, at a stated consideration of $25 per month for the first 7 years of the term and $35 per month for the remaining 3 years thereof. Approximately 2 years and 10 months after the execution of the lease, plaintiff was evicted from the leased premises by one who had established paramount title to the property; and thereupon, on account of damages ensuing from such eviction, plaintiff commenced an action against defendants which resulted in a judgment for defendants.

On the trial of the action, it was shown that defendants' claim of title to the leased property was by virtue of a tax title only, which fact was known to each of the parties to the lease prior to its execution, and that the defense interposed by defendants to the action in effect was that, before the lease was signed by the parties thereto, a contemporaneous oral agreement was entered into between them, in substance, that, in consideration of the low rental to be paid for the use of the property as specified in the lease, plaintiff would take the risk of paramount title being established in another person. The introduction of all evidence tending to show such oral negotiations between the parties, not included within the terms of the lease, was allowed over plaintiff's objection, and it is upon such claimed error of the court that appellant bases his argument for reversal of the judgment.

As is substantially declared in section 1625 of the Civil Code and section 1856 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the general rule is that, where a contract between parties thereto has been reduced to writing, no evidence of terms of the agreement other than as contained within the contract as thus expressed may be received.

[1, 2] The lease in question contained no express warranty of title in the lessor. The law, however, seems to be well established that a lease which is silent as to guaranty of ownership of the leased premises by the lessor, nevertheless carries an implied warranty of the title in him, and consequent quiet possession in the lessee during the term specified in the lease. Section 1927, Civ. Code; McDowell v. Hyman, 117 Cal. 67, 70, 71, 48 P. 384; Agoure v. Lewis, 15 Cal. App. 71, 75, 76, 113 P. 882; Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, vol. 1, pp. 518, 540; 24 Cyc. 1057. Coupled with such principle of law, it is contended by respondent, as set forth in several authorities, that an implied covenant of warranty may be rebutted by parol evidence. See Miller v. Van Tassel, 24 Cal. 458, 465; Johnson v. Powers, 65 Cal. 179, 3 P. 625; 22 Cor. Jur. 1097, 1261. But the weight of authority, especially as bearing upon a matter such as is here presented, is to the effect that an implied stipulation in a contract is of as great force as though it were fully set forth therein, and such implied stipulation may no more be contradicted or varied by parol evidence than may be that which is clearly expressed.

In the case of Standard Box Co. v. Mutual Biscuit Co., 10 Cal. App. 746, 750, 103 P. 938, 939, among other things, the following appears as the language of the court:

"It is a well-settled principle that that which is implied by law becomes as much a part of the contract as that which is therein written, and if the contract is clear and complete when aided by that which is imported into it by legal implication, it cannot be contradicted by parol in respect of that which is implied any more than in respect of that which is written."

Also, in Peterson v. Chaix, 5 Cal. App. 525, 527, 90 P. 948, 954, it is said:

"There is another principle to be observed, namely, that whatever the law implies from a contract in writing is as much a part of the contract as that which is therein expressed; and to the extent that the contract, with that which the law implies, is clear, definite and complete, it cannot be added to, varied or contradicted by extrinsic evidence. * * *"

To the same effect is California D. & M. Co. v. Crowder, 58 Cal. App. 529, 531, 533, 209 P. 68.

Supported by a long list of authorities, the rule is stated in 17 Cyc. p. 570, as follows:

"The legal effect of a written instrument, even though not apparent from the terms of the instrument itself, but left to be implied by law, can no more be contradicted, explained, or controlled by parol or extrinsic evidence than if such effect had been expressed. * * *"

[3] We are therefore of the opinion that, so far as the questioned evidence had the effect of varying or contradicting the implied warranty of title of defendants in the leased premises, the contention of appellant should be sustained.

As to the other questions involved in this appeal, these have all been considered and determined by this court in the case of Standard Livestock Co. v. Pentz, 269 P. 645, this day decided.

For the foregoing reasons, and upon the authority of the above-named decision, the judgment herein is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

205 Cal. 70

PLATT v. PLATT et al. (L. A. 10573.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 24, 1928.

Appeal and error $\S$ 766—Motion for affirmance because appellant's briefs failed to set out record to justify reversal was denied, where record was supplied before motion (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953c).

Motion for affirmance of judgment appealed from, based on ground that appellant failed to print, in her opening brief or any supplement thereto, in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953c, any part of record sufficient to justify reversal of the judgment, should be denied, where subsequent to filing notice of motion to affirm and prior to making such motion appellant, with court's permission, filed a supplement to her opening brief setting out at length the complaint, amended answer, and other parts of the record.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Daniel Beecher, Judge.

Action by M. Lucile Platt against Harry O. Platt and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. On defendants' motion to affirm. Motion denied.

H. C. Hopkins, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Miller & Ellis, Herbert N. Ellis, and L. E. Brogden, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Harry O. Platt.

David D. Stuart and Howard F. Shepherd, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Mary V. Platt.

PER CURIAM. The respondents move to affirm the judgment appealed from upon the ground that the appellant has failed to print in her opening brief or any supplement thereto, in accordance with the requirements of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, any part of the record herein sufficient to justify a reversal of said judgment. At the time of the filing of respondents' notice of motion to affirm, the state of the record was such as would have warranted an affirmance of the judgment, for the appellant's opening brief falls far short of satisfying the requirements of section 953c, supra. However, subsequent to the filing of the notice of motion to affirm, but prior to the making of such motion, the appellant, with permission of court, filed herein a supplement to her opening brief in which she sets out at length the complaint, the amended answer thereto, the trial court's findings of fact and conclusions of law, the judgment, the notice of appeal, the notice to prepare transcript, several exhibits introduced in evidence, appellant's assignments of error, and certain of the testimony adduced upon the trial. In view of this showing, we think the motion to affirm should be denied. This conclusion is not at variance with the holding in Dahlberg v. Dahlberg, 260 P. 290, for the appellant in that case, upon the hearing of the motion to affirm, merely offered to print in a supplemental brief such portions of the record as this court might suggest. The approval of the suggested procedure would have placed the burden of presenting the appellant's appeal upon the court. Such is not the case here.

The motion to affirm is denied.

SMELLIE et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
et al. (Sac. 4057.)★

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 13, 1928.

Rehearing Granted Sept. 11, 1928.

1. Automobiles $\S$ 224(1)—Guest in automobile must act as reasonably prudent man.

Though negligence of driver of automobile is not imputed to guest, guest must act as reasonably prudent man would act in similar circumstances.

2. Automobiles $\S$ 224(4)—Railroads $\S$ 327 (12)—Guest in automobile, stating to driver, "It's all clear; let's go," held contributorily negligent as to injury received in crossing collision.

In action against railroad and driver of automobile for death of guest in car, resulting from collision at crossing, deceased, who made statement to driver after freight train had passed, "It's all clear; let's go," held contributorily negligent as matter of law.

3. Evidence $\S$ 59k—Testimony of driver of automobile, called as adverse party in action for death at crossing, that deceased guest made statement, "It's all clear; let's go," held admissible and binding on plaintiff, where not rebutted (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 2055).

In action against railroad and driver of automobile for death of driver's guest at crossing, testimony of driver under examination as adverse party under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 2055, that guest made statement, "It's all clear; let's go," held admissible and binding on plaintiff, where not rebutted.

4. Automobiles $\S$ 224(5)—Guest in automobile is not relieved from contributory negligence where he encourages driver to take obviously hazardous risks.

While guest in automobile is not chargeable with contributory negligence of driver, guest is not immune where he acquiesces in or encourages and advises taking risks which are obviously hazardous to his own personal security and safety.

5. Negligence $\S$ 136(12)—Disputable presumption that person exercises ordinary care makes no issue of fact in face of direct evidence of contributory negligence (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, subd. 4).

Disputable presumption under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, subd. 4, that person takes ordinary care for his own concerns, does not make issue of fact for jury, where presumption is overcome by direct evidence of contributory negligence.

6. Trial $\Rightarrow$ 139(1)—Court should direct verdict in defendant's favor, where verdict for plaintiffs would have to be set aside.

Where trial court is of opinion that verdict for plaintiffs would have to be set aside, court is under duty to direct verdict in defendant's favor.

7. Railroads $\Rightarrow$ 344(10)—Railroad's allegation that injuries were caused solely by negligence of deceased and another was insufficient plea of contributory negligence, in action for death.

In action against driver and railroad for death of guest in automobile, allegation in railroad's answer that injuries were caused solely because of negligence of driver and deceased was insufficient plea of contributory negligence.

8. Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 197(5)—Objection raised for first time on appeal, that no issue of contributory negligence was raised by pleadings, held unavailing.

Where, in action for death, evidence on issue of contributory negligence was introduced without objection that it was inadmissible under pleadings, and no such objection was raised in argument upon motions for directed verdict and nonsuits, objection raised for first time on appeal was unavailing.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action by Lillie D. Smellie and others against the Southern Pacific Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. M. Conley, Philip Conley and Matthew Conley, all of Fresno, for appellants.

L. L. Cory, of Fresno, Cooley, Crowley & Gallagher and Cooley & Gallagher, all of San Francisco, Gallaher & Jertberg, of Fresno, and H. I. Maxim, of Madera, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal is taken from a judgment for defendants upon a directed verdict returned by the jury in an action brought by the widow and four minor sons of Robert S. Smellie, deceased, to recover damages for the death of said decedent, who was killed when the automobile truck in which he was riding as the guest of defendant L. Ireland, the driver and owner thereof, was struck by a train of defendant Southern Pacific Company. The court held at the conclusion of plaintiffs' case that the evidence established as a matter of law contributory negligence on the part of said decedent, and directed a verdict to be returned in favor of defendants. The correctness of this ruling is here challenged.

The accident occurred at about 5 o'clock p. m. on June 25, 1926, in the city of Madera. The truck in which decedent was riding, and which was being driven by defendant Ireland, was of the Reo manufacture, and was used by Ireland in a general trucking business conducted by him. Ireland was called by plaintiffs as their witness under the provisions of section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure. He testified that he turned off the state highway, on which he had been traveling in a northerly direction, into Ninth street. The situs of the accident seems to have been in an outlying district of the city of Madera. He proceeded easterly on Ninth street to a point between 20 and 25 feet from the westerly rail of a side track of defendant Southern Pacific Company which intersects Ninth street, and there brought his car to a stop to permit a freight train to pass. No signal of any kind was maintained at the intersection. The freight train was moving south at a speed of 5 or 6 miles an hour, and 6 or 8 cars remained to pass the intersection when Ireland brought his truck to a stop. East of the sidetrack and parallel thereto was the main line track of the Southern Pacific Company. The distance between the center line of the side track and the center line of the main track was 13 feet. Both Ireland and decedent had resided in Madera for many years, and Ireland testified as to his familiarity with the crossing. Doubtless the decedent was also generally familiar with existing conditions. The moment the caboose, which was the rear car of the freight train, cleared the crossing, Ireland started his truck and crossed the side track, and, in an attempt to cross the main track, the auto-truck was struck by the Fresno Flyer, north bound, which was traveling on the main track at a rate of speed estimated to be about 55 miles an hour. The accident happened so quickly that not more than an interval of a second intervened between the time Ireland saw the train and the time his truck was hit by it. He looked before starting, but the outgoing freight train blocked a view of the main track, and consequently his view to the south was obstructed, and he did not see the approaching passenger train. He listened, but did not hear the passenger train because of the noise made by the passing freight train. The distance which the passenger train traveled before it could be brought to a stop furnishes some evidence as to the speed at which it was moving. Upon cross-examination by counsel for the codefendant Southern Pacific Company, Ireland testified that both he and Smellie looked before Ireland started the truck, and Smellie, who was seated by his side, said, "It's all clear; let's go." The testimony of Ireland was not contradicted by that of any other witness. Respondents did not offer any evidence in their own behalf, but, upon the conclusion of plaintiffs' case, made motions for nonsuits and directed verdicts, and the court granted the motions for directed verdicts, upon which the judgment appealed from was entered.

[1, 2] We are of the view that the evidence is susceptible of no reasonable interpretation under the rule of this state, but that as a matter of law decedent was contributorily negligent in advising Ireland to go forward when he made the remark, "It's all clear; let's go;" and hence we must sustain the action of the court below in taking the case from the jury and directing a verdict for defendants. Respondents do not contend that the negligence of Ireland was imputable to decedent, his guest. Decedent, however was himself bound to act as a reasonably prudent man would act in similar circumstances. This is not a case where the guest, reposing complete confidence in the driver, fails himself to note the situation of possible danger, nor is it a case where a guest, observing an imminent and suddenly approaching peril, remains silent in the realization that the highest degree of prudence may consist in inaction, rather than meddling interference. The guest, being as fully aware of the circumstances creating the peril as was the driver, assumed to advise the driver that he could proceed in safety, and thereby consented to accept the risk to be encountered. It must be held that he has brought the misfortune upon himself, and that he can recover neither from the driver nor the third party whose negligence concurred in causing the collision. Ireland and the decedent were acquaintances, and the latter had been riding with the former for several hours prior to the accident. They had discussed the hauling of some freight which the decedent had in contemplation. At the moment of the accident, they were engaged in casual conversation as they awaited the passing of the freight train. We are unable to give any other construction to the request or advisory remark made by the decedent, "It's all clear; let's go," than that, whatever risk there might be in attempting to cross the railroad tracks, decedent was willing to assume and share it with Ireland. It amounted to the assumption of responsibility for all consequences that might flow from the attempt to cross the railroad tracks. Appellants suggest that said statement made by the decedent should be limited to the crossing of the first track or switch, and not to the main track. There can be no doubt that decedent was aware of the existence of the two parallel tracks, and that said remark applied to the situation as it was presented by the physical fact. Besides, it would have been indulging in folly for decedent to have advised Ireland as to the obvious condition of the track over which the train had just passed.

[3] It is strongly insisted by appellants that the statement or remark attributed to decedent should not have been considered for any purpose. We cannot agree with this contention. Ireland was called to the stand to show the circumstances of the accident. We do not understand it to be the rule that that portion of a transaction which is favorable to a party calling a witness may be inquired into and his adversary denied the right to elicit other parts of the identical transaction which may put a different aspect upon the case. Certainly section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, was not intended to work any such result. We think the remark formed a material part of the transaction, if it is not indeed in the nature of res gestæ. Ireland was asked by plaintiffs if decedent was not his guest, and he replied that he was. This alone entitled the defendants to bring out the fact as to whether decedent by his participation in the movement of the truck had not taken himself out of the class into which Ireland, by his conclusion, had placed him.

The effect of testimony elicited under the provisions of section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, was clearly stated in Figari v. Olcese, 184 Cal. 775, 195 P. 425, 15 A. L. R. 192, as follows:

"There is no merit in appellant's objection that no testimony was taken in behalf of defendants, because of the fact that the defendants were called only as plaintiff's witnesses. Section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that a party calling and examining as a witness an adverse party 'shall not be bound by his testimony' and that the testimony of such adverse witness 'may be rebutted by the party calling him.' This provision does not mean that such testimony may not be given its proper weight, but merely, as it declares, that the party calling such witness shall not be concluded from rebutting his testimony, or from impeaching the witness. Dravo v. Fabel, 132 U. S. 487, 33 L. Ed. 421, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 170, see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes. In other words, such testimony is to be treated as though given on cross-examination."

See, also, Goehring v. Rogers, 67 Cal. App. 253, 227 P. 687; Gates v. Pendleton, 71 Cal. App. 752, 236 P. 365.

No attempt was made to impeach Ireland or to rebut his testimony. But, if it be conceded that, strictly speaking, the testimony objected to should not have been considered by the court as a part of the plaintiffs' case, it was admissible as a part of the defendants' case, and its effect, irrespective of order, was fatal to plaintiffs. We are of the opinion, however, that it was properly before the court and jury for consideration.

[4] The law as declared in Smith v. Maine Central R. R. Co., 87 Me. 339, 32 A. 967, is strikingly applicable to the facts of the instant case. The rule is well settled that a guest is not responsible or chargeable with the contributory negligent acts of the driver of an automobile. This rule, however, does not offer him immunity from culpability in cases where he acquiesces in or encourages and advises the encountering of risks which are obviously hazardous to his personal security and safety, such as no reasonably prudent person should assume.

[5, 6] Appellants contend that the disputable presumption "that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns" (section 1963, subd. 4, Code Civ. Proc.), created a conflict on an issue of fact as between said presumption and the direct testimony given by witness Ireland to the effect that the directions or advice were given to him to move the truck forward, and that said issue should have been submitted to the jury. As against positive testimony, this was but a bare presumption, not supported or fortified by any independent fact in the case. "Disputable * * * presumptions, while evidence, are evidence the weakest and least satisfactory. They are allowed to stand, not against the facts they represent, but in lieu of proof of them. The fact being proven contrary to the presumption, no conflict arises; the presumption is simply overcome and dispelled." Savings & L. Soc. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 39 P. 922. The trial court having heard the witness Ireland testify and having observed his manner was unquestionably of the opinion that, should the jury return a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, it would be its bounden duty to set the verdict aside. This being so, under a long line of decisions of this state, the trial court was acting in the purview of its duty when it directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendants. We cannot say, in the circumstances of the case, that the court's direction was not fully sustained by the case as presented.

[7, 8] Further, it is argued that the motions for directed verdicts on the ground of contributory negligence of the deceased were improperly granted because contributory negligence was not made an issue by the pleadings. It must be conceded that the allegation, that the injuries were caused solely and alone because of the negligence and want of care of the driver of the truck and the decedent was an insufficient plea of contributory negligence. Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel G. Min. Co., 163 Cal. 500, 143 P. 714; Hughes v. Warman Steel Casting Co., 174 Cal. 556, 163 P. 885; Off v. Crump, 40 Cal. App. 173, 180 P. 360. However, evidence relevant to the issue of contributory negligence was introduced without objection on the part of plaintiffs that it was inadmissible under the pleadings because contributory negligence was not properly pleaded, and upon argument of the motions for directed verdicts and nonsuits no question was raised on behalf of plaintiffs as to the defective plea of the issue, but, on the contrary, it was assumed that it was involved in the case. Where the defense of contributory negligence is considered as properly pleaded throughout the trial, an objection for the first time on appeal that no such issue was made by the pleadings will not be of any avail to the objecting party. Western States, etc., Co. v. Bayside L. Co., 182 Cal. 140, 187 P. 735; Schuh v. Herron Co., 177 Cal. 13, 169 P. 682; Coffman v. Singh, 49 Cal. App. 342, 193 P. 259. Ireland at the conclusion of the evidence was granted leave to set up the defense of contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. Defendant Southern Pacific Company attempted to plead by its answer contributory negligence on the part of both Ireland and the deceased. Its answer alleged that the accident was caused "solely and alone" by the contributory negligence of said Ireland and deceased. No objection was taken by demurrer or motion as to the insufficiency of said allegation, and no specific objection was made by plaintiff as to the admission of the evidence on the ground that contributory negligence had not been sufficiently pleaded, but it was resisted by plaintiffs on other grounds. No doubt the court would have permitted an amendment which would have cured the defective pleading had the plaintiffs made the point.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.

205 Cal. 46

WAYT et al. v. PATEE et al. (L. A. 9394.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 22, 1928.

1. Deeds ⇨149—Agreement by lot owners not to permit occupancy of their lots by persons other than Caucasians held valid and not restraint of alienation (Civ. Code, § 711).

Written agreement between lot owners, binding parties thereto for a period of 25 years not to permit their respective lots to be occupied by any persons other than of the Caucasian race and to incorporate such restriction in all deeds, was a valid covenant, binding on parties thereto, since it did not restrain alienation in violation of Civ. Code, § 711; occupancy by, and not conveyance of, title to persons other than of Caucasian race being prohibited thereby.

2. Records ⇨19—Recording written agreement restricting occupancy of property to certain classes of persons gave purchasers constructive notice thereof.

Recording of agreement restricting occupancy of respective lots of parties to certain class of persons gave purchasers constructive notice thereof.

3. Injunction ⇨62(1)—Violation of personal covenant restricting use of land by assignee taking with notice will be enjoined.

Court of equity will grant injunctive relief against the violation of covenants restricting the free use of land, not only as against parties to such covenants, but as against an assignee taking with notice thereof, even if the covenant is merely personal and does not run with the land.

4. Records ⇨6—Written agreement against occupancy of lots by persons other than Caucasians held "conveyance" within recording statute, as respects constructive notice (Civ. Code, §§ 1213, 1215).

Written agreement between lot owners, binding parties not to permit their respective lots to be occupied by persons other than those of the Caucasian race, held to constitute a "conveyance" within Civ. Code, § 1213, providing that every recorded conveyance of realty is constructive notice to subsequent purchasers of its contents, since section 1215 defines conveyance as every instrument by which an estate in realty is created, alienated, mortgaged, or incumbered, or by which the title to any realty may be affected, except wills.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Conveyance.]

5. Trial 404(2)—Finding that agreement was mere personal covenant not binding on assigns held mere conclusion of law.

Finding that written agreement restricting occupancy of respective lots of signers to persons of Caucasian race was a mere personal covenant, not binding on assigns of signers thereof, was a mere conclusion of law, which may be disregarded by appellate court as a finding.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John F. Pullen, Judge.

Action by W. B. Wayt and others against George Patee and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Killian & Bentson and Victor L. Bentson, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Willis O. Tyler, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. The Crestmore tract is a real estate subdivision situated in the city of Los Angeles, containing a large number of lots, the exact number of which is not shown by the record, but it is apparent that they exceed sixty in number. All the lots in said tract had been originally sold subject to restrictions against subsequent sale to or occupancy by persons other than those of the Caucasian race. These restrictions expired on the 1st day of January, 1925. They are not set forth in the record, and we have no means of knowing their precise import. Their significance, however, is not material to any of the issues in the present proceeding. After the expiration of these restrictions, and some time during the year 1925, certain owners of lots in said tract signed and acknowledged a certain instrument in writing, of which the following is a copy:

"Whereas, all real estate in Crestmore subdivision, in the city of Los Angeles, California, was originally sold subject to restrictions against sale or occupancy to or by any person other than of the Caucasian race; and

"Whereas, the said restrictions expire on the first of January, 1925, we, the undersigned owners of real estate in the Crestmore subdivision, in the city of Los Angeles, California, agree to bind ourselves for a period of 25 years to the following restriction: That we will not permit occupancy of our land or property by any persons other than of the Caucasian race, and that this restriction shall be incorporated in all deeds of transfer of this property.

"These covenants to run with the land until January first, 1950."

This instrument was filed for record in the office of the county recorder of said county of Los Angeles on June 30, 1925. Whether it was signed by all of the then owners of lots in said tract does not appear, but it was signed and acknowledged by the owners of at least sixty of said lots, including all of the plaintiffs and the defendants Fred R. Stewart and Nellie Stewart. Said defendants were the owners of lot 108 of said tract at the time of the execution by them of said instrument. Thereafter said Fred R. Stewart and Nellie Stewart negotiated for the sale of said lot to said defendants A. D. Kinchlow and Mattie Kinchlow, his wife, who are not of the Caucasian race, but are negroes. By virtue of these negotiations, the Stewarts had executed and placed in a certain bank in said city, as the escrow holder, the necessary instruments of conveyance, and had given possession of said lot to the defendants Kinchlow and wife. Thereupon the plaintiffs instituted this action to enjoin the conveyance of said lot by the Stewarts to the Kinchlows and also to enjoin the Kinchlows from occupying said lot. The complaint set forth the foregoing facts, and the answer of the defendants Stewarts and Kinchlows contained no denial of the allegations of the complaint. George Patee and Jane Doe Patee were, by the complaint, made defendants, but it does not appear that they were ever served with process or appeared in said action, and the court found that they had no connection with the negotiations or transactions between the Stewarts and the Kinchlows. Upon the pleadings and certain affidavits, which do not state any facts materially different from the above-stated facts, the court rendered judgment in favor of defendants. From this judgment the plaintiffs have appealed.

[1] The sole question presented on this appeal relates to the construction and legal effect of the instrument or agreement of the parties above set forth, whereby they sought to confine the occupancy of lots in said tract to persons of the Caucasian race. Since the decision by this court of the case of Los Angeles Investment Co. v. Gary, 181 Cal. 680, 186 P. 596, 9 A. L. R. 115, it has been the settled law of this state that there is a material difference between a condition in a deed or other instrument whereby the owner of real property binds himself not to transfer or convey said real property to a certain class of individuals and a condition whereby the owner binds himself not to permit said real property to be occupied by the same class of individuals. The first condition is held to be in restraint of alienation, and thereby void under the terms of section 711 of the Civil Code. But a condition in a deed or other instrument against the occupancy of real property by persons of a certain class, as, for instance, those not of the Caucasian race, is valid and binding. Page 683 of said decision.

[2] The agreement, therefore, in the present action, whereby the parties thereto bound themselves not to permit their respective lots in said subdivision to be occupied by any persons other than those of the Caucasian race, and to incorporate such a restriction in all deeds of transfer of their respective lots was a valid covenant, and binding upon the parties thereto. Los Angeles Investment Co. v. Gary, supra. This agreement was of record in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county at the time the defendants Kichlows were negotiating for the purchase of said lot 108. They therefore had constructive notice of its contents.

[3] It is contended, however, by the respondents, that the covenant in question is merely a personal covenant, that it does not run with the land, notwithstanding the language thereof indicating a contrary intention, and therefore a court of equity will not enjoin the violation thereof. There are authorities to the effect that a court of equity will grant injunctive relief against the violation of covenants restricting the free use of land, not only as against the parties to such covenants but as against an assignee taking with notice of such covenant, even if the covenant is merely personal and does not run with the land. In 7 Cal. Jur. p. 743, the subject is treated as follows:

"Although covenants restricting the free use of one lot or parcel of land for the benefit of another may not meet the requirements of covenants running with the land, they may nevertheless constitute personal covenants, enforceable not only against the original covenantor, but against subsequent holders with notice. The principle upon which such covenants are enforced in the last-named instance is found in the general rule of equity that a party taking with notice of an equity takes subject to that equity. Liability on the covenants results not from his being the assignee of the party who made the agreement but because he has taken the estate with notice of a valid agreement concerning it which he cannot equitably refuse to perform."

In Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (4th Ed.) §§ 688 and 689, the rule is stated as follows:

"A purchaser with notice of a prior contract to sell or to lease takes subject to such contract, and is bound in the same manner as his vendor to carry it into execution. On the same principle, if the owner of land enters into a covenant concerning the land, concerning its uses, subjecting it to covenants or personal servitudes and the like, and the land is afterwards conveyed or sold to one who has notice of the covenant, the grantee or purchaser will take the premises bound by the covenant, and will be compelled in equity either to specifically execute it or will be restrained from violating it; and it makes no difference whatever, with respect to this liability in equity, whether the covenant is or is not one which 'runs with the land.'"

The same doctrine is announced in the case of Whitney v. Union Railway, 11 Gray (77 Mass.) 359, 71 Am. Dec. 715, in the following language:

"The precise form or nature of the covenant or agreement is quite immaterial. It is not essential that it should run with the land. A personal covenant or agreement will be held valid and binding in equity on a purchaser taking the estate with notice. It is not binding on him merely because he stands as an assignee of the party who made the agreement, but because he has taken the estate with notice of a valid agreement concerning it, which he cannot equitably refuse to perform."

These authorities were before this court in the case of Hunt v. Jones, 149 Cal. 297, 301, 86 P. 686, and were expressly approved in the opinion in said case. In that case, among other things, the court said (page 300 [86 P. 688]):

"We do not discuss the point as to whether the covenant here in question was one running with the land so as to bind the assignee of the water company as grantee of plaintiff's covenantor, the Thermalito Colony Company, association, because we think that, treated, simply as a personal covenant or agreement under the allegations of the complaint, a court of equity would be warranted in enforcing it against the defendant. There can be no doubt of the proposition that personal covenants or agreements bestowing benefits and imposing restrictions upon the use of land may be enforced in equity, where a subsequent purchaser from the covenantor takes with notice of an existing equitable claim or interest in favor of another."

Hunt v. Jones, supra, has been expressly approved by this court in the two recent cases of McBride v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 152, 155, 215 P. 678, and Martin v. Holm, 197 Cal. 733, 747, 242 P. 718. In McBride v. Freeman the court said:

"In Hunt v. Jones, 149 Cal. 297, 86 P. 686, the court recognized the rule that where a proper case is presented equity will enforce a personal covenant or agreement relative to land as effectually as would a court of law had the covenant been one clearly running with the land, and the covenant in that case having been made expressly for the benefit of plaintiff's land was held enforceable in equity as against an assignee of the covenantor who took with notice thereof."

In Martin v. Holm, written by the present Chief Justice and concurred in by three of the present associate justices of this court, the rule approved in McBride v. Freeman was reiterated as follows:

"As was pointed out in McBride v. Freeman, supra, at page 155 (215 P. 678), there can be no doubt that even personal covenants or agreements bestowing benefits and imposing restrictions upon the use of land may be enforced in equity, where a subsequent purchaser from the covenantor takes with notice of an existing equitable claim or interest in favor of another."

In support of their contention, the respondents rely in the main upon Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. S. P. R. R. Co., 136 Cal. 36, 68 P. 308; Long v. Cramer Meat & Packing Co., 155 Cal. 402, 101 P. 297; Berryman v. Hotel Savoy Co., 160 Cal. 559, 117 P. 677, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 5, and Bresee v. Dunn, 178 Cal. 96, 172 P. 387. These cases were considered by the court in the opinion in McBride v. Freeman, supra, page 155 (215 P. 678), and were held not to be in conflict with the rule above announced. Respondents urge that the promise of the parties who signed the agreement in this case could only be effectually carried out by imposing conditions subsequent in grants to the lots of the defendants, the Stewarts. This same argument was made and ruled upon adversely to respondents' contention in the case of Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 183 P. 945, and in McBride v. Freeman, supra. The court in the latter case, at page 154 (215 P. 679), said:

"This precise question was answered adversely to appellants' contentions in the case of Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 183 P. 945. Appellants contend that what was there said upon this subject was dictum, for the reason that the restrictions there under consideration were cast in the form of a condition, and that what was there decided should be held inapplicable to restrictions, as in the instant case, which are cast in the form of covenants. This contention cannot be sustained. * * * The court then proceeded to consider and decide that case upon the assumption that the restrictions therein, though in form of conditions, were, in fact, covenants, and what was there decided, in that view of the case, can in no sense be regarded as dictum."

In the present action, the agreement containing the restrictions limiting the occupancy of the lots in said tract to members of the Caucasian race was executed by the defendants Stewart, and was unquestionably binding upon them. It further provided that the parties thereto would incorporate such restrictions in any deed of transfer of said lots that they might thereafter execute, and that the covenants contained therein should run with the land. As already noted, the agreement containing these restrictions was of record in the office of the county recorder of the county in which said real property was situated at the time the defendants the Kinchlows purchased said lots. They therefore had constructive notice of the contents of said agreement. Neither in their answer nor in any affidavit filed by them do they allege or claim that they purchased said lot in ignorance of the restrictions placed thereon by their grantors. Therefore it can well be assumed that in purchasing said lot they had actual as well as constructive notice that the occupancy thereof was restricted to persons of the Caucasian race. This does not invalidate the conveyances under which they acquired said lot from the Stewarts, nor does it in any manner impair their title thereto. It does, however, prevent them from occupying or residing upon said property, even though the legal title thereto is in them. Los Angeles Investment Co. v. Gary, supra.

[4] The further point made by respondents is that the respondents the Kinchlows did not have either actual or constructive notice of the restrictions contained in said agreement. In support thereof respondents rely upon section 1213 of the Civil Code, which provides that every conveyance of real property properly and legally recorded is constructive notice to subsequent purchasers of its contents. Respondents contend that the agreement signed by the plaintiffs and the defendants, the Stewarts, containing said restrictions, was not a "conveyance of real property." In this we think respondents are in error, as by section 1215 of the Civil Code the term conveyance as used in section 1213 of said Code embraces every instrument in writing by which an estate in real property is created, aliened, mortgaged, or encumbered, or by which the title to any real property may be affected, except wills. This definition of "a conveyance of real property" is sufficiently comprehensive to include the agreement which is the basis of the present controversy.

[5] In this case the court made findings in which it found all the facts thereinbefore set out to be true, and in addition thereto the court found that on September 2, 1925, which was before the commencement of this action, the complaint herein having been filed September 15, 1925, that Fred R. Stewart and Nellie Stewart "sold and transferred their said lot 108 of the Crestmore tract to the defendants A. D. Kinchlow and Mattie Kinchlow, his wife, and gave the said Kinchlows possession thereof." It further found, in finding 8 of the findings, that the agreement pleaded in the amended complaint, which is the agreement hereinbefore referred to as containing said restrictions, is a mere personal covenant, and was not binding upon the assigns by the signers thereof nor upon the defendants the Kinchlows. Upon these findings it dissolved the temporary injunction, which had been theretofore issued in said action restraining and enjoining the defendants A. D. Kinchlow and Mattie Kinchlow, his wife, from occupying said lot 108 of the Crestmore tract. It is apparent that finding 8 was not a finding of any fact in the case, but was a mere conclusion of law, and that as such it may be disregarded as a finding. Upon the actual facts found, according to the views expressed herein, judgment should have been rendered in favor of plaintiffs enjoining the defendants A. D. Kinchlow and Mattie Kinchlow, his wife, from occupying said lot numbered 108 of the said Crestmore tract.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter its judgment upon the facts as found by said court in favor of plaintiffs, enjoining defendants A. D. Kinchlow and Mattie Kinchlow, his wife, from occupying said lot 108 of the said Crestmore tract, or any part thereof.

We concur: PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

93 Cal. App. 488

Ex parte MOORE. (Cr. 1709.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 10, 1928.

1. Witnesses ⇨21—Commitment of witness for contempt in refusing to answer questions after being informed that he need not answer certain prior questions, but must answer others, which he did, held erroneous.

Commitment of witness for contempt of court in refusing to answer questions after being informed that he need not answer certain questions, which he had theretofore refused to answer, but must answer others, which he did, held erroneous; witness being justified in believing that court would rule as to whether or not he must answer before adjudging him guilty of contempt.

2. Contempt ⇨2—Gist of "contempt" is contumacious intent as well as conduct.

The gist of "contempt" of court, as by witness in refusing to answer questions, is contumacious intent, as well as conduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Contempt.]

3. Witnesses ⇨21—Refusal to answer question as to witness' whereabouts since difficulty, on ground of possible incrimination, held not contempt.

Witness held not guilty of contempt of court in refusing to answer question as to his whereabouts since difficulty forming subject-matter of case on trial, on ground that answer might tend to incriminate him.

4. Witnesses ⇨21—Refusal to answer immaterial questions as to witness' whereabouts when subpoena was served and who served it held not contempt (Code Civ. Proc. § 2065).

Questions as to witness' whereabouts when subpoena was served on him and who served it being immaterial, he could not be held in contempt for refusing to answer them, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2065.

5. Contempt ⇨63(5)—Second commitment of witness for contempt in refusing to answer questions held beyond court's jurisdiction.

Issuance of second commitment of witness for contempt of court in refusing to answer questions on ground of possible incrimination held beyond court's jurisdiction.

Application by Joseph Moore for a writ of habeas corpus to the sheriff of Los Angeles county to secure the release of petitioner from custody under a commitment for contempt of court. Writ granted, and petitioner discharged.

Paul W. Schenck and Leo V. Silverstein, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker and A. H. Van Cott, Deputy Dist. Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

O'RAIG, J. [1, 2] The following statement of facts will be taken as a basis for the decision: The trial of a case entitled People v. Albori was in progress. The petitioner herein was called as a witness and was sworn to testify. As his examination progressed, he refused to answer some of the questions upon the ground that to do so might tend to incriminate him. Upon such objection being made to answering certain of the questions, the court informed the witness that he need not answer; as to others, the court directed that an answer be given. The witness in each instance complied with the ruling thus made. Finally the examination proceeded as follows:

"Q. By the Court: Where have you been since June 27th? A. I refuse to answer. Q. Where were you when this subpoena was served on you? A. I was—I refuse to answer. Q. Who served the subpoena on you, do you know? A. I refuse to answer."

—whereupon the court said:

"Well, for your refusal to answer these last three questions you are judged guilty of contempt and sentenced to jail for five days. Prepare a commitment, please, Mr. Yorba. Mr. Bailiff, you take this witness into custody."

We think the court was in error. The gist of the contempt is the contumacious intent as well as the conduct of the party. The procedure which it had followed justified the witness in believing that, upon his refusal to answer any question on the ground stated by him, the court would rule as to whether or not he must answer, and that this opportunity would be given for compliance with the court's order before he would be adjudged guilty of contempt for refusing.

[3, 4] Again, we think the witness was well within his rights in refusing to answer the question, "Where have you been since June 27th?" on the ground that it might tend to incriminate him. It is easily conceivable that, if he was a participant in the difficulty which formed the subject-matter of the case on trial, his actions subsequently thereto might tend to incriminate him. As to the other two questions, they were immaterial, and a witness may only be held in contempt for refusal to answer questions which are pertinent to the matter in issue. Code Civ. Proc. § 2065.

[5] Another issue was argued by counsel involving the question of the right of the court to issue a second commitment. This we think was beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Barry v. Superior Court, 91 Cal. 486, 27 P. 763; In re Barry, 94 Cal. 562, 29 P. 1109.

The writ is granted, and the petitioner is discharged.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; HAZLETT, Justice pro tem.

93 Cal. App. 455

JEDLICKA et ux. v. ATWELL LAND CO. et al. (Civ. 5820.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 6, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 5, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 4, 1928.

1. Corporations ⇨429—Sellers' failure to use diligence to ascertain authority of persons actually members of corporate purchaser's board of directors to authorize contract was immaterial.

That sellers did not use diligence to ascertain authority of persons authorizing contract for purchase of land by corporation was immaterial, where they were actually members, and constituted entire membership, of board of directors, and no facts giving sellers notice of any irregularity, fraud, or agreements adverse to corporation's interests, were suggested.

2. Corporations ⇨519(3)—Evidence of majority stockholder's agreement to divide profits from corporation's purchase of land with other directors equally held not to establish interests adverse to corporation.

Testimony of directors that one of them, who owned substantially all of corporation's stock, promised to divide profits from its purchase of land with other directors equally, held not to establish adverse interests relieving corporation from liability on contract authorized by them; such evidence not tending to prove agreement that profit should not be primarily corporation's property.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇨329—Evidence held sufficient to prove damage by breach of contract to purchase land in failing to pay installment due.

Evidence that plaintiffs purchased outstanding equity in land purchased by them, expended considerable sum in improvements, and occupied it under rental agreement after day fixed for final payment, and that market value thereof at time of defendants' breach of contract to purchase it from plaintiffs by failure to pay installment due before such date had fallen much below contract price, held sufficient to prove damage by such breach.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1048(5)—Cross-examination of defendant stockholder, as to when he learned of codefendant corporation's contract to purchase land, held not prejudicial, where he denied knowing anything about land at time mentioned.

Questions asked individual defendant on cross-examination as to when he first knew of defendant corporation's contract to purchase certain land after he had testified that he did not receive certificate of stock purchased by him until after execution of such contract, held not prejudicial, in view of his replies denying that he knew anything about land at time inquired about.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—Admission of letters, referring to defendant corporation's interest in land, to show that individual defendant was stockholder when corporation contracted to purchase land, held not prejudicial.

In action for breach of corporation's contract to purchase land, admission of letters, passing between director and attorney for defendant stockholder, referring to corporation's interest in land, after such stockholder admitted that attorney spoke to him about letter from director, but denied that he read it or knew anything about land at time, held not prejudicial; not being of great importance on question whether he was stockholder when contract was made.

6. New trial ⇨100—Denial of new trial for newly discovered evidence that defendant purchased stock after execution of corporation's broken contract to purchase land, held not abuse of discretion.

Denial of individual defendant's motion for new trial, on ground of newly discovered evidence that he purchased stock pledged to him after execution of codefendant corporation's contract to purchase land for want of due diligence to discover and obtain documents referred to in affidavits and improbability of change in result of action for breach of contract held not abuse of discretion.

7. Appeal and error ⇨616(2)—Inclusion of affidavits in clerk's transcript only, without certification by judge, does not warrant review of order denying new trial.

Inclusion of affidavits supporting motion for new trial in clerk's transcript only, without making such part of record part of reporter's transcript or having it certified by judge, is not sufficient to warrant review of order denying motion.

8. Appeal and error ⇨782—Order denying new trial being nonappealable, appeal therefrom will be dismissed.

Appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial, being an attempted appeal from a nonappealable order, will be dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Leo Jedlicka and wife against the Atwell Land Company, John W. Childress, and others. From a judgment against named defendants and two other defendants, an order dismissing the action as against another defendant, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, named defendants appeal. Judgment affirmed, and appeals from such orders dismissed.

Miller & Casady, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Robert Brennan, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Pursuant to verdict of the jury, judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs against defendant Atwell Land Company in the sum of $10,000, and against the defendant John W. Childress in the sum of $9,997, and against two other defendants in the sum of $1 each. The corporation and Childress appeal from the judgment.

The alleged contract was fully set forth by copy in the complaint. On the face of the document it purported to be executed by the sellers, plaintiffs herein, and by the corporation by its president and secretary duly authorized so to do by resolution of the board of directors. The contract as executed bore the seal of the corporation. By the terms of the writing, dated August 16, 1921, the sellers agreed to sell to the buyer certain described real property, and the buyer agreed to purchase the same and pay therefor the sum of $87,500, of which total sum the buyer was to pay on September 1, 1922, $45,000 and the remainder in two equal installments payable, respectively, on September 1, 1923, and March 1, 1924, with interest as specified; "provided, however, that no interest whatsoever shall be paid until September 1st, 1922, but during the existence of this contract prior to said September 1st, 1922, the sellers shall have and enjoy the exclusive possession of said property (subject to the oil lease to Lisle B. Tannehill hereinafter referred to) and shall deliver the same to the buyer on said 1st day of September, 1922." It was agreed that, upon payment of the purchase price, the sellers should grant said property to the buyer clear of all incumbrances, except certain taxes and rights of way and reservations, and subject to said Tannehill oil lease.

[1] The first point of appellants is stated thus:

"The Atwell Land Company is not bound by a contract purported to be authorized by resolution of its board of directors, all of whom were personally interested adversely to the Atwell Land Company in voting for said resolution."

The board of directors consisted of three persons, R. M. Martin, E. S. Shenk, and C. B. Guittard; Martin was president, and Guittard secretary. A meeting of the board of directors was held on August 16, 1921, pursuant to written consent of all of the directors, although Martin was absent from the meeting. It was at this meeting that the resolution was adopted authorizing the execution of said contract.

The contention of appellants is that all of these directors were interested in the purchase of the land, adversely to the corporation, because of an agreement among the three that they should share equally all the profits to be derived from the purchase of the land; that the votes of the directors were and each was a nullity.

It appears that the plaintiffs had their dealings with the company through its board of directors, without any knowledge or notice of any disqualification of said directors or personal agreements between them. Nevertheless appellant contends that the company received no benefit from the contract sued upon, and that respondents suffered no prejudice in reliance upon any apparent authority of said officers; that respondents did not exercise reasonable diligence to ascertain the authority of the officers executing the contract, and therefore the company should not be deemed bound by the contract.

[2] Since it appears that the three persons named actually were members and constituted the entire membership of the board of directors, it becomes immaterial that the plaintiffs did not use diligence to ascertain their authority. No mistake was made in the personnel of the board with which plaintiffs dealt as representing the corporation. No suggestion is made of facts which gave notice to plaintiffs that there was anything irregular or fraudulent in the conduct of the directors, or that they had entered into any agreements which were adverse to the interests of the corporation. The evidence to which appellants refer as establishing such adverse interests is found in the testimony of Martin, Guittard, and Shenk, all to the effect that Martin had promised the other two that he would divide equally with them the profits to be derived from the purchase of this land by the corporation. The motive for obtaining such a promise from Martin is better understood when it is noted that at the time when it was given he was the owner of substantially all of the stock of the corporation. This agreement to split the profits would therefore have been necessary as between themselves if they wished to prevent Mr. Martin from absorbing practically all of the profits made by the corporation. As to the corporation itself, the ultimate division of profits as between its stockholders would be an indifferent matter, for such division could only be made out of dividends declared and paid. The evidence does not tend to prove any agreement that the profits should not primarily be property of the corporation.

[3] The 120 acres of land which defendant corporation agreed to purchase from the plaintiffs was part of a larger property (380 acres) conveyed to Leo Jedlicka in December, 1919. On the 31st day of that month, Jed-licka executed to L. B. Tannehill the oil lease mentioned in the contract with defendant corporation. At the same time, Tannehill signed and delivered to Jedlicka a letter reading as follows:

"In consideration of the fact that you and your wife sign the oil lease herewith handed to you in my favor and that you and your wife unconditionally convey your title to the 380 acres known as the Sterling ranch, Riverside county, to Edwin L. Wilhite, subject to incumbrance on same, I agree to purchase from Edwin L. Wilhite the title to the 120 acres on the east side of the road, subject to all easements and conditions now upon said 120 acres. And I further agree to pay or cause to be paid and discharged all incumbrances in the nature of trust deeds, mortgages or taxes on said one hundred and twenty acres (120), and hold same until September the 15th, 1922, during which period I will sell to you the said one hundred twenty (120) acres for the total sum of forty-five thousand ($45,000) dollars, provided, however, if you purchase said lands under this letter agreement that you will receive the title to same subject to that certain lease heretofore mentioned executed by you and your wife in my favor, you to have the use and possession for agricultural purposes until Sept. 15, 1922. Time is the essence hereof."

In accordance with the propositions contained in said letter, the plaintiffs conveyed the 380 acres to Wilhite, and delivered the oil lease to Tannehill. The plaintiffs, however, remained in actual possession of said 120 acres until some time in the year 1923. During the time of that occupancy, prior to the breach of contract by defendant company, plaintiffs purchased an outstanding equity in the property. Also, during said period of occupancy, and prior to the contract with defendants, the plaintiffs, according to their testimony, expended about $7,000 in improvements on the premises.

The plaintiffs pleaded, as a cause of special damages, that, by reason of the failure of defendants to pay the $45,000 installment which under the contract fell due on September 1, 1922, they were unable to pay the $45,000 which, under the Tannehill agreement, they were required to pay on or before the 15th of that month in order to complete their purchase of the land from Tannehill. The evidence is that the occupancy of plaintiffs thenceforth was under a rental agreement. It is obvious that, if said installment had been paid, plaintiffs would have been able to pay Tannehill. There is, on the other hand, no direct testimony that they did not have other funds with which to make such payment.

But the case for the plaintiffs does not entirely depend on proof of the alleged special damage. There is abundant evidence that, at the time of breach by defendant corporation, of its contract, the market value of the land had fallen so far below the contract price that such value was far more more than $10,- 000 below the contract price. Having first failed to pay in accordance with its agreement, defendant corporation admitted the nonpayment, but denied that it made the contract, and denied the resulting damage. The record, as we view it, amply proves the contract, the breach, and the damage. The judgment against the corporation should be affirmed.

[4] Appellant Childress attacks the judgment rendered against him as a stockholder in the defendant corporation. He contends that the court erred in the admission of certain evidence against him, and that these errors were prejudicial because the evidence was conflicting upon the point as to whether he was a stockholder at the time when the contract was made. In relation to this matter, appellant Childress contends that the court erroneously permitted cross-examination and impeachment of Childress, (a) "upon the irrelevant matter of when John W. Childress first knew of the contract sued upon, because such cross-examination was upon a wholly irrelevant matter"; and (b) "to permit contradiction of appellant Childress in the same respect by letters which were not relevant to the issues or binding upon him."

The liability of Childress depends upon proof of the fact that on August 16, 1921, he was the owner of 9,997 shares of stock of defendant corporation. These were shares that had belonged to Martin. According to the testimony of Childress, Martin had pledged these shares to him as security for certain contract obligations. Upon failure of Martin to perform his agreement, Childress caused the shares to be sold on the 9th day of August. Childress testified: "I had a sale and sold it at the courthouse. * * * I sold to J. W. Childress, myself." He further testified that Martin claimed that the sale was not legal, and that the new certificate was not received by him (Childress) until the 2d day of November. On the other hand, there was produced in evidence the stock book, containing the stub from which the certificate issued to Childress had been detached. The stub identified the certificate and the transfer from Martin, and contained the signature of Childress immediately below these words, "Received certificate No. 17 for 9,997 shares, this 9th day of August, 1921." C. B. Guittard, secretary of the corporation, testified that Childress made said signature in his (Guittard's) presence, on August 9, 1921, and that the certificate was delivered to Childress at that time.

[5] The errors claimed by appellant Childress, in connection with his cross-examination, relate to questions asked after he had testified that he did not receive the certificate until November. Under the first of these assignments of error, the record indicates that the questions were asked for the purpose of obtaining from Childress an admission that, in the year 1921, he knew that the Jed-licka premises were supposed to be oil land, and that he knew of the Atwell Land Company contract. As the witness by his replies denied that he knew anything at all about the land at that time, we are unable to see anything prejudicial in the questions, even if, as claimed, the matters involved were not relevant to the issues. The letters referred to in the second of these assignments of error in the court's rulings, were a letter of date March 17, 1922, addressed to Mr. Shenk, director of Atwell Land Company as hereinbefore shown, by Mr. Follette, who was the attorney of Childress in the transactions relating to the Martin-Childress controversy, and Shenk's reply thereto. The letters refer to the company's interest in the Jedlicka property, and were introduced after Childress had admitted that Follette spoke to him "something about a letter he got from Mr. Shenk," but had denied that he read the letter or at that time knew anything about the Jedlicka property. Mr. Shenk, however, testified that late in 1921, or at the beginning of 1922, he talked with Childress about the Jedlicka property, and that Childress said, "I must see Mr. Follette." Here again we find nothing prejudicial, even if erroneous, in the admission of the evidence. It was not of great importance in relation to the principal question affecting Childress, viz. whether he was a stockholder of the Atwell Land Company on the 16th day of August, 1921. There is in evidence a letter signed by Childress, of date September 27, 1921, and addressed to Martin, in which Childress, while agreeing to the calling of a meeting of the company for certain purposes, specifically does so on condition that he does not in any way admit any irregularity or illegality whatsoever in "that certain pledgee's sale wherein the capital stock of the Atwell Land Company was sold, delivered, and transferred to John W. Childress." This is strongly confirmatory of the stub book and of the secretary's testimony showing that the stock transfer to Childress was completed on August 9, 1921; a week before the Jedlicka contract was made.

[6, 7] Finally, appellant insists that the court should have granted his motion for a new trial, upon the ground of newly discovered evidence tending to prove that the pledgee's sale (or a pledgee's sale) of the Martin stock, actually occurred at a date subsequent to August 16, 1921. The documents referred to in the affidavits were in the actual custody of Mr. Follette, who had been the attorney of Childress, although he ceased to be such attorney prior to the trial of this action. The court apparently was not satisfied that due diligence had been used to discover and obtain the documents for use at the trial, or that their presentation would have changed the result of the action. We do not find any abuse of discretion in the denial of the motion. Incidentally it may be noted that the affidavits are found only in the clerk's transcript, and this part of the record was not made part of the reporter's transcript, nor was it certified by the judge. This is not sufficient. Jeffords v. Young, 197 Cal. 224, 227, 228, 239 P. 1054.

[8] The judgment is affirmed. The appeal from the order dismissing the action as against defendant R. M. Martin has not been argued or presented in any way, and the same is dismissed. The appeal from the order denying motion for a new trial, being an attempted appeal from a nonappealable order, is dismissed.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

93 Cal. App. 507

GRANITE ROCK CO. v. FREEMAN et al.
(Civ. 5692.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 16, 1928.

1. Costs $\Rightarrow$ 173(1)—Plaintiff recovering interest and costs by contest after payment of principal before trial was "prevailing party" within statute authorizing inclusion of attorney fee in costs (St. 1919, p. 487, § 2).

Plaintiff recovering interest and costs, including attorney fee, by contest, after payment of principal sum claimed before answer filed, was "prevailing party" within St. 1919, p. 487, § 2, authorizing inclusion of such fee as part of costs awarded to such party.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Prevailing Party.]

2. Costs $\Rightarrow$ 173(1)—Statute authorizing inclusion of attorney fee in costs awarded prevailing party held not unconstitutional (St. 1919, p. 487, § 2).

St. 1919, p. 487, § 2, authorizing inclusion of attorney fee as part of costs awarded to prevailing party, held not unconstitutional.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by the Granite Rock Company against Orville V. Freeman and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. Heretofore the state highway commission awarded a contract to Freeman & Whiting to build a portion of the state highway located in San Mateo county. Pursuant to the provisions of chapter 303, Statutes of 1919, the contractors, as principals, and the American Indemnity Company, as surety, executed to the state of California a bond. The bond was in all respects as provided by the statute. Thereafter the contractors entered upon the performance of the contract. While so engaged, they obtained certain materials and supplies from the plaintiff. Later the construction was completed. The plaintiff duly filed a notice to withhold. In due time it commenced this action against the contractors and the bonding company. Later the defendants appeared and filed a demurrer. While the demurrer was pending, the contractors obtained a withdrawal of all moneys from the state of California. After they obtained possession of the moneys, they paid to the plaintiff the principal of the sum claimed by the plaintiff, but did not pay the accrued interest or costs. Later they tendered a check covering the amount of costs and interest, but not containing any sum whatever in payment of plaintiff's attorney fees. The plaintiff refused the check, and it was deposited for the plaintiff's account. Having taken the foregoing steps, the defendants prepared an answer pleading all of the foregoing facts which had occurred subsequent to the filing of the complaint. Thereafter the action proceeded to trial before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings of fact in favor of the plaintiff, and ordered the judgment in its favor for a sum including accrued interest and costs, including, among other items, $500 as attorney fees. From a judgment entered thereon, the defendants have appealed.

[1] If that portion of the judgment awarding attorney fees was correct, it is clear that the judgment should be affirmed. In this connection, the defendants quote the record showing that, before the date of the trial, they had paid the principal sum claimed by the plaintiff; that therefore there was not and could not be a trial on that element. The defendants then argue that under such facts the plaintiff could not be, and that the defendants necessarily must be, "the prevailing party." Chapter 303, Stats. 1919. What with moneys paid to it before trial, and what with moneys obtained by virtue of the judgment, the plaintiff recovered every element it sued for. It had to fight for each element. It was "the prevailing party," within the meaning of those words as used in the statute, to the same extent and degree that it would have been if the principal sum had not been paid before answer filed but had been withheld and had been included as a part of the judgment itself. The difference between this and any other action was merely in the procedure, but nothing was obtained without a contest, in which it prevailed.

[2] The defendants cite Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 150 Cal. 265, 88 P. 982, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909, 119 Am. St. Rep. 193, 11 Ann. Cas. 712, and contend that, in so far as section 2 of chapter 303, Statutes 1919, authorizes the trial court to include an attorney fee as a part of the costs to be awarded to "the prevailing party," it is unconstitutional. The authority is not in point. In the O'Connor Case the court was considering a statute which authorized the trial court to allow a reasonable attorney fee to certain lien claimants who should be successful in establishing their claims. It did not authorize the trial court to make the same order in behalf of the property owner who should successfully oppose the lien being established. A case more nearly in point is Skrocki v. Stahl, 14 Cal. App. 1, 110 P. 957. In that case the court was considering a statute (Stats. 1872, p. 533) which authorized the trial court to allow as costs $100 to the plaintiff if he was successful, or the like sum to the defendant if he was successful. While the wording is not identical with the statute of 1919, the effect was the same. "Where the reason is the same, the rule should be the same." Civ. Code, § 3511.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BUCK, Presiding Justice pro tem.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 796

William J. FITZHUGH, etc., Plaintiff and Respondent, v. Orvill V. FREEMAN et al., Defendants and Appellants. (Civ. 5692.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 16, 1928.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. Except as to the amounts, the facts are parallel with the facts in the case Granite Rock Co. v. Freeman et al. (Cal. App.) 269 P. 668, this day decided.

For the reasons there stated, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BUCK, Presiding Justice pro tem.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 478

PEOPLE v. GUIDO. (Cr. 1476.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 8, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 4, 1928.

1. Criminal law §1166(1)—Denial of motion to suppress evidence obtained by search without warrant held not prejudicial error.

Denial of defendant's motion to suppress evidence alleged to have been secured by a search without a warrant held not to constitute prejudicial error, since, if motion had been granted, nevertheless defendant could have been confronted by testimony of witnesses who saw articles and, in all probability, by photographs thereof.

2. Intoxicating liquors §238(1)—Denial of directed verdict for failure to prove liquor was intended for beverage purposes held not error under evidence.

In prosecution for possession of still intended for manufacture of liquor for beverage purposes, denial of directed verdict for defendant for failure of proof that liquor was intended for beverage purposes held not error, where there was indirect evidence from which jury might infer or presume that the liquor was so intended.

3. Criminal law §829(1)—Refusal of instructions on subject-matter as to which court instructed fully held not error.

Refusal of instructions on subject-matter as to which court had fully and completely instructed, by giving certain instructions so clear and pointed that jury could not have been uninformed, held not error.

4. Statutes §35½—Law amending previous statute adopted by referendum held not unconstitutional because amendment was not also by referendum (St. 1927, p. 497, amending Wright Act; Const. art. 4, § 1).

St. 1927, p. 497, amending the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79), which had adopted as a law of the state penal provisions of the Volstead Act (27 USCA) by means of a referendum, held not unconstitutional by reason of fact that the amendment was not also by referendum, since Const. art. 4, § 1, expressly provides that act adopted under referendum may be amended by Legislature.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Frank Guido was convicted of the unlawful possession of a still intended for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court, SEAWELL and LANGDON, JJ., voting for a transfer.

Gilman & Harnden, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. The district attorney filed an information against the defendant, charging him with having violated the provisions of chapter 277, Statutes of 1927—the unlawful possession of a still intended for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. The defendant was tried before the trial court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict against the defendant, and, from a judgment entered thereon, the defendant has appealed.

[1] In his brief, the defendant calls to our attention that his premises were searched by the peace officers, and that they took from his possession numerous parts of a still and a quantity of distilled liquor, and that the officers did not have a search warrant authorizing them to do or perform any of said acts. Before the trial, the defendant made a motion to suppress, but the motion was denied. He cites and relies on the doctrine as stated in Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 6 S. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746, and in his brief he has made an exhaustive presentation of the doctrine stated in that case. However, his reasoning is not convincing. The doctrine of that case has never been adopted in this state. The law in this state is settled by the ruling in People v. Mayen, 188 Cal. 237, 205 P. 435, 24 A. L. R. 1383, and the cases there cited. In the Mayen Case the court said it would not attempt to review the ruling on such a motion because said ruling was a collateral matter to the appeal before it—an appeal from a judgment of conviction of grand larceny. It is patent that the ruling complained of is, in the last analysis, almost wholly immaterial. The gravamen of the defendant's complaint is that the articles taken by an unlawful means were offered in evidence against him. But if his motion to restore had been granted, nevertheless under the ruling of the Mayen Case he could, and doubtlessly would, have been confronted by the testimony of the witnesses who saw the articles and, in all probability, by photographs of the articles. It is clear, therefore, that the denial of the defendant's motion would have been of negligible benefit to him. We are unable to say that the ruling was error, and we are unable to say that it was prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.

[2] Claiming that the plaintiff was bound to prove that the defendant had a still for the manufacture of liquor and that the plaintiff was also bound to prove that such liquor was intended for beverage purposes, the defendant made a motion that the trial court direct a verdict in his favor. The motion was denied. There was no error in the ruling. True it is that there was no direct evidence as to what use the defendant intended to make of the liquor after it had been distilled, but there was an abundance of indirect evidence from which the jury might infer or presume that the liquor was intended for beverage purposes.

[3] Presenting the same contention, the defendant tendered seven different instructions which the trial court refused to give. He earnestly contends the court erred. We think he is mistaken. Assuming that each and every one of the instructions was a correct statement of the law, a complete answer to the defendant's point is that the trial court instructed fully and completely on the same subject-matter by giving certain instructions which were so clear and so pointed that the jury could not have been uninformed.

[4] Finally, it is claimed that chapter 277, Statutes of 1927, is unconstitutional. The defendant makes the following argument: The Volstead Act (27 USCA) penalizes the possession of a still for manufacturing intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. The Wright Act (Stats. 1921, p. 79) adopted as the law of this state the penal provisions of the Volstead Act. The Wright Act was adopted by the people after a referendum duly had. The act of 1927 purports to amend the Wright Act and, the defendant argues that an act adopted by a referendum may be amended only by a referendum. The error in this reasoning rests in the concluding portion. By section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution, it is provided that an act adopted by the people under the referendum provisions of the Constitution may be amended by the Legislature at any subsequent sessions thereof. It follows that the contention that the statute is unconstitutional has not been sustained.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 259

PEOPLE v. VEJAR. (Cr. 1669.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 25, 1928.

1. Robbery ☞24(1)—Conviction for first degree robbery held sustained by evidence.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for first degree robbery charged in connection with theft of ring.

2. Criminal law ☞742(3), 935(1)—Whether prosecuting witness was successfully impeached is question for jury, and impeachment does not authorize granting of new trial.

Question whether prosecuting witness is successfully impeached is for jury's determination, and cannot be made the basis for disturbing the verdict or ordering new trial.

3. Criminal law ☞942(1)—Refusal of new trial for corroborative impeaching testimony as to prosecuting witness' statement admitting bribery held not abuse of discretion.

Refusal of new trial in robbery prosecution for newly discovered evidence of statement of prosecuting witness to his employer that police officers had discovered wine in his cellar and that he had paid them money to avoid arrest held not abuse of discretion, since testimony merely corroborated other impeaching testimony.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William T. Aggeler, Judge.

Delores R. Vejar was convicted of first degree robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

MacDonald & Thompson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Waldamar Augustine, of San Francisco, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant was charged by information with robbery by force and fear, was convicted of robbery in the first degree, and, his motion for a new trial having been denied, appeals from the judgment and order denying said motion.

[1, 2] It is conceded that on or about November 19, 1926, appellant and two other men went to the home of one Nick Zitko, in the city of Los Angeles, and unlawfully obtained from the latter a diamond ring and $45 in money. The complaining witness testified that Vejar pointed a gun at him, forcibly removed from his finger a diamond ring worth $400, and took from his pocket the money in controversy; that the defendant at the same time exhibited a police badge, demanded the witness' keys, which were handed to the other men, both of whom left the room but soon returned, and all three departed. Although Vejar testified that he was not armed, another witness, Mrs. Gallagher, said that when the defendant appeared at her home next door to Zitko's, he inquired as to the latter's place of abode, and that she saw the handle and trigger of a revolver in defendant's back pocket on the right side. This evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict. Appellant contends that the evidence proved him guilty of extortion and not of robbery. This claim is without merit. We need not detail the testimony conflicting with that above stated, since to do so would only involve this court weighing the evidence in order to substitute its judgment for that of the jury. Also, as to whether the prosecuting witness was successfully impeached is a question whose decision by the jury the superior court properly refused to disturb or permit to be made the basis for ordering a new trial. The jury apparently believed from all of the evidence that Vejar did not obtain the money and ring as claimed by him with the consent of his victim, and that the latter parted with them through fear of bodily injury. This being true, we cannot say as a matter of law that the judgment is not sufficiently supported by the evidence.

[3] The only attempted showing of newly discovered evidence upon the motion for a new trial consisted of an affidavit wherein it was averred that before the trial Zitko had stated to his employer that police officers had discovered wine in his cellar and that he had paid them money to avoid arrest. This would be corroborative merely of the testimony of the defendant, tending to impeach the prosecuting witness. It was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to conclude that this was not of itself a sufficient ground for granting a new trial. People v. Staigers (Cal. App.) 268 P. 923.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

93 Cal. App. 411

LANE MORTG. CO. v. CRENSHAW et al.
(Civ. 6169.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 3, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 1, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 1, 1928.

1. Evidence ⇨383(7)—Conclusive presumption of truth of recitals of contract does not apply to recital of consideration (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1962, 1963).

Recitals in written instrument are conclusively presumed to be true as between the parties under Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, though presumption does not apply to the recital of consideration, but good and sufficient consideration is presumed, under section 1963, if uncontradicted.

2. Evidence ⇨383(7)—Recital in contract that lease was procured by mortgage company, which agreed to finance construction of hotel by loaning specified sum, was conclusively presumed true (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962).

Recital in contract between hotel company and mortgage company procuring lease of property that lease was procured by the mortgage company and that it agreed to finance the construction of the building by making loan was conclusively presumed true under Code Civ. Proc. § 1962.

3. Principal and agent ⇨41—In action for breach of contract, giving plaintiff lease and agency of hotel in consideration for services and loan, failure of court to find on issue of consideration was error (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963).

In action by mortgage company for breach of agreement of lessors of hotel property to give company exclusive managing agency and leasehold in return for procuring lease and financing building of hotel, where instrument recited that services and loan by mortgage company constituted consideration for lease and agency, failure of court to find on question of consideration was error, in view of presumption of good and sufficient consideration for written contract under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963.

4. Principal and agent ⇨41—Evidence in suit by mortgage company for breach of contract giving it lease and agency in hotel building required finding that consideration was procuring lease and making loan as recited in contract (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963).

In action by mortgage company, given lease in hotel building and agency thereof, for breach of contract, evidence required finding that consideration for the contract was services rendered by mortgage company in procuring lease and company's loan to finance construction of building, as recited in instrument, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1122(2)—Appellate court could make finding, omitted by trial court, without necessity of new trial (Const. art. 6, § 4¾; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

In action on contract, failure of court to make finding on question of consideration did not require new trial, but appellate court could make finding under Const. art. 6, § 4¾; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, in view of section 1963, under which good and sufficient consideration for written contract is presumed.

6. Principal and agent ⇨34—Exclusive agency for management of building as to part of which agent had lease free of rent for 20 years held irrevocable as "power coupled with an interest."

Contract between hotel company and mortgage company by which mortgage company was given 20-year lease in second story of building, rent free, together with exclusive agency to manage building, in return for services in procuring lease and for loan through which building was constructed, gave "power coupled with an interest," since power of agent to manage building was necessary to preservation of leasehold interest.

7. Principal and agent ⇨34—Entire instrument creating power and particular circumstances must be considered in determining whether power is "coupled with an interest."

In determining whether power given agent is "coupled with an interest," each case must be determined from its own facts and conclusions reached by considering entire instrument which creates the power.

8. Principal and agent ⇨34—"Power coupled with an interest" is power which forms part of contract and is security for money or performance of act, and such power is irrevocable.

"Power coupled with an interest" exists when the power forms part of the contract and is a security for money or for the performance of any act which is deemed valuable, and such power is irrevocable.

9. Principal and agent ⇨34—Fact that agent might sever power to manage building from his leasehold interest therein did not prevent existence of "power coupled with an interest."

Fact that agent giving leasehold interest might add to his option surrender power connected with it to manage building did not prevent power from being irrevocable as coupled with present interest.

10. Principal and agent $\hookrightarrow$ 34—Requirement that agent managing hotel building execute leases in name of lessors did not prevent existence of "power coupled with an interest."

Fact that agent given lease in hotel building and exclusive agency to manage hotel was required to execute leases in name of and subject to the approval of the lessors did not affect character of power given as power coupled with an interest.

11. Injunction $\hookrightarrow$ 59(1)—Mortgage company receiving exclusive agency of hotel and leasehold interest therein for services and loan to lessors was entitled to equitable relief as against lessor's assignees seeking to cancel agency.

Mortgage company given exclusive agency of hotel building and lease of one floor thereof rent free, in return for services and loan through which building was erected, had right to equitable relief for protection of its leasehold interest against assignors of lessors seeking to terminate its agency.

12. Injunction $\hookrightarrow$ 59(1)—Injunction lies to prevent revocation of agency coupled with interest.

Revocation of agency coupled with an interest presents proper case for remedy of injunction.

13. Injunction $\hookrightarrow$ 59(1)—Court may enjoin breach of contracts not capable of specific enforcement.

Fact that contract cannot be specifically enforced does not preclude court from decreeing injunctive relief against threatened breach.

14. Injunction $\hookrightarrow$ 59(1)—Mortgage company given lease in building rent free together with exclusive agency held entitled to injunction to restrain threatened termination of agency by lessor's assignees.

Mortgage company given leasehold interest in one floor of hotel building rent free together with exclusive agency to manage hotel, in return for loan and services in procuring lease, held entitled to injunctive relief to prevent termination of agency by assignees of lessors.

15. Principal and agent $\hookrightarrow$ 34—Principal has neither right nor power to revoke agency coupled with interest.

Where agency is coupled with an interest, a principal has neither power nor right to revoke, though power to do so may exist where no interest is involved.

16. Action $\hookrightarrow$ 6—Action by company, given lease in building and exclusive agency, to determine right to manage building as against assignee of lessors, presented proper case for declaratory relief (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1060–1062).

Action by mortgage company, given leasehold interest in one story of hotel building rent free and exclusive agency to manage building, brought against lessors' assignees to determine right to management and control of building under agency, held to present proper case for declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1060–1062.

17. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1175(2)—In absence of necessary findings, declaratory judgment cannot be entered by appellate court.

Declaratory judgment cannot be entered on appeal in absence of findings of fact, but must be entered by trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by the Lane Mortgage Company against C. R. L. Crenshaw and others. From an adverse judgment and from an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Lloyd W. Moultrie, E. A. Lane, and Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bicksler, Smith & Parke, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. In this action plaintiff seeks injunctive relief to secure the benefits to which it alleges itself entitled under a certain written contract. As a part of the same action plaintiff asks the court to declare the legal rights and duties of the respective parties under the said contract.

The court below denied the injunctive relief sought and declined to enter any declaratory judgment.

The plaintiff appeals from the judgment of the lower court and from the order denying its motion for a new trial.

The case presents two main points. We are called upon to determine whether or not the contract about which the controversy centers confers upon plaintiff a power coupled with an interest, and, further, to determine the application of the sections of our Code providing for declaratory judgments. Without attempting at this point to make any determination of either question it is readily apparent that the application of the law in each of the issues must depend to a large extent upon the facts as disclosed. Therefore we must in some detail recite the record.

In September, 1921, certain parties, called for convenience the Stolls, were the owners of a lot or parcel of land in the city of Los Angeles located at the corner of Spring and Eighth streets in said city. In passing it might be added that this property was then of great value and since that time the value has been greatly enhanced. On September 1, 1921, the Stolls, as the owners of said lot, entered into a certain agreement of lease with a corporation known as San Joaquin Valley Hotel Corporation. The terms of the lease, as they are material to the present controversy, are as follows: The period of the lease is 99 years from the date thereof and the rental is $1,000 per month. The lessee, hereinafter referred to as Hotel Company, agrees to pay, in addition to the rent reserved, all rates, taxes, charges for revenue or otherwise, assessments and levies, general and special, ordinary and extraordinary, including water rates, gas and electric light and power rates, lighting, street work, sanitary and safety requirements which may be charged, assessed, levied or imposed upon the land or any buildings or improvements placed thereon. It is further provided that the lands and improvements shall always be assessed in the name of the Stolls, lessors, providing such manner of assessment is permitted under the laws relating thereto. The receipts for taxes paid must be delivered to the lessors at least five days before the date whereon taxes become delinquent. The Hotel Company further agrees to commence the erection of a building on or before one year from date of possession, and to erect, furnish and complete the same with reasonable diligence at its own cost and expense, and in any event to have the same completed and ready for occupancy on or before September 1, 1926, fully paid for and free from all liens, compensation claims, or other construction claims liable to ripen into any lien on said premises; provided, however, that the obligation of the Hotel Company to complete the said building at its own cost and free from liens shall not be construed as to prevent the Hotel Company from mortgaging or otherwise hypothecating its interest in this lease or its interest in the demised premises for the purpose of obtaining money with which to pay for the erection of said building, nor shall it prevent the erection of said building in accordance with the terms of the lease by a subtenant of the Hotel Company. The building to be constructed on the property shall cover substantially the entire lot; shall be a class A reinforced concrete or steel structure, as the term "class A" is defined by the ordinances of the city of Los Angeles. It shall be a loft building with at least twelve stories and a finished basement, and shall actually cost and be reasonably worth when constructed not less than $250,000, and constructed in every respect in accordance with all laws and regulations affecting such construction in force at the time and during the construction. The Hotel Company further agrees that it will keep insured in standard solvent fire insurance companies, approved as such by the lessors, during the demised term, any and all buildings or improvements that may be built or placed upon the premises to an amount of not less than 70 per cent. of the cost of said buildings or improvements, and if the Hotel Company erects a building on said premises fully complying with the requirements of what is known as a class A fireproof building, then said insurance shall not be less than 40 per cent. of the cost of said building. All policies of insurance are to be issued to both parties, as their interest may appear, and the policies themselves deposited with the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank (hereby designated as trustee) for the purposes following, to wit: The same to be held by the trustee as additional security for the rent and the rebuilding, in the case of destruction. The Hotel Company agrees that in the event of the substantially total destruction of said premises by fire on or before September 1, A. D. 2017, immediately upon the payment of the insurance moneys received to the trustee, the Hotel Company will within 30 days thereafter advance and pay to the trustee the difference between the amount of insurance received and the sum of $250,000, which said latter sum is to constitute a trust fund for the payment of the rents under the lease as well as the rebuilding of the premises. All and every sum or sums of money which shall be received by the Hotel Company from insurance upon the building, except so much thereof as must be applied to the payment of rent due and to accrue, shall be laid out and expended by it in rebuilding or repairing said building, and in case the Hotel Company shall not have advanced the funds necessary to bring said insurance moneys up to $250,000, if said destruction occurs prior to September 1, A. D. 2017, or shall fail to restore or repair such building at the time and in the manner specified, then it shall be lawful for the lessors to declare such term ended, and the buildings on the premises shall at once be forfeited to the lessors, and any insurance money remaining in the hands of the trustee shall be paid to lessors. In case the Hotel Company neglects to insure and keep insured the buildings and improvements then the lessors may at their election procure the insurance and add the amount of the premiums to the installment of rent next due with interest at 7 per cent. per annum. The Hotel Company further agrees that the premises and building or buildings which may at any time be thereon shall be used by the lessee only and exclusively for proper and legitimate purposes. And it is expressly covenanted between the parties that the Hotel Company will not use or consent to the use in any manner whatsoever of the demised premises, or any buildings or improvements thereon, nor any portion thereof, for any purpose calculated to injure the said premises or the neighboring property, nor for any purpose or use in violation of federal or state laws or ordinances of the city of Los Angeles, or for any unlawful purpose whatsoever, or for any trade, business, occupation or vocation whatever which may in anywise be unlawful. And the Hotel Company will at its own costs and charges keep the buildings, sidewalks, steps and excavations under the sidewalks in good, safe and secure condition, and will from time to time at its own expense make all structural alterations, changes, or repairs which may be by law required in connection with the use, or by reason of any use to which said building is put, or by reason of its maintenance.

It is agreed that upon conditions not necessary to enumerate the lease may be assigned, and the agreement gives notice that any assignment not in strict conformity with the provisions thereof shall be null and void, and provided further that the assignee shall take subject to all conditions, covenants, agreements, and obligations to be performed by the Hotel Company. It is agreed, covenanted, and understood between the parties thereto that in case at any time default shall be made by the Hotel Company in the payment of any rent provided for upon the day the same becomes due or payable, and such default shall continue 30 days after written notice to the Hotel Company, or in case at any time default shall be made by the lessee in payment of any taxes, charges, or assessments levied or assessed against said property, and such default shall continue for 30 days after notice thereof in writing by the lessors to the Hotel Company, then in any or either event it shall be immediately lawful for the lessors at their election to declare said demised term at an end and enter into said demised premises and the buildings or improvements situated thereon or any part thereof, and, with process of law, to re-enter and remove all persons therefrom.

Thereafter follow provisions granting the right of re-entry on failure of Hotel Company to keep the buildings insured, and providing further that such default may be cured by full compliance with these terms within six months after re-entry following default.

It is mutually covenanted and agreed that the various rights, powers, options, elections, appointments, and remedies of the lessors contained in the lease shall be construed as cumulative and no one of them as exclusive of the other or exclusive of any rights or priorities allowed by law.

This agreement and lease was duly acknowledged by the parties executing the same, being all of the parties thereto, and was recorded in the official records of Los Angeles county on November 29, 1921.

It will be readily observed that the main scheme of this lease and agreement was to improve the land by the erection of a building appropriate to the location of the lot.

On December 31, 1921, the Hotel Company made and entered into a lease and agreement with Lane Mortgage Company, a corporation, plaintiff herein. For identification this corporation will hereinafter be referred to as the Lane Company. This agreement recites the execution of the lease between Stolls and the Hotel Company, and recites further the obligation of the Hotel Company to erect a building, and also that the Hotel Company is about to commence the construction of the building in accordance with the terms of the lease. The agreement then specifically states as follows:

"Whereas, said lease is valuable to the San Joaquin Valley Hotel Company, party of the first part herein, and was procured for it by the Lane Mortgage Company, party of the second part herein, and said last named company has agreed to finance the construction of said building by loaning to the party of the first part the sum of $250,000 for the purpose of erecting said building, taking as security certain bonds secured by deed of trust thereon: Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and the procurement of the lease aforesaid and the financing of said building as aforesaid, and as part of one and the same transaction, and in further consideration of the sum of $10, the said party of the first part does hereby lease and let to the party of the second part, its successors and assigns, the entire second floor of the building to be erected on the premises above described; to have and to hold said second floor of said building for the term of 20 years commencing on October 1, 1922, or from the date of the completion of said building if the same is not fully completed on said date, without further payment of rent for said term."

Then follow the terms and conditions upon which the lease is given, made, and executed, viz.:

(1) The second floor shall be completely finished by Hotel Company, including hall partitions, toilets, janitor rooms, lighting fixtures, etc.

(2) Hotel Company during term of lease shall furnish without charge during term of lease elevator service, water, and heat.

(3) That no part of said building shall be leased or rented for manufacturing or other purposes during said term that will be a detriment to a high-class loft building in the financial district.

(4) That tenants occupying other portions of said building during the term of this lease shall have no advertising privilege except from their names on the directory of the building and lettering on the windows, such signs and lettering to be approved by Lane Company.

(5) The Hotel Company will keep the building in first-class repair and condition at its own expense, including all plumbing.

(6) Lane Company to make any desirable changes on second floor and install vaults, fixtures, etc., with right to remove the same.

(7) Lane Company will not permit improper use of building or use that will disturb or injure other tenants.

(8) Provides for rights in case of destruction of building.

(9) Provides for month to month tenancy upon holding over after expiration of term.

The agreement and lease then further provides:

"For the consideration aforesaid and as part of the same transaction said Hotel Company does hereby appoint and employ said Lane Mortgage Company its sole and exclusive agent for the management of said building so to be erected from the completion of the same to the 1st day of October, 1942, with full power and authority to collect all rentals thereon and pay all operating expense, taxes, insurance, ground rental, interest on bonds and bonds as they mature out of the money collected, and procure or write all fire and earthquake insurance agreed to be carried by the Hotel Company, and the Hotel Company agrees to carry insurance of each of said classes amounting to at least $250,000 each for the protection of the Company and the bondholders, and the Hotel Company agreed to pay the Lane Company for such services a commission of 5 per cent. of gross rentals and the regular brokerage paid insurance agents, it being understood and agreed that the agency and employment aforesaid shall be irrevocable during the time aforesaid except for willful misconduct on the part of said party of the second part, and that all supervision and agency of the Lane Company shall terminate on October 1, 1942, unless any of the bonds above referred to purchased by the said Lane Company shall be outstanding and unpaid on said date, then such agency shall remain in full force and effect until all of said bonds are paid, at which time it shall terminate and end, provided, however, that at any time during the term of the lease the Lane Company may surrender its right to manage the building and to act as agent of the Hotel Company by serving a thirty-day written notice on the Hotel Company of its election to terminate at least thirty days prior to the actual termination thereof, and said agency shall terminate and end at the time designated in the notice without in anywise interfering with or modifying the leasehold interest of the party of the second part. It is further agreed as a part of the consideration aforesaid, the building to be erected shall be known as Lane Mortgage Building until October 1, 1942, and the Lane Company may maintain signs on the building displaying the name, and may at its option change the name.

"The Lane Company shall render to the Hotel Company a complete report and statement of leases made, insurance placed, rents collected and disbursements at least once each month, and account for and pay to Hotel Company all moneys due it, and all leases shall be to such tenants and upon such terms as shall first be approved in writing by the Hotel Company. The ordinary expense of collecting the rents shall be borne by Lane Company, provided that if any litigation is necessary to collect rentals or enforce payment of insurance, or any other cost or expense occurs in making any such collections, the same shall be paid by the Hotel Company."

This agreement, duly executed and acknowledged by the parties thereto, was recorded in the official records of Los Angeles county on January 13, 1922. Thereafter the Hotel Company proceeded with the construction of the building and the same was practically completed by it on December 2, 1922. On this last-mentioned date the Hotel Company by a written instrument assigned to Crenshaw and Smailes, defendants herein, the lease and the building on the property. This assignment was made pursuant to and in compliance with the provisions of the original lease from the Stolls to the Hotel Company. No question is raised concerning this assignment as far as it operates to divest the Hotel Company of all interest in the subject-matter of the present action. This assignment was expressly subject to a lease of the entire second floor in favor of Lane Mortgage Company for 20 years at a total rental of $10. It may be added that a number of other subleases were likewise included with the Lane Company lease and running to various persons, firms and corporations. On the same date as this assignment the defendants Smailes and Crenshaw addressed, signed, and delivered to the Hotel Company a writing in the following words:

"We understand that Lane Mortgage Company has an agreement with your company to manage and collect the rentals from the building on lot 11, block 51, Huber tract, and to receive a fee therefor of five (5) per cent. of the gross rental, and also the right to call said building 'The Lane Mortgage Building,' which agreement is for a period ending October 1, 1942, and we accept assignment and conveyance of the leasehold interest and said building with full knowledge of the existence of said contract and acquiesce therein."

Thereafter Smailes and Crenshaw proceeded with the completion of the building, and the same was ready for occupancy in January, 1923, at which time the various tenants, including Lane Company, entered into possession of the portions thereof leased to them. The total cost of the building was in excess of $385,000, and the court below found that the lease and buildings were of a fair market value of $1,000,000.

We have then the building completed. The defendants Smailes and Crenshaw own the building and the lease, and the plaintiff Lane Company holding the second floor under its lease from the Hotel Company, and managing the building, collecting the rents, and exercising the powers and rights granted to it under the agreement with and lease from the Hotel Company. Thus prefaced with a detail necessary to a complete understanding of the situation, we come to the present controversy.

The plaintiff Lane Company, in its complaint, sets up all of the facts as hereinbefore stated with additional allegations. Plaintiff alleges that it negotiated the lease between Stolls and the Hotel Company, and in sundry ways aided and assisted the Hotel Company in obtaining the lease and in the construction of the building, and for these and various other considerations received the lease and agreement between Lane Company and the Hotel Company. Generally, the gravamen of plaintiff's complaint is that soon after it took possession and assumed the management of the building the defendants Crenshaw and Smailes plotted and conspired to disregard, violate, and hold for naught plaintiff's contract. Many allegations of specific acts follow. Summed up, plaintiff alleges that de-defendants refuse plaintiff the management of the building; that they collect the rents themselves, employ janitors and other help, assume to themselves the placing of insurance and the payment of taxes and ground rent. Likewise does plaintiff complain that defendants have ignored its right to have the building known as Lane Mortgage Building. Sufficient allegations appear to charge a complete disregard of plaintiff's claim to manage the building, collect rentals, employ help, procure insurance, etc. Plaintiff further alleges acts on the part of said defendants which are an interference with its right to the enjoyment and occupancy of the second floor of said building. Plaintiff then prays that defendants be enjoined from doing any and all of the acts complained of, and then follows this prayer:

"Plaintiff further prays that the court declare the rights and duties of plaintiff and defendants in and under said instrument and agreement of December 31, 1921, and the legal rights and duties of the respective parties to this action under that contract and in the controversy disclosed by this complaint; and determine that the proper construction of the said instrument and agreement requires the granting of the relief herein prayed for by plaintiff and that the plaintiff is entitled to the remedies it claims in this action."

The defendants Crenshaw and Smailes by way of answer admitted taking over the management of the building, paying taxes and ground rent, procuring insurance, etc.; in fact, contend that the right and power given plaintiff in this behalf is a mere naked agency revocable by the defendants at their pleasure. Defendants, however, deny any present or intended interference with the plaintiff's right to possession of the second floor for the 20-year term free of rental. They further allege that plaintiff has failed to properly manage the building and has been guilty of willful misconduct. They allege their full compliance with the terms of the original ground lease from Stolls to the Hotel Company, and deny any interference on their part with the right of plaintiff to have the building known as and called Lane Mortgage Building. They allege further that plaintiff's right to manage the building and collect rentals, etc., was solely to secure to it the payment of a bond issue on the building, and allege further the payment of all sums due under the issue. Defendants affirmatively allege that the contract between Hotel Company and plaintiff, in so far as the agency features are involved, was without consideration, and further plead that the consideration supporting the leasehold interest being wholly as payment or bonus for a loan was usurious.

After a trial upon the issues the court below made its findings of fact and entered judgment denying plaintiff any injunctive relief, and declining to enter or make any declaration of the rights of the respective parties under the Hotel Company lease to plaintiff. It will be unnecessary to detail all of the trial court's findings, but sufficient thereof may be given to amplify the respective contentions.

The court found as a fact and likewise drew its conclusion of law that the agency in favor of plaintiff set forth in said contract of December 31, 1921 (being the contract and lease agreement between the Hotel Company and Lane Company), is not coupled with any interest that plaintiff has or claims in the Lane Mortgage Building.

The trial court made another finding to the effect that the attention of the court had been called to the fact that there is another action pending in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles, by and between the same parties to the present action, wherein issue is raised as to the true consideration for said contract of December 31, 1921, and the court, decreeing a finding of fact on that issue not necessary or material for a decision herein, makes no finding of fact as to the true consideration for said contract or as to whether the consideration recited in said contract of December 31, 1921, is or was the true consideration therefor.

Still further, the court finds:

"That the agency created in favor of plaintiff under the contract of December 31, 1921, to manage said Lane Mortgage Building was not given or entered into for the purpose of protecting any interest plaintiff now has or claims to have in said building, and was not given for any purpose other than the protection of the indebtedness evidenced by said $200,000 (two hundred thousand dollars) bond issue made by the Hotel Company and referred to in the agreement, and which said bond issue was fully paid and discharged on or about April 1, 1923; that the termination of plaintiff's agency for the management of said building does not and will not injure, depreciate or in anywise affect any interest or interests which plaintiff has or claims to have in said building."

It may be noted—of which more hereinafter—that the court likewise declined to find upon the issue as to whether or not Lane Company had been guilty of willful misconduct, upon the expressed ground that the issue was not urged—practically a finding that the issue had been abandoned. Indeed, at the trial it was stipulated as follows: That Lane Company did all the work necessary or incident to the management of the building except that which it was prevented from doing by Crenshaw and Smailes, without carrying out any question of how well it was done or that defendant (sic) was not guilty in some instances of misconduct, but the actual performance is admitted.

We think the case sufficiently outlined.

The question of consideration, in contracts of this kind, is an important matter, and a finding should have been made if issue were joined. Defendants alleged a complete lack of consideration, but offered not a single iota of evidence on the question. We think the court should have found that the consideration was as recited in the instrument. We are not holding that the defendants had the right to question the actual consideration, as that question is not before us. Defendants, as noted, offered no evidence on the subject, but base their contention upon a general argument by merely stating the claim that the instrument and agreement is unsupported by any consideration.

[1-4] The facts in support of the agreement and its consideration appear as follows: The instrument being in writing imports a consideration, even without a recital thereof. The recitals in the instrument are conclusively presumed to be true as between the parties thereto or their successors in interest by a subsequent title (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962). This conclusive presumption does not apply to the recital of the consideration. However, the presumption would apply to the recital that "said lease is valuable to the Hotel Company and was procured for it by the Lane Company, and said Lane Company has agreed to finance the construction of the building by loaning $200,000 to Hotel Company for the purpose of erecting said building." The further recital in said instrument that the said services and loan by Lane Company constituted the consideration for the lease and agency are not deemed conclusive under the Code section 1962, Code of Civil Procedure. However, section 1963, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that it is a satisfactory presumption, if uncontradicted, that there was a good and sufficient consideration for the written contract. Taking these two presumptions together, the latter being wholly uncontroverted, the inequality between the two is slight. With it being conclusive that the recital is true, and an almost equally strong presumption that the contract was supported by an adequate consideration, then a strong inference arises sufficient to constitute a prima facie showing that the presumed consideration was and is as stated in the instrument. Aside from this there is direct evidence on the subject. The president of the Hotel Company who conducted the negotiations testified that there was nothing compulsory about the deal. It was a matter of negotiation. Mr. Lane proposed doing certain things under certain conditions, and Hotel Company agreed to those conditions. It was necessary to do all those things in order to get the deal—the loan and the lease. Throughout the general negotiations between Crenshaw and Smailes and the Hotel Company the former dealt with the property conceding the lease and agreement with the Lane Company, and this was deemed an incumbrance in determining the value of the property. There were in evidence letters written by Lane Company to defendants Crenshaw and Smailes stating the consideration to be as recited in the instrument, and no evidence of denial or lack of acquiescence on the part of said defendants.

On the subject of consideration reference may be had to 6 Cal. Jur. § 132 et seq.

We conclude, therefore, that not only was it error to fail to find on the question of consideration, but also that on the face of the record the finding should have been that the true consideration was as recited in the instrument. If this were not true, nevertheless, even in the absence of a finding on what constituted the actual consideration, a presumption would still remain and stand as a fact when not controverted that there was a consideration and that it was adequate.

[5] It would be an idle and vexatious requirement that a new trial should be ordered on account of this lack of a finding which the record compels. Section 4½, article 6, of the state Constitution, is designed to meet such a condition, and likewise the legislation adopted to effectuate the said constitutional provision, Code of Civil Procedure, § 956a (as added by St. 1927, p. 583). Pursuant thereto we do find that the consideration supporting the agreement between Hotel Company and Lane Company was the consideration recited therein.

In passing it may be noted that the reason assigned by the trial court for refusing to make a finding was the pendency of another action between the parties. There is not a scrap of testimony, nor a statement of counsel, nor a suggestion of any sort in the record before us of or concerning any other litigation between the parties.

[6-8] Summing up the entire transaction, then, between Hotel Company and Lane Company, it may be thus narrated: The Hotel Company located a lot of land in a most prominent and promising section of the city of Los Angeles which was standing unimproved. In order to get a lease on the lot the Hotel Company secures the services of the Lane Company, disclosed herein to be investment bankers. The Lane Company secured for the Hotel Company a lease for 99 years upon the condition, among others, that a building costing not less than $250,000 be erected upon the premises. As a part of the same transaction the Hotel Company agrees to give Lane Company a lease, free of rent, for 20 years on the second floor of the building to be erected, and the Lane Company agrees, in addition to its services in securing the lease, to finance the construction of the building through a bond issue of $200,000. The lease from the owners to the Hotel Company contains many conditions and restrictions. A violation of or noncompliance with these works a forfeiture of the land lease and of the building if erected. Therefore it is most obvious that whatever value or worth attached to the Lane Company lease was conditional upon compliance with the terms of the land lease. If the Hotel Company defaulted in rental, or neglected to keep the premises insured, or permitted through lack of management the character or repute of the building to become unsound, or allowed the building to be used for unlawful purposes, then the lease of Lane Company was valueless. Also, if the Hotel Company should tire of its bargain with Lane, and by connivance or collusion bring about an apparent forfeiture sufficient to cause even an arranged ouster, Lane Company were left with no recourse unless advised of the facts. The history of man's dealings with his fellow man, as revealed in the reported cases, indicate that the bare lease under the conditions might have lost its worth much sooner than the expiration of the fixed term. However, after negotiating for and agreeing upon a 20-year lease, weak with all of the pitfalls and possibilities incident to the tenure of the Hotel Company, it was specifically made a part of the one and same transaction that a power should be given the Lane Company whereby it could protect and render secure and valuable the lease agreed upon. The power so given was the sole and exclusive agency to manage the building to be erected, thus giving to Lane Company the ability to protect the lease against a forfeiture of the land lease by reason of the building or any portion being used for any purpose calculated to injure the premises, or by reason of any unlawful use, or through the building becoming in a state of dilapidation or unsafety. Likewise embraced within such granted power was the right to collect rentals and apply the same to the extinguishment of the various obligations resting upon the Hotel Company under the land lease, including the procuring of insurance, a compliance with which was compulsory under penalty of forfeiture. The power thus given was declared by the trial court to be a mere naked power revocable at will by the Hotel Company or its successors, and not a power coupled with an interest as the term is understood in the law relating to principal and agent. In this holding the trial court was in error.

It is most difficult to frame an all-embracing definition of a power coupled with an interest. Most of the authorities on the subject seem to concede that such a power is recognized by the law, and when found to exist in any given case it is not revocable at the will of the principal and even survives his death. The question ever present is as to when such a power exists, and what conditions must be shown to manifest its existence. Many of the authorities approach the subject as though it were a thesis, and treat it in such an academic way as to be confusing. Much is said concerning what is not a power coupled with an interest, with little attempt at exactness concerning what actually constitutes the same. Some confusion arises in applying the doctrine of the older cases for the reason that the law of agency has, like other legal doctrines, undergone some change throughout the years. This is particularly so with reference to the limitations of certain powers of agency and the erstwhile presumptions attaching. Likewise certain terms current years ago at the present writing convey meanings entirely different from the then general acceptance.

The attitude of the California courts is not doubtful. Each case is determined from its own facts and the conclusions reached by a consideration of the entire instrument creating the power in question. The law of California is most fully and carefully expounded in the case of Todd v. Superior Court, 181 Cal. 406, 184 P. 684, and the application of the law as therein announced demonstrates the error of the court below. In the Todd Case the Supreme Court adopts the reasoning of the early case of Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. 174, 5 L. Ed. 589. In this latter case the opinion of the United States Supreme Court was written by Chief Justice Marshall, and has come down through the years, remaining today the leading and accepted announcement of the legal doctrine of a power coupled with an interest.

Concretely, a power is said to be coupled with an interest when the power forms part of a contract, and is a security for money or for the performance of any act which is deemed valuable, and is generally made irrevocable in terms, or, if not so, is deemed irrevocable in law. The Supreme Court in the Todd Case, supra, quotes approvingly from Hartley's Appeal, 53 Pa. 212, 91 Am. Dec. 207, as follows:

"To impart an irrevocable quality to a power of attorney in the absence of any express stipulation, and as the result of legal principles alone, there must coexist with the power an interest in the thing or estate to be disposed of or managed under the power."

We think that there is hardly a case that can be made to which these principles could have a more direct and fitting application than the case at bar. The Lane Company has a 20-year lease in the entire second floor of the 12-story building which is the subject of the power. That this is an interest there can be no question. Union Trust Co. v. Reed, 213 Mass. 199, 99 N. E. 1093; Inyo Water Co. v. Jess, 161 Cal. 516, 119 P. 934; Walther v. Sierra Ry. Co., 141 Cal. 288, 74 P. 840; Payne v. Neuval, 155 Cal. 46, 49, 99 P. 476; Friedman v. Macy, 17 Cal. 226; Dahlberg v. Haerberle, 71 N. J. Law, 514, 59 A. 92; Brickill v. Atlas Assurance Co., 10 Cal. App. 17, 101 P. 16; 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 1102. The interest does not arise only upon the execution of the power, as was the situation in Hunt v. Rousmanier, supra, or Todd v. Superior Court, supra. It is a live active, valuable interest, coupled with the power to the extent that if the power did not exist the interest would be subject to destruction or forfeiture. The lease, as hereinbefore pointed out, would be totally valueless in the absence of compliance with the provisions of the original land lease. The powers granted the Lane Company in their total amount to no more than placing in the hands of the company directly the means of preserving its said interest. This manifestly constitutes such a power as Chief Justice Marshall refers to in Hunt v. Rousmanier, namely, a power forming part of the contract and security for the performance of an act deemed valuable. The power in the present case was expressly made irrevocable and expressly tied to the entire transaction in the creation of the leasehold interest. We would concede that if the Lane Company merely held an agency to collect rents and retain 5 per cent. commission the agency would be revocable. But the mere fact that, incidental to the execution of the coupled power, an additional interest is created in the proceeds thus derived in no sense impairs the coupling of the power and interest theretofore existing.

Respondents insist that the agency is a mere naked power revocable at will. Their first contention, if sustained, would settle the dispute at once. They approach the problem of the connection between the power and the interest in much the same manner as was employed in the difficulties surrounding the untying of the Gordian knot. They contend first that by considering the power as separate and distinct from the interest, and not essential thereto, we have a simple agency. They then apply the accepted rule that such an agency is not coupled with an interest and therefore revocable. This contention is already determined.

[9] Next respondents contend that because the power may, at the option of the agent, be surrendered without affecting the leasehold interest, therefore the power and interest are not coupled sufficiently to meet the requirements of the rule. Arguendo, it could as well be determined that the insertion of this obviously cautionary provision would demonstrate the intended connection, and, recognizing the existence of the jointure, thus specified the saving of an interest which the loss of the coupled power might have destroyed. However, it is not necessary to argue the point. The security for the performance of an obligation may be voluntarily surrendered without impairing the said obligation, and the fact that the power and interest may at some time be severed by the voluntary act of Lane Company in no way alters the present connection between them as herein found to exist.

[10] Much is said by respondents on the point that the Lane Company was required to execute leases in the name of and subject to the approval of the lessors of the ground, the Hotel Company. Respondent argues that under the doctrine of the cases of Hunt v. Rousmanier, supra, and Todd v. Superior Court, supra, in order that a power may be coupled with an interest the agent must have the power to act in his own name. Such is not the doctrine of either case. As stated in the Todd Case:

"It is well settled * * * that in order to constitute an irrevocable power of attorney there must coexist with the power a beneficial interest * * * which is enforceable in the name of the attorney in fact and will survive the constituent; or the power must be given as security for the * * * performance of some act of value."

Here the beneficial interest is enforceable in the name of the agent, meaning, necessarily the interest which the agent has, and likewise is the power given as security.

In many of the decisions we find language somewhat confusing, more through an oddity of grammatical construction than otherwise. But the main principle to be kept in mind is that the entire doctrine under discussion pertains to and is a part of the relationship of principal and agent. If we discard the element of agency entirely, then there is no need for any rule as to when an agency is irrevocable. The paramount essential of agency is the representative capacity of the agent. If there is no principal, disclosed or undisclosed, there is no agency. Therefore, when respondents contend that the power must be one that the agent exercises as a principal, the argument becomes self-destructive.

[11] Finally, on this subject, respondents urge the equities of the case. Little need be noted on this phase of the case. Respondents took over the property from the Hotel Company with full knowledge of the Lane Company lease and agency, and the evidence discloses that this Lane Company contract was considered and allowed for in determining the value of the Hotel Company's land lease and the price to be paid for the building. The record supports the statement that at all times the respondents had in mind the cancellation of the Lane Company agency, and from the very outset were determined to terminate the same. It seems the clearest equity to protect the interest of Lane Company bought and paid for as against one who advisedly purchased with knowledge thereof. The Lane Company is bound under its contract to refrain from willful misconduct in the execution of its agency, and the court below found that the issue of willful misconduct had been abandoned at the trial, a conclusion from the fact that no evidence had been adduced on the part of the defendants on that issue.

Conceding then the nature of the agency, the next question presented is as to the remedy of injunction asked by plaintiff.

Respondents' contention that injunction does not lie is based chiefly on the assumption that the agency is not a power coupled with an interest. If the contrary is conceded in conformity with the holding heretofore, little is left of respondents' theory on this branch of the case.

[12-14] The early case of Posten v. Rassette, 5 Cal. 467, holds squarely that injunction is a proper remedy to prevent the revocation of an agency coupled with an interest. Throughout the years following this decision has never been questioned or disturbed. While the antiquity of this authority might be an argument against its present-day application, yet it is much more recent than the case of Hunt v. Rousmanier, the leading case today on the subject of powers coupled with interest.

Respondents argue that the contract in question is not capable of specific performance for the reason that it is a contract calling for personal services. Here again the basis of respondents' contention fails. It is unnecessary to here repeat what has preceded, but the views as hereinbefore set forth likewise determine this issue. While we do not hold that the contract in question is or could be specifically enforced, deeming that unnecessary to the decision, it is a settled rule of equity that the lack of this capability does not preclude a court from decreeing injunctive relief. See California Jurisprudence, 14, § 16 et seq., with authorities there cited. We hold that the powers conferred in the contract between Hotel Company and Lane Company are actual subsisting rights so connected with the property interests transferred as to entitle plaintiff to the relief prayed for.

[15] Respondents seem to concede that if the powers granted are not coupled with an interest, even then they would have no right to revoke excepting with a liability to compensate appellant for any damage ensuing. Respondents lay much stress on the distinction between the power to revoke and the right to revoke, but the authorities cited clearly indicate that where the agency is coupled with an interest the power to revoke does not remain in the principal. In Boehm v. Spreckels, 183 Cal. 239, 191 P. 5, it is said:

"There is a distinction between the power to revoke and the right to revoke an agency. Except where the agent's power is coupled with an interest, the power to revoke always exists, but the right to revoke without liability for damages depends upon circumstances."

Respondents contend that they are not interfering with or in anywise disturbing the leasehold interest by terminating the agency, and on that theory argue that necessarily the subject-matter of the present action is practically confined to the personal services involved in the agency. As hereinbefore pointed out, the value of the lease and the continuation of the enjoyment of the estate therein conferred are so intimately interwoven with the granted power that this contention of respondents needs no further discussion.

Finally, respondents argue that they do not intend to permit the original land lease to lapse or any forfeiture to occur thereunder, and that all of the fears of plaintiff are groundless. In other words, the Lane Company is as much protected without the power as with it, and there is therefore no need for equitable interference. It may as well be argued that the lease itself should be canceled for the reason that respondents would in no event disturb the possession of appellant Lane Company. From the very first connection of Crenshaw and Smailes with the property nothing but trouble has followed. The testimony discloses discord from the very first, characterized by the exchange of personal insult and vituperation and culminating in actual physical encounter. The evidence justifies the conclusion that these defendants are convinced that their best interests lie in ridding themselves of every burden fastened on the premises by the Hotel Company agreement with Lane Company. In this condition of affairs the fears of Lane Company cannot be said to be imaginary or groundless. The continued forbearance of appellant would but invite further aggression.

The only remaining question presented is on the scope of sections 1060 to 1062, inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure, dealing with declaratory relief. The court below declined to declare the rights of the parties under the contract in question, obviously deeming such declaration unnecessary. The constitutionality of those sections having been determined, there is no need to reopen that question. Blakeslee v. Wilson, 190 Cal. 484, 213 P. 495. Under the decision of the trial court that the agency was revocable and justifying the action of defendants in revoking, it was almost imperative that the rights of the parties be determined and declared. As we have held the lower court in error in this finding, there no longer remains a necessity to such a degree. As we have determined the agency irrevocable, and injunction the proper remedy to prevent acts constituting a revocation, it will result in plaintiff having the management and control of the premises, together with such other powers as are contained in the contract between Hotel Company and Lane Company.

[16, 17] As the record shows beyond question that an actual controversy remains and is being continuously waged, we deem it the duty of the trial court upon further hearing to specifically determine and declare the rights of the parties during the term of the lease. Such questions as the right of having the building retain the name of Lane Mortgage Building, the right to display signs thereon, the right to change the uniforms of attendants or the insignia thereon should be declared. This case presents a controversy to which declaratory relief peculiarly applies. Presenting, as it does, the unusual situation of a lessee and agent in control of a valuable twelve-story building through a lease and agency covering one floor thereof, it cannot but be anticipated that the rights of the respective parties may continue to be the subject of prolonged litigation. It was just such a case that the provisions of our law regarding declaratory relief were designed to meet and accommodate. See Blakeslee v. Wilson, supra, and cases and articles cited therein. See, also, article by W. Turney Fox, professor of law, University Southern California, in Bar Association Bulletin, vol. II, No. 2, September 16, 1926, with authorities cited. Such a declaration, being determinable upon findings of fact not made, cannot be made by this court, but remains for the court below upon the evidence therein presented.

In conclusion, it may appear that the holding results in the true ownership of the building being subordinated to a lesser interest and to that extent impaired. The obvious answer is that one may burden his property as he sees fit, within the law, and that the condition as it is here results solely from the acts of the parties themselves. Defendants possibly speculated upon their ability to cancel the agency, and took the property with their eyes wide open and evidently advised. Next, no injustice is apparent in view of the fact that willful misconduct on the part of Lane Company is sufficient to avoid the contract. Further, it may be noted that the original land lease was the result of the efforts of Lane Company, and it is fair to assume from the record that without the active aid of Lane Company the Hotel Company would not have secured the lease nor would they have been able to build at all. With these things in mind, the view changes somewhat.

With reference to the issues presented as against the defendant Clarke, these have become moot and need not be determined.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

93 Cal. App. 202

RIEDY et al. v. BIDWELL.*

COOK v. SAME.

(Civ. 6286.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 18, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 13, 1928.

1. Appeal and error §1212(3)—Effect of unqualified reversal is to remand case for new trial on all issues.

Effect of unqualified reversal of judgment is to remand case for new trial on all of issues presented by the pleadings; decision upon former appeal being law of case when evidence does not warrant a different conclusion.

2. Appeal and error §1195(1)—Decision of appellate court on questions of fact does not become law of case.

It is well settled that decision of appellate court on question of fact does not become the law of the case.

3. Appeal and error §931(1)—Reviewing court will presume that findings are supported, where no claim of insufficiency of evidence is made.

Where no assignment is made on appeal that evidence is insufficient to support findings, and court's attention is not directed to insufficiency of evidence, court will presume that findings are supported.

4. Appeal and error §1195(4)—Where evidence and findings on second trial were different, and findings were not challenged, rule of law of case did not apply, and setting case at large was not error.

Where there was some evidence introduced at second trial which was unlike evidence at first trial, and court at second trial made different findings of fact, which were not attacked on appeal as without support in evidence, action of court in setting case at large was not error, since rule of law of case had no application.

5. Evidence §234—Where claim for services was assigned for purpose of bringing suit, statements against interest of assignor held admissible in suit by assignee (Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 5).

In assignee's suit on claim for services, assigned for purpose of bringing suit, permitting introduction of letter written by plaintiff's assignor containing statement, "I told him I didn't know anything to bring suit for," and permitting assignor to testify, held not error; assignor's statements against interest being admissible, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 5.

6. Evidence §234—Where contract sued on involved agreement to employ three parties, admission of one as to nonexistence of contract was admissible as against assignee of another (Code Civ. Proc. § 1870).

Where contract sued on involved agreement for employment of three persons to receive monthly wage and excess of net profits of business, admissions against interest by one of the three parties, by which existence of contract was denied, were admissible in suit on contract as against the assignee of one of the other parties, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870.

7. Trial §296(10)—Parenthetical remarks of court withdrawing part of instruction as to witnesses, whose character for truth has been impeached, held not erroneous, in view of other instructions.

Instruction that presumption that truth of witness' testimony may be repelled by manner in which he testifies, by character of testimony, "or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, or integrity (by the way, that portion of the instruction should be omitted because there has been no attack against any of the witnesses in that regard)," held not erroneous, on ground that remarks parenthetically made destroyed instruction or withdrew question of credibility from jury, in view of other instructions, where no witness' veracity was impeached, though witnesses were contradicted.

Appeals from Superior Court, San Diego County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Actions by Elizabeth Riedy and husband and by Charles Cook against George M. Bidwell. Judgments for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

L. E. Dadmun, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Adam Thompson and Renwick Thompson, both of San Diego, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. Two actions were brought, one by Elizabeth Riedy and Tom Riedy, husband and wife, against George M. Bidwell, and the other by Charles Cook against George M. Bidwell. The former is to recover $12,250.92, based upon two causes of action, one for services alleged to have been rendered by plaintiff Elizabeth Riedy, and the other on an assigned claim of E. M. Tinney; both causes of action being based upon the same ground. The latter action is brought to recover $6,125.46 upon the same theory as is set forth in the action of Elizabeth and Tom Riedy against George M. Bidwell.

The contract alleged is the same in the case of Elizabeth and Tom Riedy against Bidwell; in the assigned cause of action by Tinney to Elizabeth Riedy, and in the action of Cook against Bidwell, the contract alleged being that, on or about February 1, 1919, defendant entered into an agreement of employment with Elizabeth Riedy, Charles Cook, and E. M. Tinney that, if they would stay and help him run and manage the business, he would pay and give to each of them the amount they were then receiving monthly, and in addition thereto he would pay and give to them all net profits which they would earn in the business over and above 6 per cent. on the investment, after deducting all the expenses connected with the running of the business. The cases were not consolidated, but were by stipulation tried together, and both appeals are presented under one record in conformity with the trial of the case and pursuant to stipulation.

This is the second trial of the actions. In the first trial, the court found in favor of plaintiffs upon the contract, but held the contract void. On appeal, however, the appellate court held the contract valid, and reversed the judgment. At this trial, and before any evidence was introduced, the plaintiffs contended that the only issue the court had a right to try was the amount due under the contract; that the other issues had been determined by the former trial court, and the only issue undetermined was the amount due, and the court could not under the law of the case determine whether or not there was any contract, as that had already been determined in favor of plaintiffs. The court overruled plaintiffs' contention, denied their motion to limit the issues to the amount due, and ordered the issues at large to be tried. The second trial was before a jury, which rendered a special verdict in favor of defendant George M. Bidwell in each case, and which special verdicts were adopted by the court in its findings, and judgments were rendered thereon in favor of defendant.

There was a stipulation entered into between counsel for the respective parties that, so far as the jury was concerned, there was only one issue to be presented to them, and that whether or not any contract was entered into, that the question whether or not anything is due under the contract, and, if so, how much, would be directed to the court entirely and by the court decided; and by consent the two special verdicts, which were answered in favor of the defendant, were submitted to the jury.

Appellants urge that the court erred in setting the case at large and permitting evidence to be received on the question as to the existence of a contract; that there was no evidence so as to materially change the issue to entitle the court to put the case at large; the court erred in instructions to the jury; the court erred in holding the contract sued on one entire contract; the court erred in permitting the introduction of the letter written by E. M. Tinney and permitting Tinney to testify over objections of plaintiffs; the testimony of Woodruff was inadmissible against appellant Riedy; and that the motion of appellants for directed verdict should have been granted.

[1-4] The first two contentions, regarding setting the case at large and that there was no evidence to materially change the issue so as to entitle the court to put the case at large, are without merit. In reversing the case (Riedy v. Bidwell, 70 Cal. App. 552, 233 P. 995), the court merely ordered, "The judgment is reversed." The effect of this unqualified reversal was to remand the case for a new trial on all the issues presented by the pleadings (Falkner v. Hendy, 107 Cal. 54, 40 P. 21, 386); the decision upon the former appeal being the law of the case when the evidence does not warrant a different conclusion (McGraw v. Friend & Terry Co., 133 Cal. 589, 65 P. 1051; Adams v. Thornton, 5 Cal. App. 455, 90 P. 713). The rule of law of the case has no application to facts, and it is settled beyond controversy that the decision of an appellate court on questions of fact does not become the law of the case. Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 517, 39 P. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87; Moore v. Trott, 162 Cal. 273, 122 P. 462. Here, however, it cannot be contended that the findings of the trial court are the same as the findings of the court on the former trial, and, no assignment being made that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings and our attention not being directed to the fact of the insufficiency of the evidence, this court will presume that such findings find support in the evidence. "The facts of this case must control the findings, and the court found the facts to be different in the second trial from the facts at the first trial; and by the facts as now found must we be guided." Stockton, etc., Wks. v. Glens, etc., 1 Co., 121 Cal. 174, 53 P. 569. There was unquestionably some evidence introduced at the second trial which was lacking at the first, particularly the testimony of Jess Woodruff as to a conversation he had with plaintiff, Charles Cook, about a week before the second trial and which could not therefore have been given at the first trial, in which Cook stated to him:

"Well, Mrs. Riedy wanted me to see you and see if you could not help us out.' It is pretty hard to remember—there was something, I think about Jim Young came up—'Jim had gone the limit to help us put over the contract, but of course, there was not any contract, but we put it over just the same' or something to that effect.

"Q. Do you remember anything else that was said by either you or Cook? A. I said I could not do anything like that; my evidence had already gone in in the last trial.

"Q. Did he reply to that? A. He says, 'Couldn't you change your evidence and be mistaken in some of it in regard to this bonus and say there was a contract,' and I says, 'No; I couldn't do that.'"

There was also a letter written by E. M. Tinney, who assigned his claim to plaintiff Elizabeth Riedy, to defendant, which was not offered in evidence at the first trial. This letter had reference to the meeting of Riedy and his wife and Cook and Tinney at the office of Attorney Dadmun, when they were all present and consulting regarding bringing suit. In the letter appears this statement: "I told him I didn't know anything to bring suit for."

As to appellants' contention that the court erred in holding the contract sued on one entire contract and not divisible, it may be said that from a reading of the contract alleged it appears that there is in fact only one contract. They bear the same date—February 1, 1919—and each alleges that, if Elizabeth Riedy, together with Charles Cook and E. M. Tinney, would stay and help defendant run and manage his business, he would pay and give to Elizabeth Riedy, Charles Cook, and E. M. Tinney the amount which they were then receiving, and in addition thereto he would give them all the net profits which they could earn in the business over and above 6 per cent. on the investment. The court, adopting the special verdicts of the jury, found that no contract of any character was entered into, and, there being no contract, it is immaterial whether the contract as alleged is entire or divisible.

[5] It may likewise be said that there is no merit in appellants' contention next set forth that the court erred in permitting the introduction of the letter written by E. M. Tinney and permitting Tinney to testify over the objection of plaintiffs. Tinney was an assignor of plaintiff Elizabeth Riedy, having assigned his claim to her for the purpose of bringing suit, and therefore his statements against his interest are admissible in a suit by the assignee on his assigned claim. In Bollinger v. Bollinger, 153 Cal. 190, 195, 94 P. 770, 772, in a case similar to the one presented here, the court says:

"This testimony, if true, amounts to an admission by David that he had no contract or agreement with George, and thus drags down the very foundation of the cause of action here pleaded," and the "evidence was material and important."

And section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"In conformity with the preceding provisions, evidence may be given upon a trial of the following facts. * * * [Subdivision] 5. After proof of a partnership or agency, the act or declaration of a partner or agent of the party, within the scope of the partnership or agency, and during its existence. The same rule applies to the act or declaration of a joint owner, joint debtor, or other person jointly interested with the party."

[6] The court did not err in admitting the testimony of the witness Woodruff against appellant Riedy above quoted, for, as has been said, the allegations of the complaint show that there existed a community of interest in the contract alleged, between appellants Riedy and Cook, and Tinney, the assignor of appellant Elizabeth Riedy. Tracy v. Colby, 55 Cal. 67, 70; 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, 172; Code Civ. Proc. § 1870.

[7] Appellants complain that the court erred in instructing the jury. The instruction complained of is:

"You are further instructed that a witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he or she testifies, by the character of his or her testimony, or by evidence affecting his or her character for truth, honesty, or integrity (by the way, that portion of the instruction should be omitted because there has been no attack on any of the witnesses in this case in that regard), or his motives, or by contradictory evidence, or by his interest in the matter, if any, and the jury is the exclusive judge of his or her credibility."

Appellants urge that the remarks of the court made parenthetically destroy the entire instruction, and that the further vice of the instruction is to take away the right of the jury to determine the testimony for themselves and arrive at the facts. All that the court eliminated from the instruction by its parenthetical remark was, "or by evidence affecting his or her character for truth, honesty, or integrity," and, as there was no evidence introduced that the character of any witness for truth, honesty, or integrity is bad, it was not the duty of the court to instruct the jury on this question.

Appellants contend that, as evidence was offered to contradict the statements made by the witnesses Tinney and Woodruff, the effect of withdrawing from the jury that portion of the instruction stating that the presumption that a witness speaks the truth may be repelled "by evidence affecting his or her character for truth, honesty, or integrity," had the effect of stamping the testimony of Tinney and Woodruff with truth and verity. We do not agree with this contention. Furthermore, the court instructed the jury:

"A witness may also be impeached by evidence that he has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony as to any matter material to the cause on trial."

And also:

"The jury are the sole and exclusive judges of the effect and value of evidence addressed to them, and of the credibility of the witnesses who have testified in the case, and the character of the witnesses as shown by the evidence should be taken into consideration for the purpose of determining their credibility, and the fact as to whether they have spoken the truth, and the jury may scrutinize, not only the manner of witnesses while on the stand, their relation to the case, if any, but also their degree of intelligence."

From what has been said, it follows that there is likewise no merit in appellants' final contention that the motion for a directed verdict should have been granted.

The judgments are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

93 Cal. App. 196

LOPEZ et al. v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO.
(Civ. 3547.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 17, 1928.

I. Limitation of actions $\S$ 130(11)—Master and servant $\S$ 389—Compensation insurance carrier, joining in widow's action for death under stipulation, could proceed independently after nonsuit, notwithstanding limitation statute (Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act 1917, $\S\S$ 26, 69; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 340).

Compensation insurance carrier of deceased's employer, joining in widow's action for death as party plaintiff under Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act 1917 (St.

1917, p. 831) $\S$ 26, and under stipulation giving it first lien on any amount awarded to widow to reimburse it for expenditures, was entitled to proceed with action independently, notwithstanding failure of widow to appeal after nonsuit, and permitting insurance company to proceed with the action alone did not violate one-year limitation provided by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 340, insurance company having usual rights incident to a party, and Compensation Act being liberally construed under section 69 thereof.

2. Parties $\S$ 51(4)—Refusal to permit employer's insurance carrier, joining as plaintiff in widow's death action, to amend pleading to bring in as plaintiffs heirs unknown before trial, held error (Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act 1917, $\S\S$ 26, 69; Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 377, 340).

In action for death by widow, in which compensation insurance carrier of deceased's employer was joined as party plaintiff under stipulation and Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831) $\S$ 26, insurance carrier, on court's exclusion of evidence on ground that some of the heirs were not included as plaintiffs, as required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 377, was entitled to amend complaint by bringing in any omitted heirs, and refusal of such amendment was error, where it was not shown that the insurance carrier previously knew of the existence of other heirs, since the Compensation Act under section 69 is to be liberally construed, and the one-year limitation provided by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 340, was not violated.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Maria de Los Angeles Lopez and the American Mutual Liability Insurance Company against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From an order of nonsuit, the last-named plaintiff appeals. Order reversed, in so far as it relates to appellant, with directions.

Willis I. Morrison, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Karr, E. E. Morris, and C. W. Cornell, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Walter C. Durst, of Los Angeles, for Lopez.

WEYAND, Justice pro tem. On May 19, 1923, one Estanislao Martinez was killed at Wilmington, Los Angeles County, Cal., by the alleged negligence of the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company. Within one year thereafter, and on May 7, 1924, Maria de Los Angeles Lopez filed her complaint in the superior court of Los Angeles county for damages in the sum of $15,000; she claiming to be the widow and the sole heir at law of the deceased Martinez.

This action did not come to trial until September 18, 1925, more than one year after the death of Martinez. Upon the last-named date, pursuant to a written stipulation of the attorneys representing both the plaintiff and the defendant company, an order was made permitting the American Mutual Liability Insurance Company to join as a plaintiff. As much discussion follows with regard to the wording of this stipulation and order, we will give them in full. The stipulation was worded as follows:

"It is hereby stipulated between the above-named parties and the American Mutual Liability Insurance Company, a corporation, through their respective counsel, that the last-named corporation was the compensation insurance carrier of the Banning Company, the employer of Estanislao Martinez, deceased, at the time of the injury and death for which recovery is sought, and may be joined as a party plaintiff in the above-entitled action, and that it shall have a first lien on any amount awarded to the above-named plaintiff, such lien, however, to be limited in extent to the amount of such expenditures as it may have made for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1917 as amended."

The order of the court permitting the insurance company to join in the action as a plaintiff was worded as follows:

"Pursuant to the written stipulation of the parties to this action, the order is now made that the American Mutual Liability Insurance Company, a corporation, be joined as a party plaintiff along with Maria de Los Angeles Lopez, the present plaintiff."

After the making of this order, a jury was regularly impaneled, and the trial begun. Mrs. Lopez was called as a witness in her own behalf, and it developed from her testimony that the deceased had brothers and sisters living who were not made parties to the action. It appeared that the deceased left surviving him neither parents nor offspring.

A witness was then introduced, who was proceeding to testify as to the details of the alleged accident, whereupon a motion was made by the attorney for the defendant railway company to exclude further evidence in the case, "on the ground that the parties plaintiff are not all the heirs, as provided for under section 377 (Code Civ. Proc.) as has been shown by the testimony of the plaintiff herself that the deceased left several brothers and sisters." This motion was granted by the trial court.

Immediately thereupon the attorney for the insurance company asked for permission to amend the complaint, to set up the fact that at the time of the alleged accident the deceased was an employee of the Banning Company, that the Banning Company was insured with the American Mutual Liability Insurance Company, that this insurance company paid compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Insurance Law, and that there were other heirs as shown by the testimony, and that none of these heirs sustained any pecuniary loss by reason of the death of the deceased Martinez; and to amend the prayer to the complaint, praying, first, for the total damages sustained by the widow and the insurance carrier, and, secondly, for the amount of compensation paid out by the insurance carrier. The original plaintiff made no request for permission to amend.

Counsel for the railway company then objected to the granting of this permission to amend, upon the following grounds:

"That this is an attempt to set up a new cause of action, setting up a subrogation of the insurance company for and on behalf and on account of money expended by reason of the death of the deceased, which would be a new cause of action. The second reason is that under the stipulation it came in as a party plaintiff merely for the purpose of participating in any judgment that might be rendered in favor of the plaintiff Maria de Los Angeles Lopez, and to that extent only in which they could possibly recover from the Pacific Electric Railway Company in all other actions or in any other amended complaint which they might attempt to set up. That would be under section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

The language of counsel is far from lucid. We take it to mean that, because the year within which such an action could be brought had elapsed, the insurance company could not amend, to state a new cause of action.

The record discloses no formal ruling, either on the request to amend or upon the objection to the offer so to do; but immediately thereupon counsel for the railway company moved the court for a nonsuit, upon the following grounds:

"On the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, after the examination of the plaintiff herself, which developed that there were heirs existing who should have been made parties plaintiff or defendant, and it being fatally defective under section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

This motion for nonsuit was granted. The original plaintiff, Mrs. Lopez, did not appeal. This appeal is by the insurance company alone.

As this matter is presented, it resolves itself into the question as to whether the stipulation and order of the court limited the plaintiff insurance company so as to share in any judgment Mrs. Lopez would obtain, or whether, by making the order admitting the company as a party plaintiff, this company became a party plaintiff in its own right, to the end that it could enforce its rights independent of and even adversely to the original claimant.

[1] The right of the insurance company to join as a plaintiff is given by section 26 of the Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831). This law is to be liberally construed. Section 69 of the above statute.

At the time the nonsuit was granted, Rabe v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 47 Cal. App. Dec. 521, had just been decided by the ap pellate court. That case decided that heirs omitted from the original complaint could not be joined after the one-year limitation provided for by section 340, Code of Civil Procedure. That case, however, was reheard by the Supreme Court, and the contrary doctrine was announced. See Rabe v. Western Union, etc., Co., 198 Cal. 290, 244 P. 1077.

The plaintiff insurance company was in court and made request that the complaint be amended. The Workmen's Compensation Law, § 26, supra, provided that such an insurer may join as a party at any time before trial and have a lien upon any judgment the heir may recover, to the extent of the loss paid by it. If this provision of the act is to be liberally construed, it should be taken to mean that, if upon proper application, at any time, before trial, a party is admitted, it entitles such person to be an independent party to the cause.

It is true the stipulation was worded so as to permit participation in any judgment the original plaintiff might obtain. We cannot, however, construe that stipulation and order as meaning that the appellant here did not have the usual rights of a plaintiff to control its own case. Respondent contends, in effect, that, because the plaintiff Lopez failed to appeal, the judgment against her has become final, and that as she cannot now obtain a judgment against defendant railway company, to now allow the insurance company to proceed with the action, after the one-year limitation provided for by section 340, Code of Civil Procedure, is to allow the insurance company to bring its action, although the year has expired.

The original parties, by stipulation, allowed the insurance company to join as a plaintiff. If any objection is to be urged on that ground, it should have been made upon the presentation of their motion to be joined as such plaintiff. Again, the cause of action for the death of Martinez was already brought within the limitation provided for by section 340, Code of Civil Procedure. See Rabe v. Western Union, etc., Co., supra. Quoting from the Rabe Case: "Defendants would have suffered no prejudice by bringing in the absent heirs as no issue would have been changed thereby." Still, again, the Workmen's Compensation Insurance Act gives to an insurer who has paid an indemnity the right to enter his appearance at any time before trial.

We are of the opinion that there is nothing in the language of the stipulation that limits a recovery by the insurance company, and makes a recovery by them dependent solely upon a recovery by the original plaintiff. It is true that in a certain sense the measure of recovery by the widow would limit the recovery by the insurer, but, giving the stipulation and order a fair construction, they should mean that the insurer, when admitted, becomes a party with all the usual rights incident to being a party.

[2] Then we come to the sole question: "Was the request to amend a reasonable and proper request under the circumstances?" The original plaintiff was a Mexican woman. Her testimony was elicited through an interpreter. There was nothing to indicate that she omitted the heirs for a fraudulent purpose. The insurance company had a right to rely upon her verified complaint as filed. As far as shown by the record, the first intimation that any of the attorneys, either for the widow or the insurer, had, as to there being other heirs, was upon the trial. Under such circumstances as here shown, we believe it was error to refuse the request to amend. Rabe v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 198 Cal. 290, 299, 244 P. 1077.

For the foregoing reasons the order granting the nonsuit, in so far as it relates to the appellant American Mutual Liability Insurance Company, is reversed, with directions that it be allowed to amend the complaint on file by bringing in the omitted heirs, either as plaintiffs or defendants, as it may be advised.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

93 Cal. App. 435

PEOPLE v. GREEN. (Cr. 1671.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 3, 1928.

1. Criminal law §742(1), 1159(4)—Inconsistencies in testimony are for jury's determination, which is not disturbed unless verdict is without substantial foundation.

Inconsistencies in testimony merely affect its weight or credibility, and determination of the truth of the testimony is solely for the jury, and is not interfered with on appeal, unless jury's verdict is without substantial foundation.

2. Robbery §24(3)—Verdict of guilty held not contrary to evidence, notwithstanding inconsistencies in identification of defendant.

Inconsistencies in testimony identifying defendant as perpetrator of alleged robbery did not make the verdict of guilty contrary to the evidence, so as to require reversal.

3. Robbery §24(1)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for first degree robbery (Pen. Code, § 211a).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain verdict of defendant's guilt of robbery in first degree as sufficiently showing defendant was armed under Pen. Code, § 211a, and as sufficiently proving identification.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Johnnie Green was convicted of robbery, and she appeals. Affirmed.

S. S. Hahn and Thomas E. Parke, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime of robbery and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] The first point advanced by appellant is that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. In that connection it is contended that the testimony by which the identification of defendant as the robber was established was so weak and unsatisfactory that "there is no evidence worthy of the name to identify the defendant, Johnnie Green, as one of the perpetrators of the offense." Condensing the testimony relating to the commission of the crime of which defendant was charged, it appears that defendant was positively identified by the complaining witness as one of the robbers. However, on cross-examination, the attention of the witness was directed to the fact that on a former trial of defendant, in giving a description of defendant, the witness had stated that the color of her eyes was blue, whereas, as a matter of fact, they were black; also that, although the defendant had a somewhat prominent scar on her nose, "the complaining witness did not notice it" on the occasion when the robbery occurred. The evidence further showed that at the time in question "the lady * * * was quite painted up * * * with powder and rouge."

It is well settled that inconsistencies of the nature of those to which attention has been directed to do no more than affect the weight or the credibility which is to attach to the testimony in question. The evidence was sufficient in itself, and the determination of the truth lay entirely with the jury. As was said in People v. McKelvey (Cal. App.) 267 P. 390:

"To the jury, as the sole judges of the credibility of a witness, is assigned the duty of determining the weight to be given to the testimony of a witness, and, when the jury has performed this function and entered its decision, neither the trial court nor this court on review will interfere with that decision unless it appears that the verdict was without substantial foundation."

To the same effect see People v. Kelly, 146 Cal. 119, 121, 79 P. 846; People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 326, 184 P. 389; People v. Logan, 123 Cal. 414, 415, 56 P. 56; People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 540, 543; People v. Booth, 72 Cal. App. 160, 164, 236 P. 987; People v. Bigelow, 64 Cal. App. 731, 732, 222 P. 622; People v. Franklin, 46 Cal. App. 1, 4, 188 P. 607. It must therefore be concluded that the point suggested by appellant cannot be sustained.

[3] It is also urged by appellant that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict that defendant was guilty of robbery in the first degree. With reference thereto, the evidence showed that at the time the robbery occurred appellant and her codefendant "walked into the station," and her codefendant demanded that the prosecuting witness open the cash register. "He had his right hand in his right-hand coat pocket," and * * * "he just held it up like he had a gun in it." The witness also testified that at that time he "saw a nickel-plated gun in the bottom of the purse" in the possession of this appellant.

Section 211a of the Penal Code provides that "all robbery which is perpetrated by * * * being armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon is robbery in the first degree."

The claim of appellant is that the evidence shows only that the complaining witness was frightened; that he thought the companion of appellant had a "gun" in his pocket; also in his fright, what the complaining witness took for a "gun" in the purse of appellant might have been a "plated vanity" case, and would not overcome the presumption of innocence to which defendant is entitled. Such a suggestion might have constituted a basis for argument to the jury, but it is of no avail on appeal from the judgment. The testimony of the complaining witness was positive. It must therefore be assumed that, as expressed in its verdict, the jury believed from the evidence that appellant was "armed" at the time the offense was perpetrated, which is all that the statute requires.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

In re ARKLE'S ESTATE.★

DRAKE v. ARKLE.

(Civ. 6292.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 2, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 1, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 1, 1928.

1. Guardian and ward ⇨13(3)—Order appointing guardian held void for failure to notify minor's father, where petitioner knew father's address and failed to show why notice could not be given (Code Civ. Proc. § 1747).

Where residence of father of the minor was known to petitioner for letters of guardianship, and no notice of hearing was given father and no proof made to the court by way of excuse for not giving notice, order appointing guardian was void under Code Civ. Proc. § 1747, requiring that notice be given parents or proof made to court that notice could not be given.

2. Guardian and ward ⇨10—Father, where competent, had prior right to guardianship of minor child as against maternal grandmother (Code Civ. Proc. § 1751).

As between father of minor and maternal grandmother, father, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1751, was entitled to letters of guardianship where competent, competency being presumed.

3. Guardian and ward ⇨10—Agreement of father that on death of himself or his wife maternal grandmother should have custody and control of child held not to prevent father's appointment as guardian after mother's death (Code Civ. Proc. § 1751).

Agreement of father that on death of himself or his wife the maternal grandmother should have custody of the minor child and the direction and control of his education held not to prevent court's appointment of father as guardian after mother's death, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1751, since right of parties to stipulate as to custody and control of their offspring is subject to court's determination.

4. Parent and child ⇨2(2)—Court is not required to award custody of child in accordance with stipulation of parents.

Right of parents to contract with each other as to custody and control of their offspring is subject to control of court in matters affecting the child, and the court is not required to award its custody in accordance with such stipulation.

5. Guardian and ward ⇨10—Divorce decree awarding child to maternal grandmother and mother's nomination of grandmother as guardian held not to prevent appointment of father as guardian after mother's death (Code Civ. Proc. § 1751; Civ. Code, §§ 138, 241).

Decree of divorce awarding care and custody of minor child to maternal grandmother and will of mother nominating grandmother as guardian, without father's consent, held not to prevent court's appointment of father as guardian of child after mother's death in preference to maternal grandmother, under Code Civ. Proc.

§ 1751, and Civ. Code, § 241, permitting appointment of guardian by one parent alone only in case other is dead or incapable of consenting, and in view of Civ. Code, § 138, under which divorce decree merely determines custody of child until some further disposition is made.

6. Guardian and ward ⇨10—Divorce decree awarding custody of child to mother does not permit mother to appoint guardian without father's consent (Civ. Code, §§ 138, 241).

Decree of divorce awarding custody of child to mother under Civ. Code, § 138, does not render father incapable of consenting to disposition of child or end father's rights, so as to permit mother's appointment of guardian by will without father's consent under section 241, permitting either parent to appoint guardian "if the other be dead or incapable of consent."

7. Parent and child ⇨2(2)—On death of parent awarded custody of child under divorce decree, other parent becomes entitled to its custody (Civ. Code, § 138).

Decree of divorce determining custody of child under Civ. Code, § 138, merely applies until some other disposition is made, and upon death of parent to whom custody of minor child is awarded the other parent becomes entitled to its custody.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Proceedings by Alwyn W. Arkle against Maggie Belle Drake for revocation of letters of guardianship of the person and estate of Thomas Dudley Arkle, issued to defendant. From a judgment for petitioner revoking defendant's letters of guardianship, and from an order appointing petitioner as guardian, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Jones, Wilson & Stephenson and Leonard Wilson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment revoking letters of guardianship of the person and estate of Thomas Dudley Arkle, a minor, issued to Maggie Belle Drake, the maternal grandmother of such minor, and also from the order of the court appointing Alwyn W. Arkle, the father, as guardian.

Respondent Alwyn W. Arkle and Whitney Lee Arkle intermarried October 14, 1920, at Paris, Ky., and a son, Thomas Dudley Arkle, was born of this marriage August 8, 1921. Respondent and the daughter of appellant lived together as husband and wife at Lexington, Ky., from March, 1922, till November 19, 1922, when respondent and his wife separated, respondent going to live with his parents. Prior to the date of separation respondent and his wife entered into an agreement regarding the future care, custody, and control of their minor child, Thomas Dudley Arkle, and provided in the agreement that the care, custody and control of such minor, in the event of the death of either respondent or his wife, should be in the maternal grandmother, Maggie Belle Drake. In January, subsequent to the separation between respondent and his wife, appellant herein and respondent's wife came to Los Angeles, arriving about January 16, 1923, bringing with them the minor child. Respondent received two letters and one postcard from his wife en route and received about a dozen letters from her after she arrived in California and wrote to her every day after she arrived in California. Respondent arrived in Los Angeles in March, 1923, and went to where his wife and appellant were living in the Kentucky Apartments in that city. He asked appellant if he could see his wife, and appellant replied that he could see neither his wife, who was ill and the shock might kill her, nor his minor son, who was sleeping at the time. Respondent then returned to Lexington, Ky., and wrote several letters to his wife and received no answer. Some of the letters were sent by registered mail and return receipt demanded. Respondent did get cards in return, which were lost. The name of Maggie Belle Drake was on most of the cards. These letters were sent for the purpose of trying to locate his wife. The first that respondent learned of the death of his wife was the date her ashes arrived in Lexington about September 1, 1924.

On March 15, 1923, appellant's daughter made her will, in which, aside from personal effects, she devised and bequeathed all of her property to her mother, appellant herein, and in said will nominated and appointed appellant to be guardian of the person and estate of Thomas Dudley Arkle. On January 21, 1924, appellant's daughter instituted an action for divorce and respondent defaulted, and an interlocutory decree was entered on May 29, 1924. On February 5, 1924, respondent instituted an action for divorce against his wife in the state of Kentucky, but judgment therein was not offered in evidence. Respondent's wife died August 24, 1924, at Van Nuys, Los Angeles county, Cal. Upon the death of the minor's mother and about August 24, 1924, appellant Maggie Belle Drake, the maternal grandmother, filed her petition for the appointment of herself as the guardian of the person and estate of the minor, Thomas Dudley Arkle, and was on September 24, 1924, appointed guardian. On July 28, 1925, respondent, as the father of the child, filed a petition to revoke the letters of guardianship issued to Maggie Belle Drake. In respondent's petition for the revocation of the letters of guardianship he claimed, among other grounds, failure of the statutory notice to him of such petition. Appellant replied to respondent's petition, and among other defenses, and in support of her appointment as guardian set up the agreement entered into between respondent and his wife wherein the father and mother of the minor child had agreed that she—the maternal grandmother—in the event of the death of either of its parents, should have the actual custody of such child and should have the direction and control of his education and become the advisor of any guardian or trustee that might be appointed for the holding or management of the estate of such minor. Upon the trial of the issue of guardianship the court rendered judgment in favor of respondent and revoked the letters of guardianship issued to Maggie Belle Drake.

[1] The original petition for letters of guardianship filed by appellant among other things stated that Alwyn W. Arkle is the father of the minor child and resides in Lexington, Ky. It is therefore apparent that the residence of respondent, the father of the minor, was known to the petitioner for letters of guardianship, and no notice of the hearing was given him, and no proof was made to the court that for some reason notice of the hearing could not be given. The petition was filed in August, 1924, and therefore subsequent to the amendment of section 1747 of the Code of Civil Procedure, adopted in 1921, providing:

"Notice of Proceeding.—Before making such appointment, the court must cause such notice as such court deems reasonable to be given to any person having the care of such minor, and to such relatives of the minor residing in the county as the court may deem proper. In all cases notice must be given to the parents of the minor or proof made to the court that their addresses are unknown, or that, for other reason, such notice cannot be given."

This amendment was before the court in Re Esther Dahnke, 64 Cal. App. 555, 559, 222 P. 381, 383, wherein the court says:

"If, as the order of revocation recites, no notice of the hearing of appellant's petition for letters of guardianship was given to the mother and no proof was made to the court either that her address was unknown or that for some other reason notice could not be given her, then the court was without jurisdiction to make the order appointing appellant guardian of his daughter's person and estate. Section 1747 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1921, provides: 'In all cases notice must be given to the parents of the minor or proof made to the court that their addresses are unknown, or that, for other reason, such notice can not be given.' Obviously this means that, if the parents' addresses be known, and no reason exists why notice cannot be given them, notice of the petition for letters of guardianship must be given to both parents. So that, if both parents be living, and if one of them be the petitioner for the letters of guardianship, notice must be given to the other if his or her address be known and no reason exists why it cannot be given. A fortiori must this be so where, as here, the parents are living separate and apart from each other. By the express terms of the statute it is made mandatory that notice be given to the nonpetitioning parent, or that, if such notice be not given, proof be made either that such parent's address was unknown or that there was some valid reason why the notice could not or should not be given. The power of the court to appoint the guardian is a special power conferred by statute, and the provisions of the statute as to notice must be substantially followed in order to make valid the exercise of the power; for compliance with the statute is a condition precedent to the valid exercise of the power, and is jurisdictional. Any attempt to exercise the power of appointment without compliance with such express requirement is a nullity. See Estate of [Eikerenkotter], 126 Cal. 54, 58 Pac. 370; In the Matter of Lundberg, 143 Cal. 407, 77 Pac. 158."

[2] In the present case the court found that each of the parties to the contest was a fit and proper person and properly qualified to act as guardian, and therefore respondent, being the father of the minor, has priority of right over appellant, the maternal grandmother, unless this right is lost to him by reason of the agreement made with his wife respecting the custody of the child in the event of the death of either of them. In the Matter of Forrester, 162 Cal. 493, 123 P. 283, the court says:

"The minor was of the age of 19 months when this proceeding was instituted. Under the provisions of section 1751 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is made the duty of the court to appoint the father or mother of a minor child under the age of 14 years, if such parent is 'found by the court competent to discharge the duties of guardianship.' Inasmuch as the presumption of law is in favor of competency, 'the section is to be construed as if it read that the father or mother is to be appointed if not found by the court incompetent.' In re Campbell, 130 Cal. 380, 62 P. 613. Accordingly, where the father is competent, he is entitled to letters of guardianship in preference to the grandmother, even though the court may find that the child's health and welfare would be promoted by granting guardianship to the grandmother. Guardianship of Salter, 142 Cal. 412, 76 P. 51. In a case like this, the primary subject of inquiry is, then, the competency of the parent applying to act as guardian. If found competent, he or she must be appointed as against a more distant relative or a stranger."

[3, 4] Appellant contends that the father has irrevocably waived his right to be appointed guardian by reason of his agreement with his wife whereby he agreed that in the event of the death of either, the maternal grandmother should have the custody of their minor child and the direction and control of his education, etc., and further that by a decree of divorce entered in Los Angeles county the mother—who by her will nominated appellant guardian—was awarded the care and custody of the minor child. While parents have a right to contract with each other as to the custody and control of their offspring and to stipulate away their respective parental rights (Sargent v. Sargent, 106 Cal. 541, 39 P. 931), this right so to stipulate is subject to the control of the court in which the matter affecting the child is pending, and the court is not required to award the custody in conformity with such stipulation (9 Cal. Jur. 794; Anderson v. Anderson, 56 Cal. App. 87, 204 P. 426).

[5-7] As to the decree of divorce and the nomination of appellant as guardian of the minor child by the last will of the deceased mother as affecting the father's right to letters of guardianship, the court in the Matter of Allen, 162 Cal. 625, 627, 124 P. 237, 239, says:

"The right to appoint a guardian by will or deed is statutory. Under the law of this state (Civ. Code, § 241), a guardian of a legitimate child may be so appointed 'by the father, with the written consent of the mother; or by either parent, if the other be dead or incapable of consent.' The father, in this case, was not dead when the will took effect. Nor was he 'incapable of consent.' It is argued that the decree of divorce, whereby the custody of the child was awarded to the mother, terminated the father's claims to the control of the child, and made him incapable of objecting or consenting to any disposition that the mother might see fit to make. The contention attributes a very broad meaning to the term 'incapable of consent.' But, even if this interpretation be adopted, the argument fails for the reason that the father's right was not absolutely ended by the decree of divorce. The decree dealt with the situation as it stood, and merely determined that, as between the husband and the wife, the child should be placed in the custody of the latter until some other disposition should be made. Civ. Code, § 138. It did not undertake to provide for the custody of the child after the mother's death. In line with this view, it is almost universally held that, upon the death of the parent to whom is awarded the custody of a minor child by the decree divorcing the parents, the other parent becomes entitled to the custody."

Appellant's claim that the trial court failed to find upon the issue raised by the proceeding regarding the agreement introduced in evidence is without merit. The court found that the agreement was entered into on the 1st day of November, 1922, and that the same was prepared by the attorney for Mrs. Maggiebelle Drake at the instance and request of Whitney Lee Arkle, the mother of the minor, without any knowledge whatsoever upon the part of respondent; that the preparation of such paper had at no time been discussed or its contents revealed to respondent; that at the time of the signing the mother was very ill and confined to her bed, and specifically requested respondent to sign the writing; that solely because of her request and of her illness and because of a desire to please his wife, and particularly not to do anything to do her harm, respondent signed the document. This finding, if requisite to sustain the judgment, finds support in the testimony of respondent.

We have examined the cases cited, and find none from this state at variance with the views here expressed. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

93 Cal. App. 261

DE GARMO v. PETITFILS CONFISERIE.
(Civ. 6319.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 26, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 24, 1928.

1. Contracts $\S$ 94(5)—For rescission, false representations must have been relied on.

To entitle one to rescission because of false representations, it is not sufficient to show that the representations were false and made with intent to deceive, but it must also be shown that party seeking rescission relied thereon and was actually misled.

2. Corporations $\S$ 80(11)—It is presumed purchaser of stock relied upon seller's false representations, calculated to induce purchase.

Where representations made to purchaser of stock were false and were calculated to induce him to make the purchase, the presumption is that the representations induced the purchase, and, in suit for rescission, seller must show that purchaser did not rely upon the representations.

3. Corporations $\S$ 80(11)—Evidence in suit for rescission of sale of stock held not to support finding that purchaser did not rely on seller's misrepresentations.

In action against corporation to rescind purchase of stock of corporation, based on false representations relative to payment of dividends on the stock and the financial condition of the company and its properties, evidence held not to support findings of trial court that plaintiff did not rely on misrepresentations in making purchase.

4. Corporations $\S$ 80(11)—Evidence sustained findings in suit to rescind sale of stock for fraud that representations by seller were false.

In action to rescind purchase and sale of stock in corporation leasing and managing store properties, evidence held to sustain findings that representations of seller concerning payment of dividends on stock from net profits were false.

5. Corporations $\S$ 80(10)—Purchaser's suit to rescind sale of corporate stock for fraud held not barred by laches, where notice of rescission was given several days after discovering fraud.

Suit by purchaser of stock against corporation to rescind sale of stock held not barred by laches, where notice of rescission was given within one year from time of purchase and within several days after plaintiff discovered that defendant's representations were fraudulent.

6. Corporations $\S$ 80(12)—Where purchaser of stock suing to rescind sale alleged tender of stock and every other thing of value received, which allegation was admitted, no issue of failure to return dividend was raised.

In suit by purchaser against corporation to rescind sale of corporate stock for fraud, no issue of plaintiff's failure to return dividend was raised, where complaint alleged that plaintiff tendered shares of stock purchased and "every other thing of value received by him in connection with the sale," and such allegation was admitted by the answer.

7. Corporations $\S$ 80(12)—Tender of dividend received held not condition precedent to stockholder's maintenance against corporation of action to rescind sale of stock for fraud (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3532).

In suit by stockholder against corporation to rescind sale of stock for fraud, plaintiff's offer to return sum of money received as dividend on the stock was not condition precedent to rescission, since in any event plaintiff would be entitled to retain such sum either as dividend or as partial restoration of purchase price of stock, and tender thereof would be mere idle act, which law does not require, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 3532.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action by G. C. De Garmo against Petitfils Confiserie. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

G. P. Adams, W. W. Orme, G. C. De Garmo, and H. B. Cornell, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, and H. F. Prince, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem. The plaintiff, G. C. De Garmo, purchased from defendant corporation 200 shares of its capital stock, for which he paid $20,000. This is an action by plaintiff to rescind that purchase on the ground of fraud and misrepresentations.

The case was tried before the court sitting without a jury, and findings and judgment were in favor of defendant, from which judgment plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant strenuously contends that the findings on all material issues are contrary to the uncontradicted evidence. We think that this contention must be sustained.

The complaint alleges, among other things, that defendant, for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to purchase its stock, stated and represented to him: (1) That the company had already paid two quarterly dividends of 5 per cent. each; (2) that the then present earnings of the company were sufficient to enable it to pay regular 5 per cent. quarterly dividends thereafter; (3) that nothing had been paid to W. M. Petitfils for the good will of his business; (4) that the company had been offered $400,000 for the lease on store No. 1, which was the original store of Petitfils; (5) that W. M. Petitfils would continue to manage and devote his entire time to the business, and that he would retain his stock in the company.

The complaint further alleges that the foregoing statements and representations were false, untrue, and misleading in the following particulars: (1) That said dividends were not paid out of the net earnings of defendant, but only as the result of changing and falsifying its books, and for the sole purpose of defrauding, deceiving, and misleading prospective purchasers of its stock, etc.; (2) that the net earnings of the company were not at any time sufficient to pay any dividends, and that defendant knew this at the time of making the foregoing statements and representations; (3) that W. M. Petitfils received $180,000 for the good will of his business; (4) that the lease on store No. 1 was not of the value represented by defendant; (5) that, prior to soliciting plaintiff to purchase stock, W. M. Petitfils had entered into a secret agreement with one Beecher Laswell to sell his personal stock in the company.

(269 P.)

The answer traverses practically all of the allegations of the complaint, and alleges the following special defenses: (1) That, if any misrepresentations or false statements were made by defendant concerning the stock, they were made by Beecher Laswell, who was an independent contractor for the sale of defendant's capital stock, and that defendant believed that the net earnings of the company were sufficient to warrant the payment of said dividends and each of them; (2) that plaintiff was guilty of laches in not attempting to rescind promptly.

The court found, among other things, that Beecher Laswell was the agent of defendant corporation, and that one R. J. Leavitt was an employee of Laswell, and that the said Leavitt solicited plaintiff to purchase stock, and made the following representations for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to purchase stock in the defendant corporation: (1) That the average daily receipts from store No. 1 were slightly under $2,000; (2) that the daily receipts from store No. 2 were about $1,100; (3) that the daily receipts from store No. 3 were about $900; (4) that the company had been offered $400,000 for a cancellation of the lease on store No. 1; (5) that Rowan & Co. had said that, although it was difficult to appraise the lease on the Flower street property, owned by the company, because of the fact that it was increasing so rapidly in value, that it was worth about $1,000,000; (6) that it was the intention of the company to open another store on or near Seventh street in the city of Los Angeles; (7) that the company had paid two dividends of 5 per cent. each; (8) that Petitfils expected to stay with the business and to stay in charge of it and to keep his stock in the company.

The court also found that said R. J. Leavitt delivered to plaintiff certain circular letters referring to said company, prepared by Beecher Laswell, with the approval of the company.

The court further found that representations designated above as Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6, and 8 were true, and that the representation designated as No. 7 was true, except that one dividend only was paid to the stockholders of Petitfils Confitserie, and that the representations designated as Nos. 4 and 5 were not true.

The court also made findings in effect as follows: (1) Plaintiff did not believe or rely upon the statements made to him by R. J. Leavitt; (2) that these representations were not the proximate or any cause of plaintiff purchasing his stock in defendant corporation; (3) that plaintiff relied solely upon the fact that he was acquainted with the success of W. M. Petitfils' business, and the profits made by him prior to incorporation; (4) that plaintiff did not believe or rely upon any of the statements or representations set out in the complaint in purchasing stock in the company, and that plaintiff made an independent investigation.

[1] The law is well established that, to entitle one to recover in rescission because of false representations, it is not sufficient to show merely that the representations were false and made with intent to deceive, but it must also be shown that the false representations actually misled and deceived the party seeking rescission and that they were relied upon by such party. Maxon-Nowlin Co. v. Norswing, 166 Cal. 509, 137 P. 240; Hallidie v. First Federal Trust Co., 177 Cal. 600, 171 P. 431; Hackleman v. Lyman, 50 Cal. App. 323, 195 P. 263; Spinks v. Clark, 147 Cal. 444, 82 P. 45; Maggini v. McBain, 65 Cal. App. 133, 223 P. 428; Sherlock v. Gerlach, 68 Cal. App. 341, 229 P. 65.

Therefore, if there is sufficient evidence in the record to support the last-mentioned findings that appellant did not rely upon the representations made by defendant and its agents, and was not induced thereby to purchase the stock in question, but, on the other hand, in making the purchase he relied solely upon the fact that he was acquainted with W. M. Petitfils' business and the profits made by him prior to incorporation, then this appeal must fail, and the judgment be affirmed, for these findings cover an essential element of appellant's right of action.

We have, however, searched the record carefully, and we are unable to find any evidence that will support the findings of the trial court that appellant "did not rely upon the alleged misrepresentations and did not believe them to be true," or that he made an independent investigation.

Plaintiff testified: That in October, 1923, R. J. Leavitt called upon him at his office in Los Angeles, and, after introducing himself, said that he was connected with Beecher Laswell's office, a stockbroker having his offices in Los Angeles, and that they were selling stock of Petitfils Confitserie. He thereupon handed plaintiff his card, reading, "Petit-files Confiserie, Fiscal Offices, 610 Mortgage Guarantee Building, 626 South Spring St., Los Angeles, R. J. Leavitt, Personal Representative." That was the first of a series of conversations with Leavitt, extending up to the time the plaintiff purchased his stock in November, 1923.

Plaintiff further testified:

That "Leavitt said that Petitfils had incorporated the company with a capital stock of $2,000,000, and that Petitfils had taken part of the stock; and he told me the number of shares, 3,150 shares, I think it was, and $250,000 cash for his business. He said the company had also taken over the business of the Brown Candy Company that was operating two chocolate shops, one on Sixth street between Spring and Broadway, and the other one on Broadway between Seventh and Eighth. He told me the number of shares that had been paid to the Brown Candy Company for that business; he said it was 5,000 shares. He then told me what the income from the three stores was. At this time Petitfils Confiserie was operating a store on Sixth street between Spring and Broadway, and that store has been very frequently since then referred to as store No. 3. There was another store on Broadway between Sixth and Seventh, the main store, which we all referred to as No. 1; and another one on Broadway between Seventh and Eighth, which was referred to as No. 2. I asked him if anything had been paid to Mr. Petitfils for the good will of his business, and he said that nothing was paid him for that. He next took up the matter of the leases. He said that in taking over the business of Brown Candy Company, the company had acquired a very valuable lease on property on Flower street between Seventh and Eighth; that it was a 99-year lease; that they were paying a rent of only between—of either four or four hundred and fifty dollars a month. I can't be quite sure which he said. He said that the Rowan Company had appraised the lease. He said that it was difficult—that the property was increasing so in value that it was really difficult to appraise, but that it was worth about a million dollars. He also said that the lease on store No. 1 had about six years yet to run, and that they had been offered $400,000 for the lease, for the reason that the owner, operating through Blumenthal & Co., was very anxious to erect a large building, a modern building, on the property. He also told me that the lease on store No. 2 had about 17 years yet to run, and that it was a very advantageous lease, and he also told me how long the lease on store No. 3 ran, but I can't remember the figures. I can only recall this, that, when he had given me the values of those leases, it aggregated the capital stock of the company. * * * He also said that they would probably not use the building they had acquired from Brown Candy Company under this 99-year lease for the reason that it would be too valuable for their purposes. We then discussed the matter of dividends. He told me that the company had paid two dividends of 5 per cent. each. * * * That was his statement that the earnings—I can only give it to you substantially, but in effect it was that, that the earnings of the company were sufficient to enable them to pay 5 per cent. dividends regularly from that time on quarterly."

Plaintiff then stated that Leavitt handed him some literature concerning the company, including a statement showing the profits Petitfils had derived from the business up to the time of the incorporation of the defendant company. In the literature given to plaintiff at that time was a circular letter signed, "Petitfils Confiserie, W. M. Petitfils, President," containing this clause:

"On May 18, 1923, Petitfils Confiserie was incorporated under the management of Mr. W. M. Petitfils. On July 10th, a dividend of 5 per cent. was paid to all stockholders as of record on June 30th, and on October 15th, another 5 per cent. dividend was distributed to all stockholders as of record on August 31, 1923, the checks ranging in size from $5 to $14,500. This investment is now open to you for two reasons: First, it is a decided commercial asset to have a large number of stockholders; the second, now is the strategic time for expansion and development because of the remarkable success of the three established stores and the general healthy condition of Los Angeles."

Other circular letters of a similar character, but more alluring, were given plaintiff, signed, "Petitfils Confiserie, E. A. Harter, Vice President." One of the paragraphs in one of these last-mentioned circular letters is as follows:

"At one time you expressed a desire to learn the details regarding an investment in the securities of this soundly managed, dividend producing company. This final effort is made, before the books are closed, to induce you to share in our investment and profits."

Plaintiff further testified:

"When Mr. Leavitt explained why he was there and told me of the business they were doing, the money they were making, and dividends they had paid, I said, 'Mr. Leavitt, this is essentially a one-man concern;' and I said, 'I know that Mr. Petitfils is one of the best restaurant men in Southern California.' Parenthetically, I had known Mr. Petitfils practically ever since he had been in business. I said, 'If he should leave the company or anything should happen to him, it would very materially affect the business.' He said, 'We have provided for that; his life has been insured for $250,000. At one time Petitfils was tired, and he wanted to quit the business,' but he said, 'he has finally made up his mind that he is going to devote his life to it, and he had promised to stay with the business, stay in charge of it, and to keep his interest, his stock in the company.' He had previously told me that Petitfils had 3,150 shares of stock."

After these conversations with Leavitt, plaintiff went to the Merchants' National Bank in Los Angeles to verify Leavitt's statement that Petitfils had attempted to borrow money from that bank and had been refused the loan, and that he later got it from the Security Trust & Savings Bank. Plaintiff found that this statement was true. Plaintiff then sought and obtained an introduction to Mr. Sugars, another vice president of defendant corporation, and informed Mr. Sugars that he was thinking of buying some stock in Petitfils and wanted to get some additional information. Sugars replied, "All the stores are making money." They then had a conversation about the dividends, and Sugars stated, "That he saw no reason why they could not continue paying their dividends they had started." Other conversations were had between them about the receipts and other details of the business, and Mr. Sugars referred plaintiff to Mr. Long, the secretary, for further information. Later plaintiff called upon Mr. Long, introduced himself, and told him that he was thinking of buying some stock in the company, and that he had been referred to him by Mr. Sugars to get information concerning the business of the company. During this conversation, Mr. Petitfils and Mr. Harter came into the office, and Mr. Harter was introduced to plaintiff. A short conversation was held with Mr. Harter and Mr. Petitfils, in which plaintiff told them that he was thinking of buying some stock, and wanted to get some information about the business. Nothing definite was discussed by plaintiff with Mr. Petitfils and Mr. Harter, but, after their departure, Mr. Long and the plaintiff had a conversation, in which Mr. Long stated: "This business carries a very large profit—60 per cent. of the receipts is net profit." Just what was said at this conversation can best be related by quoting a portion of the testimony of the plaintiff on this subject:

"I then asked him about the leases. I said, 'I understand that the lease on this store'—we were then at store No. 1—'runs for six years yet.' He said, 'Yes.' And I said, 'I understand that you have been offered $400,000 for this lease for canceling it.' He says, 'that is correct.' We next talked about the lease on the store on South Flower street. He told me substantially what Mr. Leavitt had told me, that the company had had that lease appraised, and that Rowan & Co. had said it was worth about $1,000,000. * * * We then talked about the dividends. I asked him about those; he said they had paid two dividends of 5 per cent. each, and he said, 'Whether we open another store or not, the present earnings of the company are sufficient to enable us to pay 5 per cent. quarterly dividends.' I said, 'Mr. Long, can you do that and write off the leases?' He says, 'Yes, sir, we can, and we have also provided for depreciation and contingent expense.' * * *

After this conversation with Mr. Long, plaintiff had another conversation with Mr. Leavitt and purchased the stock.

The foregoing is all the evidence showing what plaintiff said and did, and the information he sought and received before purchasing his stock, and this evidence is uncontradicted, except that Long testified that he told plaintiff the gross receipts were between 50 and 60 per cent. and that all the leases were valued at $1,000,000.

Plaintiff made no independent investigation; all the investigation that he made was with officers and agents of the defendant. He only asked one question on the outside, and that was from the bank, which was concerning a wholly immaterial matter.

[2, 3] Plaintiff testified positively that he believed and relied upon the representations made to him, and would not have purchased the stock had it not been for those representations, and that he made no further investigation other than that above stated, and there is not a fact or circumstance revealed by the record to rebut this statement. Furthermore, the representations made to appellant were ones calculated to induce him to buy the stock, and he did, in fact, make the purchase; therefore the presumption is that the representations induced him to do so, and, in order to take away his right to relief on the ground of fraud, it must be shown that he did not rely upon said representations. Troy, etc., Co. v. Drivers' etc., Co., 14 Cal. App. 152-155, 111 P. 121; 12 Cal. Jur. 827. See, also, Dow v. Swain, 125 Cal. 674-681, 58 P. 271. We have, therefore, in the case at bar, a well-established legal presumption, which is evidence, plus the direct and positive evidence of appellant himself, that he believed and relied upon said representations made by defendant in purchasing the stock, and there is nothing in the record to rebut this evidence. The findings of nonreliance and disbelief in said representations must fall in the face of this uncontradicted evidence.

[4] Having determined that certain representations were in fact made, and that they did induce appellant to purchase the stock, the next question arises, Does the evidence show these representations to be true or false? As above stated, the court found that the representation to the effect that the defendant had been offered $400,000 for the cancellation of the lease on store No. 1 was false, and also that the statement that the lease on Flower street was worth $1,000,000 was also false. The evidence amply supports both of these findings.

The complaint alleges, that neither the July nor October dividend was paid out of the net profits, but merely as the result of falsifying the books and for the sole purpose of defrauding prospective purchasers of stock in the company. The court found that only one dividend was paid, and "that this was not paid merely as a result of altering the books or for the sole purpose of defrauding prospective purchasers." No finding as to whether it was paid out of the profits of the company was made by the court.

The uncontradicted evidence shows that, at the time appellant was being solicited by defendant to purchase the stock, he was told by Leavitt and Long that the company had paid two dividends of 5 per cent. each. Appellant was also given several mimeographed letters, bearing the signature of defendant, in which the same statement was made. The evidence shows that no dividend was paid in July, 1923.

The facts regarding the July dividend are, briefly, these: The property and assets of the Brown Candy Company, at the time it was transferred to defendant, was inventoried at $525,000; a dividend of 5 per cent. was first paid to the stockholders of the Brown Candy Company, which reduced the assets of the Brown Candy Company to $500,000, and then the defendant corporation gave the Brown Candy Company 5,000 shares of the capital stock of defendant corporation at $100 per share for the remaining $500,000 worth of assets of the Brown Candy Company. The $25,000 was distributed to the stockholders of the Brown Candy Company by the defendant corporation, but it was in no sense a dividend to the stockholders of the defendant corporation, and was not earned by them; it was simply a 5 per cent. dividend paid by the Brown Candy Company to its own stockholders at the time it sold out to defendant corporation.

The October dividend, which was the only one paid, was not paid out of the net earnings or profits of the defendant. Defendant had only been operating since June 15, 1923. The stock salesman had represented to plaintiff and other prospective purchasers that a 5 per cent. dividend was paid on October 15, 1923, and was paid to all stockholders of record on August 31, 1923. The literature of defendant also contained this same statement. On August 31, 1923, there was outstanding 11,592 shares and a 5 per cent. dividend which amounted to $57,910. From June 15, 1923, to October 1, 1923, the defendant had been charging off monthly on its books for depreciation, breakage, bad debts, etc., $10,000 per month. By this method of bookkeeping, the business was being operated at a loss, and there were no funds from which a dividend could be paid. Those who had purchased stock were inquiring daily at the stores and of the officers of the company as to when the dividend would be forthcoming and, as Mr. Harter, the vice president, expressed it, "They were haunting us night and day, morning and noon, to know if we would not declare a dividend." Harter further testified as follows:

"Q. How did it happen that Petitfils Confectionerie paid a dividend on October 15, 1923? A. That happened merely to take care of Mr. Beecher Laswell's office to cover up the remarks and statements that his men had been making from time to time. * * * Q. The company knew what those remarks were, didn't it? A. It had been fighting that all the time. Q. They knew what they were, however? A. Well, not all of them. * * * Q. Well, what one? A. Well, in regard to quarterly dividends and guaranteeing 20 per cent. the first year, 28 per cent., following on down the line; that is what they were bucking on from the start."

One of the guarantees of dividends was contained in a pamphlet entitled "Profits in Sweets," reading in part as follows:

"It is the expectation of Petitfils Confectionerie to continue the regular 5 per cent. cash dividends quarterly (20 per cent. per annum). Based on the estimated earnings of the new corporation, as shown below, the annual profits on the capitalization of $2,000,000 should be at least 28 per cent."

Therefore, in order to satisfy the present stockholders and to allure new ones into purchasing stock, a scheme was worked out by the secretary of the defendant and its stockholders, by which the books were changed and all amounts that had been set aside for depreciation, breakage, bad debts, etc., were ordered placed back on the books. By so doing, the books showed there were profits enough to pay a dividend and, therefore, out of this the October 15th dividend was declared.

It is clear, therefore, that no July dividend was paid to the stockholders of the defendant corporation, and that the October dividend was not paid out of the net earnings, but out of the gross earnings of the company. No dividend should have been paid, or could have rightfully been paid, in October, and the defendant changed its books to show a false profit in order to pay this dividend. It is clear from the undisputed evidence that the October dividend was not paid in good faith, and was not paid from the net earnings of defendant, but paid out of its reserve fund. The representations made to appellant that from the earnings of defendant a 5 per cent. dividend had been paid in July and October were false.

The complaint further alleges that defendant, as an additional inducement to plaintiff, stated to plaintiff that Petitfils was paid nothing for the good will of his business, and that this statement was untrue. The findings of the court do not refer to this allegation of the complaint, but find that "nothing was paid W. M. Petitfils by the defendant corporation." The undisputed testimony shows that Petitfils was paid $180,000 for good will, and that it was paid in money and stock in the corporation. This was also a misrepresentation of a material fact.

The evidence shows, without conflict, that other misrepresentations of material facts were made to plaintiff, but we deem it unnecessary to go into detail relative to them.

We have reviewed the entire record carefully, and we are fully convinced that the findings of the trial court favorable to defendant cannot be sustained by the evidence. In reaching this conclusion, we are not unmindful of the fact that some of the representations made to appellant, especially those relating to the future earnings of the defendant corporation, are merely to be considered "expressions of opinion," and not fraudulent representations, although positively made and afterwards proven to be untrue. However, excluding entirely all statements that could be termed "expressions of opinion," there remains in the record abundant uncontradicted evidence of many false representations made to appellant by defendant concerning past and existing facts, which defendant knew to be false and made for the purpose of inducing appellant to purchase the stock, and said false representations did, in fact, lead him to invest $20,000 in stock of Petitfils Confiserie Corporation, which he would not have done had the true financial condition of defendant corporation been revealed to him. Neither are we unmindful of the well-settled rule that this court cannot reverse a judgment for insufficiency of the evidence if there is a conflict in the testimony, or if there is any substantial evidence to support the findings and judgment of the trial court. But in this case there is absolutely no evidence that we are able to discover, that will support the findings and judgment of the trial court. The only witness produced by defendant was Mr. Long, the former secretary of the defendant corporation, and there were only two points of conflict in his testimony with that of the appellant. Appellant testified that Long told him that the defendant was making a net profit of 60 per cent.; Long denied this, and stated it was possible that he told plaintiff the gross profits would be between 50 and 60 per cent. Again, plaintiff testified that Long stated to him that the lease on the Broadway store No. 1 had been appraised at $1,000,000, but this was also denied by Long, who testified that he told plaintiff that all of the leases of defendant were valued at $1,000,000. The court found for defendant on both of these points, and nowhere in appellant's brief is there to be found any suggestion that appellant is seeking to have the findings on these two points set aside or disturbed.

[5] There is no merit in the contention of defendant, or the finding of the trial court, that appellant was guilty of laches in rescinding the purchase. The following facts are uncontradicted: Appellant purchased the stock in November, 1923. In February, 1924, he inquired concerning the dividend. Defendant stated that payment of the dividend had been delayed by order of the corporation commissioner until a reserve had been set aside to cover depreciation in defendant's leases. On May 2, 1924, appellant received a $500 check and at that time was notified that another dividend would be paid in July. That about July 1st appellant was advised by defendant that the additional dividend would be sent out within a few days. On July 4th, plaintiff left on a trip to Europe and was absent from California until October 15, 1924. During appellant's absence he did not know that the promised dividend had not been paid, and did not learn this until he returned to Los Angeles on or about October 15, 1924. While absent from California, appellant did not receive any information regarding the defendant or his stock. Appellant testified that between October 15th and October 20th he discovered the fraud, and on October 21, 1924, served the notice of rescission. It appears that appellant gave notice of rescission promptly after discovering the fraud.

[6, 7] Defendant contends that appellant cannot maintain this action because he did not offer to return the $500 dividend before suit. There is no merit in this contention. The complaint alleges:

"That, at the time plaintiff rescinded the contract, he tendered to the defendant and offered to return * * * said 200 shares of stock so purchased by him and every other thing of value received by him in connection with said sale."

This allegation is admitted by the answer. The question of the actual physical tender of the $500 is not, therefore, an issue by the pleadings. Furthermore, under the circumstances of the instant case, it was not necessary to offer to return the $500 received as a dividend on the stock as a condition precedent to rescission. If appellant fails in the present action, he would be entitled to retain the $500 dividend; if he succeeds in this action, he will be entitled to retain the $500 as a partial restoration of the $20,000 and have judgment against defendant for the balance. In no event, therefore, could the defendant possibly be injured. The law does not require idle acts, and nothing would seem more idle than to require appellant, as a mere formal prerequisite to trial, to offer to return to the defendant the $500 which defendant would in no event be entitled to keep. See section 3532, Civ. Code; Matteson v. Wagoner, 147 Cal. 739, 82 P. 436; Haserot v. Keller, 67 Cal. App. 659-673, 228 P. 383; Richards v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 7 Cal. App. 387-393, 94 P. 393; Garcia v. California Truck Co., 183 Cal. 767, 192 P. 708.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 241

PEOPLE v. PRUDENCIO. (Cr. 1455.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 24, 1928.

- 1. Criminal law §912—Court is without power to entertain motion for new trial after previous denial of similar motion interposed within time allowed by law.

Where defendant has previously within the time allowed by law interposed a motion for a new trial which is duly heard and denied, he has exercised and exhausted the right as afforded him by law, and thereafter court is without power to entertain another similar motion.

- 2. Criminal law §912—Defendant held entitled to hearing on motion for new trial, after trial court's action in passing sentence contrary to verdict had been overruled (Pen. Code, § 1181).

Where court, in hearing on defendant's motion for new trial on grounds set forth in Pen. Code, § 1181, held that evidence was insufficient to sustain verdict of first degree murder, and imposed a sentence for murder in second degree, thereby purporting to pass on a motion which defendant had not made as for a new trial based on conviction of second degree murder, defendant, after subsequent reversal of trial court's action thereon, was entitled to renew his motion for new trial and to have the same considered and determined.

- 3. Criminal law §905—Every person convicted of crime has right to have motion for new trial heard and determined by trial judge.

Every person convicted of crime is afforded the right under law of state to make a motion for a new trial based on the verdict which has been rendered against him, and, if presented in the manner and time provided by law without similar motion having been previously ruled on, has a right to have such motion determined and heard by trial judge.

- 4. Criminal law §1156(1)—Order granting new trial will not be disturbed except for manifest abuse of discretion.

Where a new trial is granted on the ground of insufficiency of evidence or on other various grounds on which trial court might base order, its action will not be disturbed except in a case where there is manifest unmistakable abuse of discretion.

- 5. Criminal law §935(1)—Evidence held to sustain order granting new trial after conviction for first degree murder.

Evidence in prosecution for murder held such as to sustain order of trial judge granting a new trial after a conviction for murder in the first degree.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Fred V. Wood, Judge.

Jesus Prudencio was convicted of murder in the first degree, and, from an order granting a new trial after conviction, the State appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., Earle Warren, Dist. Atty., and J. Paul St. Sure, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for the People.

Myron Harris, L. A. Sullivan, J. J. Rose, Jr., and John Jewett Earle, all of Oakland, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. This is an appeal by the people from an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial. The grounds urged for reversal are that, at the time the motion was granted, the trial court was without jurisdiction to hear or determine the same, and that, even though jurisdiction did exist to entertain the motion, the granting of the same constituted an abuse of discretion.

The facts are as follows: The defendant was charged with murder by an information alleging that he did "unlawfully, willfully, feloniously, and of his malice aforethought kill and murder one Antonio Garcia." He entered a plea of not guilty, and upon trial the cause was submitted to the jury by the court under customary instructions to the effect that, if it found that the defendant was guilty, it should declare the degree of murder, and that, if it found that he was guilty of murder in the first degree, it should also determine and indicate by its verdict whether he should suffer death as a penalty therefor or be imprisoned in the state prison for life. Several forms of verdict were prepared and given to the jury by the court, and on January 12, 1927, the jury rendered its verdict finding defendant guilty of murder in the first degree without making recommendation as to penalty, which, under the law, was a determination that the defendant should suffer the penalty of death. Pursuant to said verdict, the defendant was brought before the court on January 15, 1927, for the pronouncement of judgment, at which time he moved for a new trial on all the grounds set forth in section 1181 of the Penal Code, including the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence; he also made a motion in arrest of judgment. The motions were regularly continued until January 22, 1927, on which date they were argued and submitted; whereupon the trial judge declared that the evidence, in his opinion, did not establish a case of murder in the first degree, but was sufficient to prove murder in the second degree, and, ignoring the effect of the verdict rendered by the jury, imposed a sentence for second degree murder.

Thereafter the people applied for and obtained from the Supreme Court an alternative writ of mandate commanding the trial judge to show cause why the judgment pronounced by him should not be annulled and set aside as being in excess of his jurisdiction, and to show cause also why judgment imposing the death sentence should not be pronounced in accordance with the verdict rendered by the jury. After hearing upon the merits, the Supreme Court held that no substantial ground existed upon which the judgment as entered could be sustained, that it was clearly without authority of law and did not purport to respond to any verdict rendered by the jury; and, in ordering a peremptory writ of mandate to issue, the Supreme Court said:

"The defendant in the instant case has not been arraigned for sentence upon the verdict rendered by the jury convicting him. Neither has sentence nor judgment been pronounced by the court upon said verdict. The court positively refuses to recognize the verdict received by it or to pronounce judgment thereon or take any steps whatever upon the verdict rendered, as shown by the return herein. The court was without jurisdiction to pronounce judgment upon an assumed verdict of murder in the second degree and the judgment so pronounced must be annulled. We are of the opinion that petitioner has no plain, speedy, or adequate relief in the premises. Section 1068, Code Civ. Proc. It appearing that the court without any lawful cause refuses to pronounce judgment upon the verdict of the jury as rendered, or to take other legal or appropriate action thereunder or perform acts which the law specially enjoins upon said judge and court as a duty resulting from the office which said judge occupies, it is ordered that a writ of mandate issue out of this court commanding said Hon. Fred V. Wood, as judge of the superior court of the county of Alameda, to arraign said Jesus Prudencio, defendant in said action pending in said court, for judgment under and by virtue of the verdict returned against him, to-wit, conviction of murder in the first degree as charged in the information, and to hear and determine such motions as may properly come before him and to take such proceedings therein as are meet and proper in the premises and as by law provided." People v. Superior Court of Alameda County (Cal. Sup.) 259 P. 943.

In obedience to said writ, the defendant was again brought before the trial court on November 10, 1927, at which time he was arraigned for judgment upon the verdict rendered by the jury, and he again urged his motion for a new trial, which the court granted; and, from the order made in that behalf, the people have taken this appeal.

[1] It appears to be well settled in this state that, where a defendant has previously and within the time allowed by law interposed a motion for a new trial which is duly heard and denied, he has exercised and exhausted the right afforded him by the law, and thereafter the court is without power to entertain another similar motion (People v. Walker, 142 Cal. 90, 75 P. 658; People v. Ingersoll, 21 Cal. App. 763, 132 P. 1052), and in view of the foregoing rule of law appellant in the present case contends that the proceedings which took place before the trial court on January 22, 1927, amounted to a denial of the defendant's motion for a new trial, and that therefore "the trial court exercised and exhausted its power to pass upon such motion, and that the said court was thereafter without jurisdiction (on November 10, 1927) to hear and determine a similar motion in said cause."

[2] The record discloses, however, that the motion defendant made on January 22, 1927, and which he was entitled to have determined, was not at that time ruled upon. With reference thereto, the record shows that, when defendant's motion for a new trial was submitted in January, 1927, the trial court reviewed what it claimed was the evidence in the case, and in the course of its remarks said:

"The evidence does not satisfy my mind that this man is guilty of first degree murder. * * * I feel it is a case that there was no intent to kill. I have deep convictions on that matter. He was guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon. That is a felony, and it makes it murder of the second degree. * * * This defendant is guilty of murder of the second degree. I am convinced in my mind it is not murder of the first degree. * * * My own feeling is, it is murder of the second degree. * * * I do not believe he is guilty of the first degree. I do not feel it was a willful intent to kill. I am not going to sentence a man for a crime when I have heard the evidence and don't believe he is guilty. * * * I hold that there is no evidence whatever to sustain a verdict of murder in the first degree in this case, and that the verdict does find the defendant guilty of murder of the second degree, and I am going to act accordingly. * * * The defendant's motion for a new trial for murder of the second degree is denied. Let him be arraigned for sentence."

Thereupon the trial court made the following order, which it caused to be entered upon its minutes:

"* * * The court finds and decides that there is no evidence to sustain a verdict of and the defendant is not guilty of murder in the first degree, but that the evidence does sustain and the verdict does find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree as charged in the information, and that a new trial upon said charge of murder in the second degree be and the same is hereby denied, and that the defendant be arraigned for judgment." (All italics ours.)

The clerk then proceeded to arraign the defendant for judgment, by informing him, among other things, as the judgment recites, "of the decision of the court that the evidence sustains and that the defendant is guilty of murder in the second degree in the commission of a felony, to wit, an assault with a deadly weapon by means likely to produce death or other bodily injury as charged in the information, and that his motion for a new trial for murder in the second degree was denied"; following which the defendant was asked whether he had any cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, and, no sufficient cause being shown, the court rendered judgment as follows:

"* * * That whereas the defendant, Jesus Prudencio, had been duly convicted in this court of felony, to wit, murder of the second degree, that he therefore be confined in the state prison at San Quentin as prescribed by law. * * *

It appears, therefore, as indicated, that, when the defendant was arraigned for judgment in January, 1927, the trial court did not attempt to decide the motion which the defendant at that time made, namely, a motion for a new trial based upon the degree of murder of which he had been found guilty by the jury, but purported to pass upon a motion which the defendant had not made and which was not before the court, namely, a motion for a new trial based upon a conviction of second degree murder. That being so, we are of the opinion that on November 10, 1927, when the matter again came before the court, the defendant was entitled to renew his motion and to have the same considered and determined.

That the Supreme Court was also of the opinion that defendant's motion for a new trial based upon the verdict as rendered by the jury had not theretofore been disposed of is clearly indicated by its decision in the mandamus proceeding, because its mandate to the trial judge was to arraign the defendant "for judgment, under and by virtue of the verdict rendered against him, to wit, conviction of murder in the first degree as charged in the information, and to hear and determine such motions as may properly come before him, and to take such proceedings therein as are meet and proper in the premises and as by law provided" (italics ours); and the only motions authorized by statute which could thereafter properly come before the trial court for determination were motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment.

[3] The delay in ruling upon the motion which ensued as a result of the trial court's action on January 22, 1927, cannot be held to have nullified defendant's motion, for the reason that every person convicted of crime, and certainly one who has been found guilty of first degree murder and adjudged to suffer death as a penalty therefor, is afforded the right under the law of this state to make a motion for a new trial based upon the verdict which has been rendered against him, and, if presented in the manner and within the time provided by law, and no similar motion has been previously ruled upon, has the right to have such motion heard and determined by the trial judge. Under some circumstances the refusal of the trial court to hear defendant's motion for a new trial or to determine the same within the statutory period entitles the defendant to a new trial. Pen. Code, § 1202; Rankin v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 189, 106 P. 718; People v. Boling, 32 Cal. App. 42, 161 P. 1169; People v. Winner, 31 Cal. App. 352, 160 P. 689. But manifestly the failure, neglect, or refusal on the part of the trial judge to perform a duty thus imposed upon him by the law, whether resulting from inadvertence or error, cannot operate to the prejudice of such person and thereby deprive him of the right to a new trial, if otherwise he is legally entitled to the same.

[4, 5] The remaining question is whether the granting of the motion herein constituted an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge. The rules which shall govern the trial court in dealing with such motions and the courts of appellate jurisdiction in reviewing the decisions of the trial courts thereon are well established and clearly defined, and in the case of People v. Knutte, 111 Cal. 453, 44 P. 166, are stated as follows:

"It has been so repeatedly held here as to become axiomatic that where a new trial is granted upon this ground, or where it is one of various grounds upon which the trial court may have based the order, its action will not be disturbed, except in a case showing a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion. This discretion is, of course, not arbitrary, but like any other judicial function, is to be exercised under the sanction of the judicial oath; and the strong presumption being always that it was so exercised, it will require in any case a very clear showing to the contrary to overcome such presumption and enable us to say that the power of the court in that respect was abused. While it is the exclusive province of the jury to find the facts, it is nevertheless one of the most important requirements of the trial judge to see to it that this function of the jury is intelligently and justly exercised. In this respect, while he cannot competently interfere with or control the jury in passing upon the evidence, he nevertheless exercises a very salutary supervisory power over their verdict; in the exercise of that power he should always satisfy himself that the evidence as a whole is sufficient to sustain the verdict found, and, if in his sound judgment it is not, he should unhesitatingly say so, and set the verdict aside. People v. Lum Yit, 83 Cal. 130 [23 P. 223]."

The rules are restated in People v. Petros, 25 Cal. App. 236, 143 P. 246, in the following language:

"The rule is thoroughly settled that 'the granting or denying a new trial on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, rests so fully in the discretion of the trial court that its action is conclusive upon this court, unless it appears that there has been an abuse of discretion.' Domico v. Casassa, 101 Cal. 413 [35 P. 1024]; Warner v. Thomas, etc., Works, 105 Cal. 411 [38 P. 960]; [Edinger] Edinger v. Sigwart, 13 Cal. App. 667, 676 [110 P. 521, 524], and cases therein cited. 'Indeed, it has repeatedly been said in the cases that the action of a trial court in granting a new trial upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision "is so far a matter within its discretion that, if there is any appreciable conflict in the evidence it is not open to review."' Newman v. Overland Pac. Ry. Co., 132 Cal. 74 [64 P. 110]; Otten v. Spreckels, 24 Cal. App. 251 [141 P. 224]. * * * While a trial court will not be allowed to trespass upon the functions of the jury, it is nevertheless true that it is invested with a supervisory control over a trial before a jury and is legally authorized to grant a new trial where it entertains a well-founded opinion, or one which appears to be sufficiently well-founded to preclude a reviewing court from declaring it not to be, that the result reached by the jury is not justified by the evidence. And, in determining this question upon a motion for a new trial, the trial court may, of course, pass upon the probative value of the testimony submitted in proof of the charge against the accused. In other words, such court may consider, examine, and scrutinize the testimony by the aid of those tests by which the jury are required to measure the worth and weight of the proofs adduced in substantiation of the charge, and if it thus reaches the conclusion that the jury, to reach its conclusion, must have accorded to such testimony undue weight and credit—that is to say, if it be persuaded by a just and fair consideration of the testimony that it is insufficient to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the jury formed an erroneous judgment on the probative power of the evidence—and, accordingly, in the exercise of the discretion committed to it as to such matters, grants a new trial, the order granting the motion must then be held to stand free from disturbance by a court of review.”

To the same effect are People v. Chew Wing Gow, 120 Cal. 298, 52 P. 657; People v. Lum Yit, 83 Cal. 130, 23 P. 228; In re Bainbridge's Estate, 169 Cal. 166, 146 P. 427; People v. Washington (Cal. App.) 260 P. 806; People v. Dewar, 49 Cal. App. 263, 193 P. 156; People v. Canfield, 173 Cal. 309, 159 P. 1046. In the case last cited, the court goes on to say:

“We can hardly manufacture in fancy a hypothetical situation in which a reviewing court would be justified in questioning the discretion of a trial court who should grant a new trial in a case involving a criminal charge.”

And in this connection Mr. Justice Temple, the author of the opinion in the case of People v. Chew Wing Gow, supra, declares that “no case [in this state] can be found in which an order granting a new trial in a criminal case for insufficiency of the evidence was reversed,” to which statement counsel for defendant add, without challenge on the part of appellant, that, since the case last above cited was decided, no such judgment of reversal has been rendered.

Turning, then, to the evidence in the case at bar, it is found to be in serious conflict as to the circumstances attending the homicide. Defendant admitted that he shot the deceased with a rifle, but claimed that he did so in self-defense. The shooting occurred on the night of October 14, 1927, in a public street or alley in the rear of defendant's residence, the defendant at the time being some distance from the deceased; and, although disinterested witnesses saw defendant firing the shots, they were unable to observe the conduct of the deceased, on account of the darkness. Earlier in the evening both men had been in a pool room where the deceased, in the presence and hearing of defendant, as the prosecution claims, received change for a $50 bill. Shortly thereafter, according to the dying statement of the deceased, who had been drinking, defendant invited him to his home to have some wine; and, on the way there, defendant attempted, with the aid of a pistol, to rob him of his money, but was finally persuaded by the deceased not to do so. A pistol was afterwards found on the defendant's person, but it proved to be a toy pistol. The deceased further stated that, following the attempted robbery, defendant proceeded on toward his home, and that he followed him there for the purpose of obtaining the wine which the defendant had promised him; that, when he arrived at the door of the defendant's house, defendant appeared with a rifle, ordered him away from the premises; and that, as he was proceeding down the alley away from the house, defendant shot him. The evidence shows without dispute that defendant fired several shots, but that only one took effect, the bullet having entered the deceased's back and passed through his body. Just about that time two officers who had been previously summoned to the scene drove into the alley, and in the glare of the lights from their automobile saw the wounded man and also the defendant, who was retreating toward his house with his rifle in hand.

In his own behalf, defendant testified that he had not invited the deceased to his home, but that, after he arrived there, the deceased, being partially intoxicated at the time, forced his way into the home, threatening violence to defendant and his wife with a knife which the deceased was exhibiting; that he then procured his rifle and drove the deceased from the house into the street, where the deceased continued his menacing attitude; that meanwhile he stood on the porch of his house, and, in order to frighten the deceased away, fired several shots in the air, the bullets going through the roof of the porch; that suddenly he saw the deceased turn and come toward him with knife in hand; and that thereupon he fired directly at the deceased. The evidence further shows that when the officers appeared immediately following the shooting the defendant told them to “look out,” that the deceased had a knife; whereupon the officers searched the deceased and found upon his person an open knife such as is used in canneries, wrapped in a piece of newspaper. Defendant's testimony as to the deceased invading his home was corroborated by the testimony of his wife; and his statements about ordering the deceased away from the premises were partially supported by the testimony of a neighbor, who stated that after hearing the first shot he went to the rear of his house to ascertain the cause of it, and that while there saw the defendant holding a rifle in his hand ordering some one away from the house; but in direct contradiction of the defendant's story the neighbor stated that the defendant did not remain on the porch, as defendant claimed, but that he followed the man out into the street, stopping every few steps to take deliberate aim and fire. Defendant's testimony was further contradicted by evidence showing that no bullet holes were to be found in the roof of his porch.

It would seem unnecessary to narrate any additional evidence adduced at the trial, for the reason that the portions already set forth are sufficient to show that substantial conflict existed on essential points bearing upon the question of the defendant's guilt or innocence; and in that state of the record we are not permitted, under the authorities quoted, to interfere with the decision of the trial judge in the granting of said motion. "Whatever may be our view of the sufficiency of the evidence constituting respondent's defense to the charge, it is not the function of this court to substitute its discretion for that which is vested in the trial court." People v. Claiborne, 63 Cal. App. 598, 219 P. 72. As said in People v. Ostrander, 23 Cal. App. 241, 137 P. 619:

"The trial judge was called upon to review the testimony in determining whether the verdict was sustained by the evidence, and he evidently gave credit to the statement made by the defendant. It may be remarked that as the testimony appears in the cold record, the explanation made by defendant is hardly worthy of credence; * * * still, having seen and heard the witnesses, the trial judge was authorized and required to draw his conclusions as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the conviction, and in such a case this court cannot interfere with his determination of that matter. There was a conflict of evidence, and therefore on this appeal a question of law is not presented."

In further support of the trial court's order granting a new trial defendant contends that he was entitled to the order as a matter of statutory right because his motion for a new trial had not been determined by the trial court within the statutory period. Pen. Code, §§ 1191 and 1202; Rankin v. Superior Court, supra; People v. Boling, supra; People v. Winner, supra. But, in view of the conclusions we have reached upon the other phase of the case, we deem discussion and determination of the point last mentioned unnecessary.

For the reasons given, the order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

PEOPLE v. GARVEY et al. (Cr. 1632.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. Aug. 15, 1928.

1. Burglary ⚡41(1)—Homicide ⚡250—Conviction of defendants for murder of proprietor and burglary of drug store held sustained by evidence.

In prosecution for murder and burglary, evidence showing deceased was found in rear of his drug store with concussions on his head, which might have been caused by blunt instrument or fall, that deceased was bound hand and foot, and that cash register had been emptied, together with evidence identifying defendants and admission of killing by one defendant, was sufficient to justify verdict of guilty.

2. Criminal law ⚡1159(3)—District Court of Appeal will not weigh conflicting evidence.

Evidence will not be weighed by District Court of Appeal, where there is substantial conflict.

3. Criminal law ⚡958(6)—Denial of new trial, under affidavit that witness was not certain whether defendant admitted crime as testified, disputed by affidavits for state, and under affidavits not showing new evidence, held not abuse of discretion.

In prosecution for murder and burglary, affidavit by witness that he was not sure that defendant had stated he killed deceased, as testified to at trial, but not alleging defendant did not make other incriminating statements, which affidavit was disputed by affidavits showing defendant made statements, and other affidavits regarding defendant's whereabouts at time of crime, which were merely cumulative and did not show new testimony unknown to defendants at trial, held not to show abuse of discretion in denying new trial.

4. Criminal law ⚡935(1), 1156(2)—Denial of new trial, claimed because of insufficiency of evidence, is within trial court's discretion, not to be disturbed, in absence of abuse.

Denial of motion for new trial, made on ground of insufficiency of evidence, supported by affidavits, rests largely in discretion of trial court, which will not be disturbed, unless there was abuse of discretion.

5. Criminal law ⚡1169(11)—Admission of evidence of theft of automobile, such as used in committing murder and burglary, held not error, though prosecution failed to prove defendants' connection with theft.

In prosecution for murder and burglary, in which testimony showed that Hudson automobile was used in committing crime, evidence that Hudson automobile was stolen, and that defendant was seen near place of theft, would have been material, as connecting defendants with commission of crimes, and admission thereof was not error, though prosecution failed to connect defendants with theft of automobile.

6. Criminal law §1171(1)—Defendants could not deny their counsel's right to stipulate for admission of evidence not to be disputed, where defendants were not prejudiced, and nothing in evidence was untrue.

Where court permitted counsel for defendants to stipulate that district attorney might state what father of deceased would testify, if present, with understanding that it would not be disputed, and counsel was aware of what testimony would be, and it was not shown that defendants were prejudiced thereby, or anything therein was not true, defendants could not contend that their counsel had no right to so stipulate.

7. Attorney and client §86—Counsel may stipulate relative to any steps of action.

Generally, counsel have right to stipulate relative to any steps of action or proceeding.

8. Criminal law §829(18)—Refusal of Instructions to acquit, if testimony on alibi raised reasonable doubt, held not error, in view of instructions given on reasonable doubt and alibi.

Where court, in prosecution for murder and burglary, extensively instructed jury on subject of reasonable doubt, and that defense need not prove alibi beyond reasonable doubt, it was not error to refuse instructions that, if testimony of defendants on question of alibi was sufficient to raise reasonable doubt concerning presence at scene of crime, it was duty of jury to acquit; trial judge not being required to make any comment on any particular line of evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William T. Aggeler, Judge.

Mike Garvey and others were convicted of murder and burglary, and they appeal. Affirmed.

W. T. Kendrick, Jr., of Los Angeles (W. T. Kendrick, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., James S. Howie and John D. Richer, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendants were indicted by the grand jury of Los Angeles county, charged in count I with the crime of murder, and in count II with burglary. They were all found guilty of both offenses, and prosecute this appeal from the judgments pronounced upon the verdict, and also from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

The principal contention advanced by appellants is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict of guilty, and their argument in this regard is pointed particularly to the verdict on the first count, for which the defendants were sentenced to San Quentin for life. The testimony adduced shows that A. R. Miles, the proprietor of a drug store at the corner of Fourth avenue and Jefferson street in the city of Los Angeles, was found dead in the rear room of that store on the evening of November 1, 1927, at about 10:30 p. m. The autopsy surgeon found an extensive contusion behind the left ear, and underneath this contusion an extensive internal hemorrhage, covering the entire surface of the brain and extending downward into the spinal canal. He could not say whether this injury was caused by a blunt instrument striking the head or by a fall. He also found an abrasion on the right side of the forehead and a contusion in the center of the left side of the forehead. The record discloses that during the course of the trial it was made to appear that A. H. Miles, the father of the deceased, was ill in bed, and when it was suggested that the court attend his bedside for the purpose of taking his testimony, defense counsel, who is not now representing appellants, stipulated in open court, after being warned by the district attorney, and after the latter had stated to counsel and the trial judge in chambers what his statement would be, that the district attorney might state what the witness would testify to, if sworn and examined, and that he would not controvert the testimony, whereupon the district attorney stated that, if Mr. Miles were called, he would testify that he was the father of deceased; that he went to his son's store on the evening in question, and, not finding him in the front portion thereof, went into the room in the rear, where he found his son lying on the floor, covered with blood and bound with wire, hand and foot; that there were abrasions on his head; that he examined the cash register, and although the tape which records the amount of money rung up indicated $36, there was no money therein; that he then accompanied his son to the receiving hospital, where he died somewhere between 10 and 11 o'clock.

An 11 year old boy living in the neighborhood visited the store about 10 p. m., after returning from a picture show, and while standing outside, near the entrance, saw three men drive up in a Hudson coach automobile, which they parked on Fourth avenue, without stopping the motor. These three men went inside, one of them stating that he wanted a cigar and "asked for them free." When Miles refused, he walked back into the rear room, and two of the men followed. After being there about five minutes, the three men "walked out fast, * * * hopped in their car," threw a bag or something into the rear seat, and drove away. After visiting the Central Station the fourth time and seeing other prisoners, the witness picked out from a group of eight and identified two of the appellants. He did not identify the third at the time, but soon afterward. After the three men left the store, the boy ran some distance away, but came back when the ambulance arrived, at which time he saw Miles "lying there all tied up." This witness also testified that he saw Roberta Scriver come in a little after the appellants left, and "yooahoo," and knock on the counter, to which no one responded.

Roberta Scriver, the young lady just mentioned, testified that she lived two blocks from the drug store; that she left home at exactly 10:15 o'clock on the evening in question, and drove with friends to the drug store; that when she went to go in she saw three men in a Hudson coach, and saw them drive away; that one of the men came out of the store "kind of on a trot," threw a bundle into the car, got into the car, and they all drove away. She was not positive in her identification of this man, but thought that appellant Leshner looked something like him. She also testified that she waited around the store about three minutes, and thought it was funny that nobody was there. Later she saw Miles lying on the floor, and that just above his left eye there was a "kind of a red mark, like there was blood spurting out of his head." She also testified that she saw a gun lying on the table in the back room.

A witness by the name of Walton testified that about November 7th or 8th all of the appellants and some other people were at his home drinking bootleg and wine; that the appellant Leshner became so badly intoxicated that he had to put him to bed; that about 2:30 in the morning, as Leshner was coming out of his stupor, he said, "Why did I kill him;" that later Leshner came into the outer room, and Walton, in the presence only of Leshner, asked him what he meant by the remark, whereupon appellant Leshner said, "I might as well tell about it," "I committed the Jefferson street job," and added that he hit the deceased over the head, and after he had fallen, he opened his eyes and said "Heinie"; that then "I knew he knew me, and I finished him with my feet." This witness admitted that he was so intoxicated that about all he was able to do was to get around. The court admonished the jury, at the time the witness related this admission of the appellant Leshner, that the testimony was not applicable to the appellants Garvey and Rohan.

The appellants all took the stand, and denied any knowledge of the crime, and maintained that they were at home on the evening in question.

[1, 2] It is apparent from the testimony introduced that the jury were fully justified in returning a verdict of guilty. There is nothing incredible in the testimony of Eddie Yates, the boy who identified the appellants. This same witness testified that Miles was all tied up, which, if believed, would dispel the idea of an accident, as would also a similar remark, contained in the district attorney's statement of what the father would testify to, to the effect that his son was bound with wire, hand and foot. It has so often been asserted, and is so well understood, that it is not the province of this court to weigh the evidence, where there is a substantial conflict, that we deliberately decline to cite authorities to that effect.

[3, 4] We will next consider the asserted error of the court in denying the motion of appellants for a new trial, which they argue seriously and with apparent sincerity. In aid of that motion there was presented an affidavit signed by H. S. Walton, a witness at the trial, in which he says that on the evening of November 7th or 8th, at which time he testified that Leshner cried out, as he was coming out of a drunken stupor, "I am sorry I killed him," that he (Walton) was so intoxicated that he was incapable of registering intelligent impressions, and so "he never was certain whether that statement was actually made to him by Harvey Leshner," and that "he honestly believes that he might have imagined that such a statement was made by Leshner." He further avers that he was threatened with arrest by police officers, and, being fearful of such action by them, testified to the statement. Nowhere in the affidavit does Walton say that he did not have the conversation which he testified took place after Leshner had come into the outer room. The affidavit is skillfully drawn, but nevertheless limited in effect to saying that he may have been mistaken when he testified to this one statement. On the other hand, there were submitted on behalf of the prosecution six affidavits of various police officers to the general effect that Walton had repeatedly and freely stated that Leshner had made the statement and had held the conversation which has been detailed.

The remaining affidavits of appellants, five in number, state in general that H. S. Walton, the witness, was at the home of the appellant Leshner on the night of November 1st, somewhere between 9:20 and 9:45 p. m., some of them stating that they talked to him at that place between 9:30 and 10 o'clock; that he went from there to the home of Mrs. Adelaide Logan, arriving there between 9:30 and 10 o'clock. None of these affidavits state, nor does any affidavit disclose, that this fact was not known to the appellants at the time of trial, nor that they did not know that the affiants would so testify, if called. Furthermore, we fail to attach any great significance to the fact that Walton was present at Leshner's home at the time indicated. If intended to be in aid of the proof of an alibi, they would not only be merely cumulative, but also it may be observed that the offense was committed, as near as it may be fixed, at 10:15 p. m. (the time when Roberta Scriver left her home), and at a distance, as counsel state in their brief, of about three miles from the home of Leshner. The denial of a motion for a new trial, made on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, supported by affidavits of the character we have just classified, rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, and the ruling will not be disturbed, unless it can be shown that there was an abuse of that discretion. We are of the opinion that there was nothing in the affidavits to warrant the granting of the motion in this case.

[5] Appellants also complain because, during the trial of the action, testimony by one Stopp was permitted to the effect that, some time between midnight of October 28, 1927, and 10 p. m. of October 29, his light green Hudson sedan was stolen from a garage on Mariposa avenue. The night man at this garage also testified that, about 9 o'clock in the evening of the day the Hudson was stolen, he saw the appellant Leshner come out on the side of the garage between some signboards, get into a roadster, and drive away with two other men whose faces he did not see. It is obvious that, had the prosecution been able to prove that Leshner and his companions stole the Hudson sedan, it would have been material, as tending to connect them with the commission of the offenses with which they were charged, in view of the testimony that it was a Hudson automobile in which the criminals came and departed the scene of the crime. It is also apparent that the prosecution failed in their effort to make this proof, but because they did fail we cannot see that the testimony was of any effect one way or the other.

[6, 7] Appellants strenuously object to the stipulation already mentioned, which the court permitted counsel who was representing the defendants at the trial to make, which permitted the district attorney to state what Mr. Miles would testify to, if present, with the understanding that it would not be disputed. Counsel was fully advised of what that testimony would be, and presumably the defendants, who were present, were likewise fully aware of its import. At least there is no showing that they were not aware of what it would be, nor is there any showing that they were prejudiced by the statement, or that anything contained in the statement was untrue. It is merely insisted that counsel had no right to enter into the stipulation. The general rule is that counsel have the right to stipulate relative to any of the steps of an action or proceeding. 23 Cal. Jur. p. 814. In fact, the situation here, when we bear in mind that counsel probably had in mind the effect which might possibly have been exerted upon the jury by an invalid father, is not unlike the one presented in the case of People v. Schoon, 177 Cal. 678, 684, 171 P. 680. Akin to this reasoning is that found in the case of People v. Bird, 132 Cal. 261, 64 P. 259, where the court, after discussing the right of the defendant to be confronted with the witnesses, discloses that the defendant "may waive his right of confrontation, if he so desires, and introduce in evidence the testimony of such dead or absent witnesses, whether that testimony was given at the preliminary examination or upon a former trial of the cause." The action of the trial court in refusing the defendant permission to waive his rights in this case was held to be error and the cause was reversed.

[8] Appellants also assert that the court erred in its refusal to give three instructions requested by them upon the subject of their attempted proof of an alibi. These instructions would have told the jury that, if the testimony of the defendants in this regard was sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt in their minds concerning the presence of appellants at the scene of the crime, it was their duty to acquit. In view of the fact that the trial court extensively instructed the jury upon the subject of reasonable doubt, and told them that it was not necessary for the defense to prove an alibi beyond a reasonable doubt, and also that, if the evidence was equally susceptible to the interpretation that defendants were guilty, with the interpretation that they were not guilty, giving in all seven instructions bearing upon the question, we feel that appellants' argument is effectually concluded by the authorities—People v. Perrin, 67 Cal. App. 612, 227 P. 924, and People v. Powell (Cal. App.) 256 P. 561—wherein it is held not to be the duty of the trial judge to make any comment on any particular line of evidence. Judgments and order affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; HAZLETT, Justice pro tem.

93 Cal. App. 337

WILKINSON v. BOOR SINGH. (Civ. 5608.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 28, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 27, 1928.

Supplemental Opinion, Aug. 17, 1928.

1. Landlord and tenant §180(3)—Verdict awarding damages in forcible eviction action for destruction and loss of furniture, in absence of testimony as to value, held unsupported by evidence.

In action to recover damages for forcible eviction, verdict awarding damages for destruction and loss of furniture occasioned thereby, where there was no testimony of value of furniture, either before or after it was thrown out of building, held unsupported by evidence.

2. Landlord and tenant §180(4)—Measure of damages for loss of dogs, caused by forcible eviction, is price for which other dogs equal in value could be bought in open market (Civ. Code, § 3354).

In action to recover damages for forcible eviction, whereby plaintiff lost two dogs, measure of damages for loss of dogs, under Civ. Code, § 3354, is price for which two other dogs, equal in value to those lost, could be bought in open market.

3. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 180(1)—Action to recover for forcible eviction could be maintained, without first resorting to separate suit to regain possession.

An action to recover damages for forcible eviction, where plaintiff did not seek to regain possession of premises under a summary proceeding provided for in cases of forcible entry and detainer, held properly instituted, without first resorting to separate suit to regain possession of property.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 170(9)—Instruction that measure of damages for loss of property having no market value was its particular value to owner, though not supported by evidence, held harmless error (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 475).

Instruction that measure of damages for loss or destruction of personal property, if it had no market value, and was more particularly valuable to the owner than any one else, was its particular value to the owner, though erroneous, as not supported by evidence, held harmless, in view of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 475, where lost dogs, sought to be recovered for, did have a market value.

5. Damages $\S$ 208(8)—Discretion of jury and trial court in awarding exemplary damages is not unlimited.

Discretion of jury and trial court in awarding exemplary damages, out of proportion to actual damages, is not unlimited.

6. Landlord and tenant $\S$ 180(4)—Verdict for exemplary damages, out of proportion to actual damages allowed, could be set aside by court, the same as any excessive verdict.

Where exemplary damages of $1,500 were out of all proportion to actual damages of $70 awarded plaintiff in an action to recover for damages caused by wanton and malicious eviction from property, held, that court had power to set aside verdict for exemplary damages, the same as for any excessive verdict.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by Richard Wilkinson against Boor Singh for damages for forcible entry. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, unless remittitur filed.

John S. De Lancey and Clarence De Lancey, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Joseph L. Fainer, of Oakland, and Leo Collins, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant Boor Singh from a judgment entered against him upon a verdict of a jury in the sum of $2,500, and reduced to $1,500. This case is between a canine breeder and a Hindu fortune teller.

The record in this case establishes beyond question the truth of the old adage that it is impossible for two families to live under the same roof in peace and harmony, especially when one insists upon having their dogs reside with them. In September, 1924, Ernest Lum, a Chinaman, owned a building at 2290 East Fourteenth street, in San Leandro, Cal., used as a dance hall. The respondent, Richard Wilkinson, and his 27 dogs lived in a small building adjoining the Lum property. The appellant, Boor Singh, called at respondent's dog kennel some time about the last of September or the 1st of October, 1924, and asked respondent who owned the building at 2290 East Fourteenth street. Thereupon appellant and respondent went to see Mr. Lum, who resides in Oakland, and on this visit appellant claims to have rented the property from Lum for $60 a month, beginning November 1, 1924; but, according to the testimony of respondent, Lum gave the keys to him, and told him that he was to look after the property and also to look after the appellant while he occupied the building. Respondent also claims to have had before this time permission from Lum to occupy the kitchen and rear portion of the building.

On or about November 1, 1924, appellant and his wife moved their furniture and paraphernalia into the dance hall, or front room of said building, cleaned up the room, placed their alluring and attractive signs on the front of the building, and otherwise put the place in order to reap a rich harvest from the gullible public by reading their palms. On the next day after appellant and his wife moved into the front part of the building respondent and his 27 dogs took possession of the kitchen, rear end of the building, back yard, garage, etc. There is nothing in the record to show that appellant made any objection to respondent and his dogs occupying the kitchen, etc., when respondent first moved in; but, on the contrary, appellant and respondent seem to have been on friendly terms, for appellant gave a "grand opening dance," and respondent assisted in receiving the guests and in serving them "hot dogs" and coffee.

Appellant and his wife continued to conduct their business in the front room, and respondent continued to live and breed dogs in the kitchen and back yard, until December 12, 1924. Respondent never paid any rent, either to appellant or to Lum. On December 12, 1924, at about the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., and while respondent and about 7 of his dogs were living contentedly in the kitchen of the building, appellant entered the kitchen in a very angry mood, with a large hammer in his hand, and told respondent that he and his dogs must immediately vacate the premises. Respondent refused to accede to this request, whereupon appellant immediately flew into a violent rage, and knocked down the small partition in the kitchen, and threw the partition, together with all of respondent's furniture, into the back yard. The furniture included a piano, which appellant's wife assisted in removing into the back yard. After appellant had removed all of respondent's belongings from the kitchen, he then proceeded to the garage in the back yard, and there knocked off the hinges of the door and released about 20 more dogs, which were confined in the garage; then appellant proceeded to the fence surrounding the back yard, and knocked off several boards, and the dogs made hasty departures in all directions. Appellant consumed about two hours in raising havoc with respondent's furniture and dogs, during which time respondent made little or no resistance, but contented himself by running to and fro through the building, tearing his hair, and calling upon the Lord and the law for assistance. After the turmoil had subsided, and the dogs had taken refuge in nearby alleys and back yards, respondent succeeded in getting the constable to the scene of the trouble, and the constable, in company with the respondent, interviewed the appellant, and he admitted doing all of the things hereinabove related, but contended that he had leased the entire building and that respondent had no right or authority in said building or in any portion thereof. Respondent, after considerable search and inquiry, finally recovered all the dogs except two—one male dog weighing about 2½ pounds named "Tip," and another small female dog named "Fay."

On February 10, 1925, the respondent commenced this action for damages, alleging that he was entitled to the possession of the kitchen and rear portion of said premises, and that the entry of defendant was forcible, unlawful, malicious, and without consent of plaintiff, etc.; that by reason of said eviction he was forced to, and did, sleep in an out building used as a dog kennel, situate in the rear of said premises, and was thereby greatly humiliated, and was caused great and grievous mental suffering and anguish, by reason of which he was damaged in the sum of $1,000. The complaint also alleged that by the removal of the furniture plaintiff was damaged in the further sum of $175, and further alleged that by reason of the acts of defendant the two dogs above mentioned, "Tip" and "Fay," were lost, and were of the value of $4,000. The complaint further alleged that said two dogs were irreplaceable, and that by reason of the deprivation of being able to enter them in contests the reputation of plaintiff as a breeder of dogs has been injured and damaged in the sum of $1,000, and further alleged that by reason of said defendant's malicious, unlawful, and willful acts, said plaintiff has suffered damage in the further sum of $5,000, and prayed for a total judgment in the sum of $11,175.

The defendant answered, denying all the material allegations of the complaint, and also filed a cross-complaint, asking for rent at the rate of $25 per month from December 12, 1924, for the premises occupied by plaintiff and his dogs. The jury did not separate the damages, but returned a general verdict assessing plaintiff's damages at $2,500.

[1] The appellant first contends that the verdict is not supported by the evidence. It will therefore be necessary to make a brief reference to the evidence on the question of damages. The only evidence in the record relative to the value of the furniture is that given by the respondent himself, which is as follows:

"Q. I will ask you what damage was done to your furniture by the removal by Mr. Boor Singh? A. Well, the piano was broke up, and all the other things were stolen. They was not put quietly down in the back yard; they was thrown right out violently in the back yard at 2 o'clock. * * *

"Q. Did you lose any articles by this throwing out? A. No; I didn't lose only what was broken up. * * *

"Q. You allege you were damaged in the sum of $175, because of the removal of this furniture; is that right?

"Mr. De Lancey: Object to the question as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and no way proving damages, and as calling for the conclusion of the witness.

"The Court: You have not told us what furniture was put outside. A. All the carpet was ripped up, it was not pulled up proper; it was just ripped up and thrown outside. The piano was thrown outside, and the chairs and the pictures, and all of that. All the canned stuff I was going to use for the lunch counter, and all that, all wasted away."

From this testimony it is clear that there is no evidence whatever as to the value of the furniture, either before or after it was thrown out into the back yard, and no evidence of any damage to it. No evidence was offered in support of plaintiff's claim that his reputation as a breeder of dogs had been impaired.

The evidence does not show, nor can it be inferred from any testimony in the record, that plaintiff was compelled to sleep in the kennel with the dogs, or that he suffered any humiliation by so doing, but, on the contrary, it appears that he slept with the dogs from choice. Before the eviction he was sleeping with the dogs in the kitchen. We fail to see why it would be any more humiliating to sleep in the kennel with the dogs than to sleep in the kitchen with them.

[2] The only testimony in the record as to the market value of "Tip" and "Fay," the two dogs that were not recovered, was offered by appellant, which was that "Tip" could be easily replaced for $35. There is no direct evidence that the dog "Fay" had any market value, but it could probably be inferred from all the testimony in the case that she also had a market value of $35. Respondent offered no evidence as to their market or reasonable value, but only introduced testimony as to the earning ability of the dog "Tip," which was that during the breeding season of 1924, he received for the services of "Tip" approximately $25 per week. Under this evidence, the measure of damages is the price for which two other dogs, equal in value to "Tip" and "Fay," could be bought for in the market in Oakland or San Leandro, Cal., which would be not exceeding $70. Section 3354, Civ. Code.

[3] Appellant contends that no damages can be awarded respondent for being violently ejected from the building, for the reason that respondent never attempted to regain possession of the premises. It is true, as contended by appellant, that the cases of Brawley v. Risdon Iron Works, 38 Cal. 676, and Edwards v. Bodkin, 43 Cal. App. 405, 185 P. 423, hold that, in an action of forcible entry or forcible detainer, the substance of the recovery, when the plaintiff is successful in the action, is the possession of the premises, and that damages for forcible entry or detainer are not awarded, unless the plaintiff recovers the possession of the premises in controversy; but it must be remembered that this is an action, among other things, for damages for forcible eviction, and respondent has not sought to gain possession of the premises under a summary proceeding provided for in cases of forcible entry and detainer. The implied finding of the jury is to the effect that respondent was entitled to the possession of the premises at the time of the forcible eviction, and, as we have seen, the evidence is sufficient to sustain this implied finding of the jury. Of course, if the jury had found that respondent was not entitled to any damages by reason of the eviction, then it would have been an implied finding that he was not entitled to the possession of the property. We think there is a clear distinction between the rule laid down in the two cases cited by appellant and the case at bar. Certainly, respondent would not have to resort to a separate suit and have the court award him possession of the premises before he could maintain this action for damages for this unlawful and malicious eviction.

[4] It is next contended by appellant that the court erred in giving certain instructions on the measure of damages. A careful examination of all the instructions given satisfies us that the trial court fully and correctly instructed the jury upon all phases of the law applicable to the case, with one possible exception, and that is this: The court instructed the jury that the measure of damages for the loss or destruction of personal property, if it had no market value and was more particularly valuable to the owner than any one else, was its particular value to the owner. This instruction was, no doubt, intended to apply to the value of the dogs; but, as we have seen, the evidence shows that said dogs did have a market value. Therefore there was no evidence in the record upon which this instruction could have been based, and should not have been given. The giving of this instruction, however, did not, in our opinion, affect any of the substantial rights of appellant. It was harmless error. This court is required by section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure to disregard any improper instruction which, in our opinion, did not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and not to reverse any judgment by reason of any instruction, error, or ruling, unless it shall appear to us that by such instruction, error, or ruling the appellant sustained or suffered substantial injury, and that a different result would have been probable if such instruction, error, or ruling had not occurred. It is also provided that there shall be no presumption that error is prejudicial, or that injury is done if error is shown.

[5] Lastly, appellant contends that the damages are excessive. As above stated, the jury rendered a general verdict, assessing the damages at $2,500. A motion for a new trial was made upon several grounds, among them being excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice (subd. 5, § 657, Code Civ. Proc.), and the trial court made the following order:

"The motion for a new trial in the above-entitled cause having been heretofore argued and submitted to the court for decision, comes now the court and orders that a new trial be granted, unless plaintiff shall within five days in writing remit all the judgment in excess of $1,500, but if plaintiff shall remit the sum of $1,000 from the judgment within five days, then and in that event the said motion for a new trial will be denied."

This order was complied with, and the judgment reduced to $1,500. The evidence shows respondent's damage to be $70 for loss of the two dogs, "Tip" and "Fay"; no other actual damage was proved. Therefore, if the judgment of $1,500 can be sustained at all, it must be upon the theory that $1,430 of said judgment was for exemplary or punitive damages. The respondent, in the prayer of his complaint, did not expressly ask for exemplary damages, but he did allege in the body of his complaint that all the acts charged against appellant were unlawfully, willfully, and maliciously committed. There was no demurrer of any kind interposed to the complaint. The court instructed the jury on exemplary damages, and the evidence is ample to sustain the implied finding of the jury that appellant's acts were extremely wanton and malicious.

Under all these facts and circumstances, we think the jury was fully warranted in rendering a judgment, including punitive damages (section 3294, Civ. Code; 8 Cal. Juris. 892), but the amount allowed for punitive damages is about 20 times the amount of the actual damages proved. We fully appreciate the fact that there is no hard and fast rule fixing the proportion between actual and exemplary damages, in cases where exemplary damages are recoverable. It has, however, been repeatedly held that exemplary damages should bear a reasonable proportion to the actual damages sustained, and the discretion of the jury and trial court are not unlimited in this matter. Flannery v. Wood, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 250, 73 S. W. 1072; Plotnik v. Rosenberg, 55 Cal. App. 408, 203 P. 438.

[6] We think the judgment in the case at bar, even after being reduced to $1,500 by the trial court, is still greatly excessive. To award $1,430 punitive damages, when only $70 actual damages is proved, is, in our judgment, out of all proportion to the actual damages sustained, and should not be permitted to stand. The power of this court to set aside a verdict for exemplary damages is the same power, and exercised upon the same principle, as in any case of excessive verdict. Plotnik v. Rosenberg, supra.

We have concluded that the judgment in this case should be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial, unless the respondent shall, within 20 days from the date of the filing of this opinion, file in this court a remittitur of all damages in excess of $370, plus costs, if the said remittitur be filed; the judgment then to be modified in accordance therewith, and, as so modified, affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

Supplemental Opinion.

PER CURIAM. The opinion and decision of this court in the above-entitled cause having been rendered on July 28, 1928, the final paragraph thereof reading as follows: "We have concluded that the judgment in this case should be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial, unless the respondent shall, within 20 days from the date of the filing of this opinion, file in this court a remittitur of all damages in excess of $370, plus costs; if the said remittitur be filed, the judgment then to be modified in accordance therewith, and, as so modified, affirmed. It is so ordered,"—and it appearing that respondent filed herein on August 16, 1928, remittitur of damages in excess of $370, plus costs, the judgment is modified in accordance therewith, and, as so modified, is affirmed, respondent to recover his costs on this appeal.

93 Cal. App. 526

HOLLINGSWORTH v. LEWIS et al.*
(Civ. 6308.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 17, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 15, 1928.

1. Appeal and error §714(5)—Matters not on face of record, though appearing in briefs, cannot be considered on appeal.

Matters appearing in briefs, but not appearing on face of record, cannot be passed on by Court of Appeals.

2. Attorney and client §144—Ambiguity in contract between attorney and client should be resolved against attorney and in favor of client.

In construing contract made between attorney and client, ambiguity should be resolved against attorney and in favor of client.

3. Contracts §159—Word "refund" in contract to secure refunds on shipments means to repay (Civ. Code, § 1644).

Word "refund" in contract for services in securing refunds on shipments means to repay in its ordinary and popular meaning, which must be considered in interpreting meaning of words used in contract, under Civ. Code, § 1644.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Refund.]

4. Attorney and client §148(3)—Attorney contracting to secure refunds on shipments compensated by one-half thereof could not participate in interest ordered paid to defendant which was not a refund.

Under contract whereby attorney undertook burden of securing refunds on shipments and was to be paid one-half of refunds secured as compensation for services, attorney was not authorized to receive 50 per cent. of all moneys collected, and was not entitled to share in money received as interest, which was never paid by defendant to railroad, and which could not be said to be repaid by railroad by virtue of order of Interstate Commerce Commission.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by E. W. Hollingsworth against M. G. Lewis and others, copartners doing business under the fictitious name of the Pacific Manure & Fertilizer Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Fred L. Dreher and J. Ed. McClellan, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

A. W. Hollingsworth, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action to recover compensation for services as an attorney at law, rendered in behalf of the defendants before the Interstate Commerce Commission. The defendants appeared and answered. The plaintiff interposed a demurrer to the answer; it was sustained, and the defendants were given permission to amend within 10 days. They did not amend, and thereafter a judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for $5,963.40, with interest thereon from the date of the filing of the complaint, and for costs. From that judgment, the defendants have appealed, and have brought up the judgment roll.

In his complaint, the plaintiff set forth his cause of action in four separate counts. In the fourth count, he pleaded a written contract in hæc verba. That portion of the contract material to a determination of the questions presented to us is as follows:

"It is further agreed by and between the parties hereto that, in the event that aforementioned reductions are secured, the said party of the second part shall turn over to the said party of the first part freight bills covering shipments made prior to the date on which such reductions became effective and on which freight charges shall have been paid by the said party of the second part, for the purpose of enabling the said party of the first part to secure refunds on such shipments to whatever basis shall be found just and reasonable by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and fifty per cent. (50%) of the refunds so secured shall accrue to the said party of the first part, and the remaining fifty per cent. (50%) shall accrue to the said party of the second part."

In their answer, by certain admissions, allegations, and denials, the defendants pleaded that of the moneys paid to them by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission $4,945.08 is principal—that is, moneys theretofore illegally collected from the defendants—and that the difference between the sum last stated and the amount claimed by the plaintiff represents a part of the moneys ordered paid to defendants as interest. In other words, it was the contention of the defendants in the lower court, and it is their sole point on appeal, that the plaintiff under the terms of his contract was not entitled to share in the moneys received by the defendants as interest on the principal sums illegally collected from the defendants by certain transportation companies. If this contention is a correct interpretation of the contract, the judgment as rendered should be modified.

[1, 2] In their briefs, counsel call to our attention some matters which we think do not appear on the face of the record; therefore we pass such matters by. They call our attention to certain passages contained in the contract which have not been quoted by us. We have examined the entire contract, and do not find any portion that throws any additional light on the particular paragraph which we have quoted. Turning to that particular paragraph, it will be noted that the plaintiff undertook the burden of securing "refunds on such shipments," and that the defendants undertook to pay the plaintiff "50 per cent. of the refunds so secured." In very short, we are asked to determine the length and breadth of the meaning of the word "refunds" as used in the contract executed by the parties. As to whether that word included both freight moneys and interest on freight moneys, or merely included freight moneys, is slightly ambiguous. As the contract was made between an attorney and his client, the ambiguity should be resolved against the attorney and in favor of the client. Boardman v. Christin, 65 Cal. App. 413, 224 P. 97.

[3, 4] If we turn to any of the dictionaries, we find that one of "the ordinary and popular" meanings of the word "refund" is to repay. See New Standard, Webster's New International, and Century. When interpreting the meaning of words used in a contract the court should give to the words used "their ordinary and popular" meaning. Civ. Code, § 1644. As the defendants never paid any interest to any railroad company, in no proper sense can it be said that any railroad company, by virtue of the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or otherwise, repaid (that is refunded) any interest money. By the terms of the contract executed by the parties, the plaintiff was never authorized to receive 50 per cent. of all moneys collected. We are therefore of the opinion that the interpretation placed on the contract by the defendants is the correct interpretation.

It follows that the judgment appealed from should be modified by striking out the words "five thousand nine hundred sixty-three and 40/100 ($5,963.40) dollars" and that there should be inserted in lieu thereof "four thousand nine hundred forty-five and 08/100 ($4,945.08) dollars," and, as so modified, that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered. And it is further ordered that the defendants recover their costs on appeal.

We concur: BUCK, Presiding Justice pro tem.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 370

TODD v. MESERVE et al. (Civ. 6290.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 31, 1928.

1. Mines and minerals ⇨109—Paragraph of contract dealing with contractor's obligations during first stage of drilling oil well cannot be considered in interpreting subsequent paragraph dealing with drilling thereafter (Civ. Code, § 1641).

Where one paragraph of contract for drilling of oil well dealt with obligation of contractor during the first stage of drilling only, such paragraph was not proper for consideration in determining meaning of a subsequent paragraph dealing with drilling thereafter and defining obligations of contractor during such stage, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 1641, requiring that the whole of the contract be taken together so as to give effect to every part if reasonably practicable.

2. Evidence ⇨448—Extrinsic evidence is admissible to determine intention of parties to ambiguous written contract.

Where the language of a written contract is ambiguous, extrinsic evidence is admissible for the purpose of disclosing intention of parties.

3. Customs and usages ⇨13—Party to contract is presumed, in dealing with individual in particular profession or business, to have contracted according to usage thereof.

Party to a contract is presumed, in dealing with any individual in particular profession or business, to have dealt and contracted with such individual according to the usage of that business.

4. Customs and usages ⇨15(1)—Usage concerning business to which contract relates will be availed of to shed light on meaning so far as terms are ambiguous.

When a contract is made with a man concerning the business of his craft, it is presumed to have been framed on the basis of such usage, which will be availed of to shed light on the meaning of contract in so far as its terms are ambiguous.

5. Customs and usages ⇨18—Evidence that term “necessary supplies” had particular meaning according to usage of oil business held admissible under circumstances without pleading usage.

In action to recover on a written contract to drill an oil well requiring owners during certain stage of drilling to pay for necessary supplies among other items, evidence held to sustain finding that term “necessary supplies” had particular meaning according to usage of oil business, known to owners at time of entering into drilling contract, so as to authorize admission of evidence of usage, in spite of fact that such usage had not been pleaded.

6. Mines and minerals ⇨109—Evidence in action on oil well drilling contract held to sustain finding that owners were obligated for payment of foreman's salary.

Evidence in action to recover on oil well drilling contract held to sustain finding that salary of foreman was included as part of labor which owners agreed to pay during certain stage of drilling operations by virtue of agreement obligating owners to pay for all of labor and drilling crews.

7. Trial ⇨140(1)—Witness' credibility is for jury.

Credibility of witness is entirely a question for the jury or trial court.

8. Mines and minerals ⇨109—Negligence of oil well driller in landing oil string held for jury.

In action to recover on oil well drilling contract, evidence relative to driller's negligence in landing oil string held for jury under evidence.

9. Mines and minerals ⇨109—Evidence in action on oil well drilling contract held insufficient to establish that owners were wrongfully charged for labor while men were playing cards.

In action on oil well drilling contract, where owners during certain stage of proceedings agreed to pay for labor and necessary supplies, evidence held insufficient to establish wrongful charge for labor while men were playing cards.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1067—Refusal of immaterial instruction held not reversible error.

Refusal of instruction which, by reason of evidence supporting certain finding, has become immaterial, does not constitute reversible error.

11. Mines and minerals ⇨109—Damage for loss of oil by reason of delay in completion of well held too remote and speculative.

Damage to owners on account of loss of oil by reason of delay in completion of oil well held too remote and speculative to justify recovery thereof.

12. Appeal and error ⇨928(1)—Refusal of requested instruction, merely covering certain of defendants' contentions, held not error, in view of presumption that jury was fully advised.

It will be assumed in support of judgment that jury was fully advised of defendants' contentions in the argument to the jury, in the absence of showing of reversible error, hence refusal of requested instruction merely covering certain contentions is not error.

13. Trial ⇨234(3)—Refusal of instruction directing jury to disallow claim if disbelieving certain testimony held properly refused as tending to confuse or mislead jury.

Refusal of instruction directing jury to disallow claim in event they disbelieved plaintiff's testimony concerning certain conversation held properly refused, as tending to confuse or mislead jury by diverting their attention from a portion of the evidence.

14. Trial ⇨203(1)—Refusal of pertinent instruction is proper, if issue could be determined in only one way.

Even where requested instruction is pertinent to an issue, the refusal of the instruction is proper, if under the evidence the issue could be determined in only one way.

15. Trial ⇨260(1)—Cumulative instructions held properly refused.

Instructions which were merely cumulative held properly refused.

16. Mines and minerals ⇨109—Evidence held to sustain verdict granting recovery on oil well drilling contract.

Evidence in action on oil well drilling contract held sufficient to sustain verdict granting recovery thereon.

17. Appeal and error ⇨1078(1)—Objections not argued in brief or supported by authorities will not be considered.

Objections which were not argued in brief or as to which no authorities are cited will not be considered by appellate court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by W. O. Todd against Edwin A. Meserve, Lawrence N. Wagner, and others, wherein Shirley E. Meserve and others, individually and as trustees of an express trust, filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants, with exception of Lawrence N. Wagner, appeal. Affirmed.

Meserve & Meserve and Timon E. Owens, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

McComb & Hall, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. In this action plaintiff prays judgment against defendants in the sum of $20,302.28, and defendants Shirley E. Meserve, Robert B. Moran, and T. Howard Knight, individually and as trustees of an express trust, by way of cross-complaint, pray judgment against plaintiff in the sum of $100,000.

About July 27, 1923, plaintiff, W. O. Todd, and defendants Shirley E. Meserve, T. Howard Knight, and Robert B. Moran, as trustees of an express trust, entered into a written contract by the terms of which W. O. Todd agreed to drill an oil well by the rotary method to be known as "Meserve-Knight-Moran No. 1," upon property in the so-called Signal Hill oil field. This contract provided, among other things, that the trustees should furnish at the location of the well a complete derrick, boilers (to be set up and connected and steam line carried to the derrick floor), water, fuel, lights sufficient for the boilers and for drilling and for lighting of the derrick, and all casing; that Todd should furnish all the necessary and proper rotary machinery, drill pipe, tool joints, drilling engines, pumps, and other necessary rotary equipment and tools, and all labor necessary to drill the well to a depth of approximately 3500 feet. By the terms of this contract, Todd also agreed to drill the well and land casing in such size and dimensions as should be directed by the trustees and to set approximately 3,500 feet of 8¼-inch casing. By the terms of this contract, Todd was to be entitled to no compensation unless he landed this 8¼-inch casing at or approximately at the 3,500-foot level. The contract further provided that the trustees should pay Todd for the drilling of the well and the landing of this casing at or approximately at the 3,500-foot level $22,500, and that Todd should, in addition to this sum, upon landing of the water string at or approximately at the 3,500-foot level, be entitled to receive from the trustees an assignment of 12½ per cent. interest of the net proceeds of all oil or gas produced from the well over and above the cost of maintenance and deduction on account of taxes and royalties. The contract further provided that upon Todd's landing the water string at or approximately at the 3,500-foot level he should turn over and deliver the hole to the trustees with casing properly set and open to the full diameter for the full length.

For the completion of the well below the approximate depth of 3,500 feet, the contract provided that Todd "furnish all of his equipment, tools, and appliances to the trustees, until said well is completed, for the rental of twenty-five ($25.00) dollars per day, and shall perform the necessary labor for drilling said well, and said trustees agree to pay for all of contractor's (Todd's) labor and drilling crews, until such well is completed, at the rate of $—— per day, together with the necessary supplies and the cost of the proper and necessary insurance, compensation, or otherwise, after the drilling in of said well after the landing of the water string."

The contract further provided that the depths mentioned therein were approximate only, and that drilling was to be stopped or continued as directed by the trustees, and casing landed at points designated by the trustees as changes in formation might make advisable. By written indorsement at the end of the contract, defendants T. Howard Knight, Robert B. Moran, Lawrence N. Wagner, Shirley E. Meserve, L. J. Fleming Bremner, and Edwin A. Meserve guaranteed the performance of all of the terms and conditions thereof to be performed on the part of the trustees and the payment of all moneys that might become due to Todd in accordance with the terms of the contract.

The work of rigging up the well was started on July 15 or 16, 1923, and the well was spudded in and drilling operations commenced on July 31, 1923. On September 11, 1923, a depth of 3,456 feet had been reached, and the 8¼-inch water string was landed and cemented at that depth on September 13, 1923. This completed the first stage of the work under the contract. There is no contention that the landing of the water string at the depth of 3,456 feet instead of at the depth of 3,500 feet as provided in the contract was not a satisfactory performance by Todd of his obligations under the contract with respect to the landing of this string, or that Todd was upon the landing of the water string at that depth not entitled to the consideration which it was provided in the contract he should be entitled to receive upon the landing of the water string. The complaint alleges—and it is not denied in the answer—that Todd landed the water string at approximately 3,456 feet, "which was the depth then and there designated by the first parties to said drilling contract."

Upon the landing of the water string, the drilling of the well proceeded, and a 6¼-inch casing was landed at a depth of 4,165 feet. On February 17, 1924, the well had been drilled to a depth of 4,761 feet, and on that day an attempt was made to run a 4¾-inch oil string into the hole. This oil string stuck at a depth of 230 feet from the bottom of the hole. The following day, and while an effort was being made to work this oil string loose, the oil string parted, leaving approximately 194 feet of the oil string in the bottom of the hole. This necessitated the drilling of a new hole past the portion of the oil string lost in the bottom of the first hole. This work of side-tracking was immediately undertaken, and a new hole drilled to a depth of 4,705 feet. Into this hole another oil string was run and cemented, and about April 23, 1924, the well was placed on production at approximately 1,200 barrels per day. Todd was paid the consideration which by the terms of the contract it was agreed should be paid him upon the landing of the 8¼-inch water string, i. e., $22,500 in cash and an assignment of a 12½ per cent. interest in the net proceeds of oil or gas produced from the well. Concerning this there was no dispute.

For the drilling of the well below the depth of 3,456 feet, plaintiff claims the following amounts: (1) Amounts paid by him for labor and drilling crews, $31,644.11; (2) rental of his equipment, tools, and appliances at the contract rate of $25 per day for 223 days, $5,570; (3) amounts paid by him for necessary supplies, $447.92; (4) amounts paid by him for workmen's compensation insurance, $1,469.82—making a total of $39,131.85.

Appellants urge that respondent under the contract was required to furnish equipment; that the salary of J. P. Evans (foreman or "tool pusher") is not included in the contract as part of the labor appellants had agreed to pay; respondent was negligent in landing the oil string; appellants were wrongfully charged for labor while men were playing cards; refusal of instructions; the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, and errors in admission of evidence.

The first two assignments may be considered together. Paragraph eighth, which has to do with the completion of the well below the 3,500-foot depth, is as follows:

"That it shall be particularly understood between the parties hereto that for the completion of said well below the approximate depth of 3,500 feet, contractor shall furnish all of his equipment, tools, and appliances to trustees, until said well is completed, for the rental of twenty-five dollars ($25.00) per day, and shall perform the necessary labor for drilling said well, and said trustees agree to pay for all of contractor's labor and drilling crews, until such well is completed, at the rate of $—— per day, together with the necessary supplies and the cost of proper and necessary insurance, compensation, or otherwise, after the drilling in of said well after the landing of the water string."

It is the interpretation put upon this paragraph of the contract, together with such other parts as may shed light on the intention of the parties, that determines the main questions in controversy.

Appellants urge that Todd was under paragraph eighth of the drilling contract obligated to furnish for the drilling of the well below the depth of 3,456 feet all of the machinery, equipment, and tools which he was under paragraph fourth of the contract required at any time to furnish for the drilling of the well down to a depth of 3,456 feet, and cite section 1641 of the Civil Code and other authorities upon the proposition that the whole of a contract is to be taken together so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other. No exception, of course, can be taken to this fundamental rule. An application of this rule does not in this case, however, obtain the result contended for by appellants.

The drilling contract relates to two distinct operations: First, to the drilling of the well to a depth of 3,500 feet (by mutual agreement fixed at 3,456 feet), and, second, to the drilling of the well below that depth. The consideration which Todd was to receive is separately apportioned to these two distinct operations. For the drilling of the well to a depth of 3,456 feet, the contract provided that Todd should receive $22,500 in cash and a 12½ per cent. interest in the net proceeds of all oil and gas produced from the well. The contract expressly provided that, should Todd fail to reach this depth and land the water string at this level, he should not receive any compensation whatever, and that, upon reaching such depth, he should turn over and deliver the hole to the trustees with casing properly set and open to the full diameter for the full length. For the drilling of the well below the depth of 3,456 feet, the contract provided for an entirely different scheme of compensation. Todd was to "furnish all of his equipment, tools, and appliances * * * for the rental of $25.00 per day," and perform the necessary labor for the drilling of the well, and the trustees were to pay for all of Todd's labor and drilling crews and for all necessary supplies and for the cost of proper and necessary insurance. It would seem to be beyond dispute that the parties to the drilling contract intended that the work to be done under the contract should include two distinct operations. Two distinct methods of compensation were provided for, and it follows that Todd's obligations, the performance of which entitled him to compensation, were also distinct.

The distinction between the two methods of compensation so clearly stated in the contract of itself indicates that the parties must have intended that Todd's obligations for the drilling of the well down to the depth of 3,456 feet would be different from his obligations for the drilling of the well below that depth. The first stage of the work was to be accomplished by Todd for a lump sum. He was to be entitled to the sum of $22,500 and to an assignment of a 12½ per cent. interest in the net proceeds of all oil and gas produced only in the event that he drilled the well to the depth stated and landed the 8¼-inch casing at that depth. There can be no dispute that Todd was obligated to provide his own means for accomplishing this portion of the work with the exception of those things which it was expressly provided the trustees should furnish; that is, the derrick, boilers, steam line connections, water, fuel, lights, and casing. Whatever tools, materials, equipment, and supplies were required for this portion of the drilling, Todd was himself, with the exceptions noted, bound to procure and pay for. With respect to the second stage of the drilling, however, the method of determining Todd's compensation itself indicates that the obligations of the parties to the contract were entirely different. It is clear that under the contract Todd was during this second stage of the work to be entitled to compensation at a given rate and upon a stated basis, irrespective of the depth drilled below 3,500 feet. Below that depth he did not in effect guarantee to reach any given level as a condition precedent to his right to compensation.

[1] It follows, therefore, that appellants' endeavor to interpret paragraph eighth of the contract in the light of paragraph fourth of the contract is not proper, if the contract is to be taken as a whole and effect given to its every part. Paragraph fourth deals with Todd's obligations during the first stage of the drilling; paragraph eighth deals with Todd's obligations during the second stage of the drilling. Interpretation of the language used in the contract defining the obligations of the contractor during the first stage of the drilling can throw no light upon the meaning of the language used to define the obligations of the contractor during the second stage of the drilling.

It is not difficult to arrive at a fair and reasonable interpretation of the language of paragraph eighth declaring that the contractor shall "furnish all of his equipment, tools, and appliances" to the trustees. This paragraph of the contract became effective for the first time when the well had been drilled to a depth of 3,456 feet. The situation of the parties was then altogether different from the situation of the parties at the commencement of drilling operations. It must be assumed that the parties, when they entered into the contract, knew that when this depth was reached Todd would have at the location of the well or at his immediate command certain equipment, tools, and appliances, the greater part of which he had been using in the drilling operations to that point. The fair and reasonable meaning of this language is that it was only such equipment, tools, and appliances which Todd was to be obligated to furnish in the prosecution of future drilling operations. The use of the word "his" is significant in this connection. Had the construction contended for by appellants been contemplated, this clause would have read "all equipment, tools, and appliances necessary at any time thereafter for the drilling of said well," instead of the clause which was in fact used, viz. "all of his equipment, tools, and appliances."

It appears that frequently casings are lost and the drill pipe or drill stem breaks in the hole and special equipment is required to remove it; that certain accidents in well drilling happen which might reasonably be anticipated to require the use of special implements not ordinarily owned by the drilling contractor. The Baash Ross cutter is an example of this. It appears that this device cannot be purchased, but must be obtained upon a rental basis. It is used in cutting off and removing from the hole portions of a drill pipe broken off and lost in the hole. It appears from the testimony of plaintiff that between September 13, 1923, and November 28, 1923, he employed such a cutter at a rental of $3,420. During the same period he was entitled under his contract to receive for all his equipment, tools, and appliances but $1,900. It is not fair to assume under the wording of the contract that Todd, while renting his equipment, tools, and appliances, which he had at the well and which he used to complete the first part of his contract, assumed the obligation of furnishing for future drilling of the well any and all equipment, tools, and appliances as common mischance might require, no matter how costly.

That Todd drilled the well to the depth of 3,456 feet—a depth which is admitted by the pleadings to be the depth agreed upon by the trustees as the equivalent of the depth of the 3,500 feet mentioned in the contract—in a manner entirely satisfactory to the trustees, and that for this portion of the work the trustees voluntarily paid him the full compensation which they had agreed to pay for this stage of the work, is not disputed. Todd testified that at the depth of 3,456 feet he had at the well all necessary and proper rotary machinery, drill pipes, tool joints, drilling engines, pumps, and all other necessary rotary equipment and tools for the drilling of the well below that depth, and that at that depth he furnished to the trustees for future drilling operations his equipment, tools, and appliances which he had at the well at that depth.

[2-4] One of the important matters in dispute is the meaning of the phrase "necessary supplies," which in the contract the trustees agreed to pay for, as also for all the contractor's labor and drilling crews until such well was completed. Appellants object to certain bills which they claim respondent should pay, which are for rentals and equipment which was rented and used upon and in drilling the well and also repairs to tools; for tools and equipment bought by respondent for replacement or addition and for transportation. If these items are included in the phrase "necessary supplies," it is clear that under the contract the trustees were required to pay for them. Respondent contends that these items come under "necessary supplies" in well-drilling contracts. It is axiomatic that, where the language of a written contract is ambiguous, extrinsic evidence is admissible for the purpose of disclosing the intention of the parties, and that a party to a contract is presumed, in dealing with any individual in a particular profession or business, to have dealt and contracted with such individual according to a usage of that business. When a contract is made with a man concerning the business of his craft, it is presumed to have been framed on the basis of such usage which will be availed of to shed light upon the meaning of the contract in so far as its terms are ambiguous.

In Hind v. Oriental Products Co., Inc., 195 Cal. 655, 667, 235 P. 438, 443, the court says:

"It is the general rule that when there is a known usage of the trade, persons carrying on that trade are deemed to have contracted in reference to the usage unless the contrary appears; that the usage forms a part of the contract, and that evidence of usage is always admissible to supply a deficiency or as a means of interpretation where it does not alter or vary the terms of the contract. Brown v. Howard, 1 Cal. 423; Taylor v. Castle, 42 Cal. 367; Burns v. Sennett, 99 Cal. 371, 33 P. 916; Union Ins. Co. v. American Ins. Co., 107 Cal. 333, 40 P. 431, 28 L. R. A. 692, 48 Am. St. Rep. 140; 6 Cal. Jur. 315, and cases cited; Miller v. Germain, etc., Co., 193 Cal. 62, 222 P. 817 [32 A. L. R. 1215]."

There is positive evidence to the effect that the term "supplies" has a particular meaning in the oil business. R. E. Stearns, field manager of the Universal Consolidated Company, who testified that he had been in the oil business about 30 years, and had had experience in all branches of this business from roustabout and dresser of tools to superintendent and manager, testified that the term "supplies" meant anything used in connection with the drilling or maintenance of an oil well; that it included rent of tools; that it included replacements of parts which were used in the drilling of a well; that this term would include pipe, fittings, cordage—in fact anything that was used around a well. Ralph Winger, superintendent of drilling and producing for the Standard Oil Company in the northern Santa Fé fields, testified that he had been in the oil business all his life, and had drilled 90 wells in Santa Fé Springs and 140 wells on the Murphy lease, and further testified that anything that was taken out to a rig during drilling or operation was charged as "supplies"; that dump carts, oils, wrenches, gate valves, hose, water hose, mud hose, crown box, shoes, and all "such stuff" were supplies. Robert B. Moran, one of the defendant trustees, a petroleum engineer and geologist who looked after all the "engineering work" for defendant trustees, testified that the dressing down of tools and bits, the remodeling of a taper tap, the recutting of a tooth in a rotary shoe, the building up of a Hosmer blowout preventer, and the building up of gums would be "supplies" within the meaning of that term as used in the oil business. Plaintiff Todd testified that in the oil well business the word "supplies" had a particular meaning; that this term, as used in the oil business, meant materials that were used in the drilling of the well, such as replacements for broken parts; that it meant anything aside from the drilling equipment itself that was spent in drilling the well, the material aside from the original equipment.

[5] It can hardly be contended that defendant trustees were not at the time they entered into the drilling contract familiar with this meaning. The trustees were three in number: Shirley E. Meserve, T. Howard Knight, and Robert B. Moran. Mr. Meserve testified that he had been in the drilling business for a period; Mr. Knight was connected with the Rio Bravo Oil Company, and Mr. Moran, as already noted, was an expert petroleum engineer and geologist. The jury was therefore justified in finding that the term "necessary supplies" had a particular meaning according to the usage of the oil business, and that this meaning was known to the defendant trustees at the time they entered into the drilling contract. In using this term in the drilling contract, the parties must be deemed to have used it in accordance with the meaning given it by this usage. Evidence of this usage was admissible despite the fact that such usage had not been pleaded. Becker v. Incorporated Town of Churdan, 175 Iowa, 159, 157 N. W. 221; Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. v. David Moffat Co. (C. C. A.) 154 F. 13, 22; McDonald v. Union Hay Co., 143 Minn. 40, 172 N. W. 891.

[6] We do not agree with appellants' contention that the salary of J. P. Evans is not included as a part of the labor which appellants had agreed to pay. Paragraph eighth of the drilling contract obligated appellant trustees to pay for all of respondent's "labor and drilling crews." Appellants have cited and discussed several authorities indicating that the word "labor" does not include services performed by a superintendent. From these cases appellants argue that the word "labor" must be construed to mean "manual labor," from which it follows that a salary paid to a superintendent is not a charge for "labor." McCreary v. Toronto Midway Oil Co., Ltd., 38 Cal. App. 17, 175 P. 87, is the only California case cited to support appellants' contention. That was an action brought to foreclose a mechanic's lien. In that case plaintiff, who claimed the lien, did not state that he had performed any services of any description upon or for the benefit of the property upon which he sought to foreclose the lien. The court points out that there is nothing in the claim of lien which indicates that the claimant performed any manual labor; that, so far as his lien is concerned, plaintiff's case "can be no stronger than is set forth in his claim of lien, and in that, as we have seen, there is no statement as to manual labor." The case was also decided upon the ground that the claim of lien had been prematurely filed, and therefore conferred no right to a lien.

In Kritzer v. Tracy Engineering Co., 16 Cal. App. 287, 116 P. 700, where plaintiff had acted as foreman or superintendent of construction work in connection with the erection and construction of a power plant upon a mill site, which case involved the same principle confronting us here, the court says:

"It is finally contended that plaintiff could have no lien upon the property for work and labor performed in the construction of the plant so contracted to be erected upon the property by the Tracy Engineering Company, for the reason that said work and labor was done and performed as foreman. * * * This question was before the Supreme Court of Nevada (Capron v. Strout, 11 Nev. 310), and the court there said, Beatty, Judge, writing the opinion:

'It is argued that the intention of the law was to secure those only who performed labor upon the mine with their hands; that to give it a wider construction, one that will make it include the wages of a foreman like Stuart, will make it cover the case of a general superintendent and other officers of a corporation, and thereby impair the remedy of those who are the special objects of the legislative care. * * * According to the findings, he certainly did work in the mine, though not with his hands, and it is clear that the direct tendency of his work was to develop the property. We think the foreman of work in the mine is as fully secured by the law as the miners who work under his direction.' To the same effect is Cullins v. Mining Co., 2 Utah, 219, which is affirmed in same case (Mining Co. v. Cullins, 104 U. S. 176, 26 L. Ed. 704). These cases were decided under statutes almost identical with section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure [citing cases]."

In Hornlein v. Bohligh, 37 Cal. App. 646, 174 P. 697, the court affirmed a judgment allowing plaintiff, who was an engineering expert, a mechanic's lien.

[7] If the testimony of respondent is to be believed—and his credibility is entirely a question for the jury or the trial court—the defendant trustees reasonably anticipated at the outset that they would be charged for Evans' services. Respondent testified that prior to the execution of the contract he had a conversation in Dr. Knight's office, at which Dr. Knight, Mr. Shirley Meserve, Mr. Wagner, and possibly Mr. Bremner and Mr. Moran were present; that the cost of the well below the 3,500-foot mark was discussed; that Dr. Knight asked him, "What are you going to charge for the tool pusher?" and that he replied that he paid the tool pusher $500 a month, and that he (Todd) also stated, "If I am drilling more than one well there, I will prorate his time."

Commencing with the time the well was drilled below the depth of 3,456 feet, the evidence is clear that the trustees knew that Evans was performing services as "tool pusher" in connection with the drilling operations below that depth. They were constantly receiving carbon copies of orders upon supply houses and well reports signed by Evans. Furthermore, it appears that defendant trustees paid cash in full settlement of all statements rendered prior to November 21, 1923; that for a period of more than two months after the commencement of the second stage of the drilling they paid statements which included an itemized charge for the salary of Evans. It is apparent, therefore, that appellants placed the construction on the contract here indicated with reference to the meaning of the terms "labor" and "necessary supplies"—they have so shown by their acts under it. As was said in Retsloff v. Smith, 79 Cal. App. 452, 249 P. 889:

"Lord Chancellor Sudgen once said: 'Tell me what you have done under a deed, and I will tell you what that deed means.' If the meaning of the language of an instrument can be considered doubtful, the court will call in the aid of the acts done under it as a clue to the intention of the parties [citing cases]. * * * To hold otherwise a construction would have to be placed upon the contract that would be extremely technical and literal and without reference to what the parties intended."

[8] There is no merit in appellants' assignment that respondent was negligent in landing the oil string. The testimony is that Todd discussed his plan with trustee Moran, who is a geologist and mining engineer and who looked after the work for defendant trustees, and Moran testified:

"I told him (Todd) that that was satisfactory to me, if he thought that would accomplish the end. I told Mr. Todd both at the beginning of the conversation and at the end of it that his experience in matters of handling pipe was much greater than my own, and I preferred to defer to him in such matters. * * * The last thing he (Todd) said when I left—I believe the conversation took place down in the field—that the pipe would be run with a cased end, and the two joints of black pipe on the end of it, and I told him that that was all right with me, but, if he figured out a better way to do it before I would come out, that he would—would it be all right for him to do it."

Mr. McCutcheon, the vice president of Formax Oil Company, testified that he had "lowered several strings where we closed the bottom of the pipe in a torpedo shape," exactly in the manner shown by Defendants' Exhibit 2. Mr. Stearns, field manager of the Universal Consolidated Oil Company, testified that the use of a "sealed shoe" was not confined to instances where there was some obstruction in the hole; that "it is customary for me to use a pointed sealed shoe and every one of those I used is still in the well; I didn't use an open shoe in any of the wells I drilled in Los Angeles county—nor in Torrance nor Santa Fé Springs." Mr. Winger, superintendent of drilling and producing for the Standard Oil Company, stated that he used closed ends like that exhibited in Defendants' Exhibit 2. It is true that there were several witnesses who testified to the contrary and who stated that they had never seen a shoe with an end similar to that exhibited by Defendants' Exhibit 2. This, however, merely raised a conflict, which was for the jury under the instruction given by the court that, in drilling the well, plaintiff was bound to exercise that degree of skill which those of his trade or profession ordinarily possess.

[9] Appellants' complaint that they were wrongfully charged for labor while the men were playing cards may be answered by the testimony of the drillers engaged in drilling the well. Mr. Dellinger testified that he observed the men playing poker; that "every few days they would play," but that it was customary for members of the crew to play cards or amuse themselves in some way during their shifts when not actually engaged in work; that during a shift when a well is being drilled there was not work for each and every member of the crew at all times during each shift; that at the times when he saw members of the crew playing cards there was no work which they could do; that when running a Hughes bit a driller could sometimes spare four of the crew for the entire eight-hour shift, but that it was necessary to have those men there during that shift, even though they were not actively engaged in some work connected with the drilling, in case some trouble should occur, "a twist-off or engine breakdown or something like that"; that, when running a Hughes rock bit the motion of the machinery was very, very slow, and that at such times one man could operate the machinery and bit; that when running with that bit, on a day shift, the other members of the crew could probably be doing something around the derrick, but that on the night shift it was not customary for them to do that; that during the time when there was daylight there was not always something for the men to do around the derrick when they were not actually required on the drilling of the hole. Mr. Hamilton testified that he did not remember that there was any poker playing on the derrick when he was in charge; that he did not himself play poker when he was on the job. The witness, however, testified that, while he was operating the rock bit his men were not at all times engaged in some work; that, if there was not anything to do on the rig they would read a magazine, or do anything they wanted to, as long as they were at the rig in case they were wanted. Mr. O. Pyron said that he believed that "once or twice" the men in his tour played poker while they were on the derrick; that he did not remember that this occurred more than that; that he thought he played once. This witness, however, testified that he himself never played cards when there was anything else he could do, and that none of his crew ever played cards when there was any work they could do; that it was customary for members of the crew, when not actually engaged in their work, to indulge in some pastime. Mr. M. Pyron, another driller, testified that the men did some few times play poker while he was in charge after the 3,500-foot level had been passed, but that this never occurred when there was any work they could do. While witnesses for defendants testified that on two or three occasions they saw members of the crews playing poker, they did not testify that at such times there was any work requiring their attention, nor to any fact from which it could reasonably be inferred that any loss resulted to defendants therefrom.

[10-15] Appellants urge error in refusing defendants' proposed instructions numbered 1, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 14, 18, 19, 20, and 21. By instruction 1 defendants requested the court to instruct the jury without qualification that the items of defendants' counterclaim, amounting to $11,771.56, were proper charges in favor of defendant trustees, and that they were entitled to recover on their counterclaim this exact amount. Included in this amount there were numerous items for which upon any interpretation of the contract defendant trustees were bound to pay. As to the refusal of instruction 3, it may be said that the jury found that plaintiff was not negligent in failing to land the 4¾-inch oil string. If this finding is supported by the evidence, then this instruction is immaterial, and its refusal is not reversible error. Further defendants sought in this instruction to have the court declare to the jury that under their cross-complaint defendants were claiming $14,753.04 on account of oil which would have been produced between February 19 and April 23, 1924, less the cost of production and maintenance. Defendants' contention is that, but for the negligence of plaintiff, the well would have been put upon production about February 19, 1924. There is some evidence concerning the production after the well was brought in on April 23, 1924, and from this the total net production during a certain period thereafter could be computed. The conclusion, however, from Mr. Moran's testimony that he thought the well would have produced more oil during the period in question, is of necessity mere speculation, and upon the evidence in the record there is no foundation for any claim to damages on account of loss of oil by reason of a delay in the completion of the well, much less a claim reduced to actual dollars and cents. This element of damage is too remote and speculative. Corbin Oil & Gas Co. v. Mull, 123 Ky. 763, 97 S. W. 385. Again, the requested instruction merely covered certain of defendants' contentions, and in support of the judgment it will be assumed that the jury was fully advised of defendants' contentions in the argument to the jury in the absence of a showing of reversible error. As to instruction 6, we may say that, as both parties conceded that the jury should pass upon the meaning of the term "labor" as used in drilling contracts and both having requested instructions leaving to the jury to determine whether the services of Evans would properly come within the meaning of the term "labor," the instruction as requested, which in effect took from the consideration of the jury all facts indicating how the parties themselves may have construed the term, was properly refused. The instruction directed the jury to disallow all claim on account of Evans' salary in the event that they disbelieved plaintiff's testimony concerning his conversation with the defendant trustees, and would tend to confuse or mislead the jury by diverting their attention from a portion of the evidence. Fox v. Harvester Works, 83 Cal. 333, 23 P. 295. Instructions 7, 8, and 9 relate to poker playing by members of plaintiff's drilling crews. In the absence of evidence showing that members of the drilling crews played poker when there was work for them to do at the well, there is no foundation for the instructions. The testimony is without contradiction that none of the members of the crews played cards when there was work around the well that could have been done. It is well settled that, even where a requested instruction is pertinent to an issue, the refusal of the instruction is proper, if under the evidence the issue could be determined in only one way. Sill v. Ceschi, 167 Cal. 698, 704, 140 P. 949; Estate of Budan, 156 Cal. 230, 234, 104 P. 442; De Soto v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 49 Cal. App. 285, 288, 193 P. 270; McCollum v. Barr, 38 Cal. App. 411, 429, 176 P. 463. Instructions 14, 18, 19, 20, and 21 are directed to the issue relating to plaintiff's alleged negligence in failing to lower successfully the string into the well. These instructions are in any event merely cumulative, singling out particular means or instrumentalities employed by plaintiff in the drilling operations. The jury was instructed fully as to the degree of skill, care, and diligence required to be exercised by plaintiff in the instructions given, and therefore no error results from a refusal to give these instructions singling out details or means employed. The jury was instructed:

"If you find from the preponderance of the evidence in the case that Mr. Todd, the plaintiff in this case, was negligent in any of the respects alleged in the cross-complaint on file herein against him, and that such negligence proximately resulted in the sticking of the 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch oil string, in the month of February, 1924, then and in such event you are instructed to find in defendants' favor, on their cross-complaint, for such damages as, from the evidence, you find they approximately sustained by reason of such negligence. Plaintiff at all times when on the well in question was bound to exercise that skill which those in his then trade or profession possessed, and was bound to do only those things which those thus trained and skilled would have then done under all the circumstances and conditions that then existed, and was then bound not to do all such things as those thus skilled in his trade or profession would not have done under the circumstances and conditions then existing."

[16] As to appellants' assignment that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, it may be said that we think there is no merit in the contention. The only question raised which has not been touched upon is the question of the premiums paid on compensation insurance. Appellants make the contention that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence in regard to these charges, that the record clearly shows that one premium was paid to cover all the employees of plaintiff, many of whom were working on other wells, and that the bookkeeper made an arbitrary division of the insurance premium.

It is true that these policies of insurance covered Todd's employees engaged in his entire business operations wherever such operations might have been conducted. However, it is provided in these policies that the premium shall be based upon the entire remuneration earned during the policy period by all employees engaged in Todd's business operations described in the policy and covered thereby. The rate stated in these policies for employees is the same in each policy, viz. $5.02 per $100 of remuneration. This rate was called to the attention of the court at the time these policies were introduced in evidence. It is conceded that the entire time consumed in drilling the well below the depth of 3,456 feet was 223 days. The drilling operations were continuous for a period of 24 hours per day, and were divided into three shifts or "tours" of 8 hours each, so that during each 24-hour period three separate crews were employed in the drilling operations. The testimony is clear and undisputed that during this entire period there were five members of a drilling crew employed on each shift or tour, viz. a driller, a derrick man, a cat-head man, a fireman, and a floor man, and that the driller received $15 a day, the derrick man $7.50 a day, the cat-head man $7.50 a day, the fireman $7 a day, and floor man $7 a day. The amount of these wages paid during this period is fixed by stipulation of counsel. The aggregate wage paid to a crew of five men for a single tour was therefore $44. Since there were three tours during each 24-hour day, the aggregate wage paid to the members of all crews employed during a given day was $132. Since the entire period involved was 223 days, the aggregate amount of wages paid to members of the drilling crews during the entire period was $29,436. The salary paid to J. P. Evans as foreman during this period of 223 days was $2,537.31. This makes a total of $31,973.31, and this amount exceeds the amount actually claimed by Todd on account of amounts paid by him for labor and drilling crews. The daily well reports or drilling reports covering this entire period of 223 days were offered and received in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibit 10 without objection. The total amount paid by plaintiff during the period of 223 days is therefore determined, and, the policies of workmen's compensation insurance specifying as they do the rate of premium at $5.02 per $100 of remuneration, it was simply a matter for the jury to compute the portion of the premium covering the operations in connection with the well in question.

[17] Appellants, under their assignment "Errors in Admission of Evidence," enumerate a great many instances in which it is claimed that the court erred in admitting evidence over their objections. They do not, however, argue their objections in their brief nor cite any authorities, and therefore these objections are not to be considered. People v. Hayes, 72 Cal. App. 292, 297, 237 P. 390.

This disposes of the points urged by appellants, and, as we find no error in the record calling for a reversal, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

93 Cal. App. 443

Ex parte PASSARELLO. (Cr. 1479.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 4, 1928.

1. Habeas corpus $\hookrightarrow$ 34—Judgment wherein trial judge erroneously reduced jury's verdict from first to second degree burglary, affirmed on appeal, held res judicata in subsequent habeas corpus proceeding.

Where trial judge, in entering judgment on verdict of guilty of burglary, first degree, entered an order reducing verdict to burglary, second degree, on ground of insufficiency of evidence to sustain conviction for first degree burglary, and, after judgment of affirmance had become final, Supreme Court in another case declared district court to be without power to reduce the verdict in such a case and that it should either enter judgment on the verdict as rendered by the jury or grant a new trial, held that judgment was nevertheless final, and was res judicata in defendant's subsequent habeas corpus proceeding.

2. Habeas corpus $\hookrightarrow$ 4—Erroneous reduction of verdict from first to second degree burglary held not reviewable in habeas corpus, which is not writ of error.

Trial judge's error in reducing verdict of burglary, first degree, to burglary, second degree, and entering judgment thereon, having been committed within his jurisdiction, was not reviewable in defendant's subsequent habeas corpus proceeding to secure his release from custody on the ground that judgment on which he was held was void, since habeas corpus is not a writ of error.

Application by Paskie Passarello for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the Warden of the State Prison at San Quentin, to secure the petitioner's release from custody on the ground that the judgment of conviction on which he is held is void. Writ dismissed, and petitioner remanded.

Ernest Spagnoli, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

NOURSE, J. [1] Petitioner was tried on an information framed in two counts—burglary and grand larceny. The jury rendered its verdict finding him guilty on both counts and fixing the degree of burglary under the first count as of the first degree. The trial judge, in entering judgment, sentenced the petitioner on both counts in accord with the verdict of the jury, but appended an order purporting to find that petitioner was guilty of burglary in the second degree. An appeal was taken from the judgment and affirmed in People v. Sugarman & Passarello, 80 Cal. App. 321, 251 P. 949. The board of prison directors thereupon fixed the term of petitioner's sentence as one year upon the grand larceny count and eight years on the burglary count. The petitioner sues out this writ seeking his release from the state penitentiary on the ground that the judgment under which he is confined is void because the act of burglary upon which he was convicted was in fact burglary of the second degree, that the verdict of the jury finding him guilty of first degree burglary was therefore not supported by the evidence, and that the trial judge was without jurisdiction to reduce the degree of the crime from that found by the jury.

All the points raised on this application were raised before the District Court of the Second District on the appeal from the judgment. It was there held, on the authority of the rule cited in 16 C. J. p. 1303, that, where the trial court is of the opinion that the evidence does not support the verdict rendered, but does support a conviction of a lesser offense necessarily included in the other, the court has power to impose sentence for the lesser offense on the theory that, by the verdict of guilty of the greater offense, the jury decided that the defendant was guilty of the lesser. Numerous authorities were cited in support of the rule, but it was pointed out in the opinion that no California case had covered the subject.

After the opinion on that appeal had been rendered, and after the judgment therein had become final, the Supreme Court in People v. Superior Court (Cal. Sup.) 259 P. 943, 945, held that the trial judge was without power to reduce a verdict of first degree murder, without recommendation, to one carrying a penalty of life imprisonment, but that, in such a case he should either enter judgment on the verdict as rendered by the jury or grant a new trial.

Though the latter case has established a rule in this state contrary to the rule approved by the district court, the judgment of the latter court on the appeal is nevertheless a final judgment, and the point raised is res adjudicata in so far as this petitioner is concerned. In re Booth, 44 Cal. App. 660, 186 P. 841.

[2] So far as it appears from the record before us, the evidence in the trial below was sufficient to support the verdict of first degree burglary. When, therefore, the trial judge reduced the verdict to second degree burglary, he merely committed error, but such error was committed within his jurisdiction, and is not reviewable on this proceeding, because habeas corpus is not a writ of error.

No injustice is done the prisoner in remanding him to serve the remainder of the term fixed by the prison directors, as that term is well within the maximum period fixed by law as punishment for the crime of burglary in the second degree at the time when petitioner's offense was committed.

The writ is dismissed, and the prisoner is remanded.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

93 Cal. App. 324

KLEBE v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 6029.)*

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 27, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 24, 1928.

1. Master and servant $\S$ 367—In compensation proceeding, one receiving allotment of ice route, who bought ice, making deliveries and collections independently, and sustaining injury held independent contractor as to ice-man in another district.

One receiving allotment of part of ice route, buying his own ice, making collections, and assuming responsibility for customers in his district, without control on the part of the person furnishing the route, and who was injured while delivering ice and sought recovery under the Workmen's Compensation Act, was independent contractor and not employee as to third party delivering ice in different territory, who was associated in the purchase of the route with the person making the allotment.

2. Partnership $\S$ 20—Persons buying ice route, who divided route, handling deliveries independently without accounting for expenses or profits, held not partners.

Persons purchasing ice route, who agreed between themselves on division of territory, each purchasing his own ice, making deliveries independently without any mutual responsibility for expenses or profits, held not partners, in compensation proceedings by alleged employee of one, though they used names jointly on advertising cards.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by W. A. St. Clair against J. G. Knox and George Klebe. From an award in claimant's favor, employer last named brings certiorari. Award annulled.

Bailie, Turner & Lake, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco (W. F. Beem, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

CRAIG, J. Respondent St. Clair was injured while starting an automobile in his vocation of delivering ice at Huntington Park in Los Angeles county. He made application to the respondent commission for compensation as against J. G. Knox and George Klebe, and, after a hearing, was awarded certain sums of money in cash and in weekly payments until the termination of disability, besides a hospital charge and that of his physician. This is an application of Klebe for review of such award. There is no dispute as to the correctness of the amounts allowed, but the petitioner contends that the applicant was not his employee at the time of the accident.

From the testimony of Knox and Klebe, it appears that some three or four years previously to March 28, 1927, one Guthrie agreed in writing with the Central Ice & Cold Storage Company to purchase ice from it and to distribute ice with his own conveyances and at his own expense to all residents throughout the Huntington Park district. The text of the contract is not before us, but the only conditions imposed by the company and which are material to the instant proceeding apparently were that Guthrie should buy the company's commodity and satisfactorily supply all users within that territory. At some time thereafter Klebe became an employee of Guthrie, for whom he delivered ice over a portion of said territory, while Guthrie, with the assistance of a boy, did the delivering in the balance of the district. Knox testified that he later took the place of the boy, and delivered ice for Guthrie on commission. Subsequently Knox and Klebe purchased the route from Guthrie, and took over certain trucks which he had agreed to purchase, with the understanding that the ice company deduct or withhold from each a certain amount when settlements for ice were made. Knox and Klebe agreed between themselves that the latter should have all of the territory west of Seville street, and that Knox should supply all of the district east thereof. Each purchased his own ice, at about 17½ cents per block of 300 pounds, which, when cut in smaller portions and sold, netted him about 63 cents per block.

Knox and St. Clair both testified that, while the former was delivering ice at the home of the latter's daughter at some time prior to April 2, 1927, St. Clair asked for employment, whereupon Knox informed him that he did not need a solicitor, but that he had more territory than he could use; that St. Clair asked if he could rent a truck for a year or two, that he had previously been in the ice business, but did not have the means to buy a truck. Knox, it appears, purchased a seconhand truck, allotted to St. Clair certain portions of his territory, and it was agreed that St. Clair should buy his own ice, make his own collections, and be responsible for the customers in such territory. It also appears that under Guthrie's contract with the ice company, which Knox and Klebe acquired, it was incumbent upon them or their successors to furnish the commodity to all residents of the entire district, but that, under their contract between themselves, neither one was to be responsible for the other's portion of the territory. Knox testified, and St. Clair in effect admitted, that Knox had no control over St. Clair's work, dealings with the ice company, or deliveries to and collections from his customers, and that, should the latter's business so increase that he could not supply his share of the territory, he would obtain help at his own expense, that he should defray all expenses of operation, and that he was his own boss. St. Clair testified: "I wanted a contract for a certain length of time so I wouldn't get discharged after I got a good business worked up."

[1, 2] All of the evidence before us tends strongly to show that, as to the petitioner in this proceeding, St. Clair was an independent contractor. Klebe did not know of any arrangement between St. Clair and Knox, nor did he know that any one else was delivering ice in a portion of Knox's territory until some days after the applicant had taken it over. The latter made claim in writing, by registered mail, to Knox personally, when injured. Knox & Klebe had been using the same cards for advertising, bearing the names, "Huntington Park Ice Distributors, Knox & Klebe," and on those furnished the applicant he had printed: "The truck is at the Rita St. Garage. 1st Garage North on the right hand side. St. Clair." It affirmatively appears without contradiction that St. Clair had no dealing whatever with, and was in no way answerable to, Klebe. Except for St. Clair's reply when asked why he included Klebe in this proceeding, that he saw both names on the cards, there is no evidence that he knew him.

The only possible ground upon which it might be argued that Klebe should be held for a pro rata share of this award would therefore of necessity depend upon the assumption that he was a copartner of Knox. Both of them denied that either was responsible for any portion of the expenses of the other, or entitled to any of his profits. It does not appear that both were charged by the ice company with the balance due on the trucks purchased by them from Guthrie, but they testified that it was their intention, when such amounts were finally paid, to account with each other as to those items. The sole remaining apparent indicia of a partnership relation consist of the cards and the joint names "Knox & Klebe." The only evidence with relation to these is that they could be printed cheaper in large quantities, and that for the sake of economy they were all purchased at the same time, bearing both names; that the name "Huntington Park Ice Distributors" was used by all distributors in that vicinity, at the instance and request of the ice company. Knox testified:

"Klebe keeps what he makes, and I keep what I make." "Mr. Klebe didn't have anything to do with this truck; I bought it myself. He didn't know anything about it when I bought the truck. * * * I figured that was on my side of the territory." "I footed the bills on it and kept the rent."

From the foregoing it is obvious that the elements of a partnership, consisting of consent, carrying on a business together, and sharing profits between them, do not appear to have existed between Knox and Klebe herein. This being true, and from the entire absence of any relationship between Klebe and St. Clair personally, it follows that the petitioner is not liable to the applicant on account of his injury.

The award is annulled.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

93 Cal. App. 356

PEOPLE v. NIKOLICH. (Cr. 1676.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 28, 1928.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 511(3)—Accomplice's testimony need not be corroborated by direct evidence.

Testimony of accomplice need not be corroborated by direct evidence.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 511(2)—Corroboration of accomplice's testimony is sufficient, if defendant's connection with crime may fairly be inferred from entire conduct of defendant.

Entire conduct of defendant may be looked to for corroborating circumstances of testimony of accomplice, and if, from such circumstances, connection of accused with crime may fairly be inferred, corroboration is sufficient.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 511(4)—Evidence corroborating testimony of accomplice held sufficient to connect defendant with possessing still at house from which defendant fled on attempted arrest, and to sustain conviction.

In prosecution for possessing still, where police officers testified that while in house containing still they observed defendant and accomplice coming in front of house, that accomplice unlocked door, and that both defendant and accomplice fled on attempted arrest, and defendant, when subsequently arrested, refused to talk on being accused of being seen at house, evidence corroborating testimony of accomplice was sufficient to connect defendant with commission of offense and sustain conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

L. Nikolich was convicted of possessing a still, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John R. Barta, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, and John D. Richer, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendant and appellant, L. Nikolich, together with the defendant George T. Vidich, was convicted of possessing a still, used and intended to be used in the manufacture and production of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. Nikolich prosecutes this appeal from the judgment pronounced upon the verdict of the jury finding him guilty.

The sole ground relied upon by appellant for a reversal of the judgment is that the testimony, aside from that of his accomplice, Vidich, is insufficient. Unquestionably the testimony of Vidich is sufficient to fasten the offense upon appellant and to sustain the verdict, provided only that the corroborating evidence tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. The record discloses that about the 21st day of January, 1928, Deputy Sheriffs Paine and Haworth and a police officer of Huntington Park went to a small frame house set in the rear of the lot and about 100 feet from the street at No. 232 Hollenbeck street in the city of Huntington Park. Upon gaining entrance, they found a 50-gallon still and two 500-gallon vats filled with prune mash and about 35 gallons of whisky. The still was completely connected up for operating, although not in fact running at the time it was found by the officers. The officers remained in the house for some time and put under arrest one Nick Rasich, who came there. Later in the day, and at about 7:30 p. m. the defendant Vidich, in company with the appellant, Nikolich, "came across from a lot over in front of this 232 Hollenbeck street. Upon arriving in front of the house they stopped. Then they went over towards the garage—a distance somewhere between 10 and 15 or 16 feet—from the house. They stood there for a minute or two, and then defendant Vidich came up on the porch and unlocked the door and came inside." At this point, Officer Paine endeavored to put them under arrest, stating that they were county officers, but the appellant Nikolich turned and ran and Vidich also. Vidich was caught within 60 to 80 feet after he started to run, and, after a scuffle with Haddon, the police officer, submitted to arrest. Nikolich was subsequently arrested in Los Angeles upon information as to his whereabouts, furnished by Vidich. At the Vernon police station, Nick Rasich stated in the presence of the appellant that he had seen the appellant at the still several times; the last time being about four nights before the arrest, to which statements the appellant merely responded, "I won't talk until I see my attorney."

[1-3] The law is well settled that the testimony of the accomplice need not be corroborated by direct evidence. The entire conduct of the defendant may be looked to for the corroborating circumstances, and, if from those circumstances the connection of the accused with the crime may fairly be inferred, the corroboration is sufficient. People v. Yeager, 194 Cal. 452, 229 P. 40; People v. Martin, 102 Cal. 558, 36 P. 952; People v. Demera, 64 Cal. App. 121, 220 P. 673. Under this statement of the law, while the corroborating circumstances in this case may be considered meager, yet they must be held sufficient.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

93 Cal. App. 437

WILSHIRE OIL CO. v. STAR PETROLEUM CO. et al. (Civ. 6160.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 4, 1928.

1. Deeds ☞166—Common grantor, bringing about condition inviting breach, held not entitled to forfeiture.

Where common grantor and owner of reversionary interest, pursuant to conveyance providing for reversion in case premises should be reserved for prospecting for oil or other hydrocarbon products, had by his own acts in consenting to making of oil leases and joining therein brought about conditions which would invite a breach of the covenant, he was not entitled to forfeiture for breach thereof by purchaser who originally entered on premises in good faith and erected residence thereon in conformity with restrictions contained in deed.

2. Appeal and error ☞635(3)—Judgment must be affirmed, where appellant, basing appeal on ground findings were unsupported by evidence, failed to print findings or evidence (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a, 953c).

When an appeal was taken under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, based on ground that certain findings were unsupported by evidence, and neither findings which were thus attacked nor any of the evidence was printed in appellant's briefs or in any supplement as required by section 953c, judgment must be affirmed because of failure to show error; all presumptions being in favor of regularity of judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by the Wilshire Oil Company against the Star Petroleum Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Neil S. McCarthy, Earl L. Banta, and Herbert R. MacMillan, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to recover possession of land, claiming a forfeiture of a condition subsequent contained in the deed of conveyance. The cause was tried before the court sitting without a jury, and resulted in a judgment for the defendant, from which the plaintiff appeals upon a typewritten record.

The condition which it was claimed had been breached was attached by the common grantor of a large number of lots situated in what was known as the Athens tract in Los Angeles county. It was expressly declared to be a covenant running with the land, inuring to the benefit of all other lot owners in the tract, and included in the deeds of conveyance of these other lots. It provided for a reversion to the common grantor if the premises conveyed or any part of them should be used for the purpose of prospecting for oil or other hydrocarbon products. The premises in controversy were deeded by the common grantor to the defendant Shoemaker on June 17, 1913. Thereafter the common grantor leased other portions of the tract for oil development purposes and solicited other lot owners in the tract to join in said leases. Other lot owners of the tract entered into oil leases, and their properties were also being exploited for the production of oil. After this had been done and after oil operations were commenced on various portions of the tract, the common grantor conveyed to the plaintiff herein by quitclaim deed its reversionary interest to lot 4 of block 53 of the tract, one of the lots owned by the defendant Shoemaker. Prior to the commencement of the action, the plaintiff had acquired lot 3 immediately adjoining lot 4 (the lot here in controversy) and lot 6 of the same block, and had commenced operations for the drilling of oil upon both lots either through its own efforts or through leases granted by it.

On this appeal the appellant concedes the foregoing facts and stipulates that the character of land in the tract involved by reason of actual oil development has changed from that of residential land to that of oil-producing land; that the object of plaintiff in purchasing the reversionary interest in the lands in question was to develop the same for oil; that the plaintiff itself procured oil development to be prosecuted upon lands adjoining the lands in question; and that the common grantor had made a practice of selling, for substantial valuable considerations, surrenders of its estate in reversion based upon this condition subsequent in order that the land might be used for oil development purposes. Among other defenses raised by the defendants was that the common grantor by its own act in granting oil leases upon other lots in the tract had waived the right to enforce the condition subsequent and that because of these acts and the acts of other lot owners the character of land in the tract had so changed that it was no longer equitable to enforce the condition which had been inserted in the deeds for the purpose of reserving the land for residential purposes.

[1] The trial court found that all the lot owners in blocks 26 to 50, inclusive, of said Athens tract, and all the lot owners in tract 819, which includes block 53 and the premises involved herein, have consented to the making of oil leases, and have joined in oil leases, and that by reason thereof derricks and other equipment for the drilling and producing of oil have been erected on many of said lots with the consent and approval of the common grantor and the plaintiff herein. It was also found that the defendant Shoemaker had entered upon the premises in good faith and erected a residence thereon in conformity with the restrictions contained in his deed, but that, without his consent, the common grantor, together with other lot owners in the tract, had changed the character of the tract so that it was no longer desirable as a residential section, but it had become a section devoted mainly for the uses and purposes of developing oil.

Neither of these findings is attacked by the plaintiff, and the case comes squarely within the rule of the majority opinion in Downs v. Kroeger, 200 Cal. 743, 748, 254 P. 1101, 1103, and Miles v. Clark, 44 Cal. App. 539, 549, 187 P. 167, 171, where it was said that—

“Where there has been a change in the uses to which property in the neighborhood is being put, so that such property is no longer residence property, it would be oppressive and inequitable to give effect to restrictions where the changed condition of the locality has resulted from other causes than their breach.”

Here the changed conditions have resulted from the breach of the restrictions, not by the party seeking to be relieved from the restrictions, but by the common grantor and the other lot owners who, by their breach of the restrictions, rendered the respondents' property no longer suitable for residential purposes. It would be equally “oppressive and inequitable” to enforce a restriction against one lot owner when the common grantor, who is the owner of the reversionary interest, has by his own acts brought about the conditions which would invite a breach of the covenant. Brown v. Wrigtman, 5 Cal. App. 391, 394, 90 P. 467; Los Angeles, etc., Land Co. v. Marr, 187 Cal. 126, 133, 200 P. 1051. There is no equity in appellant's case. Its counsel frankly confesses that he is a “highwayman without a mask”; that the appellant is seeking to enforce the forfeiture for the sole purpose of enabling it to prosecute drilling operations on the premises which it seeks to forfeit.

[2] But, aside from any of these questions, the judgment must be affirmed because the appellant has failed to show error. The appeal is taken under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, and is based upon the grounds that findings Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 10 are unsupported by the evidence. Neither the findings which are thus attacked nor any of the evidence is printed in either of appellant's briefs nor in any supplement as required by section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure. As said in Estate of Berry, 195 Cal. 354, 359, 233 P. 330, when an appeal is taken under this method, and based upon the insufficiency of the evidence to support a finding under attack, it is necessary, not only to print the evidence, but also the finding. As indicating the character of appeal presented, we find in appellant's opening brief the statement that "nearly all the findings have for their support only testimony which was both irrelevant and immaterial on the issues before the court. As a result, the judgment is erroneous and should be reversed." But the plaintiff has not printed the pleadings, findings, nor evidence to support his general attack upon "nearly all the findings," and as all the presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the judgment, it is not incumbent upon this court to search the typewritten record to discover error. Scott v. Hollywood Park Co., 176 Cal. 680, 681, 169 P. 379; Jeffords v. Young, 197 Cal. 224, 229, 239 P. 1054; Dahlberg v. Dahlberg (Cal. Sup.) 260 P. 290.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

93 Cal. App. 216

PEOPLE v. WESTCOTT. (Cr. 1665.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. July 19, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 17, 1928.

1. Criminal law §935(1)—Granting defendant new trial after conviction of murder held proper under evidence.

Granting defendant's motion for new trial after verdict convicting him of murder held proper under the evidence.

2. Criminal law §1156(2)—Appellate court cannot say that granting defendant new trial for insufficiency of evidence to sustain conviction constitutes abuse of discretion.

When the trial judge in a criminal case, sitting as a thirteenth juror, is not convinced to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the evidence is sufficient in character and weight to justify a conviction, it is not for the reviewing court to say as a matter of law that the granting of a new trial constitutes abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben Schmidt, Judge.

Carl Westcott was convicted of murder, his motion for a new trial was granted, and the People appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Asa Keyes, Dist. Atty., and Wm. O. Russell, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

Paul W. Schenck, and Marcus L. Roberts, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The respondent was accused by the grand jury of Los Angeles county with the crime of murder, was convicted by a jury, and the judgment was reversed. 260 P. 901. Upon a second trial he was again convicted, the jury recommending imprisonment for life, whereupon he moved for a new trial, which was granted, and the people now appeal from the order granting such motion.

[1] To state most favorably to the people the evidence upon which they rely for a reversal, Charles G. Westcott, the defendant's father, was shot as he opened the door of his residence in response to the bell at 909 South Cochran street, and died shortly afterward. At the time of the shooting, the decedent's widow saw a shadow and heard a footstep on the front porch. A Mrs. Heffelfinger, while walking westerly on Ninth street, toward the Westcott residence, heard two shots in the direction of their house, and, instantly looking up, saw the form of a person emerge from some brush on a vacant lot at the corner of Cochran and Ninth streets, where she also heard footsteps as of some one running. This witness testified that she saw two men near by, with whom she talked, but that she did not go to the house where she heard the shots. The men, Eldridge and Smith, swore that they heard shots, and that, after meeting Mrs. Heffelfinger, they ran to the Westcott residence, looked in the window, and seeing the body of a man lying upon the floor, proceeded to the front door, whereupon they learned the victim's identity, rendered first aid, and summoned an ambulance. It appears that the crime was committed at about 8 o'clock p. m. The motorman and conductor of an east-bound street car testified that at about 8:40 of that evening, as they were leaving Third and Sycamore streets, about 8 blocks westerly and northerly from the Westcott house, a bareheaded man ran up Sycamore street from the south and boarded their car; that he appeared to be nervous, and continued to look backward through the rear windows of the car until it passed Ninth and Cochran streets, when he walked to the front of the car and sat down; that he was talking to himself, appearing "distracted"; and that he frequently threw his hair back from his forehead. Two porters at a barber shop on West Sixth street, in the center of town, testified that at about 9 o'clock p. m. a man resembling the defendant called at their stand and had his shoes shined; that he wore a pair of trousers like those introduced in evidence, in the left knee of which there was a tear similar to one appearing in the exhibit. A hostess at Wilson's Dance Studio at 516½ South Hill street testified that the defendant called at the studio after 9 p. m. and danced for about 15 or 20 minutes, that she noticed the tear in his trousers, and that he frequently threw his hair back with his hands. Police officers swore that the defendant was taken in custody at about midnight of the same date, and the left knee of his trousers was torn, and that they removed mustard pods, seeds, and leaves from the cuffs. From the testimony of other witnesses it appears that in the spring of 1926, a plank was braced from the ground to the top of a hedge at the corner of the Westcott house, and that, on the date of the shooting, October 20, 1926, it had not been disturbed, that the hedge was then apparently in its usual condition, and that salt grass and mustard were growing in the vacant lot between the house and the corner of Ninth and Cochran streets. On the morning of October 21st, the top of the hedge was mashed down, the plank lay flat on the ground, and there appeared in the soft soil the imprint of a person's knee; splinters on the plank contained fibers of dark gray cloth of a texture similar to that of the defendant's suit. Three experts, after careful examination of the threads, seeds, and leaves found upon Westcott's clothing, were of the opinion that they were identical with those discovered on the lot adjoining the scene of the homicide. The prosecution introduced in evidence a copy of the will of Charles G. Westcott, which devised and bequeathed about $93,000 worth of property to his children, and it was stipulated that respondent had since received $93,397.65 from his father's estate.

Aside from the resemblance of the cloth in respondent's trousers to the fragments found upon the plank, which, according to the theory of the prosecution, had been knocked down by some one in climbing over the hedge in flight, and the fact that seeds and leaves in the cuff of his trousers might have been accumulated by running through the vegetation on the adjoining lot, there is practically no evidence tending to connect him with the offense. Mrs. Heffelfinger was unable to say whether or not it was moonlight on October 20, 1926, or that there was a street light at the corner in question; she was unable to say whether the figure which ran from the house was that of a man or a woman. Eldridge and Smith both looked in the direction from which the report of the shots came, but neither of them saw any person or heard any footsteps. The motorman and conductor, although positive that the man said by them to resemble the respondent was bareheaded, could not swear that he had no hat with him; both testified that they would not attempt even to swear that Westcott was the man who boarded their car, they thought there was a resemblance, but, as testified by the conductor, that was all he "would venture to say." Respondent's wife testified that there was salt grass and mustard growing "all over the lot" at their home in Venice, and that her husband walked around in the lot with their baby every day. The bootblacks swore that there was no dirt upon his shoes when they were shined about an hour after the occurrence in controversy, but that there was an "average amount of dust"; neither of these two witnesses thought that he was bareheaded, and one of them stated that he was sure the defendant had a hat.

The defendant did not take the stand, nor did any witness who knew him testify as to his whereabouts prior to 9 o'clock on the evening of October 20, 1926, an hour after the commission of the offense. The mere fact that within that time he could have fired the shots, run through the vacant lot, boarded a street car 8 blocks away, and arrived at the center of town, is but a series of conjectures. As stated in People v. Smith, 55 Cal. App. 324, 203 P. 816:

"But the fact that an accused person had an opportunity to commit the crime with which he is charged is of itself only a circumstance, from which, with other circumstances, guilt may be conjectured or inferred; and it is the established rule that an incriminating circumstance from which guilt may be inferred must not rest on conjecture. It is not permissible to pile conjecture upon conjecture. We cannot build one inference upon another. * * * It would, said Chief Justice Denio in People v. Kennedy, [32 N. Y. 141], supra, be 'like the blind leading the blind.' The rule, as stated by the New York court in the Kennedy Case, is that circumstantial evidence 'consists in reasoning from facts which are known or proved, to establish such as are conjectured to exist; but the process is fatally vicious if the circumstance from which we seek to deduce the conclusion depends itself upon conjecture.'"

[2] We think the trial court was wholly warranted in granting the motion for new trial in the instant case. In any event, when the trial judge in a criminal case, sitting as he does as a thirteenth juror, is not convinced to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the evidence is sufficient in character and weight to justify a conviction, it is not for a reviewing court to say as a matter of law that the granting of a new trial constituted an abuse of discretion. Having observed the witnesses and the jurors, and having had an opportunity for testing the truth of the witnesses' statements, he may have doubted the adequacy of the identification of the defendant, or the weight apparently accorded the circumstantial evidence by the jury. The rule is established beyond cavil that in cases such as the one before us there is no basis for questioning the discretion of the superior court or substituting that of the appellate court therefor. People v. Taylor, 80 Cal. App. 658, 252 P. 729; People v. Canfield, 173 Cal. 309, 159 P. 1046. The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

93 Cal. App. 334

PEOPLE v. FLORIS. (Cr. 1451.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 28, 1928.

1. Criminal law §1159(2)—Reviewing court cannot set aside verdict, unless clearly unsupported by any sufficient substantial evidence on any hypothesis.

A reviewing court cannot set aside a verdict, unless it clearly appears that there is no sufficient substantial evidence in the record to support it on any hypothesis whatever.

2. Homicide §250—Evidence held to sustain conviction of manslaughter.

Evidence in trial for murder held sufficient to sustain conviction of manslaughter.

3. Criminal law §1159(4)—Whether inconsistencies and contradictions show witnesses unworthy of belief is for jury, not appellate court.

Whether inconsistencies and contradictions in testimony show that witnesses are not worthy of belief is for the jury, not the appellate court, to determine.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; H. V. Alvarado, Judge.

Lebrado Floris was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Thos. D. Johnston and H. M. Bishop, both of Martinez, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KNIGHT, J. Appellant was charged with murder, and upon trial was convicted of the crime of manslaughter. He now seeks a reversal of the judgment of conviction upon the sole ground that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict.

About 8 o'clock on the evening of October 23, 1927, the deceased, Antonio Mariscal, was stabbed in the neck and died instantly. The homicide occurred on a public street in North Richmond, Contra Costa county, during a quarrel which appellant had provoked with three men named Marcus, Nougiera, and Alameda. At the trial appellant denied the killing, but his guilt was established mainly by the testimony of the three men mentioned, and on this appeal he concedes that the evidence is conflicting, and also that if the testimony of the three witnesses mentioned be true it is legally sufficient to support the conviction, but claims that Mariscal was doubtless stabbed by either Marcus, Nougiera, or Alameda, and that in order to fasten the crime falsely upon him they committed perjury in giving their testimony.

[1] The law is well settled that a reviewing court has not the power to set aside a verdict unless it clearly appears that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence in the record to support the verdict. As said in People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 184 P. 389:

"In passing upon this question we will not attempt to determine the weight of the evidence, but will decide only whether upon the face of the evidence it can be held that sufficient facts could not have been found by the jury to warrant the inference of guilt. For it is the function of the jury in the first instance, and of the trial court after verdict, to determine what facts are established by the evidence, and before the verdict of the jury, which has been approved by the trial court, can be set aside on appeal upon the ground we are discussing, it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below. * * * We must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict."

In the case of People v. Fitzgerald, 138 Cal. 39, 70 P. 1014, the rule is summarized as follows:

"By the Constitution, appellate jurisdiction is conferred upon this court in 'criminal cases prosecuted by indictment or information in a court of record on questions of law alone.' Where there is evidence, therefore, to sustain the verdict, a question of law cannot arise, but only in a case where there is in effect an entire lack of evidence."

To the same effect is People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 89 P. 124.

[2] Briefly stated, the circumstances attending the killing, as proved by the testimony adduced by the prosecution, most of which was, as stated, given by the three witnesses above mentioned, were as follows: Marcus, Nougiera, and Alameda, all of whom are of Portuguese nationality, came out of a poolroom, starting to go home. Appellant, who was under the influence of liquor, had been visiting at the house of a friend across the street from the poolroom, and the deceased, Mariscal, who was a friend of appellant, had been sent by the latter's wife to bring him home. As appellant and Mariscal, both of whom are Mexicans, came out of the house, appellant, manifesting a hatred toward the three men evidently on account of their nationality, started to curse and revile them. Marcus made some reply and appellant immediately leaped toward him. Mariscal tried to restrain him. Meanwhile Marcus reached to take a picket from a fence close by, and in doing so fell down. As he fell he saw that appellant had a knife in his hand, and he shouted: "Look out, boys; he's got a knife." Thereupon Alameda joined Mariscal in trying to hold appellant, who was still cursing and trying to free himself, and during the struggle appellant cut Alameda about the head with the knife. Mariscal, still holding appellant, told him to let the men alone, that they had done no harm, and with an oath appellant replied: "Let me go, or I'll kill you," or words to that effect, and immediately appellant stabbed Mariscal in the neck and he fell to the street dead.

[3] Obviously the foregoing evidence sustains the verdict. Appellant endeavors to point out certain inconsistencies and contradictions in the testimony of the three witnesses named, particularly as to events occurring immediately following the homicide, and he argues therefrom that said witnesses are not worthy of belief; but, as shown by the authorities hereinabove quoted, these were matters to be addressed to and determined by the jury, and, it having accepted their testimony as being true, we are not at liberty to interfere with its conclusion on appeal.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

93 Cal. App. 445

TAYLOR et ux. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 6110.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 4, 1928.

Appearance  9(2)—Motion to dismiss filed in defendant's original supersedeas proceeding in appellate court on ground court lacked jurisdiction of subject-matter constituted "general appearance."

Successful plaintiffs in municipal court by filing motion to dismiss order to show cause in defendant's original supersedeas proceeding in appellate court on ground that court did not have jurisdiction over the parties nor of the subject-matter thereby made a "general appearance" and became subject to jurisdiction of appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, General Appearance.]

Original application by Mertice E. Taylor and wife for supersedeas, to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles, to stay hearing of an appeal from the municipal court. On motion of George Alexander and another to dismiss the application. Motion denied.

George I. Devor, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and Gordon Boller, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Superior Court.

Joseph M. Bernstein, of Los Angeles, for respondents Alexander and Nathan.

THOMPSON, J. This is an original petition seeking a writ of supersedeas, directed to respondent, staying the hearing of an appeal from the municipal court of Los Angeles to the superior court, entitled Alexander et al. v. Taylor et al. The unusual situation presented is as follows: Alexander and Nathan, copartners, recovered judgment in the municipal court against Taylor and his wife, defendants in that action and the petitioners here. The defendants appealed to the superior court, furnishing the regular undertaking on appeal. A motion was made to dismiss the appeal and denied on February 6, 1928. A second motion to dismiss was presented and denied on February 15, 1928. On the 10th of March, 1928, the judge of the municipal court who tried the action refused to settle the bill of exceptions on the ground that it had not been filed within the time required by law, and on the 23d of March the defendants and petitioners here commenced a proceeding in mandamus to compel the municipal court judge to settle the bill. An alternative writ issued, but on April 9th the peremptory writ was denied, and petitioners are prosecuting an appeal from that judgment, which appeal is now pending. The petition here alleges that the hearing of the appeal from the first judgment in the superior court was continued by that court from May 29th until June 1, 1928, in order that petitioners might present their application for the writ of supersedeas. It is also alleged that George Alexander and Mort Nathan are parties affected by the petition. The order made staying the proceedings required that copies be served not only upon the respondent court but also upon Alexander and Nathan. By way of return the respondent court sets forth that the appeal from the judgment denying the writ of mandate involves the interpretation of section 953d of the Code of Civil Procedure (as added by St. 1927, p. 86), and is, in the opinion of the judge signing the return, prosecuted in good faith. George Alexander and Mort Nathan have appeared by what they term a special appearance, making a motion to dismiss the order to show cause on the ground "that the court had no jurisdiction to issue the writ directed to the respondents or over the parties named therein." At the time of the oral argument Alexander and Nathan asked leave to file their demurrer and answer after the motion was disposed of in the event it should be denied, and an order was made that the motion to dismiss, in so far as it applied to jurisdiction over the parties, would first be determined and if denied they would be given time to file a demurrer or answer or both.

We are therefore called upon to determine, first, whether the appearance which has been made by Alexander and Nathan is a special appearance in fact or whether it is general, and they have therefore submitted to the jurisdiction of the court. We have emphasized by quoting the exact language of their ground for dismissal because it therein appears, as it does from their argument, that they not only claim that this court has no jurisdiction over the parties, but also has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, i. e., "no jurisdiction to issue the writ." Under these circumstances we are constrained by a long line of authorities to hold that they have made a general appearance and have submitted to the jurisdiction of the court. In the case of Roberts v. Superior Court, 30 Cal. App. 714, 159 P. 465, where a similar motion was made, the court says:

"* * * A motion to dismiss on the ground of want of jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action necessarily calls for relief which may be demanded only by a party to the record. It has been uniformly so held, as logically it could not otherwise be held, and, furthermore, that where a party appears and asks for such relief, although expressly characterizing his appearance as special and for the special purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court over his person, he as effectually submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court as though he had legally been served with process. In re Clark, 125 Cal. 388, 58 P. 22; Security Loan & Trust Co., etc., v. Boston & South R. F. Co., 126 Cal. 418, 58 P. 941, 59 P. 296; [MacClay] MacClay Co. v. Meads, 14 Cal. App. 363, 112 P. 195, 113 P. 364; Olcese v. Justice's Court, 156 Cal. 82, 103 P. 317."

And in Security Loan & Trust Co. v. Boston & South R. F. Co., supra, this apt sentence is found:

"If a party defendant wishes to insist upon the objection that he is not in court for want of jurisdiction over his person, he must specially appear for that purpose only, and must keep out for all purposes except to make that objection."

See, also, Olcese v. Justice Court, 156 Cal. 82, 103 P. 317; Remsburg v. Hackney Mfg. Co., 174 Cal. 799, 164 P. 792.

In this case it must be held that Alexander and Nathan responded to the orders served upon them by a general appearance.

Motion denied; respondents Alexander and Nathan given five days from date within which to file their demurrer or answer.

I concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.

OGBURN v. TRAVELERS' INS. CO.★
(Civ. 6299.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Aug. 3, 1928.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 1, 1928.

1. Insurance ⇨146(3)—There must be uncertainty or ambiguity in policy to resolve doubts against insurer.

There must be some uncertainty or ambiguity in insurance policy before the rule that doubts should be resolved against the insurer can be applied.

2. Insurance ⇨146(3)—Policy must be considered as whole in determining existence of ambiguity or uncertainty requiring resolution of doubts arising from conflict between caption and provisions against insurer.

Caption is not part of provisions of insurance policy, but, even if it were, policy must be considered as a whole and read together in determining existence of ambiguity or uncertainty requiring resolution of doubts arising from conflicts between them against insurer.

3. Carriers ⇨4—"Common carrier" is public utility, required to extend services to all requesting it and obeying lawful rules and regulations.

A "common carrier" is a public utility or servant, required to extend its services to all who request it and place themselves within lawful rules and regulations governing its use and operation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Common Carrier.]

4. Insurance ⇨452—Hotel elevator held not "conveyance provided by a common carrier" within accident policy.

A hotel elevator held not a "conveyance provided by a common carrier" within the terms of an accident insurance policy.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Carl Ogburn, as administrator of the estate of Byron C. Ogburn, deceased, against the Travelers' Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Joseph T. O'Connor, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Burbank & Spence, Daniel W. Burbank, and Homer R. Spence, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

WARNE, Presiding Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff as administrator of the estate of Byron C. Ogburn, deceased, in a suit to recover upon an accident insurance policy. The deceased purchased a travel accident ticket policy from the defendant insurance company at San Antonio, Texas. The deceased was killed in an elevator accident which occurred in the Hotel Flower in San Francisco. The Hotel Flower is a public hotel, having transient and permanent guests and furnishing hotel service. The entrance door to the hotel was kept open to the public. The hotel maintained an elevator service which was generally used by guests, visitors, employees, tradesmen, and waiters.

On the day of the accident the deceased, in company with a Mrs. Proctor, rang to summon the elevator to the ground floor for the purpose of being conveyed to the fifth floor of the hotel. In response the elevator was brought to the ground floor by Mrs. Willott, the operator. Mrs. Proctor was standing at the right side of the elevator door as she faced it, Mr. Ogburn being behind her in a position in front of the door and about three feet distant therefrom. As the operator opened the door Mrs. Proctor stepped into the elevator, and the elevator was immediately started upward without previously closing the door. Deceased, who was following Mrs. Proctor into the elevator, started to enter just the elevator went upwards, and, because of the premature starting of the elevator, his foot went into the shaft and he fell to the basement, receiving the injuries which resulted in his death.

The heading or caption of the policy issued to the deceased reads:

"Covers Accidents Only While a Passenger on Passenger Conveyances and While in or About Railroad Passenger Stations. Age 18 to 70."

In the body of the policy it is provided:

"The Travelers' Insurance Company hereby insures the person whose signature is hereto affixed and named in the stub of this ticket policy in the possession of the company bearing even number and date herewith against bodily injuries effected solely by external, violent and accidental means, and sustained while riding as a passenger on any public conveyance provided by a common carrier and such conveyance is being propelled on land or water by mechanical power."

Appellant contends that the accident was not covered by the policy in this, that the insured was not riding on "a passenger conveyance provided by a common carrier."

[1, 2] It is to be noted that the caption of the policy quoted uses the words "passenger conveyance," while the body of the policy uses the words "public conveyance provided by a common carrier." The respondent says:

"It makes no difference which of these provisions we concern ourselves with. If these terms differ, conflict, are ambiguous or would create an uncertainty, a liberal interpretation is to be adopted which is most favorable to the insured."

That the rule is well settled that any uncertainty, ambiguity or reasonable doubt should be resolved against the insurer is not questioned. 14 Cal. Jur. p. 443; Joyce on Insurance (2d Ed.) § 222; Pacific Heating Co. v. Williamsburgh, 158 Cal. 367, 111 P. 4; Mah See v. North American Ins. Co., 190 Cal. 421, 213 P. 42, 26 A. L. R. 123. However, before the rule can be applied there must be some uncertainty or ambiguity in the policy. First National Bank v. Maryland Cas. Co., 162 Cal. 61, 69, 121 P. 321, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1170; Blunt v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 145 Cal. 268, 271, 78 P. 729, 67 L. R. A. 793, 104 Am. St. Rep. 34. In order to hold the policy ambiguous and uncertain we would have to hold that the caption was a part of its provisions. We see no reason to hold that the caption was a part of the provisions of the policy. But even if it were to be so construed, the policy would have to be considered as a whole and read together. Sharp v. Scottish Union, etc., Co., 136 Cal. 542, 544, 69 P. 253, 615; Yoch v. Home Mutual Ins. Co., 111 Cal. 503, 44 P. 189, 34 L. R. A. 857; Hill v. Travelers' Insurance Co., 146 Iowa, 133, 124 N. W. 898, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 742.

We now turn to the question as to whether a public hotel in the operation and management of a passenger elevator for the convenience of its guests and invitees is to be classed as a "common carrier" within the purview of the policy in question. It is the rule in this state that persons or corporations operating a passenger elevator are to be treated as common carriers of passengers in determining the degree of care required in the operation thereof. Champagne v. Hamburger, 169 Cal. 683, 147 P. 954; Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 P. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175. But the precise question as to whether a manager or proprietor of a passenger elevator should be treated as a common carrier in the full sense of the term has not heretofore been presented to the Supreme or Appellate Courts of this state. In 10 Corpus Juris, at page 609, the author, in discussing the status of elevators as carriers, says:

"The owner or manager of a passenger elevator used in a building for the transportation of tenants and others is not in the full sense of the term a common carrier of passengers. However, with reference to the safety of passengers on an elevator a similar degree of care is usually required of the owner or manager as is exacted of other passenger carriers, and with this idea in view it has been held in many cases that such an owner or manager is a common carrier of passengers as to persons using the elevator."

In Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.), vol. 1, § 100, the rule is stated as follows:

"The owners and managers of passenger elevators, although spoken of by some courts as common carriers of passengers, cannot properly be so classed. The public carrier of passengers, on account of the nature of his employment, is charged in law with certain duties owed to the public, among which is that of receiving upon his vehicle all who may offer themselves for transportation, and who stand ready to pay the legal fare and comply with his reasonable rules and regulations. When the nature of the business of operating a passenger elevator is considered it is clear that the proprietor owes no such duty to the public and is, therefore, not a carrier of passengers in the full sense of the term as legally understood. Nevertheless, with reference to the safety of their passengers, the law has imposed upon the proprietors of passenger elevators duties precisely similar to those exacted of passenger carriers by railroad."

In 9 Ruling Case Law, p. 1237, it is said in reference to the status of the owner or manager of an elevator:

"When the question is squarely presented, as when it sought to construe a statute referring to the duties or liabilities of 'common carriers,' it is held that such expression does not refer to the proprietors of elevators."

See, also, Seaver v. Bradley, 179 Mass. 329, 60 N. E. 795, 88 Am. St. Rep. 384.

[3] We quote with approval the following language to be found in the recent case of Southern Railway Co. v. Taylor, 57 App. D. C. 21, 16 F.(2d) 517:

"Bouvier defines a common carrier as 'one whose business, occupation, or regular calling it is to carry chattels for all persons who may choose to employ and remunerate him.' This of course applies, not only to the carrying of chattels, but to the carrying of passengers for hire. It will be observed, however, that a common carrier is required to extend its services to 'all persons who may choose to employ and remunerate him.' In other words, a common carrier is a public utility, a public servant, required to extend its services to all who request it, providing they place themselves within the lawful rules and regulations governing its use and operation. It logically follows that the operator of an elevator in an office building is not a common carrier, nor is he engaged in commerce. He is not required to carry all who may demand passage. The matter of extending service is entirely within his control. The elevator is merely an instrumentality furnished for the convenience of those who occupy and use the building, at all times within the control of the owner."

Respondent cites the following cases in support of his contention that one who operates or maintains an elevator is a common carrier: Steiskal v. Marshall Field & Co., 238 Ill. 92, 87 N. E. 117, 119; Goldsmith v. Holland Building Co., 182 Mo. 597, 81 S. W. 1112; Champagne v. Hamburger & Sons, 169 Cal. 683, 147 P. 954; Watts v. Murphy, 9 Cal. App. 564, 99 P. 1104; Smith v. Odd Fellows Building Association, 46 Nev. 48, 205 P. 786, 23 A. L. R. 38; Engstrand v. Hartnett, 106 Wash. 404, 180 P. 132; Springer v. Ford, 189 Ill. 430, 59 N. E. 953, 52 L. R. A. 930, 82 Am. St. Rep. 464; and Beidler v. Brandshaw, 200 Ill. 425, 65 N. E. 1086. In each of these cases the courts were considering the degree of care required of the operator of an elevator towards his passenger, as compared with the degree of care imposed upon a common carrier under similar circumstances. The courts were not called upon to decide the status of an elevator, and statements made by the courts in those cases to the effect that the operator of an elevator in a public building is a common carrier were used in the sense that a similar degree of care is required of the owner or manager of an elevator as is exacted of common carriers.

[4] We conclude that the elevator in question was not a conveyance operated by a common carrier and that the accident in question did not fall within the terms of the policy, and that the judgment should be reversed.

We do not consider it necessary to decide the remaining points presented on this appeal.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.;
NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 276

BARNETT ROSENBERG, Inc., v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 6065.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 26, 1928.

New trial ⇐ 163(1)—Judge's statement to clerk on stepping from bench that he had decided to deny new trial held not formal order precluding subsequent granting of motion.

Statement of trial judge, made to his clerk on stepping from bench, that he had decided to deny motion for new trial, held not a formal order denying new trial, and filing with clerk on the following day of written order signed by the judge granting the motion was therefore within court's jurisdiction.

Application by Barnett Rosenberg, Inc., formerly known as the Goodman & Rosenberg Company, Inc., for a writ of prohibition to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County. Writ discharged.

Hibbard & Kleindienst, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Loewenthal, Lissner, Roth & Gunter, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. But one question is presented for determination in this proceeding. It is necessary for us to decide whether or not, under the circumstances recorded, the trial court made a formal order denying a motion for a new trial. Since we conclude that no such action was taken, there is no occasion for discussing other points argued.

From the recitals of the petition and from the statement of the judge who tried the case, made upon the presentation of the motion to correct the records in the action, it appears that, after trial and judgment rendered for the plaintiff in the case of Standard Cabinet

Works, a Corporation, v. Goodman & Rosenberg Co., Inc., a Corporation, et al., the trial judge, on the 14th day of March, 1927, stepped from the bench and thereafter, while still in the courtroom, said to his clerk that he had decided to deny the motion for a new trial in said case. On the following morning, before the convening of court, the judge informed the clerk that he had changed his mind about the matter and instructed the clerk to make a minute entry granting the motion and to send notice accordingly. On the 13th day of December, 1927, a written order was made and filed with the clerk granting the motion for a new trial.

The decision of our Supreme Court in United Railway v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 687, 242 P. 701, states the law clearly. It was there made plain that an order granting or denying a motion for a new trial may be only in one of two ways: (1) By audible pronouncement from the bench in open court. An order denying the motion for a new trial was not thus made in this case at all. (2) By filing with the clerk in the action a written order signed by the judge. Such an order granting the motion for a new trial was signed and filed on the 13th day of December, 1927, as above stated, and while the court still retained jurisdiction to make the order.

The writ is discharged.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

93 Cal. App. 209

PAPESCHI et ux. v. LA CAVA et al. ★
(Civ. 6092.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 18, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 13, 1928.

1. Money received §12—Defendant's unauthorized payment to another is no defense to action for money received for plaintiff's use and benefit.

It is no defense to action for money had and received for use and benefit of plaintiffs that defendant, after receiving the money, made a payment to another; he having no authority to do so.

2. Money received §18(3)—Judgment in action for money received was properly for a defendant, not shown to have received any.

Judgment for a defendant in action for money had and received was proper, there being no evidence that she received any moneys.

3. Money received §18(3)—In absence of showing that defendants acted jointly, plaintiffs held properly denied judgment against defendant to whom defendant who received the money made payment.

There being no evidence in action for money had and received that defendant C., to whom defendant F., after receiving money for use and benefit of plaintiffs, made a payment, acted jointly with F., held plaintiffs were properly denied judgment against C.

4. Trial §404(1)—Finding that plaintiffs did not rescind held finding on issue of repudiation.

Finding on issue of repudiation of contract by plaintiffs held made by finding that they did not rescind the transaction; "rescind" being used as synonym of "repudiate."

5. Vendor and purchaser §102, 334(4)—Even if purchaser by demand, in notice of defects in title, for immediate return of deposit, rescinded contract, held, vendor by doing nothing also rescinded it, entitling purchaser to return of deposit.

Even if contract for purchase of land, giving purchaser 30 days to examine title, and, if finding any objections, to state them, and requiring vendor, if objections be made, to use diligence to remove them in 90 days thereafter, and providing that, if they cannot be removed in such time, all rights and obligations under the contract may, at purchaser's election, terminate, and deposit shall be returned to purchaser, was rescinded by purchaser concluding his notice of objections found with demand, because of the number of such defects and objections, for immediate repayment of deposit, the contract was also rescinded by vendor making no effort to clear the title, and never attempting to tender a deed, under which circumstances purchaser was entitled to return of deposit.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Agostino Papeschi and wife against N. V. La Cava and others. From judgment for plaintiffs against defendant G. Fracchia alone, she and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Waldo F. Postel, of San Francisco (L. Seidenberg, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant Fracchia and respondents Rosina.

Randolph V. Whiting and Henry F. Wrigley, both of San Francisco, for respondents Papeschi et al.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendants to recover money. They were given judgment against one of the defendants, and that defendant has appealed. They were refused judgment against the other defendants, and from that portion of the judgment the plaintiffs have appealed.

The plaintiffs pleaded their claim in three separate counts. On the third count neither party introduced any evidence and no findings were made. The first count was framed as a common count for money had and received. The second count pleaded a written promise to pay. The defendants filed answers denying the allegations contained in each count, and each defendant alleged that the plaintiffs rescinded the contract. Among others the court found:

"That within two years last past, at the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, defendant G. Fracchia, originally sued here and sometimes known as S. Fracchia, became indebted to plaintiffs, in the sum of $600, for and on account of moneys had and received by said defendant for the use and benefit of plaintiffs, and which said sum said defendant in writing promised and agreed to pay to plaintiff; that although demand has been made on said defendant for the payment of said sum no part thereof has been paid."

The trial court also found that the plaintiffs never rescinded the said contract. There is no finding that Mary Rosina, as an individual or as executrix of the last will of her deceased husband, or that N. V. La Cava, did receive, or did not receive, any moneys. The uncontroverted evidence was to the effect that Rosa Papeschi paid to the defendant La Cava, as a deposit on a purported contract to purchase real estate the sum of $600 and of that sum the defendant La Cava paid to the defendant Fracchia $300. There is no evidence in the record that either of those defendants does not now hold the moneys so received, or that either of said defendants has legally parted with any of the moneys so received.

[1] In accordance with the finding above quoted, the trial court rendered judgment against the defendant Fracchia in the sum of $600. In doing so the court did not err. The defendant had received $600. The witnesses so testified; but they attempted to show that Fracchia then made a payment to La Cava. He had no authority to do so. The payment did not relieve him of responsibility.

[2] As recited above, there is no finding and no evidence that Mary Rosina, as an individual or in her representative capacity, received any moneys whatever. There is no evidence and no finding that she made any promise of any kind. The judgment refusing relief against her was correct. Whittier v. Home Savings Bank, 161 Cal. 311, 119 P. 92. As the record shows that, if a finding had been made, it must necessarily have been against the plaintiff and in favor of Mary Rosina, the judgment in her favor will not be reversed, but, on the other hand, the same will be affirmed.

[3] As to the defendant La Cava, the plaintiffs make the broad statement that the judgment should be reversed. There is no finding and there is no evidence that he acted jointly with the defendant Fracchia. Ordinarily he would not be liable. 41 C. J. p. 62. The plaintiffs do not call to our attention any facts, nor cite us to any law, showing liability as to him. The judgment as to La Cava is therefore affirmed.

[4, 5] In his answer the defendant Fracchia pleaded a repudiation of the contract by the plaintiffs. He now complains because the trial court did not make a finding thereon. The point has no merit for two separate reasons. Among other things, the trial court found that the " * * * plaintiffs did not rescind the transaction." The trial court doubtlessly used the word "rescind" as being a synonym of the word "repudiate," as will presently more fully appear. The other reasons supporting the findings made by the trial court rest on a consideration of the following facts:

The contract, as written, provided that the purchaser should have 30 days to examine the title, and if he found any objections that he should state the same in writing. If any objections were made the seller should " * * * use all due diligence to remove them within 90 days thereafter, * * * but, if such objections cannot be removed within the time allowed, all rights and obligations hereunder may, at the election of the purchaser, terminate and end, and said deposit shall be returned to the purchaser. * * *" The contract was written August 24, 1925. On September 23, 1925, the purchaser served a notice stating certain objections to the title and then closed the notice as follows:

"Because of the number of such defects and objections, demand is hereby made for the immediate repayment to A. F. R. Papeschi of the sum of $600 heretofore paid to you, the said N. V. La Cava, in connection with the signature of the aforesaid purported agreement of sale."

The defendant Fracchia calls attention to the fact that the contract gave him 90 days to clear the title, and that the notice served by the plaintiff departed from the terms of the contract because it required an "immediate" repayment. He therefore asserts that the plaintiff repudiated or rescinded the contract. Conceding, without deciding, that the plaintiff did rescind the contract, it is equally clear that the defendant also rescinded the contract, for the evidence is without conflict that after September 23, 1925, the vendor made no effort whatsoever to clear the title and that he never at any time made any attempt to tender a deed. Under these circumstances the plaintiff was entitled to a return of her deposit. Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 316, 24 P. 280, 18 Am. St. Rep. 187; Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, 16, 55 P. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Lemle v. Barry, 181 Cal. 6, 10, 183 P. 148.

If the plaintiff's notice is construed as the defendant contends it should be construed, it follows that the finding should have been that both parties rescinded the contract. In that event the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. On the other hand, if the plaintiffs' notice is construed more liberally, it follows that it was not necessarily an unwarranted notice under the terms of the contract, and that the plaintiff did not rescind or repudiate the contract and the finding as made by the trial court was correct.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed as to each party.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

fer, claimant for personal injuries, opposed by the Beeman & Rice Realty Company, employer, and the Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company, insurance carrier. To review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of claimant the insurance carrier brings certiorari. Affirmed.

George L. Greer, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

93 Cal. App. 313

HARTFORD ACCIDENT & INDEMNITY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 6073.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 27, 1928.

1. Master and servant ⇨403—Burden of proving workmen's compensation claimant was independent contractor and not employee was on party raising issue.

Burden of proving that workmen's compensation claimant was an independent contractor and not employee of party for whom services were being rendered when she was injured was on party raising such issue.

2. Master and servant ⇨367—One performing services under principal's control as to result only, and not as to means, is "independent contractor" (Workmen's Compensation Act).

One who renders service for a specified recompense for a specified result under the control of his principal, as to the result of his work only, and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished, is an "independent contractor," not entitled to benefits of Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Independent Contractor.]

3. Master and servant ⇨367—Woman employed by realty company to solicit purchasers of lots held "employee," entitled to compensation for injury, not "independent contractor" (Workmen's Compensation Act).

Woman employed by realty company to solicit prospective buyers of lots in tract being developed by company, at the agreed sum of $2 for each person whom she might interest in the property and cause to visit the tract, and a commission on any sales she might make, held an "employee," entitled to compensation for injury under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279), and not an "independent contractor," where she was required to report each morning, whether she had prospects or not, and to attend weekly meetings of salesmen and solicitors.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employé.]

Certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279) by Helen C. Shaf-

CRAIG, J. The respondent Helen C. Shaffer was injured while soliciting prospective purchasers of real estate in the city of Los Angeles, on October 20, 1927, as an employee of the Beeman & Rice Realty Company. She made application to the division of industrial accidents and safety, and, after a hearing, the commission awarded $192.50 hospital expenses at $3.50 per day, and allowed the applicant $11.12 per week, beginning October 28, 1927, until the termination of disability or further order of the commission, and dismissed as to the employer. A motion for rehearing was presented, which was denied, and the insurance carrier, petitioner herein, instituted this proceeding to review said award.

It appears that the applicant was employed by assistant sales managers of the realty company to solicit prospective buyers of lots in a tract which it was developing, at the agreed sum of $2 for each person whom she might interest in the property and cause to visit the tract, and a commission of 1 per cent. upon any sales she might make. The record is not clear as to the exact time that she had been so employed. She testified that she began work on the 18th of October, 1927, and also that she worked "3 or 4 days"; a representative of the company testified that she worked 5 days; and the respondent Commission in its briefs recites that she earned "$66.50 during her employment of 4 or 5 days."

It is the contention of the petitioner that Mrs. Shaffer was not an employee, but that she was an independent contractor, and that the evidence does not justify the award. It is conceded that she was not limited to any particular territory in which to work, nor was she furnished by the company with the names of people whom she should interview; and she testified that she "had no specified hours," so long as she did her work and obtained her load for the following day. It appears, however, that she was required to telephone to the main office each morning whether she had prospects or not; that she was not instructed to any great extent, because of her past long experience in selling real estate; that private machines of the company called for her each morning, and she directed them to the residences of her prospects, whom they conveyed to the tract. The manager also testified that a meeting for the instruction of salesmen and solicitors was held each Monday evening, at which attendance was required, that it was not optional with them whether they should attend or not, and that the company held up their checks in the event of absence without good cause. Another of the company's witnesses testified that a good solicitor would average $20 to $25 per week, and that one working as the applicant did would average at least $22 per week. It was further testified that such solicitors "can't work for another real estate company while they work for us."

[1-3] If this statement of facts leaves any doubt as to whether or not the applicant was an independent contractor, it is especially important to observe that, since the fact is undisputed that at the time of the injury she was rendering services for the Beeman & Rice Realty Company, the burden of proof that the employee was an independent contractor was upon the party raising such issue. York Junction Tr. & S. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com. (Cal. Sup.) 261 P. 704. Referring to the definition of an independent contractor as it is stated in the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279), our Supreme Court has said:

"One who renders service for a specified recompense for a specified result, under the control of his principal as to the result of his work only, and not as to the means by which such result is accomplished" is an independent contractor. Flickenger v. Industrial Acc. Com., 181 Cal. 425, 184 P. 851, 19 A. L. R. 1150; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 191 Cal. 404, 216 P. 578, 43 A. L. R. 1304.

It cannot be said that in the instant proceeding the employer has complied with the rule requiring that it show that the employee was under the control of the principal "as to the result of the work only." On the contrary, it would appear that here the employer had the right to control the mode in which the work was to be done; the employee was required to attend meetings every Monday night, which were called salesmen's meetings. Except for this designation, there is nothing to indicate their purpose, but, in the absence of showing to the contrary, it may be assumed that the employees were given such instructions as the employer might see fit to give upon such occasions. It was testified by the applicant that she was not instructed to any extent, because her past experience made it unnecessary. However, this is a concession that the right to give instructions was recognized as existing. It is clear, too, that the employer had the right to terminate the employment at any time. This is a circumstance "tending [strongly] to show the subservency of the employee, since it is incompatible with the full control of the work usually enjoyed by an independent contractor." Eng-Skell Co. v. Industrial Accident Com., 44 Cal. App. 210, 186 P. 163; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Industrial Accident Com., supra. Nor is it inconsistent with the theory that the applicant was not an independent contractor that she might perform other work than that for the principal. Helmuth v. Industrial Acc. Com., 59 Cal. App. 160, 210 P. 428. However, it was testified in this case that she was not permitted to work for any other real estate employer while engaged in the work in question.

We therefore conclude that the applicant was an employee of the real estate company by whom she was employed and for whom she performed services, up to and including the time of her injury. Her employment was in the nature of piece work; she worked from day to day, and could discontinue work at any time; she was required to report every morning. The case falls within the rule of Helmuth v. Industrial Acc. Com., supra.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

93 Cal. App. 454

Ex parte BALEN. (Cr. 1711.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 6, 1928.

Criminal law §1218—Confinement in county jail on felony charge before conviction therefor satisfied prior sentence to city jail for misdemeanor.

One confined in county jail from May 11th, on which he was sentenced to city jail for 30 days on plea of guilty on misdemeanor charge of possessing intoxicating liquors in violation of Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79) until July 16th, when granted probation after conviction on June 20th, of felony of possessing still, held entitled to release on writ of habeas corpus from city jail, in which confined on misdemeanor charge after release from county jail; his detention in latter before June 20th being no part of punishment for felony.

Application by George Balen for a writ of habeas corpus to the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles to secure petitioner's release from custody on plea of guilty of possessing intoxicating liquor. Writ granted.

John F. Groene, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

E. J. Lickley, City Prosecutor, and Joe W. Matherly and F. W. Fellows, Deputy City Prosecutors, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. The petitioner in this case was arrested on May 7, 1928, charged with possession of intoxicating liquors in violation of the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79). On May 11, 1928, he pleaded guilty to this charge and by judgment of the municipal court was ordered confined in the city jail for a period of 30 days or, in lieu thereof, to pay a fine of $300. On May 10th, after his arrest on the misdemeanor charge, complaint was filed against the petitioner charging him with the possession of a still, a felony, and he was taken from the city jail to the county jail, where he was confined until July 16, 1928, on which date he was granted probation, he having been tried and found guilty of the latter offense on June 20th.

It will be observed that petitioner was confined in the county jail for a period of 67 days, and since his release from the county jail has been confined in the city jail, making a total of 81 days' confinement to the time the petition herein was filed. It is petitioner's contention that his detention in the county jail subsequent to May 11th, the day on which he was sentenced on the misdemeanor charge and on which day the commitment issued, is in satisfaction of that judgment. Almost the same situation was presented to us in the case of In re Ahumada (Cal. App.) 269 P. 181, the only difference being that in the Ahumada Case the petitioner was found not guilty of the felony charge and in the instant case it was determined that he was guilty. It cannot be said, however, that petitioner's detention in the county jail prior to June 20th was any part of the punishment for the more serious crime. For this reason we can see no substantial distinction between the two cases, and since we are not persuaded to depart from the conclusion arrived at in that case, which was that the petitioner had served the sentence imposed upon him on account of the misdemeanor, we must hold that petitioner here is also entitled to his liberty.

The writ is granted.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; HAZLETT, Justice pro tem.

93 Cal. App. 390

GOLDEN STATE ORCHARDS v. HARTER.
(Civ. 3109.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 31, 1928.

1. Contracts ⚡249—Fruit grower could not nullify agreement for processing and packing fruit without paying sum equal to profits thereunder.

Where fruit grower contracted for processing and packing of fruit after sale thereof, it could not thereafter nullify agreement either in whole or in part by selling fruit with understanding that it was to be delivered without first being processed and packed, unless paying a sum equal to what profits would have been for doing work in accordance with terms of agreement.

2. Agriculture ⚡11—Fruit packer agreeing to process and pack fruit held entitled to lien on fruit and possession thereof until payment of charges (Civ. Code, § 3051; Warehouse Act of 1909, § 27, as amended by St. 1919, p. 398).

Under Civ. Code, § 3051, or Warehouse Act of 1909, § 27, as amended by St. 1919, p. 398, fruit packer contracting for processing and packing of fruit was entitled to a lien on fruit and possession thereof for that purpose until payment of all legitimate charges accruing against property by virtue of such agreement.

3. Agriculture ⚡15—Fruit packer held entitled to return of fruit for purpose of enforcing lien thereon for processing and packing.

Where answer in action in claim and delivery for redelivery of possession of certain fruit delivered to packer for processing and packing requested a return of property for purpose of enforcing lien thereon for services performed pursuant to agreement, defendant was entitled by reason of denials of plaintiff's right to possession either to return of fruit or amount of lien thereon, without regard to counterclaim setting up charges against fruit for services performed and to be performed under agreement.

4. Damages ⚡121—Fruit packer may recover, for breach of contract to process and pack fruit, difference between contract price and cost of completing performance (Civ. Code, § 1512).

Under Civ. Code, § 1512, relative to damages recoverable in case performance of obligation is prevented by creditor, a fruit packer contracting for processing and packing fruit may recover as damages, on breach thereof by grower, the difference between contract price and cost of completing performance of contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by the Golden State Orchards against O. B. Harter. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. P. Rich, of Marysville, and Lawrence Schillig, of Yuba City, for appellant.

Arthur L. Erb, of Beverly Hills, and W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action in claim and delivery for the redelivery to the possession of the plaintiff by the defendant of 370 tons of dried French prunes and 80½ tons of dried Muir peaches, of the alleged approximate aggregate value of $70,000, or, in case such redelivery is not had or cannot be made, that plaintiff be awarded judgment in the said sum of $70,000 as the value thereof, together with the sum of $10,000 as damages for the wrongful detention of said fruit by defendant after demand was made by plaintiff for the return to it of the possession thereof.

The plaintiff is a California corporation, with its principal place of business in the county of Glenn, and was, at all the times mentioned in the pleadings and herein, the owner of an orchard of extensive acreage near Hamilton City, said county.

The defendant, at all said times, "was and now is engaged in the drying, packing, and processing of dried fruits, at Harter Station, on the Sacramento Northern Railway, in Sutter county, Cal., and during all of said times owned and possessed the necessary equipment, buildings, machinery and warehouses for the doing of said work and the storing of such fruit." It appears that during the month of September, 1924, after the plaintiff had completed the harvesting of its fruits produced on its said orchard, and after the close of the harvesting season, plaintiff and defendant entered into negotiations for the delivery by the plaintiff to the defendant of certain quantities of dried prunes and peaches, produced on said orchard of plaintiff, "for the sorting, grading, processing, packing and storing of such fruit by said defendant." Thereafter certain written correspondence was had between the parties relative to said negotiations, and it is the letters passing between them and constituting such correspondence which form the agreement formally entered into between the parties for the purpose mentioned. The following are the letters referred to:

"C. B. Harter.

"Yuba City, Cal., Sept. 27, 1924.

"Golden State Orchards, Hamilton City, Glenn Co. Cal. Attention Mr. Moore—Gentlemen: In accordance with our conversation with your Mr. Moore on our visit to your orchards on Sept. 24th, we are pleased to outline our proposition to pack your fruit.

"We propose to receive, grade, process and pack your prunes and peaches in accordance with the best approved methods and in regular containers according to trade standards. We shall use the utmost diligence in taking proper care of your fruit while in our custody. Through our special arrangements with Harry Hall & Co., Inc. we will pack your fruit under brands favorably known for many years.

"Our charges for this work are $30 per ton for well cured fruit. Any extra handling such as for hand sorting on account of defective fruit to be charged to your account at cost.

"In stating our proposition to you be believe you realize the advantages of having your goods merchandized put up as described. Should there be any questions in your mind which we have not made clear we shall be glad to come to an understanding and trust we shall hear favorably from you in the course of a few days.

"Yours very truly, C. B. Harter."

"Golden State Orchards.

"Hamilton City, Cal., Oct. 15, 1924.

"C. B. Harter, Esq., Yuba City, Cal.—Dear Sir: Referring to your letter of Sept. 27th, and to our conversation held at your plant on Oct. 12th. We wish to confirm our understanding of the arrangement you proposed to us for handling our fruit.

"The charges of every nature for handling our fruit from on board cars your station Harter, processing, grading, packing and loading, when sold, shall be $30 per ton of cured fruit. This price to include storage of the fruit until such time as it is sold and also the use of bags for containing the fruit from our ranch to your packing plant.

"Knowing the great importance of grading the processed fruit as well of course as properly processing, we rely upon your promise to place in charge a well experienced man.

"Further it is our understanding the fruit will be, when received by you, sized or graded and held in bins set aside for our sole use until we have sold them.

"We confirm the statement made to you regarding our arrangement with Harry Hall, Inc., viz., that they will from time to time submit bids upon which if we accept will pay to them their commission of 5 per cent. This makes it possible for us to accept the highest price no matter from what source it comes.

"Please acknowledge receipt of this letter and if it meets with your approval confirm.

"Yours very truly,

"Golden State Orchards,
"By Granville Moore."

"C. B. Harter.

"Yuba City, Cal., Oct. 17, 1924.

"Golden State Orchards, Hamilton City, Glenn Co. Cal. Attention Mr. Granville Moore—Gentlemen: Your favor of October 15th has been received and the contents noted. With regard to the charges we wish to call your attention to the third paragraph of our letter to you of September 27th, in which we stated that the charges would be $30 per ton for packing well cured fruit. Any extra handling such as for defective fruit to be charged to your account at cost.

"In reference to the storage, the charge of $30 per ton is to include storage till the 1st of June, 1925. We will issue warehouse receipts if desired.

"With the above limitations to your letter, we hereby wish to confirm it.

"Yours very truly, C. B. Harter."

Thereafter, and in pursuance of the agreement evidenced by said letters, the plaintiff, with sacks or bags furnished by the defendant, sacked, shipped and delivered to defendant, at Harter Station, in Sutter county, and the latter received and took into his possession, 370 tons of dried French prunes and 80½ tons of dried Muir peaches. It appears that, on the 31st day of January, 1925, the plaintiff agreed to sell and did sell the entire lot of prunes delivered to defendant under the agreement to Guggenheim & Co., and agreed to sell and did sell the entire lot of peaches, likewise delivered, to the California Packing Company; that thereafter the plaintiff served upon the defendant a written demand for the redelivery to it by him of all of said fruit unprocessed and unpacked, etc., thus, so far as plaintiff was concerned, terminating or proposing to terminate the life of the agreement before its terms had been complied with. With this demand the defendant refused to comply. This writing stated that plaintiff had made a contract for the sale of said fruit and "desires to consummate such sale by delivery of the products, and failure to receive the same and make such delivery will entail upon the undersigned a great loss in excess of probably more than $10,000; * * *" that "in connection with this demand the undersigned hereby offers to satisfy any warehouseman's lien which you may have or hold against said property." By said writing the plaintiff also demanded from the defendant "an itemized statement, or if not convenient for an itemized statement, a reasonable statement of any and all legal charges which you may have against said property." This demand was refused by the defendant, in a letter dated February 4, 1925, and served upon the plaintiff. This letter reads, in part, as follows:

"Under such agreement with Golden State Orchards, a corporation, this fruit was received by me as aforesaid, to be graded, processed, and packed, for which you agreed to pay me the sum of $30 per ton and aggregating $13,515.00. This fruit was to be processed and packed out as ordered by you, and all the work to be done by me, including the storage of such fruit, has been performed, except to process and pack, and I understand you now wish to break your agreement with me and take the fruit as it now is. In order to accommodate you, I am willing to let you have the fruit upon the surrender of the warehouse receipts issued therefor, properly indorsed, and I will deduct from said sum of $13,515.00, so agreed to be paid by Golden State Orchards, the amount that it will cost me to complete said contract in accordance with the terms thereof, which sum for such uncompleted work, labor, and materials will amount to the sum of $5,230.31.

"Therefore, I demand payment from you of the sum of $8,284.69, plus the further sum of $25.37 which you agreed to pay in addition to said $30 per ton for hand-sorting such fruit, which additional work has also been done, and I claim a lien on said fruit as security for the payment to me of the sum of $8,310.06, being the amount which is due me in case you desire to terminate and cancel the agreement aforesaid. The warehouse receipts mentioned by you as issued when said fruit was received by me, pursuant to said agreement, were issued at your special request in order that you might use the same as collateral in obtaining advances on such fruit, and the same were issued in the form they were to give notice of my claim of lien for the work to be done and performed by me and advancements therefor in accordance with such agreement.

"Warehouse and weighing charges are included in said sum of $30 per ton, so agreed to be paid by Golden State Orchards, and are included in the amount herein demanded of you, but if you desire such agreement canceled the sum herein demanded from you does not include any costs which may be incurred in delivering such fruit to you in its present condition. The amount herein demanded is a reasonable charge in view of the agreement hereinbefore referred to.

"You are further notified that I am ready and willing to complete the terms of my agreement with you, but if it is any accommodation to you to terminate such agreement am willing to allow the same to be canceled upon receipt of the sum herein demanded, together with the warehouse receipts as aforesaid."

Thereafter, and on the 13th day of February, 1925, the plaintiff instituted this action, and the sheriff of Sutter county in due time took possession of the fruit in accord with the procedure prescribed by section 511 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant made no demand for a return to his possession of the fruit. The complaint is in form usual in actions of claim and delivery. The defendant, by his answer, besides tendering an issue upon the question of the right to the possession of the fruit (claiming and setting up a special lien thereon, the force of which is dependent upon possession) pleaded as and by way of a "counterclaim," a demand for payment by the plaintiff of the sum of $13,529.36, which includes services already performed on said fruit when the same was removed from his possession by the sheriff and also for "the processing and packing of such fruit, which processing and packing has been prevented by the taking of said property from the possession of said defendant."

Among the court's findings are the following:

"III. * * * On the 3d day of February, 1925, and prior to the date of the commencement of this action, plaintiff did offer and tender to defendant payment of all charges, claims and demands which defendant had against said property and also offered and tendered to him the warehouse receipts issued by defendant upon the receipt of said property, and did offer to perform all acts and things on plaintiff's part to be done and performed in connection with said property, and did thereupon demand delivery of the possession of said property to plaintiff, and defendant did thereupon wrongfully and illegally fail and refuse to deliver up said property to plaintiff or any portion thereof," etc.

"V. In pursuance of said agreement evidenced by said Exhibits A, B, and C (the above letters), plaintiff delivered said fruit namely, said prunes and peaches, to defendant at Harter Station in the county of Sutter, state of California, and the defendant did receive said fruit, did weigh, sort, grade, and place the same in bins, but he did not process or pack said fruit or any thereof; defendant was ready and willing to process and pack said fruit but was not directed so to do by plaintiff, as such processing and packing was to be done only in the event that plaintiff should sell such fruit, and, as aforesaid, plaintiff removed said fruit from the possession of the defendant before the same was sold.

"VI. At the date of the commencement of this action there was due, owing and unpaid from the plaintiff to defendant, for the said storage of the work done upon said prunes and peaches aforesaid, the sum of $1,576.50 and the further sum of $25.37 as the reasonable cost of said hand sorting done to said fruit by defendant, making in all the sum of $1,601.87 which is the total amount of all claims and demands on the part of defendant against plaintiff in connection with said prunes and peaches and for the payment of which prior to the date of the commencement of this action, defendant did have a lien upon said fruit aforesaid."

It was further found that the plaintiff "did not suffer any consequential damage, either in the sum of $10,000, or in any other sum."

Judgment, in accordance with the findings and conclusions of law, was entered, the defendant being thereby awarded the sum of $1,601.87 for services rendered upon said fruit down to the time the possession thereof was taken by the sheriff, as already explained.

Being dissatisfied with said judgment, the defendant, after unavailingly pressing a motion for a new trial, took and here prosecutes this appeal from said judgment.

The principal question presented by this appeal is whether or not defendant's lien extended to the whole amount which he was entitled to recover from the plaintiff, not only for what he had actually done but for damages resulting from plaintiff's prevention of the completion of the contract. There is no reasonable ground for doubting that the agreement between the parties as indicated by said letters, and, indeed, as shown by the court's findings, was and is that Harter was to receive, store, process, and pack the fruit when a sale thereof was made by the plaintiff and upon notice of such sale. The letter from the plaintiff to the defendant dated October 15, 1924, and in reply to the letter from the latter to plaintiff of September 27, 1924, as will be perceived, plainly supports this view of the agreement. It, among other things, states:

"The charges of every nature for handling our fruit from board the cars your station Harter, processed, grading, packing and loading, when sold, shall be $30.00 per ton of cured fruit."

The court, as stated, in effect, so found in finding V, as follows:

"* * * Defendant was ready and willing to process and pack said fruit but was not directed so to do by plaintiff, as such processing and packing was to be done only in the event that plaintiff should sell such fruit."

Moreover, the testimony of Granville Moore, president of plaintiff, and who for the latter conducted the negotiations between the parties culminating in the making of the written agreement (the letters), testified that the agreement was intended to be this: That for "doing this work—taking the fruit to the warehouse and holding it, storing it, processing, packing it and shipping it out" for plaintiff—the defendant was to receive "$30 per ton, with a declared profit of $5 per ton." Trans. pp. 20, 21.

[1] From finding V, that the defendant was not directed by the plaintiff to process and pack said fruit, "as such processing and packing was to be done only in the event that plaintiff should sell such fruit," it seems clear that the theory of the decision is that the agreement as expressed in said letters was intended to mean and does mean that, irrespective of whether the terms of the agreement had or had not been fully performed, the plaintiff could withdraw from the defendant's possession said fruit at any time before a sale thereof was made and so terminate the life of the agreement. Of course, as above indicated, we do not agree with that construction. The finding referred to, though, derives no support in the evidence. The admitted fact is (as shown above) that the fruit was sold by the plaintiff on the 31st day of January, 1925, and that the written demand was served on the defendant on the 3d day of February, 1925—that is, that document was dated that day, but, as the record is not clear as to the particular time at which the demand was served on the defendant, it is to be presumed that it was served on the day of its date. The fruit having thus been sold, under the terms of the agreement, it was the duty of the plaintiff to direct the defendant to process and pack the fruit and thereupon ship or deliver it to the purchasers, or, if plaintiff desired and intended to or did sell the fruit in bulk unprocessed and unpacked, then to pay him (defendant) a sum equal to what his profits would be for doing that work if he had not been prevented by the plaintiff from performing in full the terms of their agreement. The plaintiff, however, as we may well assume, sold the fruit with an understanding with the vendees that it would or was to be delivered to the latter without first being processed and packed. It is a self-evident proposition that the plaintiff could not nullify its agreement, either in whole or in part, in that way.

In the case of California Cured Fruit Ass'n v. Stelling, 141 Cal. 713, 75 P. 320, it was held that where a fruit grower made a contract for the exclusive possession of his fruit crop by the fruit association, which was to undertake the inspection, packing and selling thereof, and delivered the crop to the association, and afterwards retaken possession thereof, the association had the right of possession and a cause of action in claim and delivery to recover the fruit from the grower. The principle upon which the decision of that case proceeded is applicable to the instant case.

[2] It is expressly conceded in the brief of respondent that as a warehouseman "he received this fruit and undoubtedly he had a lien upon the fruit for whatever services he rendered in connection therewith. This we conceded, and in our demand for the possession of the fruit already set out in this brief we asked defendant to specify the amount he claimed due and owing to him for all services he had actually performed or caused to be performed in connection with the warehoused commodities." This same concession is made in several other places in the same brief. Of course, under the construction of the agreement, as we have announced it above, the defendant was entitled to a lien on the fruit and possession thereof for that purpose until the payment to him by plaintiff of all legitimate charges which would have accrued against said property if he had completed the performance of the contract, and he was not compelled or under obligation to surrender possession thereof until such charges were paid. See Civ. Code, § 3051. Or, if said section is not the direct authority for a lien in such case, or has been superseded by certain provisions of the so-called Warehouse Act of the Legislature of 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 437), then his lien upon the fruit attached by virtue of certain provisions thereof. Section 27 of said act, as said section was amended in 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 398), provides, in part as follows:

"Subject to the provisions of section thirty, a warehouseman shall have a lien on goods deposited by the owner or by the legal possessor of the property or on the proceeds thereof in his hands, for all lawful charges for storage and preservation of the goods; also for all lawful claims for money advanced, interest, insurance, transportation, labor, weighing, cooping and other charges and expenses in relation to such goods."

See, also, in this connection, section 31 of said act.

The record discloses that, as provided by said act, warehouse receipts were issued by the defendant upon the delivery from time to time of said fruit to the latter by the plaintiff. In each of the receipts so issued the net weight of the prunes and the peaches was set forth and also a statement that the fruit was "received in original condition to be graded, processed and packed in accordance with agreement with Golden State Orchards." Section 3 of said act provides for the insertion in the warehouse receipts of any terms and conditions other than those prescribed in section 2, such "other terms or conditions" not to be contrary to the provisions of the act, nor in anywise to "impair his (the warehouseman's) obligation to exercise that degree of care in the safe-keeping of the goods intrusted to him which a reasonably careful man would exercise in regard to similar goods of his own."

[3] Nor did the defendant here waive or lose his right of lien on the property until full performance on his part of the agreement because he failed to take steps looking to the delivery by the sheriff of the property to him, in accord with section 514 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As seen, in his written refusal to comply with plaintiff's demand for the redelivery to it of possession of the fruit, he asserted his right to a lien upon the fruit for all services required of him by the agreement, and asserted the same claim, in his purported counterclaim. Properly in this connection it may be suggested that the so-called counterclaim does not set up the charges against the fruit for services performed and to be performed under the agreement. The prayer of the answer is "for the return to defendant of said personal property, to wit, said prunes and peaches, for the purpose of enforcing his said lien thereon or for the sum of $13,529.36, the value of his special interest and lien in said property." But, the plaintiff having taken possession of the fruit in the replevin action, the defendant, assuming that the allegations of his answer are true, would have been entitled to all that he asks for in the prayer of the answer without filing any counterclaim. On the mere denials of his answer of the plaintiff's right to possession and proof of the facts necessary to establish the probative impregnability of those denials, the defendant would be entitled either to the return of the fruit or the amount of his lien thereon. Therefore the counterclaim, so-called, may be treated as surplusage and wholly disregarded, and still the issue to be decided stands well tendered by the denials of the answer.

It follows from the foregoing that the plaintiff was not entitled to the possession of the fruit at the time the demand was made upon the defendant to redeliver possession thereof to it, nor, consequently, at the time of the institution of this action. "The purpose of the action of claim and delivery, like the common-law writ of replevin, is to try the right to the possession of personal property or chattels, and therefore, where a party claims the possession of movables and resorts to the action in claim and delivery to establish his claim, it is incumbent on him to prove that he is entitled to the immediate possession of the chattels or personal property, whatever may be the source of such claimed right." Normart v. Safer, 67 Cal. App. 507, 519, 227 P. 943, 948; see, also, Sidney v. Wilson, 67 Cal. App. 282, 227 P. 672; Automobile Truck Co. v. Salladay, 55 Cal. App. 219, 203 P. 163. The defendant, as we have said, was, under the agreement, entitled to the possession of the fruit until the purposes of the agreement, so far as he was concerned, were fulfilled, or, perhaps, at least (and this seems to be implied from his letter to plaintiff of October 17, 1924), until June 1, 1925.

[4] As to the measure of damages in a case where, as here, the performance of the contract or obligation is prevented by the creditor, the rule is, as it is stated in section 1512 of the Civil Code, as follows:

"If the performance of an obligation be prevented by the creditor, the debtor is entitled to all the benefits which he would have obtained if it had been performed by both parties."

Of course, said section automatically became a part of the agreement here, and we think it cannot reasonably be construed otherwise than as giving the defendant the right to claim as compensation under the agreement the difference between the contract price and the cost of completing performance of the contract.

In Connell v. Higgins, 170 Cal. 541, 150 P. 769, it is said that the damages in such case "would consist of the profits he would have made if he had been permitted to complete the work according to the contract." In Carlson v. Sheehan, 157 Cal. 692, 109 P. 29, section 1512 of the Civil Code is construed to mean that "if performance is prevented by the party who is to make such payment, the person doing the things is entitled to payment as for full performance." This statement of the rule in such cases is upon its face too broad, but we are certain that what was and is meant by said statement is that the party who is to perform the service or do the things required of him by the contract is entitled, in such case, to receive the profits only which would accrue should there be full performance of the contract by him; or, in other words, that the party who was to do the things specified in the contract is entitled in such case to "payment as for full performance," less the cost which would necessarily be incurred by full performance.

The trial court permitted the defendant to testify as to what it would cost him to complete the terms of his agreement upon the understanding that such testimony would be stricken out if the court should find that it was not admissible under what the court might later conclude was the proper theory of the case. Under the theory of the trial court's decision, if correct, the testimony was not admissible, and upon that theory it was stricken out, or, at any rate disregarded, in the rendering of the decision. In our view of the case, as it is above pointed out, the testimony was proper. Of course, its probative value was and is a matter to be determined by the trial court.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

93 Cal. App. 328

ZWART v. LANDFIELD et al. (Civ. 5438.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. July 28, 1928.

1. Corporations §121(5)—Inference of seller's knowledge of falsity of representations in sale of stock held sustained by evidence.

Evidence in an action to rescind purchase of stocks on ground of fraud held to sustain inference that seller knew the representations being made as to condition of company and value of its stocks were false.

2. Corporations §121(5)—Finding that inexperienced buyer of stock rescinded in reasonable time after discovery of fraud held sustained by evidence.

Finding that inexperienced buyer of stock rescinded within a reasonable time after the discovery of the fraud held sustained by evidence that he did so shortly after learning from a broker that the stock was of insignificant value.

3. Sales §38(3)—Seller's expression of opinion should be honestly entertained to avoid rescission for fraud.

Expression of opinion by seller to avoid rescission by buyer for fraud should be honestly entertained by seller.

4. Sales §38(3)—Whether seller's representations are opinions or of fact depends largely on circumstances.

Whether or not representations by seller are of fact or matters of opinion depends largely on the circumstances.

5. Sales §38(3)—Seller's expression of opinion may amount to fraud, if accompanied by active misrepresentations or concealment or if relating to fact out of buyer's knowledge or means of ascertainment.

Expression of opinion by seller may amount to fraud, where it is accompanied by active misrepresentations or concealment, or where it relates to a fact as to which the buyer has no knowledge or means of ascertaining the truth.

6. Sales §38(7)—General rule as to right of buyer, ignorant of facts, to rely on seller's statement of material facts, stated.

As general rule, buyer has right to rely on seller's statements of material facts essentially connected with the substance of the transaction, where buyer is ignorant or inexperienced in regard to matters concerning which material representations are made, and such ignorance is known to seller, who is also aware that reliance is being placed on his representations, and that the facts are not and cannot be expected to be within buyer's knowledge.

7. Sales §38(1)—One false material statement is enough for rescission.

If one material statement of seller be false, it is sufficient ground for rescission.

8. Principal and agent §23(1)—Conclusion that defendant was owner of the establishment, employees of which sold stock to plaintiff on fraudulent representations, held justified by the evidence.

Conclusion that defendant was proprietor of the business at time employees of it sold stock to plaintiff on fraudulent representations, notwithstanding his claim of prior gift thereof to his wife and subsequent acquisition thereof from her, and that at the time he was managing it for her, held justified by the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by F. M. Zwart against P. E. Landfield and another. From a judgment against the named defendant, he appeals. Affirmed.

Erwin C. Easton and E. B. Taylor, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Everette C. McKeage, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. This action was commenced against the above-named defendants, to rescind the sale of corporate stock upon the ground of fraud, and to recover the purchase money previously paid therefor. The trial court held that the company defendant and P. E. Landfield were "one and the same person and are identical," and gave judgment against the latter, from which judgment he has taken this appeal. Insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings and the judgment constitute the grounds of appeal.

We have examined the evidence, and it is evident therefrom, we think, that a fraud was practiced on respondent, and, although the testimony is conflicting on several points, we believe that, as a whole, it is legally sufficient to support the conclusions drawn by the trial court that the fraud was actionable, and entitled respondent to the relief granted. In narrating the evidence, therefore, we shall mention only those portions which, in our opinion, tend to support the findings and judgment. It may be stated as follows: Appellant was engaged in the business of selling corporate securities under the firm name of Edward Marvin Company, and at the time these transactions with respondent took place was dealing particularly in the sale of the capital stock of a corporation known as the New Dominion Copper Company, which was evidently in a state of collapse, because about the time of the sale of the stock to respondent, or shortly thereafter, it suspended operations. The actual sales of said corporate stock were made through several salesmen employed by appellant for that purpose, and the fraudulent methods claimed to have been employed in inducing people to buy the stock were disclosed at the trial by two salesmen who had been in the employ of appellant about the time the sales to respondent were made. They testified that these methods originated in appellant's office and were practiced with his knowledge and approval. They consisted of the making of misrepresentations to prospective purchasers as to the value of the stock, the quotations of the market reports, the financial condition of the company, its future prospects, and the certainty of the investor to make large profits in dealing with the stock; furthermore, that fraudulent practices were indulged in at the office in leading prospective buyers to believe that prominent and influential business men and bankers were investing heavily in the stock. One of the salesmen summarized these methods thus: "The idea is to get the sucker's money."

Respondent, as the evidence shows, was inexperienced in buying securities, and, after reading his testimony, it is apparent that he was readily susceptible to influence and imposition, and evidently the methods above described were used in inducing him to purchase the stock, for he testified that the negotiations were conducted in the following manner: A salesman named Stewart first phoned him at his place of business in Palo Alto and asked him if he wanted "to make some easy money," and, after a brief conversation, which is not important, respondent told Stewart that the thing for him to do was to come to his office. Stewart arrived that afternoon, and, after talking to him about the New Dominion Copper Company, advised respondent to buy 500 shares. At the same time Stewart exhibited a newspaper which purported to contain the stock market reports, saying that the stock was listed on the New York Curb and the Boston Stock Exchange, and was then selling for $2 per share and in no time would go up to $4 per share. Respondent stated that he did not have that much money, and Stewart replied, "You don't need that much money; You buy 500 shares and pay half down, and give me a selling order for 250, and in no time you will have your principal back;" saying also, "I will guarantee you, Mr. Zwart, that the stock will go up in no time." After some further discussion, respondent signed an order authorizing appellant to purchase for him 200 shares at $2, paying therefor $400, and he was also charged with and paid an additional $15 as a "service charge" for obtaining the stock.

Four days later, and on May 27, 1927, Stewart returned to Palo Alto and told respondent that he "was a darn fool," that the stock had gone up to \$4 a share, and, exhibiting a newspaper, which contained the stock market reports, told respondent he could then double his money by buying 300 shares more, which Stewart said he thought he would be able to obtain for him at the old price of \$2 a share; and, after leaving respondent for a few minutes for the ostensible purpose of phoning to San Francisco to ascertain if the stock was still available at the price mentioned, returned and said that it was. Thereupon respondent signed another order authorizing appellant to purchase for him 300 shares at \$2 a share, upon which he made a down payment of \$300 and a further payment of \$22.50 as a "service charge." Shortly after Stewart left, respondent consulted a newspaper and found the stock listed at only $1\frac{1}{4}$ and $1\frac{1}{2}$. He immediately phoned appellant's office for an explanation, and was assured by a Mr. Collins, who was in charge of the office, that the price respondent had seen quoted in the newspaper was an error. Later on, apparently the same day, respondent proceeded to appellant's office in San Francisco, where he met and talked with Collins, and the latter convinced respondent that the low price quoted in the newspaper was a misprint. While discussing the matter Collins called respondent's attention to a man standing in the adjoining room, and told him that he was the acting mayor of San Francisco, naming him, that he had purchased 10,000 shares, and that, "if a fellow like that buys the stock, it is a very good investment," whereupon Collins induced respondent to purchase an additional 500 shares upon the same kind of an order at \$2 a share, upon which respondent made a down payment of \$500, and also paid \$68.75 as a "service charge." At the same time, at Collins' suggestion, respondent signed an order authorizing appellant to sell 250 shares of his stock at \$4, under the belief that he would soon double his money. Some time afterwards respondent learned from a broker that the stock was of insignificant value, and shortly afterwards respondent served notice of rescission and demanded the return of his money. None of the stock which respondent was induced to buy, and upon which he made a total payment of \$1,306.25, was ever delivered to him, nor was any of the stock he authorized appellant to sell for him ever sold.

[1] As indicated, in our opinion the evidence adduced is legally sufficient to sustain the fair inference that appellant knew the representations which were being made as to the condition of the company and the value of its stock were false; and this inference is supported by the further fact that in July, 1924, the sales manager informed one of the salesmen that the company was shut down and doing no business. The representation that the stock was listed on the New York Curb was also shown to be false, it having been stricken therefrom ten days prior to the first sale to respondent; and, although it was listed on the Boston Exchange, it was on the inactive list and running very low. As to the value of the stock, as shown by the Boston Exchange reports, the evidence discloses that on May 23, 1924, the date of the first sale, it was quoted at prices between $1\frac{1}{2}$ and 2. On May 26th, the day before the second and third sales, it went up to $3\frac{1}{4}$, but the next day, when the second and third sales were made, it was quoted at only $1\frac{3}{4}$ high, $1\frac{1}{2}$ low, and $1\frac{3}{4}$ closing instead of 4, as represented. Neither was there any truth in the representation made by Collins that the acting mayor of San Francisco was there in the office or that he had purchased 10,000 shares of the stock.

[2] As stated, respondent had no experience in the purchase of corporate stock, and it is plain to be seen that in buying the stock he relied upon the representations made to him as to the value of the stock and the prospects of the company, and particularly with reference to the stock being listed on the New York Curb, and that he would not have purchased the stock had it not been for the making of said representations. Furthermore, we are of the opinion that the trial court was justified in finding that respondent rescinded within a reasonable time after the discovery of the fraud.

[3-7] Possibly, as appellant contends, some of the representations related more or less to matters of opinion, but expression of opinion, to avoid an action for deceit, should be honestly entertained by the person making the same (Macdonald v. De Fremery, 168 Cal. 189, 142 P. 73; Phelps v. Grady, 168 Cal. 73, 141 P. 926; Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff, 163 Cal. 561, 126 P. 351, 42 L. R. A. [N. S.] 125); and whether or not representations are of fact or matters of opinion depends largely on the circumstances (Hall v. Mitchell, 59 Cal. App. 743, 211 P. 853; Hodgkins v. Dunham, 10 Cal. App. 690, 103 P. 351). Moreover, the expression of opinion may amount to fraud where it is accompanied by active misrepresentations or concealment, or where it relates to a subject as to which the parties have no knowledge or means of ascertaining the truth. Hall v. Mitchell, supra. The general rule is that one has a right to rely on statements of material facts essentially connected with the substance of the transaction where one of the parties is ignorant or inexperienced in regard to matters concerning which material representations are made, and such ignorance is known to the other party, who is also aware that reliance is being placed on his representations, and that the facts are not, and cannot be expected to be, within the first party's knowledge (12 Cal. Jur. 754, and cases cited); and, if one material statement be false, it is sufficient ground for rescission (Beeman v. Richardson, 185 Cal. 280, 196 P. 774). The foregoing rules are particularly applicable to the facts of the present case, and in our opinion sustain the judgment rendered.

[8] Further contention is made by appellant that, at the time these transactions took place, he was not the owner of the business, and therefore cannot be held liable personally for the alleged fraud. With respect thereto, the testimony shows that he was admittedly the owner of said business up to January, 1924, at which time he claims that, on account of a family disagreement, the nature of which was not disclosed, he gave the business to his wife; but that in the following September he again became the owner. He further claims that during the interim he managed the business for his wife at a salary of $150 a week. During the time he claims that his wife was the owner, however, no changes whatever were made in the operation of the business. His name remained on the door of the offices; the printed stationery was not changed; he continued to hire and direct the services of the employees, and to conduct the business generally the same as he had before the asserted transfer of ownership took place; nor did he revoke the certificate previously filed by him to do business under the fictitious name of "Edward Marvin Trust Company." We think the trial court was justified in concluding, therefore, that appellant was at all times the owner of the business.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

93 Cal. App. 490

PETERSON v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF SAN MATEO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 6419.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. August 14, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 13, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 11, 1928.

Counties 18—Statute providing that board of supervisors "may," by two-thirds vote, change boundaries of supervisorial districts held permissive (Pol. Code, § 4029).

Pol. Code, § 4029, providing that board of supervisors may, by a two-thirds vote, change boundaries of supervisorial districts of county, and that said districts shall be as nearly equal in population as may be, held to vest supervisors with permission to change their supervisorial districts as convenience requires, but only then by two-thirds vote, and, if such districts are changed, the then changed or newly established districts shall be nearly equal in population as may be; word "may" as used therein being permissive and not being used as equivalent to "shall" or "must," in view of section 4041.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, May (In Statutes as Permissive or Mandatory).]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Application for writ of mandate by Frederick Peterson against the Board of Supervisors of San Mateo County, composed of Thomas L. Hickey and others, to require them to redistrict the supervisorial districts of the county. From a judgment dismissing the petition, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

John F. Davis, of San Francisco, and Fletcher A. Cutler, of Burlingame, for appellant.

Franklin Swart, Dist. Atty., of Redwood City, for respondents.

WARNE, Presiding Justice pro tem. By petition filed in the superior court of San Mateo county, appellant asked for a writ of mandate commanding the board of supervisors of said San Mateo county to redistrict the supervisorial districts of said county. The complaint alleges, in substance, that San Mateo county is divided into five supervisorial districts; that the present supervisorial districts were established by ordinance in the year 1901, and that said supervisorial districts have not been changed since said time; that since said time the population of said county has greatly increased so, "that, as the supervisorial districts are now situated and exist, the vote of a registered voter of district numbered 4 is equal to 14 votes of district numbered 2 and the vote of a registered voter of district numbered 5 is equal to 19 votes of district numbered 2 and equal to 16 votes of district numbered 1; that the population as now exists in the said five supervisorial districts is not as equal in population as may be, but is grossly unequal as between said supervisorial districts;" "that on the 25th day of July, 1925, * * * petitioner (appellant) and seven other taxpayers, registered voters of district No. 2, signed and filed a petition with the county clerk of San Mateo county, asking that said board of supervisors by ordinance redistrict the said San Mateo county, and change the boundaries of the said supervisorial districts, so that they would be 'as nearly equal in population as may be' in conformity with the provisions of section 4029 of the Political Code of the state of California, and other provisions of the statutes of said state, and in conformity with the Constitution of this state; that it then and there, pursuant to said law, became the duty of said board to redistrict the county into five supervisorial districts; * * * that said petition was presented to said board, and, after hearing same, said board made an order refusing to redistrict the county as requested or at all, and at the present time do refuse to redistrict said county of San Mateo, or to take any action whatsoever towards redistricting said county of San Mateo, as required by law of the state of California; that the foregoing facts were all admitted to be true; that said board arbitrarily and without cause or excuse unlawfully refused to grant said petition to redistrict the county of San Mateo, in any manner, and still refuses to do so." The petition further alleges that appellant "has not any plain, speedy, or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law."

The respondents interposed a demurrer to the petition upon the ground that "said petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against said defendants (respondents) or any one of said defendants; further, that there is another action pending involving the same matters, between the same parties." With the demurrer, and as a part thereof, respondents filed a special plea in abatement. The trial court sustained the demurrer on the ground that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and overruled the special plea "without prejudice." Appellant failed to amend, and judgment was entered in favor of the respondents herein dismissing said petition. Appellant has appealed from the judgment.

Appellant contends that, under the statement of facts as set forth in his petition, he is entitled as a matter of law to the relief which he seeks by reason of the provisions of section 4029 of the Political Code. Said section reads as follows:

"The board of supervisors may, by a two-thirds vote of the members of said board, change the boundaries of any or all of the supervisor districts of a county. Said districts shall be as nearly equal in population as may be. The boundaries of no supervisor district shall at any time be changed in such manner as to affect the term of office of any supervisor who has been elected, and whose term of office has not expired. No change in the boundaries of any supervisor district shall be made within ninety days next preceding a general election."

Appellant argues that the word "may" as used in said section means shall or must. That it is mandatory when applied to a public duty, and not directory. In support of his contention, appellant quotes the rule for construing the meaning of the word "may" as laid down in 26 Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure, p. 1590, which is as follows:

"As used in the statutes, in its ordinary sense the word 'may' is permissive and not mandatory, merely importing permission, ability, possibility or contingency; but it has been properly construed as employed in an imperative or mandatory sense when the Legislature imposes a positive duty and not a discretion or where a public duty is involved, where a right is given or a duty imposed, where the public interest, or where a matter of public policy and not merely a private right is involved, where the statute directs the doing of a thing for the sake of justice or the public good, or where the statute imposes a duty or confers a power on a public officer for public purposes. * * *

To the same effect, appellant cites the case of Hayes v. County of Los Angeles, 99 Cal. 76, 33 P. 766, and Matter of Application of Cencinino, 31 Cal. App. 233, 160 P. 167, to the same effect.

We concede that the rule is as laid down above, but we do not believe that it is applicable to the case at bar in the sense that the word "may" as used in section 4029 of the Political Code should be construed to read "shall" or "must." It is our opinion that the word "may," as used in said section, is used in the permissive sense. By section 4041, subd. 2, of the Political Code of this state, the power is vested in boards of supervisors "to divide the counties into townships, election, school, road, supervisor, sanitary, and other districts required by law, change the same, and create others, as convenience requires." However, supervisorial districts may only be changed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the board of supervisors. Pol. Code, § 4029. Appellant would have us read section 4029 of the Political Code as meaning that, whenever there exists an inequality of electors in the supervisorial districts in a county, the board of supervisors of such county must change the boundaries of the supervisorial districts so that said districts shall be as nearly equal in population as may be. There is nothing in the language of either section 4029 or 4041 of the Political Code that warrants such a construction. There is nothing therein imposing a positive duty on boards of supervisors to change the boundaries of supervisorial districts by reason of inequalities resulting from the movement or change in population.

We believe that it was the intention of the Legislature in enacting section 4029 of the Political Code to vest boards of supervisors with permission to change their supervisorial districts as convenience requires, but only then by a two-thirds vote of their members, and that, in the event such districts are changed, the then changed or newly established supervisorial districts "shall be as nearly equal in population as may be." Such was apparently the meaning placed upon section 4029 of the Political Code by the Supreme Court of this state in the case of Harnett v. County of Sacramento, 195 Cal. 676, 235 P. 445. If such was not also the intent of the Legislature, what was the necessity of requiring a two-thirds vote of the members of a board before a change can be made?

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 481

Ex parte WAGNON. (Cr. 1686.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 9, 1928.

1. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 309—Order increasing payments for minor's support over previous order in divorce proceedings in another county, not attacked as inadequate, held void in husband's proceeding to secure release from commitment for contempt (Civ. Code, § 137).

Where there was a subsisting and enforceable order in divorce action in one county for husband's payment of specified sum for support of child, order subsequently entered in another county increasing payments without any showing as to inadequacy of first order or necessity of increase held void under Civ. Code, § 137, in husband's habeas corpus proceeding to secure release from commitment for contempt.

2. Contempt $\hookrightarrow$ 81—One may purge himself of contempt by showing invalidity of order involved.

By showing invalidity of order sought to be enforced in contempt proceeding, one may purge himself of contempt, and should in such event be discharged from commitment.

Application by John M. Wagon for writ of habeas corpus to secure petitioner's release after commitment for contempt. Writ granted and petitioner discharged.

Robert E. Austin and John N. Helmick, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Joseph N. Owen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. The petitioner was committed to the county jail of Los Angeles county for contempt of court for failure to pay a monthly award to his wife, Nellie R. Wagon, for the maintenance and support of their minor child. He seeks his freedom from such confinement by habeas corpus.

It appears that on May 18, 1918, Mrs. Wagon filed in the superior court of San Bernardino county a suit for divorce from the petitioner, which resulted in a judgment for the defendant; but the court made an order therein directing that he pay $15 per month for the maintenance and support of the minor. Thereafter, and on December 13, 1918, the petitioner herein instituted a suit for divorce in the superior court of Los Angeles county, reciting in his complaint: "That there is now living of the issue of said marriage one child, Virginia Merle Wagon, aged six years." No appearance was made by the defendant in the latter action, and an interlocutory decree was entered by default. No allowance was requested in the complaint last mentioned, but the court inserted in the interlocutory decree a provision that the plaintiff, petitioner herein, pay to the defendant $15 per month for the maintenance and support of said minor. Thereafter petitioner was served with an order to show cause why said amount fixed in the Los Angeles suit should not be increased. He appeared personally, and after hearing it was ordered that he pay in lieu of the $15 formerly ordered the sum of $45 per month. All payments required by the order of the San Bernardino court were made as they became due, but petitioner did not pay the monthly allowance ordered by the superior court of Los Angeles county. On January 12, 1928, he was ordered to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt for failure to obey this latter order, and on the 24th of said month he appeared and answered. Evidence, oral and documentary, was introduced, and the matter was submitted, whereupon petitioner was adjudged guilty of contempt of court and sentenced to confinement in the county jail.

The commitment recites all of the foregoing facts, among others, and that the plaintiff had the ability to make such payments, "but that he willfully and intentionally failed, neglected, and refused to comply with said order." It is therein further stated: "The foregoing facts constitute contempt of court."

[1, 2] So far as appears, the plaintiff, petitioner here, was afforded no opportunity to furnish evidence of the existence of the first order when the interlocutory decree was signed in Los Angeles county. There is no showing in the record before us that the defendant attempted to obtain in San Bernardino county an increase of the amount there adjudged as sufficient for the needs of the minor child, or that there was any showing before the Los Angeles court as to the inadequacy of the first order, or the necessity for an increase in the amount allowed. At the date of the interlocutory decree and of the motion for an increase in Los Angeles county, there was a subsisting and enforceable order in the first action requiring petitioner to pay $15 per month with which the petitioner had been and was then complying. The effect of the second order was to require petitioner to pay twice each month the amount theretofore adjudged as adequate, for the same purpose, and this amount was thereafter increased to four times that amount. The situation was therefore the same as that presented in Smith v. Smith, 147 Cal. 143, 81 P. 411, wherein it was held that this could not be done, and it was there held that the first decree could not be eliminated from consideration, the court saying:

"An amount awarded for maintenance may, as the circumstances, needs, and conditions of the parties in whose favor it is awarded, change, become inadequate; but relief under these changed conditions may be obtained by application to the court in which the maintenance proceeding was instituted. Civ. Code, § 137."

The same rule was announced in Sheppard v. Sheppard, 161 Cal. 348, 119 P. 492, Farrar v. Farrar, 45 Cal. App. 584, 188 P. 289, Helping v. Helping, 74 Cal. App. 431, 240 P. 1023, and Dixon v. Dixon, 74 Cal. App. 101, 239 P. 383. In Farrar v. Farrar, supra, it was also held that in the absence of showing to the contrary, it must be assumed that the first allowance was based upon sufficient evidence, and that the amount then allowed was adequate.

It becomes apparent, therefore, that the recital in the commitment in this case that "the foregoing facts constitute contempt of court" was contrary to numerous rulings upon the subject, and that it was based upon an order which was not enforceable. We are not unmindful of authorities holding that an order valid upon its face will not be reviewed, or error of the trial court corrected, in habeas corpus proceedings. It appears, however, that upon the showing in the court below of the facts here presented, and in fact recited in the commitment itself, the petitioner was not guilty of contempt of court, and there are cases in this state holding that by showing the invalidity of the order sought to be enforced in contempt proceedings one may purge himself of the contempt, even though it be contempt to violate the order, and should in such event be discharged. Ex parte Clarke, 126 Cal. 235, 58 P. 546, 46 L. R. A. 835, 77 Am. St. Rep. 176; Tomsky v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 620, 63 P. 1020; Abbott v. Abbott, 24 Cal. App. 475, 141 P. 939.

The writ is granted, and the petitioner is discharged.

We concur: THOMPSON, J.; HAZLETT, Justice pro tem.

93 Cal. App. 189

MELICK v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 6044.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. July 17, 1928.

1. Prohibition $\S$ 26—Where court's failure to appear in writ of prohibition was unobjected to, appearance by other defendant will be considered as though made by court.

In proceedings for writ of prohibition to prevent sale of property under execution, brought against petitioner in attachment and court ordering sale, where no point was made because of failure of court to appear, appearance of other defendant will be considered as if it had been made by court.

2. Attachment $\S$ 198—Immediate sale of attached property cannot be had on notice to defendant not owning property (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 548).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 548, providing for immediate sale of property, notice to one defendant, not owner of attached property, where defendant other than one served with notice was owner, is not sufficient to authorize sale.

3. Attachment $\S$ 198—Notice to "adverse party," to authorize immediate sale of attached property, must be given defendant owning property attached (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 548).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 548, providing for immediate sale of property attached after notice to adverse party, in case party has been personally served, or after order of service of summons by publication has been made, notice must be given to defendant owning property attached, if defendant comes within language of statute requiring service or publication; term "adverse party" referring to such defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Adverse Party.]

4. Prohibition $\S$ 20—On demurrer to petition to prohibit sale of attached property, affidavit attached as exhibit, alleging interest by affiant in property, held not to affect petitioner's allegations of ownership.

On demurrer to petition for writ of prohibition to prevent sale of property under an execution, affidavits by defendant in attachment proceedings, accompanying petition as exhibit only, and not adopted in petition, alleging affiant was using property attached in drilling well and that affiant purchased property, though showing affiant's interest in attached property, cannot affect positive allegations in petition that petitioner was at all times owner of property.

5. Prohibition $\S$ 3(5)—Petitioner for prohibition against sale of attached property, not appearing in attachment proceedings, held not to have adequate legal remedy by giving undertaking discharging attachment (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 554, 555).

Petition for prohibition to prevent sale of property under execution could not be defeated on ground that petitioner had adequate remedy at law, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 554, providing that defendant appearing in action may have discharge of attachment on giving undertaking under section 555, where petitioner did not appear in action in which attachment was levied on property.

6. Prohibition $\S$ 10(1), 11—Prohibition to restrain sale of attached property for want of jurisdictional steps could not be defeated under rules prohibiting prohibition to correct error or excessive jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 548).

Rules that prohibition will not lie to correct mere error, and will not lie to correct excess of jurisdiction, unless point has been raised in jurisdiction attacked, held not applicable to petition for prohibition to prevent sale of attached property on ground that court had no jurisdiction to order immediate sale without taking jurisdictional steps required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 548.

7. Certiorari $\S$ 1—Writ of review applies only to annul court order.

Writ of review can be resorted to only for purpose of annulling order of court complained of.

8. Certiorari $\S$ 64(1)—On writ of review, annulment of order can only be determined on record on which order is made.

On writ of review, record on which assailed order is made is only basis on which it is to be determined whether order is to be annulled.

9. Prohibition $\S$ 3(2)—Prohibition to prevent sale of attached property alleged to be owned by petitioner could not be defeated because of remedy by writ of review of order of sale, record of which did not show plaintiff's ownership.

Writ of prohibition to prevent sale of attached property, based on allegation that petitioner not appearing in attachment proceeding or served therein was sole owner of property, a fact which did not appear in record leading to order requiring sale, could not be defeated on ground that petitioner had remedy by writ of review, since writ of review would afford petitioner no remedy at all.

Application for writ of prohibition by J. B. Melick against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for Los Angeles County and another. Writ granted.

Stanley Pedder, of San Francisco, and Frankley & Spray, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Raymond B. Wells and Hiram E. Casey, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Kelley.

WORKS, P. J. This is a proceeding for the writ of prohibition. It appears from the petition upon which the alternative writ was issued that an action was commenced in respondent court by respondent Kelley against five defendants, two of whom were one J. H. Cochran and the petitioner here, J. B. Melick; that summons and complaint therein were served upon Cochran, but that no service was ever made upon petitioner, nor were any steps ever taken to procure a publication of summons as to him, nor did he ever appear in the action; that a writ of attachment issued in the action by virtue of which the sheriff attached certain property, and that petitioner is, and at all times mentioned in his petition was, the sole owner of the property thus seized; that thereafter Cochran, and he only, was served with a notice of motion for an immediate sale of the property attached; and that such proceedings were thereafter had that the motion was granted and an immediate sale was ordered. The writ of prohibition is sought for the purpose of preventing the sale.

Respondent Kelley made return to the petition by answer and by general demurrer, but at the oral argument the answer was withdrawn, and respondent Kelley stood upon the demurrer. There are no other appearances, but no point is made because of the failure of respondent court to appear. The appearance of respondent Kelley will therefore be considered as if it had been made by respondent court.

[1] Section 548 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which the order for an immediate sale was made, provides in part:

"Such order can be made only (1) after notice to the adverse party or his attorney in case such party has been personally served with a summons in the action, or (2) after an order of service of summons by publication has been made."

The first point to be determined by us is whether respondent court had jurisdiction to order the immediate sale of petitioner's property. In other words, is the section of the Code satisfied by notice to one defendant, not the owner of attached property, where more than one are sued, and where a defendant other than the one served with notice is the owner?

[2, 3] We need not decide whether the language of the statute providing for notice "to the adverse party" operates as a mandate requiring notice to all defendants in an action in which more than one are sued and served with process, for the contention now before us is satisfied by a determination of the question whether the notice is sufficient, if given to a defendant who is not the owner of the property seized. It will be observed that under the statement of facts above made, in the light of the statute, notice to petitioner was not legally possible. Our attention is directed to no authority upon the question before us, and apparently none exists. The mere statement of the question, however, seems to carry an answer to it. While no insinuation is made that such a state of affairs exists here, the perpetration of gross frauds would be invited under a construction of section 548 which would admit of an immediate sale upon mere notice to a defendant having no interest in the attached property. This is so apparent that the specific means whereby such frauds could be committed need not be pointed out. It cannot be believed that the Legislature intended to hold out such a temptation to unfair dealing. We cannot escape the view that the legislative intent was that notice should be given the defendant or defendants who own the property attached in a given case, provided they come within the language of the statute requiring service of publication. We think "the adverse party" mentioned in the section is such a defendant, or such defendants. Indeed, respondent Kelley seems to concede this point, for he says in his brief:

"It is plainly evident that the 'adverse party' referred to in the foregoing Code provision means the party who would be adversely affected by the sale of the attached property, and not necessarily all of the defendants."

[4] But respondent Kelley follows this concession with several contentions in which we cannot follow him. He makes the point, for instance, although half-heartedly, that the petition before us does not show that the attached property belongs to petitioner, despite the positive allegation therein that it does. We term his contention half-hearted, because he asserts that certain matters appearing in an exhibit attached to the petition, to which we shall refer more specifically in a moment, "leave considerable doubt as to whether the property in question was the property of Melick, of Cochran, or of 'the defendants.'" The exhibit to which we allude is a copy of an affidavit filed by Cochran with respondent court, for he appeared in response to the notice of motion served upon him, and objected to the making of the order for an immediate sale of the attached property. The property seized by the sheriff consists of certain oil well equipment, including an oil derrick, and at the time of the levy of the attachment it was actually in use in the putting down of an oil well. The affidavit of Cochran contains statements to the effect that "affiant is now engaged in the drilling" of the well, "that affiant has expended approximately $40,000 in the drilling of said well to its present depth," that if the attached property were sold at once "the lease of affiant and defendants" on the oil well property would be canceled, "that if the derrick herein referred to on affiant's property is sold" certain stated consequences would follow, "that at the time affiant purchased the [attached] property from said plaintiff" certain terms were given, "and that at said time affiant signed a conditional sales contract."

It is clear to us, under well-known rules of pleading, that these statements in Cochran's affidavit, assuming for the sake of argument that they amount to assertions by Cochran that he has an interest in the attached property, can neither control nor affect the positive allegation by petitioner in his petition that he is and was at all times which are of interest here the owner of it. The statements of Cochran are not adopted in the petition, and his affidavit accompanies the pleading as an exhibit only for the purpose of showing the chain of proceedings leading to the order for an immediate sale of the attached property.

[5] It is insisted by respondent Kelley that petitioner has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, and that therefore he cannot be awarded relief under the writ of prohibition. The argument upon this contention is divided into several branches. The point is first made that petitioner could have had the attached property released by giving the undertaking contemplated by section 554 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but the contention fails because of the positive language of the section. The enactment provides that, "whenever any defendant has appeared in the action, such defendant may upon reasonable notice to the plaintiff" apply for a discharge of an attachment upon giving the undertaking mentioned in the section and in section 555. It has already been seen that petitioner has never appeared in the action in which the attachment was levied upon his property.

[6] Respondent Kelley next contends that petitioner had an adequate remedy at law by motion in respondent court to set aside the order requiring an immediate sale. This point is not argued. Counsel content themselves with brief quotations from several authorities in support of it. One of these quotations relates to the proposition that we must assume that, if petitioner made such a motion, respondent court would decide the motion correctly. There is such a rule, beyond a doubt. One quotation is to the effect that prohibition will not lie to correct mere error. This well-known rule has no application here, for the question before us is whether respondent court could order an immediate sale of petitioner's property without taking the jurisdictional steps required by the section of the Code under which the order was attempted to be made. Two of the quotations are to the effect that prohibition will not lie to correct an excess of jurisdiction, unless the point relied on has been made in the tribunal whose jurisdiction is sought to be assailed. This is the general rule, no doubt, but there are notable exceptions to it, and we think the present proceeding comes within the exceptions, and not within the rule. So much seems to have been decided in Grinbaum v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 528, 221 P. 635, a proceeding for the writ of review, in which it was contended that the petitioner had an adequate remedy at law by motion in the respondent court. In discussing this point the Supreme Court said:

"As to the petitioner's second suggested remedy, viz. that of a motion to set aside such void order in the court making the same, in response to this suggestion it may be stated that it has never been the practice to require a party injuriously affected by a judgment or order of a court which court had never acquired jurisdiction over either his person or property to make the same, to first apply to the court making said order to have the same vacated; nor should it be so in reason, since to apply such a rule would be to require such a party to submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court making such void order, and thus commit himself thenceforward to the tender mercy of the court making the same. We are cited to no authority which goes so far as to hold that a person having a clear right to make a direct attack by certiorari upon a judgment or order of a judicial tribunal upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction must first seek relief from such judgment or order in the court which was without jurisdiction to make or enter the same. The cases of Rue v. Quinn, 137 Cal. 651 [66 P. 216, 70 P. 732], People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 673 [77 P. 651], and Benning v. Superior Court, 34 Cal. App. 296 [167 P. 291], go no further than to hold that a party affected by an order of a court, void upon its face, may apply to the court making the same, to have it vacated, but do not hold that such party is obliged to do so before applying for a writ of review. On the other hand, in the case of Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327 [24 P. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192], which arose on application for a writ of prohibition, this court, after an exhaustive consideration of the subject, said (page 405 [24 P. 141]): 'If a want of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of the proceeding in the lower court, no plea or preliminary objection is necessary before suing out the writ of prohibition.' This we think to be the true and reasonable rule applicable to cases of this character."

[7-9] Respondent Kelley insists that petitioner may not have the writ of prohibition, because he may have relief by means of the writ of review; the order made by respondent court not being appealable. Henry Cowell Lime & C. Co. v. Figel, 27 Cal. App. 11, 148 P. 796. Granting that the right to the writ of review will bar the right to prohibition if a proceeding of the latter nature is invoked to accomplish a purpose which can be attained by a proceeding for review, no such situation is presented here. If petitioner had sought the writ of review, his resort to that remedy could have been for no other purpose than to annul the order of respondent court of which he now complains. Such is the end only which can be reached by that proceeding. Moreover, on review, the record upon which an assailed order is made is the only basis upon which it is to be determined whether the order is to be annulled. Here petitioner seeks to prevent the carrying out of the order for an immediate sale of his property. That relief is asked upon the allegation in his petition that he is the sole owner of the property, a fact which nowhere appears in the record leading to the order. It is manifest that in this instance review would not merely be no adequate remedy. It would afford petitioner no remedy at all.

Demurrer overruled. A peremptory writ of prohibition will issue.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; THOMPSON, J.

93 Cal. App. 509

RHOADES v. SILVIUS. (Civ. 5186.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 16, 1928.

1. Bills and notes $\S$ 443(4)—Indorsement in blank and assignment for collection constitute sufficient transfer of note to authorize suit by assignee (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 1459, 3115).

Indorsement of note in blank by competent officer of payee bank, and assignment thereof to another for collection, constitute a transfer sufficient to authorize assignee to maintain action thereon, under Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 1459, 3115.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence as to whether guarantor tendered payment of note must prevail.

Findings on conflicting evidence as to whether defendant guarantor tendered payment of note sued on must prevail.

3. Guaranty $\S$ 25(3)—Evidence held not to show that guaranty contract was made without separate consideration after delivery of note (Civ. Code, $\S$ 2792).

In action against guarantor on note, evidence held not to show that contract of guaranty was made after delivery of note, without separate consideration, and hence void under Civ. Code, $\S$ 2792.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Action by F. C. Rhoades against F. D. Silvius and another. From a judgment against the named defendant, he appeals. Affirmed.

Albert G. Payne, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank M. Bering, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This action was brought against Higgins, the maker of the note, and Silvius, guarantor of its payment. Judgment by default was entered against the maker. After trial of the case against the guarantor, judgment was entered against him, from which judgment he now appeals.

The grounds of appeal, as gleaned from the brief for appellant (there being no clear statement of points and authorities, and there being no index of contents or table of cases, as required by the rules of court), appear to be: First, that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain the action; second, that appellant tendered payment of the note and that the offered payment was refused; third, that the contract of guaranty was made subsequently to the delivery of the note and without any separate consideration, and is therefore void under the provisions of section 2792 of the Civil Code.

[1] The note was made to the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles. The assistant cashier of the bank testified that the note was assigned to plaintiff, Rhoades, for collection. The note itself, as produced in evidence by the plaintiff, bears the bank's indorsement in blank, placed thereon by a competent officer. These facts constitute a transfer sufficient to authorize the plaintiff to maintain the action. Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 1459, 3115; Ralph v. Anderson, 187 Cal. 45, 200 P. 940; Giselman v. Starr, 106 Cal. 651, 657, 658, 40 P. 8.

[2] Appellant testified that, on a date after the note fell due, and in response to a letter from the bank demanding payment, he went to the bank with sufficient funds in hand for payment of the note, and told the assistant cashier, Mr. Ralston, that he was ready to pay, and asked for an assignment of the note to himself; that Mr. Ralston responded that arrangements had been made with the Third Street Branch, another branch of the same bank, to handle the matter. Assuming, without deciding, that appellant's testimony, if uncontradicted, was sufficient to establish a valid tender, we are met by the fact that Mr. Ralston denied that appellant ever offered him any money in payment of or on account of said note, or ever asked for an assignment thereof. On this point, therefore, the case is reduced to the familiar condition wherein there was a conflict in the evidence, and the findings must prevail.

[3] The contract of guaranty signed by appellant was indorsed on the back of the note. The only evidence concerning the time of signature by appellant is in his own testimony, wherein appellant stated, in substance, as follows:

"Q. Mr. Silvius, was this the first note that you indorsed at this bank for Mrs. Higgins? A. This was a renewal. * * * Q. Now, was she present when you indorsed this as guarantor? A. No, sir. Q. What was the condition of the note when you indorsed it; had she signed it? A. Yes, sir. Q. What did they say to you, if anything, about the former note of which this is a renewal? A. That it had run out and they wanted it renewed. Q. How long after Mrs.

Higgins had signed the note, if she had signed it? A. I don't know; I expect two or three days afterwards. Q. Did you receive anything for it? A. No, sir. Q. Did they say anything about what they had done with the former note which you had signed? A. I suppose they tore it up. Q. Did they say anything about it? A. No, sir. Q. What did they say about Mrs. Higgins having signed this note previously, if anything? A. They said she signed it and left it there for me to sign later on."

The foregoing testimony is entirely consistent with the facts of a single transaction. No effort was made by appellant to prove that the former note had been surrendered to the maker and the note accepted by the bank before the guaranty was signed. On the contrary, assuming that the ordinary course of business was followed, the former note was not surrendered or the new note accepted until appellant had signed the contract of guaranty.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

23 Cal. App. 504

PEOPLE v. HUNTLEY. (Cr. 1478.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 16, 1928.

1. Bigamy $\Leftrightarrow$ 7—Prosecution need not prove, in bigamy trial, that prior marriage was in force at time of second marriage; burden being on defendant to prove contrary (Pen. Code, §§ 281, 282).

In trial for bigamy, under Pen. Code, § 281, it is incumbent on prosecution to prove first and second marriages and that former spouse is living, but not that prior marriage was still in force at time of second marriage; burden being on defendant to show that case is within exceptions enumerated in section 282.

2. Criminal law $\Leftrightarrow$ 315—Marriage status, proved by prosecution in bigamy trial, is presumed to have continued, in absence of contrary evidence (Pen. Code, §§ 281, 282).

Marriage status having been proved in bigamy trial under Pen. Code, § 281, and no evidence introduced that defendant did not know that former marriage had been dissolved or that first wife had been absent for five years without being known by defendant to be living, as provided by section 282, presumption is that such status continued to exist.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Joseph M. Huntley was convicted of bigamy, and he appeals. Affirmed.

E. E. Gehring, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TYLER, P. J. [1] Appellant was charged by information with the crime of bigamy. It was alleged, in substance, that on or about June 1, 1927, defendant unlawfully married one Nellie Jones, when at such time he had a lawful wife living. To this indictment defendant pleaded not guilty. Trial was had, which resulted in a conviction. It was proved that defendant had married one Phoebe Huntley in the year 1914. It was also proved that on June 1, 1927, defendant married one Nellie Jones, and that at such time Phoebe Huntley was still alive. The prosecution then rested, and, defendant failing to take the stand, no further evidence was introduced. Motion for an instructed verdict was thereupon made that defendant be acquitted, as the evidence was insufficient to sustain a verdict of conviction; the prosecution having failed to show that the first marriage was in full force and effect at the time the second marriage was entered into. The motion was denied. Defendant then offered an instruction to the same effect, which was refused. The verdict of conviction followed. Appellant's sole contention is that it was not only necessary for the prosecution to prove the two marriages, but that it should have gone further, as the burden was upon it to prove that the prior marriage was still in force and effect at the time of the second marriage. There is no merit in the contention. Section 281 of the Penal Code defines the crime of bigamy as follows: Every person having a husband or wife living, who marries any other person, except in cases specified in the next section, is guilty of bigamy. The section referred to (282) provides that section 281 does not extend (1) to any person by reason of any former marriage, whose husband or wife by such marriage has been absent for five successive years without being known to such person within that time to be living; nor (2) to any person by reason of any former marriage which has been pronounced void, annulled, or dissolved by the judgment of a competent court. In a prosecution for bigamy under section 281, Penal Code, it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove, not only the first and second marriages, but also that the former husband or wife was living. 4 Cal. Jur. p. 346. In the present case this was done. It then became incumbent upon defendant to show that the case came within a class enumerated in section 282. This is on the theory that, when a defendant is, in the first instance, shown to have done an act which is unlawful unless he was distinctly authorized to do it, the proof of authority is thrown upon him. Commonwealth v. Boyer, 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 306. The exceptions contained in section 282 constitute, therefore, only matters of defense. The offense as defined in section 281 consists in marrying a second time while the husband or wife of a defendant is still living. People v. Priestly, 17 Cal. App. 171, 118 P. 965. The question as to whether or not a first marriage no longer exists is one peculiarly within the knowledge of a defendant, and in such a case the burden is upon him to prove it. Commonwealth v. Boyer, supra. This burden is not an unreasonable one (People v. Velasquez, 70 Cal. App. 362, 233 P. 359).

[2] Then again, the marriage status having been proved, and there being no evidence to show that defendant did not know that his former marriage had been pronounced void, annulled, or dissolved, or that the first wife had been absent for five years without being known by the defendant to be living, the presumption is that the status as shown by the prosecution continued to exist. People v. Stokes, 71 Cal. 263, 12 P. 71.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.; KNIGHT, J.

93 Cal. App. 516

ALTMAN v. BLEWETT.

ANDERSON et al. v. SAME.

(Civ. Nos. 3530, 3531.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 16, 1928.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨18(3)—Judgments that vendor's title was subject to purchasers' right to purchase on happening of certain event held not to change time for exercise of options to purchase.

Where defendant, who sold two lots to plaintiffs under agreement that, when a street was put through two other lots, defendant would sell remainder of such lots to plaintiffs, subsequently defendant commenced actions against plaintiffs to quiet title to the latter two lots, in which actions it was adjudged that defendant's title was subject to plaintiffs' options to purchase said lots when street was put through, held, that said judgments adjudicated validity of the contracts, and defined plaintiffs' and defendant's respective interests, but did not change time for exercise of options to purchase, nor make it incumbent on plaintiffs to exercise options on entry of judgments, instead of on dedication of property to street uses.

2. Quieting title ⇨19—Object of action to quiet title is to finally determine controversy, as between parties, by settling all conflicting claims (Code Civ. Proc. § 738).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, an action to quiet title is brought to determine any adverse claims that may be asserted by defendant to land in controversy, and court must declare and define interest held by defendant, if any, so that plaintiff may have a decree finally adjudicating extent of his own interest in property; object of action being to finally determine, as between the parties, all conflicting claims to property, and to decree to each such interest or estate therein as he may be entitled to.

3. Specific performance ⇨105(3)—Right to enforce options to purchase, effective November 10, exercised on following November 15 and January 2, respectively, held not barred by laches.

Where plaintiffs' time for exercising options to purchase realty did not arrive until condemnation judgment was entered on November 10, 1924, and in the case of two lots involved options were accepted and payment of price tendered on November 15 and January 2, 1925, respectively, held, that plaintiffs' right of action for specific performance was not barred by equitable laches.

4. Assignments ⇨18—Contract to convey other lots on happening of certain event held assignable.

Vendor's contract to convey other lots to purchaser when a street was put through such other lots held assignable, and enforceable by assignee, in absence of words of limitation in option to purchase forbidding its assignment, or of circumstances showing that it was given because of peculiar trust or confidence reposed in optionee.

5. Specific performance ⇨51—Fairness and reasonableness of contract to convey must be determined from conditions at execution of contract; subsequent increase in value being immaterial, as respects specific performance.

As respects plaintiffs' right to enforce specific performance of defendant's contracts to sell realty to plaintiffs on happening of certain contingency, the fairness and reasonableness of the contract must be determined from the conditions existing at the time the contracts were made, and fact that property increased in value since that time is immaterial.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Separate actions by J. J. Altman and by Charles E. Anderson and another against Sophia L. Blewett. From judgments for defendant in both actions, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Wm. P. Mealey, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARTLETT, Justice pro tem. It has been stipulated that these two appeals may be heard and determined together; the issues involved being practically identical in both cases. Both actions are for the specific enforcement of contracts for the conveyance of real property, or for damages in case specific performance cannot be decreed.

In action No. 3530, Altman v. Blewett, conveyance from defendant to plaintiff of the southerly 20 feet of lot 6 of the George A. Blewett Home Tract, as per Map Book 3, page 53, of Los Angeles county records, is asked, or, in the event this cannot be decreed, for damages in favor of plaintiff for $5,580. In action No. 3531, Anderson and Anderson v. Blewett, conveyance from defendant to plaintiffs of the southerly 20 feet of lot 12 of the George A. Blewett Home Tract, as per Map Book 3, page 53, Los Angeles county records, is asked, or, in the event this cannot be decreed, for damages in favor of plaintiffs for $1,190.

An answer to the complaint was filed in both actions, and, when the cases came on for trial, objections were sustained to the admission of any evidence on behalf of plaintiffs in support of the allegations in the complaints, and judgments were entered for defendant and against plaintiffs in both actions. From these judgments plaintiffs have taken their appeals; the same being presented on a certified copy of the judgment roll in each action.

In action 3530 plaintiff and defendant are the original parties to the contract of sale on which the controversy is based, while in action 3531 the plaintiffs Charles E. Anderson and Segrid Anderson are the successors in interest of Mary Altman, the original party to the contract of sale with defendant, Sophia L. Blewett, on which the controversy is based.

The contract involved in action 3530 is set forth in full in the complaint and reads as follows:

"Los Angeles, Nov. 20, 1905.

"This contract between George A. and Sophia L. Blewett and J. J. Altman for the purchase of lot 5 of the George A. Blewett Home Tract. The price to be paid for said lot 5 being four hundred and fifty dollars, $450.00, two hundred dollars to be paid at the execution of said contract, the balance of the money on said lot 5 to be paid on or before two years from date, the sum being two hundred and fifty dollars $250.00 at the rate of ten per cent. enterst per annum, the interest to be paid semiannually, and if buyer pays taxes on said lot 5, a rebate of three per cent. is to be returned to said J. J. Altman, and when balance of of money is paid on said lot 5 a deed and certificates of title will be given free of charge to J. J. Altman and in case that the street is put through lots 6, 12 and 18, the remaining twenty feet, more or less of said lot 6 can be bought for the same price as lot 5 is sold at. A building restriction on said lot 5 to be nothing less than $1,500.00, fifteen hundred dollars and the main building not to be erected any closer than twenty five feet from the lot line.

"Restriction to hold good for five years.

"Sophia L. Blewett.

"George A. Blewett.

"J. J. Altman."

The contract involved in action 3531 is set forth in full in the complaint and reads as follows:

"Los Angeles, April 27, 1906.

"This contract between George A. and Sophia L. Blewett and Mary Altman, for the purchase of lot 11, of the George A. Blewett Home Tract. The price to be paid for said lot 11, being $550.00, five hundred and fifty dollars, two hundred to be paid at the execution of said contract, the balance of the money, three hundred and fifty dollars due on said lot 11, to be paid on or before eighteen months from date of said contract at the rate of ten per cent. interest per annum, the interest to be paid semiannually, and if buyer pays the taxes on said lot 11, a rebate of three per cent. is returned to said Mary Altman. And when balance on said lot 11 is paid, a deed, and certificate of title, will be given free of charge to Mary Altman. And in case that the street is put through lots 6, 12 and 18, the remaining 20 feet (more or less), of said lot 12 can be bought for the same price, lot 11 is sold for, building restrictions on said lot 11 to be nothing less than fifteen hundred dollars $1,500.00, the main building not to be erected any closer than twenty-five feet from the lot line. Building restrictions to hold good for five years.

Sophia L. Blewett.

George A. Blewett."

"Mary Altman.

The material allegations averred in the complaint are: Ownership and subdivision and placing upon the market prior to November 20, 1905, by defendant of the George A. Blewett Home Tract, situated in the city of Los Angeles, between Vermont avenue and Hoover street of that city; location of lots 5 and 11 of said tract as being back to back, lot 5 facing easterly on Hoover street and lot 11 facing westerly towards Vermont avenue, and lot 6 of said tract lying immediately north of lot 5 and lot 12 immediately north of lot 11; lot 6, when the contract was made on November 20, 1905, being 50 feet in width, and lot 12, when the contract was made on April 27, 1906, being 50 feet in width; entry into on November 20, 1905, by defendant with plaintiff Altman of the contract of that date concerning lots 5 and 6 above set forth, and entry into on April 27, 1906, by defendant with predecessors in interest of plaintiffs Anderson of the contract of that date concerning lots 11 and 12 above set forth; representation by defendant to the purchasers of lot 5 and lot 11 at the time of making the contracts that Forty-First drive would be opened through and opposite lots 6 and 12 of the tract as a public street from Vermont avenue to Hoover street; declaration of intent of defendant to dedicate for street purposes and as a part of Forty-First drive the northerly 30 feet of lots 6 and 12; that after the dedication of the northerly 30 feet of lots 6 and 12 there would remain 20 feet off the southerly side of lots 6 and 12 to be used in connection with lots 5 and 11; the giving by defendant to plaintiff Altman the right and option to purchase the remaining 20 feet of lot 6 in case the street is put through lots 6, 12, and 18 for the same price lot 5 is sold at, and the giving by defendant to the purchasers of lot 11 the right and option to purchase the remaining 20 feet of lot 12 in case the street is put through lots 6, 12, and 18, for the same price lot 11 is sold at; that the right to purchase the remaining 20 feet of lots 6 and 12 by the purchasers of lots 5 and 11 was a part of the consideration of the contracts to purchase lots 5 and 11; that the purchasers would not have purchased lots 5 and 11 without the right given to purchase the remaining 20 feet of lots 6 and 12; that when the contracts were made defendant owned the lands lying northerly of lots 6 and 12 from which land the northerly 30 feet of Forty-First drive opposite lots 6 and 12 was to be taken; that after making the contracts defendant sold the land north of lots 6 and 12 and the purchaser thereof dedicated for street purposes the northerly 30 feet of lots 6 and 12; that on November 6, 1906, defendant made, executed and delivered to plaintiff Altman a bargain and sale deed conveying to plaintiff lot 5, and that on June 27, 1907, defendant made, executed and delivered to Mary Altman, a predecessor in interest of plaintiffs Anderson, a bargain and sale deed of lot 11; that after the making of these deeds, and on November 3, 1913, defendant commenced an action against plaintiff Altman, and a similar action against the predecessor in interest of plaintiffs Anderson to quiet the title to lots 6 and 12 by which actions defendant sought to clear the title to said lots of any rights vested in the defendant Altman to lot 6 and of any rights vested in the predecessor in interest of the plaintiffs Anderson to lot 12 to purchase the southerly 20 feet of said lots upon the opening of Forty-First drive; that these complaints were duly answered and said actions tried in the superior court of Los Angeles county, California, and judgments rendered therein whereby it was decreed that defendant was the owner of lots 6 and 12, subject to the right of plaintiff Altman to purchase the southerly 20 feet of lot 6 for the sum of $9 per front foot, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from November 20, 1905, whenever Forty-First drive shall be opened to a width of 60 feet from Vermont avenue to Hoover street, opposite to lots 6, 12 and 18 of the George A. Blewett Home Tract, and subject to the right of the predecessor in interest of defendants Anderson to purchase the southerly 20 feet of lot 12 for the sum of $11 per front foot, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from April 27, 1906, whenever Forty-First drive shall have been opened a width of 60 feet from Vermont avenue to Hoover street opposite lots 6, 12, and 18 of the George A. Blewett Home Tract; that the sum of $9 per front foot was the price paid for lot 5, and $11 per front foot the price paid for lot 11; that after the rendering of said judgments and on or about September 13, 1922, the defendant in the action involving title to lot 12 transferred and conveyed lot 11 and all his right, title, and interest in and to lot 12, and all his right, title, and interest in and to the contract relating to lot 12, to one Herbert E. White, who thereafter transferred and conveyed the same to the defendants Anderson; that on June 16, 1923, the city of Los Angeles commenced an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county to condemn for street purposes the northerly 30 feet of lots 6 and 12 and such additional property as was necessary to open Forty-First drive as a 60-foot street through and opposite lots 6 and 12 from Vermont avenue to Hoover street; that thereafter such proceedings were had in this condemnation suit that a final judgment was entered condemning said property for street purposes, the judgment being entered on November 10, 1924; that thereupon Forty-First drive was opened as a 60-foot street from Vermont avenue to Hoover street, through and opposite lots 6 and 12; that thereafter plaintiffs accepted the options to purchase the southerly 20 feet of lots 6 and 12 and tendered defendant the amounts specified in the contracts and judgments as payment in full for the purchase price of the southerly 20 feet of said lots 6 and 12, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from the date of the contracts, and demanded a conveyance of said properties; the amount tendered by plaintiff Altman being the sum of $420, and the amount tendered by plaintiffs Anderson being the sum of $510; that plaintiff Altman accepted said option and made said tender on November 15, 1924, and plaintiffs Anderson accepted said option and made said tender on January 2, 1925, and that defendant refused to accept said moneys and refused to convey said properties.

The complaints allege readiness, willingness and ability on the part of plaintiffs to purchase the southerly 20 feet of lots 6 and 12 at all times since the date of the contracts whenever Forty-First drive should be opened from Vermont avenue to Hoover street, and it is alleged that the reasonable market value of the southerly 20 feet of lots 6 and 12 at the time of the making and execution of the contracts did not exceed $9 and $11 per front foot, respectively, and that the consideration so to be paid defendant was and is adequate consideration for the properties. In a second cause of action it is alleged in action 3530 that the market value of the southerly 20 feet of lot 6 when the tender of $420 was made therefor on November 15, 1924, was not less than $6,000, and in action 3531 in a second cause of action it is alleged that the market value of the southerly 20 feet of lot 12 when the tender of $510 was made therefor on January 2, 1925, was not less than $2,500. The record shows that the complaint in action 3530 was filed in the superior court of Los Angeles county on December 18, 1924, and that the complaint in action 3531 was filed on January 9, 1925.

[1, 2] But one question presented by each of the appeals is material for determination, and that is: What is the effect of the judgments made by the superior court of Los Angeles county in the actions to quiet title concerning these lots and the contracts involved, and which judgments are pleaded in the two complaints? Section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an action may be brought by any person against another who claims an estate or interest in real or personal property adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim. The purpose and province of actions to quiet title are clearly stated in the case of Peterson v. Gibbs, 147 Cal. 1, 81 P. 121, 109 Am. St. Rep. 107, where it is said:

"Such an action is brought, as authorized by the statute, 'for the purpose of determining' any adverse claim that may be asserted therein by a defendant to the land in controversy, and this does not mean that the court is simply to ascertain, as against a plaintiff shown to have a legal interest, whether or not such defendant has some interest, but also that the court shall declare and define the interest held by the defendant, if any, so that the plaintiff may have a decree finally adjudicating the extent of his own interest in the property in controversy. The object of the action is to finally settle and determine, as between the parties, all conflicting claims to the property in controversy, and to decree to each such interest or estate therein as he may be entitled to."

That such is the purpose and object of this species of action is also set forth in Yuba Investment Co. v. Yuba Con. Gold Fields, 199 Cal. 203, 248 P. 672; Miller v. Oliver, 54 Cal. App. 505, 202 P. 172; Howard v. Howard, 67 Cal. App. 56, 226 P. 984; Akley v. Bassett, 68 Cal. App. 270, 228 P. 1057.

Defendant Sophia L. Blewett was plaintiff in both of the suits to quiet title, the judgments in which are pleaded in these actions, and it was on her initiative that the plaintiff in action 3530 and the predecessor in interest of plaintiffs in action 3531 came into court, and set forth their claim to purchase the southerly 20 feet of lots 6 and 12 in the George A. Blewett Home Tract whenever Forty-First drive in the city of Los Angeles shall have been opened to a width of 60 feet from Vermont avenue to Hoover street opposite lots 6, 12, and 18 of the tract. These asserted claims the trial court determined to be good and valid, it being decreed in the action that the answering defendants had a right to purchase the southerly 20 feet of lot 6 and the southerly 20 feet of lot 12 at a fixed and determined price per front foot whenever Forty-First drive in the city of Los Angeles shall have been opened to a width of 60 feet from Vermont avenue to Hoover street opposite to lots 6, 12, and 18. There is nothing uncertain about the extent of the interest which it was determined the defendants in the suits to quiet title had in the properties, nor as to when that interest would ripen into a right to demand a conveyance from the defendant here upon the payment to her of a fixed sum of money. The validity of the two contracts and their extent were completely adjudicated. The time for exercising the options did not arrive until the judgment was entered in the condemnation action brought by the city of Los Angeles, opening up Forty-First drive, which was entered on November 10, 1924. Five days thereafter, on November 15, 1924, the plaintiff in action 3530 tendered defendant $420 in payment for the southerly 20 feet of lot 6 and demanded a deed therefor, and on January 2, 1925, the plaintiffs in action 3531 tendered defendant $510, in payment for the southerly 20 feet of lot 12 and demanded a deed therefor. Under the judgments in the suits to quiet title no conclusion can be reached other than that plaintiffs herein were entitled to deeds of conveyance from defendant upon the making of the tenders of purchase price and demand for deeds for the southerly 20 feet of lots 6 and 12.

[3] The claim of defendant that plaintiffs are barred from the relief sought by reason of equitable laches because payment was not tendered and deeds demanded immediately after the entry of the judgments in the suits to quiet title is without merit upon the facts set forth in the record. In both contracts and judgments the time when the right to a conveyance to the owners of lots 5 and 11 was to arise was when a street 60 feet wide was extended through lots 6, 12, and 18. There is no question about what amount of money was to be paid to entitle plaintiffs to a conveyance. The decree determines that to be a certain rate per front foot for the southerly 20 feet of each lot and interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from the date of the contracts regarding lots 5 and 11.

The facts in the cases at bar are entirely different from those in Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 245, 81 P. 516, and Marsh v. Lott, 156 Cal. 643, 105 P. 968, relied upon to support the claim of equitable laches. In the first of these cases plaintiff permitted 25 years to pass before taking any steps to enforce a right which had existed all of that time, while in the second case plaintiff waited 3 years after a defendant had repudiated an option, before bringing his action. The few days elapsing in this case after plaintiffs became entitled to demand a conveyance, before making their demand, cannot be regarded as in any way constituting equitable laches.

[4, 5] The defendant argues that plaintiffs in action 3531 cannot enforce the option given Mary Altman, as successor in interest of said Mary Altman. This contention is based upon a claim that the covenant in defendants' agreement with Mary Altman was a personal one not running with the land. The contract entered into was to convey lot 11 and part of lot 12 upon the happening of certain events. It was an agreement to convey Mary Altman an interest in lot 12, and it cannot be questioned that Mary Altman had a right to convey this interest. There are no words of limitation in the option to purchase forbidding its assignment, or that it was given because of a peculiar trust or confidence reposed in the optionee. 25 Cal. Jur., p. 509, sec. 37; Simmons v. Zimmerman, 144 Cal. 256, 79 P. 451, Ann. Cas. 850; Blakeman v. Miller, 136 Cal. 138, 68 P. 587, 89 Am. St. Rep. 120. Defendant urges that the contracts sued upon are not fair and reasonable as to defendant and because of this that they cannot be specifically enforced. In this regard the question of fairness and reasonableness must be determined from the conditions existing at the time the contracts were made. The fact that the property has increased in value since the contracts were made has no bearing upon the question as to whether or not the contracts should be specifically enforced. The price the owner was to be paid was the fair market value of the property when the contracts were made. The possibility of an increase in value was an element to be taken into consideration when the contracts were entered into. It cannot be said that the contracts here involved were unfair, unequal or inequitable at the time of their inception. No wrongful or inequitable act on the part of plaintiffs concerning these contracts or arising therefrom appear from the facts alleged in the pleadings that would preclude the relief they are asking. They are seeking an interest in properties in pursuance of contracts which have been passed upon and adjudged legal and valid by a court of competent jurisdiction, in actions invoked by the defendant herein.

Each of the judgments appealed from is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

93 Cal. App. 252

SCHWARZ v. SCHWARZ. (Civ. 6328.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 24, 1928.

1. Appeal and error § 927(3)—On judgment of nonsuit in action to restrain unfair trade dealing, appellate court must assume that issue of unfair dealing, specially pleaded and supported by evidence, was proved.

Where judgment of nonsuit was rendered in action to enjoin defendant from conducting business under name similar to plaintiff's, and issue of unfair trade dealing was specially pleaded and supported by evidence, it must be assumed by appellate court that such issue was proved.

2. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition § 75—Actual confusion by similarity of names need not be proved in action to restrain unfair trade dealing, remedy being available to prevent liability to deception.

In action to restrain defendant from conducting business, based on unfair trade dealing, it was not necessary to prove that third parties were actually confused by similarity of names, but remedy may be invoked to prevent liability to deception.

3. Trial § 165—Plaintiff is entitled to most favorable construction of all evidence on motion for nonsuit.

On motion for nonsuit in action to restrain defendant from conducting business, based on unfair trade dealing, plaintiff is entitled to most favorable construction of all evidence.

4. Trade-marks and trade-names and unfair competition § 75—Evidence showing defendant adopted scheme designed to deceive plaintiff's customers presented case of unfair dealing, entitling plaintiff to some part of relief demanded.

In action to restrain defendant from conducting business of commercial collections under similar name as that previously used by plaintiff, evidence showing unmistakably that defendant adopted scheme of advertising designed to deceive plaintiff's customers, that he actually solicited customers under false impression that he was merely establishing new office of plaintiff's organization, presented case of unfair trade dealing, and entitled plaintiff to some part of relief demanded.

5. Evidence § 591—Testimony of defendant, called by plaintiff under statute, held not binding on plaintiff (Code Civ. Proc. § 2055).

Where conflict in testimony in action to restrain unfair trade dealing arose in testimony of defendant, who was called by plaintiff under Code Civ. Proc. § 2055, plaintiff was not bound as to such testimony.

6. Appeal and error § 927(3)—Conflict in testimony should be disregarded on appeal from judgment of nonsuit in action to restrain unfair dealing.

On appeal from judgment of nonsuit in action to restrain unfair dealing, conflict in testimony should be disregarded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action for injunction by Adolph M. Schwarz against Adolph M. Schwarz, Jr., also known as Louis A. Schwarz. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Newlin & Ashburn and R. L. Haight, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Abram M. Marks, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to restrain defendant from conducting business under the name of "Adolph M. Schwarz, Jr., Commercial Collections," or variations of such name calculated to deceive the public, and also from soliciting the business of plaintiff's clientele and from using lists of plaintiff's customers obtained by defendant while he was in the employ of the plaintiff. The cause was tried before the court, and, upon the conclusion of plaintiff's case, the defendant's motion for a nonsuit was granted upon the ground that there was no evidence to sustain the allegations of the complaint. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment upon a typewritten transcript.

Plaintiff had established and maintained collection agencies in some of the principal cities of the East, and, some two years prior to the filing of the complaint, had established branches of such agencies in San Francisco and Los Angeles. His son, the defendant in this case, had been installed as manager of the branch in Los Angeles, but in the month of August, 1925, because of mismanagement and defalcations on his part, he was ordered to turn over the management of the Los Angeles branch to another, and to report to the Cleveland office. On August 29, 1925, he opened another office in Los Angeles, and notified the customers of plaintiff that he had taken the entire personnel of the old office with him and solicited their business under the new management. Letterheads, billheads and other advertising matter were prepared by him under the name of "Adolph M. Schwarz, Jr., Commercial Collections Anywhere," obviously designed to deceive the customers of the plaintiff, who for many years theretofore had engaged in the business of commercial collections under the designation "Adolph M. Schwarz, Commercial Collections Everywhere" and Adolph M. Schwarz, Attorney and Counselor at Law, Commercial Collections Everywhere."

It was alleged in the complaint that the plaintiff had built up a valuable good will and reputation in commercial collections around the name "Adolph M. Schwarz, Commercial Collections" and "A. M. Schwarz." Though this allegation was denied in the answer, the truth of the allegation was proved beyond question at the trial. On some occasions plaintiff's organization was referred to merely as "Schwarz's" or the "Schwarz organization," or the "Schwarz Los Angeles office," but more frequently the full name of "Adolph M. or A. M. Schwarz" was used. Defendant's true name had been Louis Schwarz, but, before coming to California, he had assumed the name of Louis Carmen. During the time he was employed by plaintiff in the California offices he went under the name of Adolph M. Schwarz, Jr., and in February, 1925, with the consent of his father, he procured a decree of the superior court changing his name to A. M. Schwarz, Jr. Thereafter he conducted his business under that name, still being known "socially" as Louis Schwarz.

It is the theory of the complaint that the defendant's change of name was part of a scheme to defraud his father, and that, when the defendant opened the new offices in Los Angeles with letterheads, billheads, and other advertising matter of the same type, arrangement, and picture as those used by his father, it was with the intention of deceiving plaintiff's customers and causing confusion among them, to plaintiff's damage. There is no proof that defendant contemplated establishing an independent business when he made the change in his name, or that this change was made for any other purpose than to facilitate the handling of the father's business. All the proof, both oral and documentary, shows unmistakably that the defendant adopted a scheme of advertising designed to deceive plaintiff's customers, and that he actually solicited them "with all of the business houses of Los Angeles" under the false impression that he was merely establishing a new office of the Schwarz organization, taking with him "the entire personnel of the old office, consisting of high trained, efficient, and consummate collection talent."

[1] Unlike the case of Dunston v. Los Angeles Van & Storage Co., 165 Cal. 89, 131 P. 115, the issue of "unfair trade dealing" was specially pleaded, and all the evidence, and the presumptions and inferences applicable thereto, tended to prove the allegations of the complaint. The judgment having been on the nonsuit, we must therefore assume this issue to have been proved. Long v. Chronicle Publishing Co., 68 Cal. App. 171, 228 P. 873. Upon the case so made by plaintiff, he prayed for an injunction restraining defendant from conducting the business of commercial collections under the name of "Adolph M. Schwarz, Jr., Commercial Collections," or any variations of said name, consisting of the use of the words "A. M. Schwarz's," or "Adolph M. Schwarz's," or "Adolph M. Schwarz Company," either in conjunction with each other "or in conjunction with other words or name, so as to imitate or so closely resemble the name of the plaintiff as to result in confusion to the public or to the patrons, customers, dealers, clientele, or agencies of the plaintiff."

[2] Plaintiff offered one witness to testify that he had been confused over the two offices. It was not necessary to prove this. "It is the liability to deception which the remedy may be invoked to prevent." T. A. Vulcan v. Myers, 139 N. Y. 364, 34 N. E. 904. This subject is fully discussed in the opinion of Judge Thompson in Sun-Maid Raisin Growers v. Mosesian, (Cal. App.) 258 P. 630, 635.

[3-6] Giving the plaintiff the most favorable construction of all the evidence, as was necessary on the motion for nonsuit, it follows that he presented a case of unfair trade dealing which would have entitled him to some part of the relief demanded. The defendant's answer on this appeal is that, as to those issues upon which plaintiff offered proof, the evidence was conflicting, and that we should not, therefore, disturb the judgment. The conflict arose in the testimony of the defendant, who was called by the plaintiff under section 2035 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As to such testimony the plaintiff was not bound, but, in any event, the conflict should be disregarded.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

93 Cal. App. 365

HARTSOCK et al. v. MERRITT, City Clerk.
(Civ. 6462.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 30, 1928.

1. Municipal corporations §159(1)—City clerk cannot reject petition for recall election as insufficient, where it conforms to all charter requirements.

The duty of the city clerk not being judicial, but merely to examine petition asking for election to consider recall of city commissioner, and to determine whether it is in form substantially outlined in city charter, is signed by the required number of qualified electors, and verified before a notary public or verification deputy, and, if such facts are found by him to exist, then to certify such facts to council and call election, rejection by him of petition on ground that it is "insufficient" held an erroneous conclusion of law.

2. Municipal corporations §159(1)—City charter, requiring petition for recall election to be signed by qualified voters, does not require signatures to be identical with those on registration affidavits.

City charter, requiring that a petition for a recall election be signed by qualified voters, held not to require the signatures to be identical with those appearing on affidavits of registration.

3. Mandamus §154(5)—Petition, alleging city clerk fraudulently refused to certify a petition for a recall election, held to state a cause of action.

Petition for a peremptory writ of mandate against city clerk, alleging he fraudulently refused to certify a petition for a recall election, and marked on individual election certificates a precinct number other than that in which elector resided, and then rejected them, held to state a cause of action.

Application by A. R. Hartsock and others for a writ of mandate against Frank C. Merritt, as City Clerk of the City of Oakland, to compel him to certify as sufficient a petition for a recall election. Referred to referee.

Frederick Dubovsky, of Oakland, for petitioners.

Preston Higgins, City Atty., C. Stanley Wood, Asst. City Atty., and Alfin N. Nelson, Chief Deputy City Atty., all of Oakland, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. The petitioner has moved for a peremptory writ of mandate upon a petition which he has filed, alleging that the respondent, as city clerk of the city of Oakland, has arbitrarily, and through coercion on the part of his superiors, fraudulently refused to certify as sufficient a petition filed with him asking for an election to vote upon the question of the recall of C. C. Young, one of the commissioners of said city. The respondent has filed a demurrer and answer at the same time, and the cause has been submitted on briefs.

[1] In support of the demurrer the respondent argues that his action in rejecting the petition, no matter how arbitrary or fraudulent it may be, is conclusive, and cannot be controlled by court action. In support of this argument he cites a former decision of this court. Fraser v. Cummings, 48 Cal. App. 504, 192 P. 100. In that case we held that the people of the city of Oakland—

"have in their charter conferred upon the city clerk the exclusive power to finally determine whether a recall petition conforms to all requirements of the charter, and they have thereby denied to the courts the power of reviewing such determination in a proceeding of this kind."

But in the same paragraph we added that:

"What might be done in a case where fraud is shown need not be determined because the petition here does not pretend to allege any fraud."

It is the duty of the city clerk to examine the individual certificates, for the purpose of ascertaining whether they comply with the requirements of the charter, and, if a sufficient number of valid certificates are filed, he must certify that fact to the council, and the election must then be called. Ratto v. Board of Trustees, 75 Cal. App. 724, 243 P. 466. The citizen is entitled to have this duty performed honestly and fairly, and, if it is shown to have been done fraudulently or arbitrarily, the action may be controlled by mandamus. Such, in fact, was the ruling in Fraser v. Cummings, supra, and this is supported by all the authorities.

The duty of the clerk is not judicial. Wright v. Ingram, 186 Cal. 659, 201 P. 788. The charter requires him "to examine said petition to ascertain whether or not it conforms to all the requirements of this charter." He is not clothed with authority to receive extraneous evidence (Ratto v. Board of Trustees, 75 Cal. App. 724, 726, 243 P. 466), but must determine, from the face of the petition, whether it is "substantially" in the form outlined in the charter, and, from the records of registration, whether it is signed by the required number of qualified electors. In addition to this, he must determine whether the petition has been verified before a notary public or duly qualified verification deputy. If a petition in due form is signed by one who is, in fact, a qualified elector, and verified by him before one who is, in fact, a duly qualified notary public or verification deputy, it may not be rejected because of any fanciful notion which the clerk may have.

When these facts exist, his rejection of the certificate on the ground that it is "insufficient" is merely an erroneous conclusion upon a matter of law (Dufton v. Daniels, 190 Cal. 577, 581, 213 P. 949), and a breach of that public duty which the writ of mandate is designed to control (Section 1085, Code Civ. Proc.; Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Comm., 187 Cal. 533, 538, 202 P. 874; Conn v. City Council, 17 Cal. App. 705, 714, 121 P. 714, 719).

[2] As illustrative of the point, the petitioner here alleges that the respondent fraudulently marked on individual certificates a precinct number other than that in which the elector resided, and then rejected the certificate on the ground that such elector was not registered in the precinct designated. It is also alleged that the certificates of a large number of qualified electors were rejected solely because the elector signed his or her name differently from that appearing on the register of voters. The charter calls for a petition "signed by qualified electors." It does not require the signatures to be identical with those on the affidavits of registration. Conn v. City Council, supra, page 713 (121 P. 714, 719).

[3] It is unnecessary to discuss the petition further. It states a cause of action, and the demurrer must be overruled. The answer denies certain material allegations of the petition, and, though in many instances these denials are in conflict with public records prepared by the same respondent, we deem it proper to order a reference, in order that findings may be had and the proceedings finally determined. It is therefore ordered that the matter of ascertaining the truth of the allegations of fact hereinafter detailed be referred to Judge J. T. B. Warne, to take evidence and make findings thereon, at such time and place as he may direct, and to transmit his findings to this court for further proceedings. The questions of fact thus referred are: The number of individual certificates, if any, wrongfully rejected by the respondent under the separate headings specified in paragraph XIX of the petition, and the total number of valid certificates filed with the respondent in addition to those certified as valid by him, as admitted in the pleadings, and the total number of withdrawals thereof. It is further ordered that said referee take such evidence as may be offered upon the issue pleaded, that respondent's rejection of any of said certificates was wrongful, arbitrary, or fraudulent, and that all the evidence on that issue be transmitted to this court for further proceedings.

Pending the report of said referee, and until the further order of this court, the submission of all other matters connected with this proceeding is set aside. The clerk of this court is directed to transmit to said referee a certified copy of this order.

We concur: WARNE, Presiding Justice pro tem.; STURTEVANT, J.

93 Cal. App. 320

ENGELHARDT v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 6424.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 27, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 24, 1928.

1. Insane persons $\S$ 33(2)—Order appointing guardian of estate of incompetent residing outside county was reviewable by certiorari to test jurisdiction.

Order appointing guardian of estate of incompetent person not residing in county was reviewable by certiorari for alleged want of jurisdiction.

2. Insane persons $\S$ 33(1)—Failure of petition for letters of guardianship of incompetent adult to allege ward's residence in county held not to prevent court's exercise of jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 1763-1767, 1793; Pol. Code, $\S$ 4483).

Failure of petition for letters of guardianship of estate of incompetent adult to allege that ward was resident of county held not to prevent exercise of jurisdiction by superior court, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 1763-1767, 1793, though jurisdiction as to appointment of guardians for minors extends only to inhabitants or residents under section 1747; question not being determined under entire chapter, sections 1747-1810c, in view of Pol. Code, $\S$ 4483, which requires that provisions of each article must prevail as to matters arising out of the subject-matter of such article.

3. Certiorari $\S$ 64(2)—Only jurisdictional errors are reviewable on application for certiorari (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1068).

Errors committed by trial court other than jurisdictional errors may not be reviewed on application for certiorari, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1068.

Application by Ernestine Engelhardt for certiorari to review an order of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Department No. 9 thereof, and Hon. Frank H. Dunne, Judge. Order affirmed.

Carl W. Mueller, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Marion Vecki, of San Francisco, for respondents and Zentini.

STURTEVANT, J. [1] This is an application for a writ of review. The petitioner is attacking an order made by the trial court appointing a guardian of the estate of the petitioner, an alleged incompetent person of the age of 79 years.

In her point and authorities, the petitioner devotes much time in arguing that she has adopted the correct procedure. We think that she has. Grimbaum v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 528, 221 P. 635.

[2] The gravamen of her complaint is that the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction when, under the facts, it made any order except to dismiss the application. This point rests on the claim that this petitioner was a resident of Alameda county at the time the order complained of was made in the city and county of San Francisco. The petitioner contends that the petition for letters should have alleged that the ward was a resident of San Francisco, and that such fact should have been sustained by the evidence. She claims the petition contained no allegation regarding her residence, that no evidence was adduced on the subject, and that the trial court therefore exceeded its jurisdiction.

The evidence taken in the trial court on the hearing of the application for letters has not been brought up, but she has brought up copies of the files in the guardianship proceeding. The respondents admit that in the petition there is no allegation as to the residence of the ward at the time the petition was filed, and respondents assert that such an allegation is not a necessary part of a petition for letters of guardianship of an alleged incompetent adult person, and they cite and rely on the provisions of article 2, c. 14, tit. 11, pt. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure; that is, sections 1763-1767. The petitioner, on the other hand, claims that we should read together all of the sections of the entire chapter; that is, sections 1747-1810c. The chapter deals generally with the procedure applicable to proceedings entitled "Guardian and Ward." The first article deals with proceedings entitled "Guardians of Minors." The second article deals with proceedings entitled "Guardians of Insane and Incompetent Persons." Both articles are a codification of the Act of April 19, 1850 (Stats. 1850, p. 268), and the several acts amendatory thereof (1 Hittell's General Laws 487). Since 1850 it has been the law that the power of the probate court to appoint a guardian of the estate of a minor was limited to minors who were "inhabitants or residents" of the county in which the court was held, except, as we will note, during the same period there has been no such limitation as to the power to appoint a guardian of the estate of an insane or incompetent person. The exception existed in 1907. On March 23, 1907, two sections, each numbered 1763, were enacted. One of those sections (Stats. 1907, c. 514) contained a limitation as to residence. That law was of short duration. The length of its life need not be determined. Long before this case arose, it was repealed by amendment. Stats. 1909, p. 329. It is patent that article 1, supra, treats of the subject of the appointment of guardians of minors. It is equally patent that article 2, supra, treats of the subject of the appointment of guardians of insane and other incompetent persons. We are commanded to so construe both articles that " * * * the provisions of each article must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject-matter of such article." Pol. Code, § 4483. It is clear that, if we apply the latter rule, and we are commanded to do so, we must hold that the law did not require that the petition for letters of guardianship should allege that the ward was a resident of the city and county of San Francisco.

As stated above, the petitioner contends we should read together sections 1747-1810c, and that in doing so her contention is made clear. It is not. The reverse would be so. As to minors, the jurisdiction extends to "inhabitants or residents." Code Civ. Proc. § 1747. As to incompetents, the jurisdiction is not limited (Code Civ. Proc. § 1763), and, as to wards, whether minors or incompetents, who do not reside in the state, the court has jurisdiction, under certain circumstances, to appoint guardians of the estate and/or person of the ward (Code Civ. Proc. § 1793). The petitioner's contention therefore is not helpful.

However, there is a sound reason for the distinction which the Legislature has made. Presumptively a minor is not in possession of his estate, but an incompetent adult is, and, moreover, presumptively he has at least some of his personal property on his person, and is thus in need of the protection of the law whether in the location of his domicile or elsewhere. Apparently it is the theory of the law that the courts should be open to the friends of the incompetent to protect the latter in the possession of his property, whether the incompetent be a resident or "a stranger within your gates."

In her petition, the petitioner alleged that no citation was served upon her. The record shows it was. The real point is that, at the time the trial court made its order appointing a guardian of the estate of the petitioner, the records of the clerk of the trial court did not show that the citation had been served. That fact was later called to the attention of the trial court, and since February 16, 1928, the said record has been full and complete on the subject.

[3] The petitioner asserts that the trial court made certain other alleged errors. She does not claim that any one of them was jurisdictional. Conceding, solely for the purpose of this decision, that such errors, were made, they may not be reviewed on this application. Code Civ. Proc. § 1068. It does not appear that in any respect the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction in the proceedings resulting in the order appointing a guardian of the estate of the petitioner, and the proceedings are therefore affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

93 Cal. App. 346

CRAVIOTTO v. ALL PERSONS, etc., et al.
(Civ. 6086.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 28, 1928.

1. Ejectment $\Leftrightarrow$ 1, 3—Ejectment, though generally possessory action, may become means of trying title.

Action of ejectment is generally confined to cases where claimant has right of entry, but may become means of trying title where right to possession is based on claim of title.

2. Judgment $\Leftrightarrow$ 725(4)—Judgment in ejectment action is res judicata on issue of title only to extent that adjudication thereof was essential.

Where title is alleged by either party as basis of his right to possession in ejectment suit, ejectment becomes res judicata on issue of title to the extent that adjudication thereof was essential, but not otherwise.

3. Judgment $\Leftrightarrow$ 725(4)—Judgment in ejectment action that plaintiff therein, claiming title under both reversion and leasehold, take nothing as against defendant asserting right to possession under lease, held not res judicata of plaintiff's reversionary interest (Code Civ. Proc. § 1911).

Where plaintiff in former ejectment action claimed title to tidelands as owner of state's reversionary interest under Act of May 18, 1853 (Laws 1850-53, p. 767), and as owner of 99-year term given the city of San Francisco and conveyed by it under Act of March 26, 1851 (Stats. 1851, p. 307, Laws 1850-53, p. 764), and under Stats. 1851, p. 387, § 12, and answer of defendant asserted claim under the city's title as part owner entitled to possession, judgment that plaintiff take nothing held not res judicata of issue of plaintiff's title to the state's reversionary interest in the property, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1911, since possession depended on the right under the 99-year lease, and successor to plaintiff's interest was therefore not estopped to assert claim to state's title, in action under McEnerney Act (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78), to establish title.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Agostino Craviotto against Emma Rose and others. Judgment for defendant named, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John J. Mazza and Henry E. Monroe, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Garret W. McEnerney, of San Francisco (Andrew F. Burke, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PRESTON, Presiding Justice pro tem. Plaintiff, Agostino Craviotto, brought this action under the provisions of the McEnerney Act (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78) to establish his title to two parcels of land situate along the water front in the city and county of San Francisco. Defendant Emma Rose answered, alleging that she was the owner in fee simple of the reversionary interest in one of the lots described in plaintiff's complaint, and that as to this lot the plaintiff was only the owner of a leasehold interest therein, which will expire in the year 1950.

The case was tried by the court, and judgment was entered in favor of defendant Emma Rose, quieting her title in accordance with the allegations of her answer. From this judgment, plaintiff, Agostino Craviotto, prosecutes this appeal.

The record before us discloses these facts:

The land in controversy was originally tideland, and owned by the state of California by virtue of its sovereignty, and was conveyed in separate interests. On March 26, 1851, the Legislature of California passed an act granting to the city of San Francisco the "use and occupation of the tidelands of San Francisco for a term of 99 years" from the date of said act. Stats. 1851, p. 307; Laws 1850-53, p. 764. The interest thus conveyed to the city of San Francisco is known, and will be hereafter referred to as the city title. The city title will expire by its own limitations on March 25, 1950. In May, 1851, scarcely more than a month after the enactment of the act just mentioned, the Legislature passed another act, entitled, "An act to authorize the funding of the floating debt of the city of San Francisco and to provide for the payment of the same." Stats. 1851, p. 387. The latter act appointed five persons as "commissioners of the funded debt of San Francisco," and gave them power, among other things, to lease or sell the property of the city which might be conveyed to them for that purpose. Section 12 of the act required that a commission theretofore created by an ordinance of the common council of San Francisco for the purpose of liquidating the debts of the city, and known as "commissioners of the sinking fund," should convey to the "commissioners of the funded debt of San Francisco," created by the statute, all the property and all the right, title, and interest in property belonging to the city. Pursuant to this provision of the statute, the "commissioners of the sinking fund," by deed dated May 24, 1851, conveyed to the "commissioners of the funded debt," appointed by the statute of May 1, 1851, all the interest of San Francisco in the tidelands, including the parcel in controversy in the case at bar. The effect of said deed was to divest the city of San Francisco of the city title to the land in dispute in this action, which was the only interest that the city had therein, and to vest the same in the said "commissioners of the funded debt." Board of Education v. Fowler, 19 Cal. 22; Friedman v. Nelson, 53 Cal. 596; Le Roy v. Dunkerly, 54 Cal. 458.

By deed dated September 20, 1852, the said "commissioners of the funded debt," the owners of the city title, conveyed to one Charles D. Carter "all their right, title, and interest" in and to the said land in controversy, and other lands. By deed dated June 25, 1853, the said Charles D. Carter conveyed to John R. Carroll an undivided one-half interest in the same land. By deed dated August 10, 1853, the said Charles D. Carter and John R. Carroll, conveyed to John R. Snyder all their right, title, and interest in and to said lands.

It is conceded by all parties to this action that the plaintiff, Agostino Craviotto, has succeeded to and acquired all the interest of John R. Snyder in the lands in question, which is known as the city title.

By an act of the Legislature, approved May 18, 1853 (Laws 1850-53, p. 767), provision was made for the appointment of five persons, styled the "board of California land commissioners," as commissioners to dispose of the remaining interest of the state of California in and to said tidelands, which interest will be hereafter referred to as the state title, and which consisted of the reversion in fee after the expiration of the 99-year interest embraced within the city title. By deed, dated November 21, 1854, said "board of California land commissioners," being then vested with the state title, conveyed the same to Stephen B. Whipple. It is stipulated that Stephen B. Whipple was the predecessor in interest of the defendant and respondent Emma Rose. Therefore it appears that on November 21, 1854, the date of the last-mentioned conveyance, said Stephen B. Whipple (Emma Rose's predecessor) was the owner of the state title in the land, and said John R. Snyder (plaintiff's and appellant's predecessor) was the owner of the city title therein.

The title continued in this condition until April 10, 1860, on which date the said Stephen B. Whipple commenced, in the fourth district court, a suit in ejectment against Jacob Peterson, John Oschwald, George W. Guthrie, G. Murhard, A. Heeser, and John R. Snyder. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff was the owner in fee simple, and entitled to the possession of certain lands, including the land involved in this action. The complaint further alleged that, "while so seized and possessed and entitled to the possession of all that certain block or parcel of land above described, the defendants, on or about the ——— day of ———, A. D. 185—, unlawfully, and without title or right, entered upon the same and ousted the plaintiff from the possession thereof, and said defendants are now in possession and claim the exclusive right to the said piece or parcel of land, and now wrongfully and unlawfully retain and withhold possession of said lot and premises and exclude the plaintiff from the possession of the same, or any part thereof."

The complaint further alleged that plaintiff had suffered damages in the sum of $1,000 by the wrongful and unlawful ouster, retention, and withholding of possession of said land by defendants.

The prayer of the complaint was as follows:

"Wherefore, the plaintiff demands judgment against the said defendants, that they may be adjudged to surrender the possession of said real estate to him, the said plaintiff, and pay to him, said plaintiff, the said sum of $1,000, and also the cost of this action, together with such other order or further relief as the court can give."

On April 30, 1860, the defendant John R. Snyder filed an answer in said action, in which it is alleged:

"That as to the ownership or right of possession of said plaintiff to a portion of the land described in complaint, this defendant knows nothing, and not knowing he neither admits nor denies, but leaves plaintiff to his proofs. For further answer the defendant says that 'he is the part owner and in possession' of certain land" (describing only the land in controversy).

The answer further alleges:

"* * * But defendant denies that plaintiff was the owner and in the possession or entitled to the possession of the above-described premises on the ——— day of ———, 185—, or at any other time, or that this defendant wrongfully and unlawfully ousted plaintiff or that plaintiff sustained any damage. Further answering, defendant admits that he is now and for a long time past has been in the possession of the premises hereinbefore described, but he denies that he is so possessed wrongfully and unlawfully or that he has no title therefor or that plaintiff is damaged thereby."

The prayer of said answer was as follows: "Wherefore defendant prays judgment in his favor for his costs."

On April 30, 1860, an answer was filed by the defendant George W. Guthrie. This answer was similar in form to the answer of Snyder, except that Guthrie alleged that he was the owner of all the land described in the complaint. The prayer was similar to that in the answer of the defendant Snyder. The record does not reveal any answer by any of the other defendants.

On August 8, 1861, judgment was entered in said action as follows:

"It is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that Stephen B. Whipple, plaintiff, do take nothing by this proceeding against G. W. Guthrie and J. R. Snyder, defendants, but that said defendants recover their costs."

The effect of this judgment is the sole question presented on this appeal. Appellant contends that this judgment is an estoppel against respondent, Emma Rose, who is the successor in interest of Stephen B. Whipple.

It will be remembered that Whipple claimed that he was "the owner in fee" of the land in dispute, which would include the city title, and his attempt to oust Snyder, who was the real owner of the city title, was undoubtedly based upon the following facts: On January 30, 1852, Whipple purchased all the right, title, and interest of the city of San Francisco in the land in controversy, on execution of two judgments against the city, one entered on December 8, 1851, and the other on December 11, 1851. On May 29, 1854, the sheriff issued to Whipple a deed to said land in consummation of the said two execution sales. The only interest which it could be claimed that the city of San Francisco had in the land on December 8 and 11, 1851, was the city title, granted by the Act of March 26, 1851, and Whipple undoubtedly believed that said execution sales and sheriff's deed in consummation thereof vested him with the city title to the land. Whipple subsequently acquired the state title by deed dated November 21, 1854; therefore, when Whipple subsequently, and on April 10, 1860, brought said ejectment suit against Snyder et al. he undoubtedly did so on the belief that he owned the entire title to the land in question, and therefore, in his complaint, alleged that he was the "owner in fee simple" of the land in controversy. The defect, however, in Whipple's claim to the entire title, was that at the date of the two judgments in execution, under which the land was sold to him—that is, on December 8 and 11, 1851—the city of San Francisco had no interest in said land, because on May 24, 1851, more than six months previously, the city had conveyed all its interest in said land to the commissioners of the funded debt, appointed under the Act of the Legislature of May 1, 1851. The effect, however, of the various statutes and conveyances had not been judicially determined in April, 1860, when Whipple brought said ejectment suit against Snyder et al., and was not determined until October, 1861, when the decision in Board of Education v. Fowler, supra, was rendered. In the Fowler Case, it was held that the deed dated May 24, 1851, had divested the city of San Francisco of its interest in said land.

It follows, therefore, that Whipple received no interest in the city title by virtue of his deed under execution, and only owned the state title when the ejectment suit was commenced, and the real owner of the city title was John R. Snyder and Snyder's ownership of the city title entitled him to the possession of the land until the expiration of the 99-year term, which would be until March 25, 1950.

Under this unusual situation regarding the title, the above-quoted judgment in the ejectment suit of Whipple v. Snyder et al., was rendered, "that Whipple take nothing against Snyder and Guthrie, but that Guthrie and Snyder recover their costs."

[1-3] This judgment undoubtedly concluded Whipple from any further claim to the city title, but the all-important question is, Did this judgment also conclude Whipple with respect to the state title? Or, in other words, when Whipple lost his ejectment suit, did he at the same time and by the same judgment also lose his reversionary interest, or state title, to the land in question? We think not. Generally speaking, the action of ejectment is merely a possessory action, and is confined to those cases where the claimant has a possessory title; that is to say, a right of entry upon the land. Payne v. Treadwell, 5 Cal. 310, 311; Montgomery v. Railway Co., 104 Cal. 197, 37 P. 786, 25 L. R. A. 654, 43 Am. St. Rep. 89; Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 268, 270; 9 R. C. L. 827-853; 2 Cal. Juris. 973, 974; Wells v. Steckelberg, 52 Neb. 597, 72 N. W. 865. "It may, however, and frequently does, become the means of trying title, since either party may base his right to possession entirely upon some claim of title. Where title is alleged by either party as a basis of his right to possession, the judgment becomes res judicata to the extent that an adjudication of it was essential to the judgment, but not otherwise." Freeman on Judgments (5th Ed.) vol. 2, §§ 866, 867, pp. 1830, 1832; Wehle v. Price (Cal. Sup.) 260 P. 878, and cases there cited.

Therefore Whipple, by alleging in his complaint in ejectment that he was "the owner in fee simple and entitled to possession" of said lands, undoubtedly put in issue both title and right of possession, but Snyder, by his answer, says:

"He is part owner and in possession of said lands, but denies that plaintiff was the owner and in possession or entitled to possession on the — day of —, 185—, and, further answering, defendant admits that he is now, and for a long time past has been, in the possession of the premises, * * * but denies that he is so possessed wrongfully or unlawfully or that he has no title therefor. Wherefore defendant prays judgment in his favor for his costs."

This is a very unusual form of answer, and we must assume that it was so framed intentionally, and it cannot be said that it does more than deny Whipple's right to possession and set up Snyder's right to possession. If we are correct in this, then the only issue that was before the court in said ejectment suit was whether Whipple or Snyder was entitled to the immediate possession of said land, and on this issue Snyder must necessarily have prevailed, because he was at the time rightfully in possession under the 99-year lease. Whipple's claim to the city title had failed because, as we have seen, his deed under execution conveyed nothing, and he was out of possession and at the time only the owner of the reversionary interest in the land.

Under such a situation the question of possession was all that it was essential for the court to determine, and it was all that the judgment, upon its face, shows that the court did, in fact, determine. The ownership of the reversionary interest, or, as we have called it, the state title, was wholly immaterial in determining who was presently entitled to the possession of said land, which was the sole question in said ejectment suit. The right to possession depended entirely upon the ownership of the 99-year leasehold interest, and not upon the ownership of the land after the 99-year leasehold interest had expired.

Section 1911 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"That only is deemed to have been adjudged, in a former judgment which appears upon its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually and necessarily included therein or necessarily thereto."

This section, although not enacted until 1872, is nevertheless a statement of elementary principles relative to estoppel by judgment, which was in effect in this state at the time of the entry of the judgment in said ejectment suit. When we apply the rules of law embodied in this section to the facts in the case at bar, we find, as already stated, that the judgment in said ejectment case does not, upon its face, purport to adjudicate the reversionary title of Whipple in the property; neither was this reversionary title actually and necessarily included in said ejectment judgment or at all necessary thereto.

It seems clear that, if an express adjudication, relative to the reversionary title, had been made in said ejectment suit, the court would have been compelled, under the admitted facts, to have adjudicated the same in favor of Whipple, but had this been done, still, it would not have entitled Whipple to a judgment for the present possession of the land, because the right of present possession was dependent entirely upon the ownership of the 99-year lease, or city title.

Appellant strenuously contends that the decision of the Supreme Court in Wehle v. Price, supra, is conclusive in his favor of the case at bar. We are unable to agree with this contention. Wehle v. Price was a suit to have a deed executed by Wehle to Price declared to be a mortgage and to quiet the title of Wehle to the land involved in the action. By way of defense, Price pleaded the judgment in a former action brought by him against Wehle. The complaint in said former action was an ordinary complaint in ejectment, in which the plaintiff alleged that he was "the owner of and entitled to the land involved." The defendant, after filing a demurrer to this complaint, which was overruled, defaulted. Thereupon a trial was had before the court without a jury and judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff. By the judgment it was adjudged:

That the "plaintiff is the owner in fee simple and entitled to the possession of the premises described in the complaint. * * * That the defendant, together with all persons claiming under him, shall be forever barred of a recovery of said premises and all claim of title thereto, and the title to said premises is absolutely vested in the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff be not molested in the possession of said premises by the defendant, or by any person claiming under said defendant."

From the foregoing it appears that the judgment, which was the basis of the estoppel asserted in Wehle v. Price, was a judgment decreeing that the party asserting the estoppel was the owner in fee simple of the land in controversy, and that the other party had no interest of any kind in said land; in effect, a judgment quieting Price's title to the land against Wehle.

The judgment in the ejectment suit of Whipple v. Snyder et al., however, is entirely different. The plaintiff, Whipple, admittedly owned the reversionary title to the land in controversy when he commenced his suit. He also claimed the 99-year leasehold interest by virtue of his deed under execution. The defendant Snyder was in possession of the land, claiming to be the owner of the 99-year leasehold interest, which carried with it the right of possession. The court rendered judgment in favor of Snyder, undoubtedly for the reason that Whipple's deed under execution did not vest him with any interest in the 99-year leasehold interest, and the court did not decree or adjudge that Whipple was not the owner of the reversionary or state title. It did not decree that Snyder was the owner of the state title. The judgment was merely "that plaintiff take nothing by his action and defendant recover his costs"; that is, Whipple should not recover possession of the property.

From what has been said, it follows that we are of the opinion that the judgment in the ejectment suit of Whipple v. Snyder et al., is not res judicata with respect to the ownership of the reversionary interest or state title, and does not create an estoppel against respondent Emma Rose, who is the successor in interest of Stephen B. Whipple.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

SAXTON v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF LOS ANGELES CITY SCHOOL DIST. et al. (Civ. 5582.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 16, 1928.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 15, 1928.

1. Trial ~~404~~(4)—Specific findings control when in conflict with general findings.

Specific findings, when in conflict with general findings, control on appeal.

2. Appeal and error ~~907~~(3)—Appellate court must assume evidence was sufficient to sustain findings, in absence of bill of exceptions.

In absence of bill of exceptions, appellate court must assume that evidence was sufficient to sustain the findings.

3. Mandamus ~~45~~(5)—Teacher having been discharged after hearing, notice, and proceedings conforming to law, granting writ of mandate compelling her reinstatement, held error; her legal remedy by appeal being adequate (Pol. Code, §§ 1609, 1698, 1699; Code Civ. Proc. § 1086).

Where "permanent" teacher in public schools, within Pol. Code, § 1609, was discharged by city board of education after charges against her had been legally made, notice of hearing given, and proceedings in strict conformity with the law had, superior court erred in granting writ of mandate to compel her reinstatement; her remedy being by appeal to county superintendent of schools and to superintendent of public instruction, under sections 1698, 1699, which provide a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1086.

4. Mandamus ~~71~~—Mandamus will not lie to control exercise of quasi judicial powers, except for abuse of discretion or excess of jurisdiction.

Mandamus will not lie to control the discretion vested in an inferior board or person exercising quasi judicial powers, except where there has been an abuse of discretion or excess of jurisdiction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; P. E. Keeler, Judge.

Action by Lois S. Saxton against the Board of Education of Los Angeles City School District and others for a writ of mandate to compel reinstatement of plaintiff as permanent teacher in the public schools of the City of Los Angeles. From a judgment granting the writ, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and C. B. Penn, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. A. Alderson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. [1] Respondent, a "permanent" teacher in the public schools of Los Angeles city school district, as defined in section 1609, Political Code, brought this action against the school board of said school district and the members of said school board for writ of mandate against defendants, who are appellants here, to reinstate her and permit her to continue to serve in said public schools as a permanent teacher, and to pay her $286, alleged to be due her as such teacher, and for a judgment that the act of defendants discharging her is null and void. She had been discharged for cause, after a full and fair hearing before said school board, where she was represented by counsel. After a trial in the superior court, it was found by the court in a general finding that the allegations in respondent's petition that she had been discharged wrongfully, illegally, and without cause were true; but specific findings followed showing that a charge against her had been legally made, that a time was legally set for hearing, that legal notice of the hearing was given, and that all of the proceedings leading up to her discharge were in strict conformity with the law. Specific findings, when in conflict with general findings, control, and hence should be considered as the only findings in determining the appeal of defendants herein.

Under section 1609 of the Political Code, it is provided that boards of education shall have power and it shall be their duty, to dismiss "permanent" teachers for unprofessional conduct—persistent violation or refusal to obey the school laws of California or reasonable rules prescribed for the government of public schools. The dismissal can be made on the proof of any one or more of the charges and by an affirmative vote of a majority of the board present at the hearing.

[2] The superior court, on a hearing on an alternative writ of mandate, made its findings and ordered a peremptory writ of mandate to issue, commanding defendants to reinstate plaintiff as a "permanent" teacher in the public schools of the Los Angeles city school district, and to permit her to continue in the service of said public schools as a teacher, and to pay her $286 accrued salary. The case comes here on the judgment roll. In the absence of a bill of exceptions, we must assume that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the findings.

[3] The principal question to be decided on this appeal is as to whether the superior court, after such a hearing before the board of education and findings by said board (on substantial, though conflicting, evidence), and the teacher's discharge upon such findings, can by writ of mandate compel a board of education to reinstate said teacher and permit her to continue as a teacher in the schools. Respondent contends that the superior court has that power under the following clause of section 1609 of the Political Code:

"Nothing in this act shall be construed in such manner as to deprive any teacher of his rights and remedies in a court of competent jurisdiction on a question of fact and law."

But it does not appear that a teacher at any time has the right to continue as a teacher in the public schools after a legal discharge by the board of education, or that among the "remedies" to which she is entitled is that of obtaining a writ of mandate to overrule the board of education and compel it to reinstate her. None of the cases cited by respondent go to that extent. This case differs from an action for damages for breach of contract, in that the action to recover damages pertains to a property right of a teacher, and the plaintiff's remedy therein does not interfere with the control and management of the public schools. It is unlike the case of Grigsby v. King et al. (Cal. Sup.) 260 P. 789. In that case a teacher had been discharged without a hearing, and an action for an injunction was held to lie against the school board, the court saying:

"The action becomes, in effect, not one to enforce a contract for personal services, but to restrain action by the board of trustees in excess of its power to the detriment and damage of plaintiff."

In the instant case, the school board did not act in excess of its powers, nor in bad faith.

[4] The action of the superior court, putting it bluntly, was a substitution of the court for the school board in the legitimate exercise of the functions enjoined upon the board by law. The public is entitled to an honest, fair, and efficient exercise of the duties of the school board so imposed upon it, and the law does not contemplate that the board shall be hampered in the exercise of its powers in the interests of the public schools, while acting within the scope of those powers. Where the action of a public officer partakes of a judicial nature and that officer has passed upon the question in good faith, though on substantially conflicting evidence, the writ of mandate will not be granted. It has been settled law in this state for more than seventy years that mandamus will not lie to control the discretion vested in an inferior board or person exercising quasi judicial powers, except where there has been an abuse of discretion or excess of jurisdiction. Declarations to that effect have been sustained from the case of Thomas v. Armstrong, 7 Cal. 286, to the present day. Inglin v. Hopkin, 156 Cal. 483, 105 P. 582; Pacific P. Ass'n v. Huntington Beach, 196 Cal. 211, 237 P. 538, 40 A. L. R. 782. Courts should not assume to control the discretion of school boards where the right of such boards to exercise discretion exists. People ex rel. Frank v. Board of Supervisors of City and County of San Francisco, 21 Cal. 697. The teacher had the right to appeal from the action of the school board in ordering her discharge to the county superintendent of schools (section 1698, Pol. Code); and she had a right to appeal from its action in withholding her salary to the superintendent of public instruction (section 1699, Pol. Code).

Although section 1609 of the Political Code provides that nothing in this act shall be construed, etc. (as above quoted), the Code of Civil Procedure provides (section 1086) that a writ of mandate must be issued in all cases where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Under the facts of this case, such remedy was provided, and the writ of mandate should not be granted.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

93 Cal. App. 539

STANLEY W. SMITH, Inc., v. PILGRIM. ★
(Civ. 3529.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 17, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 15, 1928.

Replevin ☞93—Failure to find plaintiff owned automobile when claim and delivery complaint was filed held fatal to judgment for plaintiff.

Ownership, either general or special, and right to possession, are the material matters presented for consideration in actions in replevin, hence trial court's failure to find that plaintiff in claim and delivery action owned automobile involved on date of filing of complaint required reversal, where such question was put in issue by defendant's answer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Action by Stanley W. Smith, Inc., against W. M. Pilgrim. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Harold C. Morton, Claude A. Shutt, and Joe Crail, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Overton, Lyman & Plumb, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARTLETT, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in a claim and delivery action, awarding plaintiff possession of a Peerless automobile, and damages for its detention. The complaint alleges that at the time of its filing, which was on November 30, 1925, plaintiff owned the automobile in question; that it was in possession of defendant; that plaintiff had demanded possession before bringing its suit; that defendant refused to deliver possession; that the car was of a value of $1,000; and that plaintiff had been damaged through defendant's detention of the automobile in the sum of $250. Defendant, by an amended answer, filed on February 16, 1926, denied that plaintiff, when the complaint was filed, or at any time subsequent to August 5, 1925, owned the automobile, or was entitled to its possession; alleged that its value was $2,000; denied any damage to plaintiff by reason of defendant's detention of the car; and, as an affirmative defense asserted a damage to defendant of $1,000 occasioned through plaintiff taking possession of the car in the action; and asked that the car be redelivered to him or for judgment in his favor of $2,000 in the event the car could not be redelivered.

The trial court found that plaintiff was on July 30, 1924, the owner of the automobile in question, and was on September 1, 1925, and ever since then entitled to the immediate possession of the same; that defendant was in possession of the property when the complaint was filed; that, before the action was commenced and while defendant was in possession, plaintiff demanded possession of the property from defendant; that defendant refused and continued to refuse to deliver possession of the property to plaintiff; that, when possession was demanded, plaintiff was entitled to the immediate possession of the property; that the property has been delivered by the sheriff of Los Angeles county to plaintiff under process issued in the action; that it is not true that the taking of possession by plaintiff was without right; that it is not true that defendant is entitled to judgment for the return of the property or for $2,000 or any other sum; and that it is not true that defendant has been damaged in the sum of $1,000 or any other sum.

Except as to the ownership in plaintiff on July 30, 1924, the findings are silent upon that question, as are also the conclusions of law announced, these being that plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the personal property described, and to judgment for the sum of $150 and costs of suit, and that defendant take nothing in the action.

There is no direct finding of the trial court upon the ownership of the automobile on November 30, 1925, the date of the filing of the complaint; nor is any direct finding made upon the averment in defendant's affirmative defense that since August 5, 1925, he has been the owner of the property. The answer to the complaint put the question of ownership in issue, as did also the affirmative defense. In this case the question of who was entitled to the possession turns entirely upon a determination of which of the parties owned the property when the action was commenced. Ownership, either general or special, and right to possession, are the material matters presented for consideration in actions in replevin.

"It may be stated as the well-settled general rule that it is necessary to allege both the ownership, either general or special, and the right to immediate possession in a complaint for replevin, and, where it is alleged merely that the plaintiff is entitled to the immediate possession of the property, without alleging either general or special ownership in the property, the complaint is not sufficient, for the reason that the allegation of the right to immediate possession standing alone is a mere legal conclusion." 23 R. C. L. p. 925, § 93.

That this is the rule obtaining in California is established by many decisions of the Supreme and appellate courts of this state.

In Garcia v. Gunn, 119 Cal. 315, 51 P. 684, the doctrine is thus stated:

"Replevin is based on the supposition that plaintiff has a general or special property in the goods in dispute and a right to their immediate possession, and that defendant stands in the way of the exercise of this right."

In Boles v. Stiles, 188 Cal. 304, 204 P. 848, an action brought to recover possession of an automobile, it is said:

"It has long been the settled rule in this state, as in other jurisdictions, that, in order to sustain an action in claim and delivery, a plaintiff must have the right to immediate and exclusive possession of the property at the time of the commencement of the action (People's Sav. Bank v. Jones, 114 Cal. 422, 426 [46 P. 278]), and one who has the right to the use of property at will may replevy it (Garcia v. Gunn, 119 Cal. 315, 322 [51 P. 684]; Tandler v. Saunders, 56 Mich. 142 [22 N. W. 271]). One who is the owner of or has some special property in a chattel, coupled with a right to the immediate possession thereof, may maintain the action.—Fredericks v. Tracy, 98 Cal. 658, 660 [33 P. 750]."

In Alchian v. MacDonald, 40 Cal. App. 505, 181 P. 77, the court says:

"The plaintiff did not, at the time of the commencement of the action, have any interest in, or right of possession of, the automobile. He was therefore not in a position to commence or maintain it. Garcia v. Gunn, 119 Cal. 315 [51 P. 684]; Fredericks v. Tracy, 98 Cal. 658 [33 P. 750]."

In Sidney v. Wilson, 67 Cal. App. 282, 227 P. 672, which was a replevin case concerning an automobile, the court says:

"As set forth in the case of Beggs v. Smith, 26 Cal. App. 532 [147 P. 585], where many authorities are cited, mere possession of the subject-matter of a claim and delivery action will not suffice. In order that an action of such character may be sustained, it is necessary not only that plaintiff show possession of the property, but as well, that he is entitled to such possession."

In Normart v. Safer, 67 Cal. App. 507, 227 P. 943, it is said:

"In the present case, the plaintiff's claimed right to the possession of the property in controversy is founded solely upon his alleged ownership thereof. He failed, according to the trial court's decision, to establish his ownership of said property, and with such failure necessarily his claim of right to the possession of the property also failed."

In Parke v. Franciscus, 194 Cal. 284, 228 P. 435, the statement therein that, "in an action of claim and delivery, the claimant is not called upon to establish ownership, merely a right to the possession of the thing," is not at variance with the general doctrine hereinbefore stated that ownership, either general or special, must be established by a claimant to warrant recovery of the property. In the decision in Parke v. Franciscus, supra, it is said, on page 289 (194 Cal., 228 P. 437) of the opinion:

"The court found that Parke and Browne were not, and that they had not been, the owners or entitled to possession of the automobile in controversy, and that Franciscus was the owner and entitled to possession thereof."

There was no failure of the court to find on the question of ownership raised by the pleadings, like that presented in this action.

In the case of Connell v. Hogg, 181 Cal. 730, 186 P. 134, it was held that one holding a lien on an automobile for repairs had at most no more than a lien upon the machine for the balance due him for the repairs made. He had a special ownership in the property by virtue of his lien, and the judgment was reversed, with directions to determine the amount due him for the repairs he had made.

In the case at bar, plaintiff was required to prove ownership of the automobile on November 30, 1925, and right to its possession on that date, to entitle it to a judgment. The claim of defendant that he then owned the property and had owned it from August 5, 1925, if established by the evidence offered on the trial, was a complete defense to plaintiff's action. Which of the parties owned and was entitled to possession of the automobile on November 30, 1925, was the ultimate fact for determination by the trial court. Both parties were entitled to findings on the material issues raised by the pleadings. No finding on the vital question of ownership on the date the complaint was filed was made. That findings on the issue of ownership in actions in replevin are material and must be made to warrant a judgment where presented, as they are by the pleadings in this case, cannot be questioned.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

93 Cal. App. 512

COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. et al. (Civ. 5515.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 16, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 11, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 15, 1928.

1. Adverse possession §95—In absence of showing taxes were levied against land, presumption was none were levied, as respects adverse possession.

Where no taxes were shown to have been levied during certain years against land to which defendant claimed title by adverse possession, presumption was that no taxes were levied during said years.

2. Limitation of actions §19(1)—Where defendant claimed title by adverse possession, statutes requiring seizin in actions involving title to realty held inapplicable.

Where defendant, for more than five years after execution of tax deed, continued to plant, cultivate, and harvest crops on land condemned by county for public use, without seeking permission from any one and without interference or molestation from any person, Code Civ. Proc. §§ 318, 319, requiring seizin by plaintiff within five years before commencement of action to recover realty or to maintain defense thereto, held inapplicable.

3. Adverse possession §114(1)—Cultivation and harvesting of crops for over five years and payment of taxes held to give title by adverse possession.

Where defendant, in action to condemn land for public use, for more than five years after execution of tax deed continued to plant, cultivate, and harvest crops on land during the appropriate seasons of each year without seeking permission of any one, and with knowledge of purchaser at tax sale, and paid all taxes levied on property, he acquired title by adverse possession.

4. Adverse possession §21—To obtain title by adverse possession, it is enough if claimant be present at all times and seasons appropriate to regular and usual cultivation of land.

The continuity of adverse possession necessary to maintenance of claim of title based thereon does not require that claimant be constantly present on the land, but it is enough that he be present at all times and seasons appropriate to regular and usual cultivation of the land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Condemnation action by the County of Los Angeles against the Pacific Electric Railway Company, James T. Dunn, Grace P. Warden, and others. From that part of an interlocutory judgment in favor of defendant Warden, defendant Dunn appeals. Affirmed, as modified.

Wm. T. Kendrick and Victor H. Kendrick, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Grace P. Warden and J. Everett Brown, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This action was instituted by the county of Los Angeles to condemn certain property for public use. In the property sought to be condemned was lot 13, block K, of the townsite of Howard, in said county. James T. Dunn and Grace P. Warden are among the defendants. Each of these two defendants claims to be the owner of said lot. The court found that it was the property of Grace P. Warden, and that she was entitled to receive $1,700, the value thereof, on the condemnation thereof. The interlocutory judgment was entered March 1, 1926. James T. Dunn appeals from that part of the judgment which runs in favor of said Warden.

Appellant, in his brief, concedes that "on the 31st day of January, 1910, C. D. Warden became the owner of lot 13, block K, Howard townsite, by virtue of a deed from the state," and "shortly prior to the commencement of this action, said Warden conveyed all his right, title, and interest to defendant and respondent, Grace P. Warden, who thereupon became the holder of the legal title and remains so unless subsequently divested of the same by the adverse possession of appellant, James T. Dunn." The deed from the state to C. D. Warden, and the previous deed to the state, were based upon a sale for non-payment of taxes, and those proceedings are conceded to have been regularly conducted according to law.

[1, 2] The controversy herein, therefore, involves only the validity of appellant's title, claimed to have been acquired by adverse possession after the date of the tax deed. The evidence shows, without conflict, that for more than five years next after that date, appellant continued to plant, cultivate, and harvest crops of barley on this and adjoining land during the appropriate seasons of each year, without seeking permission from any one, and without interference or molestation from any other person, although respondent Warden was well aware of these facts; also that during the years 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, and 1916 appellant paid all taxes levied against the land. No taxes are shown to have been levied in 1911 or 1912; therefore it is presumed that there were none. Monroe v. Pleasants, 41 Cal. App. 144, 182 P. 330, and cases there cited. In addition, appellant, ex industria, produced evidence that no taxes were levied against said land during those two years. Appellant continued in like manner as before, to use said land, until the time of trial of this action. This being so, sections 318-319 of the Code of Civil Procedure, cited by respondent, do not apply to the case.

Adverse possession may be founded upon a written instrument, or under claim of title exclusive of any other right, but not founded upon a written instrument, judgment, or decree. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 323, 324. "For the purpose of constituting an adverse possession by a person claiming title, not founded upon a written instrument, judgment, or decree, land is deemed to have been possessed and occupied in the following cases only: 1. Where it has been protected by a substantial inclosure. 2. Where it has been usually cultivated or improved. * * *" Code Civ. Proc. § 325.

[3, 4] The facts clearly proved by the evidence, without contradiction, as above stated, positively establish in appellant a title acquired by adverse possession, and the court should have so found. Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 586, 595, 49 Am. Rep. 100. The continuity of adverse possession, necessary to the maintenance of such a claim, does not require that the claimant be constantly present on the land. It is enough if he be present at all times and seasons appropriate to the regular and usual cultivation of the land. Montgomery, etc., Co. v. Quimby, 164 Cal. 250, 254, 128 P. 402; Myers v. Berven, 166 Cal. 484, 490, 137 P. 260. The manner in which appellant held possession, and his payment of taxes levied against the property, establish the adverse character of his possession. Goodrich v. Mortimer, 44 Cal. App. 576, 581, 186 P. 844; Baum v. Reay, 96 Cal. 462, 466, 29 P. 117, 31 P. 561.

It is hereby ordered that the findings of fact be and they are hereby amended, by striking from paragraph IV thereof the following: "That the defendant Grace P. Warden is the owner of the parcel of land herein designated as parcel No. 9, and more particularly described in paragraph 1 above;" and substituting therefor the following: "That the defendant James T. Dunn is the owner of the parcel of land herein designated as parcel No. 9, and more particularly described in paragraph 1 above." It is further ordered that that part of the judgment entered on March 1, 1926, which provides for the taking by plaintiff for the uses set forth in the complaint of said lot 13, block K, of the townsite of Howard (being the lot designated in the decree as "parcel No. 9"), upon paying therefor to the defendant Grace P. Warden, or into court for her benefit, the sum of $1,700, be and the same hereby is amended by striking out the following part thereof: "Parcel No. 9. The sum of one thousand seven hundred and no/100 dollars ($1,700.00) to the defendant Grace P. Warden;" and substituting therefor the following: "Parcel No. 9. The sum of one thousand seven hundred and no/100 dollars ($1,700.00) to the defendant James T. Dunn." As thus amended, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

93 Cal. App. 529

PEOPLE v. BACHMAN. (Cr. 1692.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 17, 1928.

Licenses  42(4)—Evidence held to support conviction for violating Corporate Securities Act, by selling corporation stock without permit.

Defendant, being charged with crime of violating the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), evidence that he sold stocks in a corporation not yet organized, without first having secured necessary permit authorizing such sale, held sufficient to support verdict of guilty.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

O. B. Bachman was convicted of violating the Corporate Securities Act, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Robert W. Daniels and George F. Lord, both of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendant was charged by information with the crime of violating the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) in the following respect: That he did, on November 15, 1926, sell to and take a subscription of J. P. Kemmerer for 10,000 shares of the Bonanza King Extension Mines Company for the sum of $1,000, without first having applied and secured from the corporation commissioner a permit authorizing the sale of such stock. There was another count, but the defendant was not tried for the offense therein contained. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and this appeal is from the judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

But one point is urged as a reason for reversal, to wit: The insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. Appellant's counsel recognize the rule that it is not the function of the appellate tribunal to weigh testimony, but they insist that in the instant cause there is a failure to show that the stock which was the subject of the sale was not the personal stock of the appellant, or, to reframe it, that there is no showing that the subscription was for treasury stock. It is not disputed that the subscription was in fact taken and $1,000 paid by Kemmerer, nor is it denied that there was never at any time a permit. The only question concerns the ownership of the stock which was the subject of the sale. The subscription was taken, $500 was paid, and a receipt was executed in the following words:

"Bonanza King Consolidated Mines and Reduction Works, Fenner, California. O. B. Bachman, President and Treasurer. Wade Hampton Williams, Vice President. A. E. Kinney, Secretary. Secretary's office, Las Vegas, Nevada. All agreements are contingent upon strikes, accidents, and other delays unavoidable or beyond our control and subject to declaration of trust recorded March 10, 1923, in Clark county, Nevada.

"Trustee Receipt, Bonanza King Extension Mines Company.

"This certifies that J. P. Kemmerer has paid the sum of one thousand dollars, $500.00 cash and 90-day note for $500.00 for ten thousand shares of the Bonanza King Extension Mines Company, organizing.

"This subscription is accepted by the trustee upon the understanding and agreement that this receipt shall be exchanged for an interim certificate representing * * * shares, upon the completion of the corporation under the laws of the state of Nevada.

"O. B. Bachman, Trustee.

"November 15th, 1926."

The incorporation of the company did not take place until March 9, 1927. Mr. Kemmerer testified that the appellant told him of several prominent men who were connected with the company, and that "he wanted just a few men in it"; that appellant also informed him that a Mr. Smale had gone out and looked at the great quantities of ore and then had "wanted in on it," as had also Jim and Mat Amos, who "had already signed up"; that then he "signed this piece of paper, the same as the other men had done," for "10,000 shares of Bonanza King Extension Mines Stock"; that the money was to be used for development work; that the company was "incorporated for 2,000,000 shares at 50 cents a share; 250,000 shares at 20 cents each to be sold now"; that he "was purchasing the stock of the corporation, issued by the corporation itself"; and that under no circumstances would he have bought any individual stock. A witness, J. C. Amos, who has been mentioned as Jim Amos, testified that appellant came to his office and told him that "he was organizing a Bonanza King Extension Company, and offered for sale stock; in other words, he offered to sell some stock of the Bonanza King Extension Company, for the development of the ground. * * *" This same witness also testified that, after he had told appellant that he never bought mining stock, appellant wanted either him or his brother to become an officer and take some organization stock, and that they signed an agreement whereby the witness was to receive something like 20,000 shares. Another witness also testified that at about the same time appellant offered to take his subscription for stock in the same company, which offer the witness declined when he was informed that the organization was not yet perfected.

The testimony which we have recited not only warranted the jury in returning a verdict of guilty but also, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, compelled the conclusion that the appellant owned no stock which could be the subject of sale, and was, in fact, acting through the designation of himself as trustee, endeavoring to, and was actually, selling stock for cash in a corporation not yet organized. We are of the opinion that the evidence establishes a clear and palpable violation of the Corporate Securities Act.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; HAZLETT, Justice pro tem.

93 Cal. App. 544

PEOPLE v. CURRIE. (Cr. 1028.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 17, 1928.

1. Criminal law §1202(4)—Failure to require jury's determination as to place of imprisonment of defendant, convicted of second offense of rape under conflicting evidence, held error (Pen. Code, §§ 17, 261, subd. 1, § 667, subd. 1, and § 264, as amended by St. 1913, p. 213, and St. 1923, p. 271).

In prosecution for rape of girl under 18, under Pen. Code, § 261, subd. 1, failure of trial court to instruct jury in event of conviction to recommend whether defendant should be punished by imprisonment in county jail or in state prison, as required by section 264, as amended by St. 1913, p. 213, and St. 1923, p. 271, held error, where evidence as to commission of act was conflicting, notwithstanding defendant's previous conviction for same offense and section 667, subd. 1, requiring maximum penalty on second conviction where first offense was felony punishable by death or imprisonment in state prison as defined by section 17.

2. Criminal law §1211—Where jury in rape prosecution fixes imprisonment in county jail, subsequent conviction of defendant does not necessarily carry maximum sentence (Pen. Code, § 261, subd. 1, § 667, subd. 1, § 264, as amended by St. 1913, p. 213 and St. 1923, p. 271).

Where jury in prosecution for rape of girl under 18, under Pen. Code, § 261, subd. 1, fixes imprisonment in county jail as punishment under section 264, as amended by St. 1913, p. 213, and St. 1923, p. 271, defendant is not thereby convicted of felony, and such conviction cannot be pleaded against him in an information charging the commission of a subsequent offense so as to require maximum penalty on subsequent conviction, under Pen. Code, § 667, subd. 1.

3. Criminal law §1211—Subsequent conviction does not carry maximum penalty unless on first conviction defendant was required to serve term in state prison (Pen. Code, § 667, subd. 1).

Crime of which defendant is subsequently convicted does not come within Pen. Code, § 667, subd. 1, requiring imposition of maximum imprisonment in case of second conviction of felony, unless upon first conviction defendant was required to serve some term in the state prison.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

Steve Currie was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Reversed.

M. B. Moore, of Oakland, and Oliver J. Northup, of Redding, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BARTLETT, Justice pro tem. The defendant was tried and convicted in the superior court of Shasta county, Cal., upon an information charging him with the crime of rape, and also charging him with a prior conviction of a similar offense; the charging part of the information being as follows:

"The district attorney of the county of Shasta, state of California, hereby accuses Steve Currie of a felony, to wit, rape, in that the said Steve Currie, on or about the 2d day of December, 1927, at Ingot, in the county of Shasta, state of California, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, have and accomplish an act of sexual intercourse on and with one —, a female human being, under the age of eighteen years, to wit, of the age of fifteen years, the said — not then and there being the wife of said Steve Currie.

"That the defendant, Steve Currie, before the commission of the offense charged in this information, was in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Plumas, convicted of a felony, to wit, rape."

On his arraignment, defendant pleaded not guilty of the crime charged in the first count contained in the information, and guilty of the prior conviction contained in the second count of the information.

A trial was then had before a jury in said superior court, on which trial the jury failed to agree on a verdict, and defendant was again tried; the jury on this second trial rendering the following verdict:

"We, the jury in the above-entitled action, hereby find the defendant, Steve Currie, guilty as charged in the information on file herein.

"E. D. Cross, Foreman."

When the verdict was rendered, the foreman of the jury stated to the court that the jury recommended that leniency be granted the defendant.

On being arraigned for judgment, defendant moved the court for a new trial on the following grounds: (1) That the court at and during the trial of said action misdirected the jury in matters of law; (2) that the court erred in the decisions of law arising during the course of the trial of the defendant; (3) that the verdict of the jury is contrary to law; (4) that the verdict of the jury is contrary to the evidence adduced at the trial; (5) that new evidence has been discovered by the defendant material to his defense and which he could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced at the trial.

At the time of presenting his motion for a new trial, defendant asked that seven days be allowed him to file affidavits in support of his claim of newly discovered evidence, which request was denied by the trial court. Thereupon the court denied defendant's motion for a new trial, and pronounced judgment that the said Steve Currie be punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California at Folsom for the term prescribed by law, for the period of 50 years.

Thereupon defendant gave oral notice of appeal to this court from the judgment of conviction, and from the order denying the motion for a new trial, and from the order refusing an extension of time in which to procure and produce affidavits on his motion for a new trial; the appeal being presented upon a complete record of the proceedings had in and before the trial court on the trial of the action.

Many reasons are assigned by defendant for a reversal of the judgment and the granting of a new trial, but of these there is but one of material importance, which arises out of the failure of the trial court to instruct the jury of its duty, in the event of a conviction of defendant of the crime charged, to recommend whether defendant should be punished by imprisonment in the county jail, or by imprisonment in the state prison.

The only instructions given by the trial court relative to the verdicts which the jury could find in the case were as follows:

"If you believe from the evidence in this case beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the defendant, Steve Currie, at Ingot, in the county of Shasta, state of California, did accomplish an act of sexual intercourse with said —, and that said — was then and there a female under the age of eighteen years, and was not then and there the wife of the defendant, Steve Currie, as charged in the information, you will find the defendant guilty as charged in the information filed in this action.

"There will be two forms of verdict submitted to the jury, one form (omitting title of court and cause): Verdict of the jury. We, the jury in the above-entitled action, hereby find the defendant, Steve Currie, guilty as charged in the information on file herein. Form two (omitting title of court and cause): Verdict of the jury. We, the jury in the above-entitled action, hereby find Steve Currie not guilty of the offense as charged in the information on file herein."

The testimony of the prosecuting witness is substantially as follows: That she was born at Walla Walla, Wash.; that she was 15 years of age on August 6, 1927; that she first met defendant about 2 miles north of Willows on either the last day of November or first day of December, 1927; that, when she first met him, she and a girl friend were walking along the highway towards Portland, Or.; that defendant was driving a car on the highway going north, no one being with him; that he stopped and asked plaintiff and her companion if they wanted a ride, to which they answered that they did, and thereupon entered defendant's car; that they informed defendant they were going to Portland, and that he told them he was going to Ingot; that the meeting with defendant was about 8:30 a. m.; that they reached Ingot about 10:30 or 11 o'clock a. m.; that they went to a Mrs. Amery's who conducted a kind of boarding house at Ingot; that two men were there when they arrived, Lance Philp and Vern Currie, a brother of defendant; that they had dinner; that then Vern Currie and the girl companion of plaintiff left for Alturas; that after they left she and the defendant went to bed in the afternoon, the exact time of which she did not remember because of her having drunk liquor given her by defendant; that, after going to bed, she and the defendant had sexual intercourse; that she and defendant stayed that night in the room downstairs off the barroom; that after 8 o'clock that evening Mr. and Mrs. Amery and their daughter came to the place; that she remained at the Amery place most of the time for two weeks, sleeping downstairs in the front bedroom with defendant; that during this time she made two trips to Sacramento with defendant, the trips being made at defendant's suggestion, and they occupying each time while in Sacramento room 25 in a hotel on Twelfth and K streets; that the first trip was on the 4th of December; that the second trip was made on the 11th of December; that a number of Mexican laborers were with them on both trips; that they had sexual intercourse at the hotel where they stayed on both trips to Sacramento; that after the second trip to Sacramento and their return to Ingot she and defendant occupied a room together upstairs at the Amery house at Ingot until they were arrested on December 17, 1927.

Lance Philp, called on behalf of the people, testified that he was at the Amery place when the defendant and — and her girl companion arrived there about noon of November 30th; that he was in and about the place all the afternoon; that — was not intoxicated; that the door to the room in the front part of the house was not closed to his knowledge; that they were playing the graphophone and seemed to be having a good time.

Defendant, testifying as a witness in his own behalf, admitted picking up the two girls on the highway and taking them to Ingot, but denied any acts of sexual intercourse with the prosecuting witness at any time; stated that he had gone from Ingot to Sacramento the evening preceding the date he picked them up, that he had had no sleep, that he arrived at Ingot about 10:30 or 11 a. m., had lunch, and then went to bed and slept until 5 or 6 in the afternoon, and fixed the date of picking up the girls as December 2, 1927. He denied giving the prosecuting witness any liquor on the day they arrived at Ingot or at any other time. He stated that he went from Ingot to Sacramento on December 4th with some Mexican passengers and ——— and a Mr. Alberson in his car, arriving at Sacramento about midnight; that one of the Mexicans paid ———'s fare, $10 for the round trip; that she and the passengers alighted on Second street between K and L; that he and Alberson went to a place on T street, and that from there he went to a hotel at Twelfth and K streets and occupied room 25 therein by himself that night; that he did not again see ——— until the next morning about 10 or 11 o'clock when he and Mr. Alberson met her at a battery place on I street between Fourteenth and Fifteenth, and that in the evening they returned to Ingot, arriving there about midnight. Defendant denied making any trip with the complaining witness to Sacramento on December 11th. He stated that he went from Ingot to Sacramento on the night of December 10th with a load of Mexican laborers, arriving at Sacramento about 3 a. m. of December 11th, that he went to the hotel at Twelfth and K streets, registering there under the name of S. E. Freeman, and occupying room 25. He testified that he told the prosecuting witness, at the time they went to Sacramento on December 4th, that he was stopping at the hotel at Twelfth and K streets, and to inquire for him there under the name of S. E. Freeman, that he told her this because she wanted to know what time he would leave for Ingot the next day, and that he told her he did not know, on account of the work he had to have done on his car.

The housekeeper and manager of the hotel at Twelfth and K streets was called as a witness for the defendant, and testified that she was manager of the hotel during the month of December, 1927, that defendant registered there on December 4th and on December 11th under the name of S. E. Freeman, occupying room 25 on both dates, and that no one was with him on either occasion.

The sheriff of Shasta county testified that the complaining witness gave him the number of the hotel she claimed to have stopped at in Sacramento with the defendant, that he took her with him to that city, and that she pointed out to him the hotel at Twelfth and K streets, which defendant stated he stayed at, and room 25 therein, as the place she claimed to have stopped at with defendant in Sacramento.

[1] The foregoing résumé of the evidence illustrates its conflicting character, and shows clearly that the case is one in which the jury is called upon to designate by its verdict on the conviction of a defendant whether he shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail or in a state prison, by virtue of the provisions of section 264 of the Penal Code.

It is the contention of the people on this appeal that the jury did not lawfully have any power to determine that punishment in this case on conviction should be by imprisonment in the county jail, by reason of subdivision 1 of section 667 of the Penal Code, which provides that, where there has been a prior conviction of a felony, "if the offense of which such person is subsequently convicted is such that, upon a first conviction, an offender would be punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, such person is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for the maximum period for which he might have been sentenced, if such offense had been his first offense." To justify this contention would require that it be determined that a conviction for the crime of rape committed in violation of subdivision 1 of section 261 of the Penal Code is conviction of a felony, for subdivision 1 of section 667 of the Penal Code providing for a maximum period of punishment on second convictions cannot be construed as applying to any crimes except in cases where the first conviction was for a felony, which is a crime punishable with death or by imprisonment in the state prison as defined in section 17 of the Penal Code.

Prior to the amendment of section 264 of the Penal Code, approved May 19, 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 213), rape was punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than 5 years. The enactment of May 19, 1913, made rape punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not more than 50 years, except where the offense was under subdivision 1 of section 261 of the Penal Code and the female was over the age of 16 years and under the age of 18 years, in which case it was provided that the punishment should be by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year or in the state prison for not more than 50 years, and in such case it was provided that the jury should determine by their verdict whether the punishment should be by imprisonment in the county jail or in the state prison. In 1923, by an Act approved May 8th of that year (Stats. 1923, p. 271), section 264 of the Penal Code was amended to read:

"264. Rape is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not more than fifty years, except where the offense is under subdivision one of section 261 of the Penal Code, in which case the punishment shall be either by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year or in the state prison for not more than fifty years, and in such case the jury shall recommend by their verdict whether the punishment shall be by imprisonment in the county jail or in the state prison; provided, that when the defendant pleads guilty of an offense under subdivision one of section 261 of the Penal Code the punishment shall be in the discretion of the trial court, either by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year or in the state prison for not more than fifty years."

That it is the duty of the jury in a case of rape coming within the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 261 of the Penal Code to determine by their verdict whether the punishment therefor shall be by imprisonment in a county jail or in a state prison is declared by the decisions in the cases of People v. Rambaud, 78 Cal. App. 685, 248 P. 954, and People v. Sachau, 78 Cal. App. 702, 248 P. 960, the decisions in which were filed on July 14, 1926, and in both of which hearings in the Supreme Court were denied.

In People v. Rambaud, supra, the verdict of the jury was as follows:

"We, the jury in the above-entitled cause, find the defendant, Louie Rambaud, guilty of the crime of rape, as charged, and recommend that he be punished by imprisonment in the county jail."

The trial court disregarded the recommendation of the jury and sentenced the defendant to imprisonment in state prison. On appeal the judgment was set aside and the cause was remanded to the lower court, with directions to resentence the defendant to the county jail of San Joaquin county for a period not exceeding that provided in the Code.

In People v. Sachau, supra, defendant was charged with rape under subdivision 1 of section 261 of the Penal Code, and the jury returned the following verdict:

"We, the jury in the above-entitled cause, find the defendant Joe A. Sachau, guilty of rape, a felony, as charged."

At the time fixed for pronouncing sentence, the defendant moved that he be discharged from custody on the ground that the verdict of the jury was a nullity. The motion was denied, and defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in state prison. Defendant appealed, assigning as reasons for a reversal of the judgment: (1) That the court did not fully instruct the jury as to the law applicable to the case; (2) that the jury did not return a verdict fixing the degree of the crime. The instructions given the jury in the trial court relative to the verdicts it might render were the same as those which are complained of in the case at bar. The judgment was reversed and a new trial ordered. At page 711, 78 Cal. App. (248 P. 964) of the opinion the court says:

"As we have said, the trial court in the case at bar did not instruct the jury as to what it should or should not do under the provisions of section 264 of the Penal Code. That section does not read that the jury may do so and so, but it is mandatory in form and directs that the jury shall make certain recommendations. The defendant was entitled to have the jury correctly instructed as to its powers with relation to the verdict. That it was incumbent upon the jury to make recommendations, that it might recommend either incarceration in the state prison or the county jail, and that this is a substantive right which may not be disregarded appears to us to be beyond question. These are matters which the Legislature has seen fit to intrust to the determination of the jury, whenever and wherever the female has given actual consent, though denied the power of giving legal consent. As said in many of the cases, the circumstances under which the crime mentioned in subdivision 1 of section 261 of the Penal Code is committed are such that the ends of justice are subserved by a modified degree of the extent of the punishment."

[2] The contention of respondent that the words, "punishable by imprisonment in the state prison," used in section 667 of the Penal Code, make the provisions in section 264 of the Penal Code relative to the duty of the trial jury to fix the place of punishment in rape cases under subdivision 1 of section 261 of the Penal Code inapplicable where there is a second conviction of the crime of rape cannot be sustained. The crime of rape under subdivision 1 of section 261 of the Penal Code is a felony or misdemeanor according to the determination of the trial jury, where trial by jury is had, or by the court where a plea of guilty is interposed. Rape of the class here charged, on a first conviction is punishable in state prison or county jail as the jury determines where there is a trial by jury, and the jury must determine the defendant shall be punished by imprisonment in state prison before he can be sentenced to a state prison on a conviction in this class of cases of rape. When the jury in such cases of rape fixes imprisonment in a county jail as the punishment, a defendant is not thereby convicted of a felony, and such conviction could not be pleaded against him in an information charging the commission of a subsequent offense.

[3] Unless it prescribes that upon a first conviction a defendant must serve some term in a state prison, the crime of which he is subsequently convicted does not come within subdivision 1 of section 667 of the Penal Code, requiring the imposition of a maximum imprisonment as has been imposed in this case, unless the jury determines on the second conviction that the defendant shall be punished by imprisonment in a state prison. The controlling factor making conviction of a subsequent offense necessarily punishable with a maximum term of imprisonment in state prison by reason of subdivision 1 of section 667 of the Penal Code is what is the maximum imprisonment in a state prison that could be inflicted on the conviction if it was a first conviction.

It is plain that, on a first conviction of rape under subdivision 1 of section 261 of the Penal Code, the maximum term of imprisonment, where there is a conviction by a jury, turns on what the jury recommends as to the place of punishment. There could be no term in state prison inflicted unless the jury so recommended.

It cannot be held that subdivision 1 of section 667 of the Penal Code either justifies or warrants a sentence for the maximum period of 50 years in cases of conviction of rape coming under subdivision 1 of section 261 of the Penal Code unless the trial jury recommends imprisonment in the state prison, or the trial judge so adjudges upon a plea of guilty.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

93 Cal. App. 256

SCOTT v. DONAHUE et al. (WRINKEL, Intervener; two cases).

COLLINS et al. v. SCOTT (two cases).

(Civ. 6202.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. July 25, 1928.

1. Attorney and client § 75(1)—Member of lodge, suing for himself and other members, had burden to show other members joined in application for substitution of attorneys (Code Civ. Proc. § 284).

Member of lodge of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, suing in behalf of himself and other members, on his application for substitution of attorneys, had burden of proof to show that parties associated with him as plaintiffs joined in the application, under Code Civ. Proc. § 284.

2. Abatement and revival § 41—Assignment of his interest by member of lodge, suing for himself and other members, deprived member of control of litigation (Code Civ. Proc. § 385).

Where member of lodge of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, suing in behalf of himself and other members to recover bonds belonging to lodge, had assigned his individual interest, he had no further control or direction of the litigation, and the other members were the real parties in interest, though action could still be continued in his name as nominal plaintiff, under Code Civ. Proc. § 385.

3. Attorney and client § 75(1)—Lodge member, suing for himself and other members, held without authority, after assignment of his individual interest, to substitute attorney adverse to others' interests (Code Civ. Proc. § 284).

Member of lodge of Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, suing in behalf of himself and other members to recover bonds claimed to be property of lodge, who assigned his individual interest in the litigation, held without power to substitute attorney adverse to interest of his associates, under Code Civ. Proc. § 284, since the other members were the real parties in interest.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Separate actions by Robert C. Scott, in behalf of himself and all members of the San Francisco Lodge No. 198 of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, against J. J. Donahue and others, in which J. S. Wrinkel intervened, and in which plaintiff applied to the superior court for orders substituting attorneys. From orders granting motions for substitution, G. D. Collins, Jr., as a member of San Francisco Lodge No. 198, and all of plaintiffs other than the plaintiff first named, appeal. Reversed, with directions.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellants and in pro. per.

J. H. Morris, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff brought two separate actions in the superior court on behalf of himself and other members of San Francisco Lodge No. 198 of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. One action was in replevin to recover bonds claimed to be the property of the members of the local lodge. The other action was in assumpsit to recover money which was also claimed to be the property of the members of this lodge. In both actions a complaint in intervention was filed on behalf of a minority of the members of the lodge claiming the property to be held in trust for the benefit of the minority alone. The actions were tried together, and resulted in judgments in favor of the intervener; the trial court finding that all the property was a trust fund held for the benefit of the minority members represented by the intervener. On appeal to this court, these judgments were reversed upon the ground that the property was found to be a trust fund for all the members of the local who were in good standing at the time of its dissolution. Scott v. Donahue (Cal. App.) 269 P. 455; Id. (Cal. App.) 269 P. 458. After the entry of the judgments in the superior court and pending the appeal therefrom, Scott applied to the superior court for an order substituting J. H. Morris as his attorney in place of George D. Collins, Jr. These motions were resisted, and in support of the opposition affidavits were filed from which it appears that Collins was employed by Scott at the instance of 259 other members of Local No. 198 to prosecute the actions to final determination upon a specified contingent fee to be paid him upon recovering the property, and to be paid solely out of the property recovered. It also appears that, prior to the attempted substitution of attorneys, Scott assigned all his interest in the property to an association known and designated as Local No. 52, and, that the other members of Local 198 in whose behalf the actions were commenced, as well as Scott's assignee, oppose the substitution of attorneys, and desire Collins to continue to represent them. Upon the oral argument, it was stated by counsel for respondents on the main appeals that the purpose of the substitution was to obtain an attorney who would consent to a dismissal of those appeals.

[1-3] In our opinion on the main appeals we pointed out that both actions were really tried upon the complaints in intervention, which transformed them into actions in equity for the purpose of discovering a trust fund. Though Scott was the nominal plaintiff upon the original complaints, he was in fact the representative of all the other members of Local 198, and upon the complaint in intervention he in effect became their representative as parties defendant. Respondent concedes that the other members of Local 198 are parties plaintiff with Scott and entitled to oppose his substitution of attorneys, but argue that this opposition could be voiced only by a formal meeting and ballot taken for that purpose. The burden of proof was on the respondent to show that the "client" referred to in section 284 of the Code of Civil Procedure (here the associates of Scott as parties plaintiff) had joined in the application for a substitution of their attorney. The only proof before the trial court on the hearing of the motions was that all the other members of the local as well as Scott's assignees opposed the substitution and desired Collins to continue to represent them. The other members of Local 198 were the real parties in interest. When Scott assigned his individual interest, the action could still be continued in his name (section 385, Code Civ. Proc.), and, having assigned his interest, he had no further control or direction of the litigation. Walker v. Felt, 54 Cal. 386. His attempt to defeat the interests of his associates by the substitution of an attorney adverse to their interests was a flagrant breach of good faith and wholly beyond his power. Walker v. Felt, 54 Cal. 386, 388.

The two orders appealed from are reversed, with directions to the trial court to set aside the orders and deny the motions.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

205 Cal. 54

CONSOLIDATED PEOPLE'S DITCH CO. et al. v. FOOTHILL DITCH CO. et al. ★
(Sac. 4027.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 24, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 20, 1928.

1. Waters and water courses ☞152(3)—Temporary injunction against defendants, who were extensively preparing to divert water, could not be denied because no water was then in river.

Plaintiffs, seeking to quiet title to use of waters of river, and to restrain threatened diversion of water by defendants, could not be denied temporary injunction on ground that preliminary injunction was not presently necessary, since no available water was then flowing in river, where defendants were engaged in expensive program of enlarging ditch for diverting water, and plaintiffs, if remaining passive until water rose in river, would run risk of charge of laches.

2. Waters and water courses ⚡152(3)—Order temporarily restraining defendants from proceeding with threatened diversion of water, to maintain status quo until trial, held not broader than demanded.

Where complaint to quiet title to use of water contained prayer for both specific and general relief, and sought preliminary injunction against diversion of waters by defendants, based on affidavits and counter affidavits stating specifically conduct of defendants against which plaintiffs sought immediate relief, and stating specific claim of right asserted by defendants, order relating to particular situation specifically presented, restraining defendants from proceeding with threatened diversion, which aimed to maintain status quo until trial on merits, was not broader than situation demanded.

3. Injunction ⚡163(7)—Trial court could modify restraining order, if during trial it developed that order was broader than demanded.

Trial court, issuing temporary injunction, would have power to modify order as justice required, if in its actual operation pendente lite it should develop that order was broader than situation required.

4. Action ⚡50(3)—Plaintiffs, having divergent water rights dependent on common source, could join to restrain wrongful interference working common injury.

Where rights of several plaintiffs to use of waters of river, though individual, derived from various unrelated situations and divergent as to method, amount, and time of exercise, were all dependent on their relation to common source of supply, any wrongful interference, which would work common injury, would entitle plaintiffs to unite in effort to enjoin.

5. Waters and water courses ⚡145—Irrigation district, acquiring stock in corporations owning water rights, could not divert water higher up in river than points of intake of corporations, in amount equaling stock interests acquired.

Where irrigation district purchased shares of stock in number of corporations owning rights of appropriation of waters of river, in which stockholders had only right in mutuality with other stockholders to have proportionate shares of distributable waters owned by corporation supplied to such stockholder through corporate instrumentalities, such district could not, by virtue of stockholder's interest, acquire such direct ownership in waters as would permit it to go on river to point above several ditches of such corporations and divert by means of expanded ditch amount of water equaling sum of several amounts of water, which it would have been entitled to have distributed to it proportionately with other stockholders of each corporation.

6. Waters and water courses ⚡232—State corporations have powers and duties provided by by-laws, Constitution, and state statutes.

Corporations owning water rights in river, organized under laws of state of California, are invested with powers and duties, with respect to both properties thereof and stockholders therein, as Constitution and statutes of California and by-laws made in accordance therewith provide.

7. Waters and water courses ⚡232—Corporations in which capital stock is transferable and stockholders are equitable owners of property entitled to proportionate distribution of water appropriated, held not water companies under statute (Civ. Code, § 324).

Corporations, a capital stock of which is transferable in ordinary manner, and owners of which are equitable owners of proportion of properties of each corporation which their respective number of shares bear to entire prescribed capital, and are equitably entitled to proportionate distribution of such waters as corporation acquires by appropriation, held not such corporations as are referred to in Civ. Code, § 324, stock holdings in which have been made appurtenant to certain lands and are transferable only with such lands.

8. Waters and water courses ⚡252—Stockholders in corporation owning water rights held owners of water rights only as equitably entitled to proportionate distribution thereof.

In corporations, capital stock of which is transferable in ordinary manner, and stockholders of which are equitable owners of proportionate share of property, and equitably entitled to proportionate distribution of waters appropriated by corporation, stockholders are owners of water rights possessed by corporation only to extent of being entitled to proportionate distribution of water.

9. Waters and water courses ⚡252—Stockholders in corporations organized to distribute water have definite right to proportion of distribution of water which is enforceable.

Stockholders in corporation organized chiefly for purpose of acquiring and distributing water have definite right to their proportion of distribution of such water when so acquired, and may individually enforce right by appropriate proceedings in event of denial on part of officers of corporation.

10. Waters and water courses ⚡252—Stockholder in ordinary corporation owning water rights has no right to receive water in any other manner or place than provided by corporation for distribution.

Where sole right of each stockholder in corporation owning water rights is right in mutuality with other stockholders of having proportionate share of each in distributable waters owned by corporation supplied to such stockholder through property owned by corporation, stockholder possesses no legal right to receive water in any other manner or place than those supplied by corporation in exercising full control over distribution of waters covered by its appropriation.

11. Waters and water courses ⚡247(2)—Threatened danger of confusion by asserted right of stockholders different from that of corporation would justify use of injunction.

Creation of threatened danger of inextricable discord and confusion among owners of water rights along every river in state by asserted right of each stockholder of corporation owning water rights to proportionate distribution of water in manner other than provided by corporation would in itself be sufficient reason for use of injunctive processes of court in way of prevention.

12. Waters and water courses — 145—Irrigation district's inability to receive in body distributable shares of water of various corporations in which it became stockholder could not justify unlawful diversion at another point in river.

Where irrigation district acquired stock in several corporations possessing water rights in river, and none of such corporations denied it right as stockholder to receive full quota of water which it was entitled to in due course of distribution of each stockholder's share of water belonging to each corporation, fact that irrigation district would not be able to combine its several distributable shares in water of river to which it was severally entitled, so as to be able to deliver same in body on its properties, could not justify its attempt to make combination in unlawful method, by diverting water at point higher up river than points of intake of corporations in which it became stockholder.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Action to quiet title to water rights by the Consolidated People's Ditch Company against the Foothill Ditch Company and others. From an order granting a temporary injunction, defendants Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation District and another appeal. Affirmed.

Sloss & Ackerman, of San Francisco, W. G. Irving, of Riverside, and Power & McFadzean, of Visalia, for appellants.

W. R. Bailey and Farnsworth, Burke & Maddox, all of Visalia, and Glenn L. Moran, of Tulare, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This action was commenced by the plaintiffs, 18 in number, to quiet the title of themselves and each of them in and to the use of the waters of the Kaweah river, located mainly in the county of Tulare, and to restrain a threatened diversion of such waters to the injury of said plaintiffs and each of them. The plaintiffs sought and obtained from the superior court in and for the county of Tulare a temporary injunction restraining certain of said defendants from proceeding to do the acts of diversion which it is averred in their verified complaint the said defendants are preparing to accomplish; the appeal or appeals herein being prosecuted on behalf of the defendants who were thus temporarily restrained. There are several appeals herein, owing to the state of the record, but they all present the same issue, viz. as to whether the trial court exceeded its power or abused its discretion in the issuance of such temporary injunction. The two defendants affected by such injunction are Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district and H. R. Huebert, the secretary and managing agent of said district.

The plaintiffs allege that each of their number, with the exception of the Tulare irrigation district, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of California; that the Tulare irrigation district is a political subdivision of the state of California, organized under the act providing for the organization and government of irrigation districts and the acts supplementary thereto; that the defendant Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district is also a political subdivision of said state, organized and governed under said act and the acts of the Legislature supplementary thereto; that the Kaweah river is, and from time immemorial has been, a natural water course, the waters of which flow from sources in the Sierra Nevada Mountains down into and through the county of Tulare; that at a certain point along said stream, known as "McKays Point," the river forks or divides into two channels, the northerly of which is thereupon known as St. Johns river, and the southerly of which as the Kaweah river; that these in their downward flow further divide and proceed under various names to discharge the waters of the river upon lower lands; that the various plaintiffs have long since acquired, some by appropriation and some by riparian ownerships, certain water rights in and to the flow of said river, and which they are wont to exercise by means of ditches which are connected with said river and the various channels thereof at indicated points below the point of its division at McKays Point; that the waters which these individual plaintiffs so own are diverted from the several channels of said river by means of these respective ditches, and are conveyed thereby to the point of ultimate consumption for irrigation, domestic, and other useful and beneficial purposes, the specific amount to which each of said plaintiffs is entitled to have and divert to such purposes being specifically set forth in said complaint.

The plaintiffs then set forth the existence of certain water rights in the defendants Foothill Ditch Company and Wallace Ranch Water Company, and to state the extent and limitations thereof. They then proceed to allege that the defendant Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district claims to have acquired from these last-named defendants certain rights to the use of a certain ditch known as Foothill ditch, formerly owned by Wallace Ranch Water Company, and which is connected with the Kaweah river at a point above McKays Point, and that, having done so, it is proceeding by the aid of teams and a large force of men to enlarge the carrying capacity of said ditch and the flumes and aqueducts thereof to an extent much greater than the limited use of the same for the diversion of the waters to which the former owners thereof were entitled would require, and to such a size as would enable the said Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district to divert a quantity of water from the Kaweah river so large as to seriously endanger the rights of these several plaintiffs in and to the waters of said river, and as would deprive them and each of them of their rightful share thereof to their and each of their irreparable injury; that the acts of the said defendants in so doing, and in excess of their right so to do, would, unless restrained by the court, ripen into an easement to the irreparable injury, not only of said plaintiffs, but also to the stockholders of the plaintiffs, who are the owners of individual parcels of land upon which the beneficial uses of the waters to which their respective corporations are entitled are being applied.

Wherefore the plaintiffs prayed for a judgment quieting their title to their respective water rights as against the said defendants' threatened and continued trespasses thereon, and further prayed for the issuance of a temporary injunction pending the trial and final determination of the action, restraining the defendants and each of them from proceeding with the threatened diversion of the waters of such river at the point and in the manner being attempted, and in excess of their and each of their right so to do. In pursuance of the latter prayer the plaintiffs presently moved the trial court for such temporary injunction, supporting their motion with the affidavit of one H. H. Holley, expanding the averments of their verified complaint. Upon the hearing on said motion the defendants presented counter affidavits, setting forth certain reasons why a temporary injunction should not presently issue in said action, and also and in addition thereto setting forth the basis of the asserted right of the defendant Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district, the detail of which will be stated later, to proceed with the enlargement of the said Foothill ditch and to the diversion thereby of certain specific amounts of water from the Kaweah river at the point of intake of said Foothill ditch with the said river.

The trial court proceeded to hear and determine said motion upon the showing thus presented by the respective parties, and to grant the same as to the defendants Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district and H. R. Huebert in accordance with the prayer of the plaintiffs therefor. The appeals herein are prosecuted by the two defendants injuriously affected thereby. Four notices of appeal were filed by these out of excess of caution, but they amount to a single assault upon the effective order which the trial court finally signed and entered, and the record is embraced in a single transcript and set of briefs.

[1] As to the several assaults which the appellants make upon the order in question, other than their main objection, founded upon their basic claim of right to do the acts thereby enjoined, but brief consideration is required. The appellants' contention that a preliminary injunction was not presently necessary for the plaintiffs' protection against a threatened loss of water, for the reason that at this season of the year no available water was flowing in the Kaweah river, we deem to have no merit. The present acts of said appellants, of which complaint was made, consisted of an active and expensive program of preparation through the enlargement of the intake and capacity of the Foothill ditch for whatever flow of water might occur in said river. In the presence of such preparations, the plaintiffs could not afford to remain passive until such time as the water rose in the river to a height which would render its actual diversion by these appellants possible, without risk of the charge of laches in allowing the appellants' costly outlays, based upon a claim of right to proceed. Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 136, 70 P. 663, 74 P. 766, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35; Conaway v. Yolo W. & P. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 266 P. 944.

[2, 3] As to the appellants' contention that the terms of the preliminary injunction granted are broader than and are inconsistent with the prayer of the complaint, it is also, we think, unmeritorious. The complaint as originally drawn is in the form of an action to quiet title, with a prayer for both specific and general relief. The case as made out upon the plaintiffs' motion for the issuance of a preliminary injunction is predicated upon affidavits and counter affidavits on behalf of the respective parties, setting forth specifically the acts and conduct of the defendants against which the plaintiffs seek immediate relief, and setting forth, also, the specific claim of right asserted and being acted upon by the defendants, and upon which they rely for a denial of the plaintiffs' motion. The order of the trial court relates to the particular situation as thus specifically presented and aims to establish and maintain a status quo until the trial of the cause upon its merits. We do not deem the order of the trial court to be broader than the situation requires, but if, in the actual operation pendente lite, it should develop that it is so, the trial court would have power to make such modification therein as justice to the litigating parties from time to time required.

[4] As to the appellants' contention that the plaintiffs have no common cause of action for injunctive relief, it is also without merit, for, while the rights of the several plaintiffs to the use of the waters of the Kaweah river are individual, derived from various and unrelated situations and divergent as to the method, amount, and time of their exercise, they are all, though perhaps not all equally, dependent upon their relation to a common source of supply, and any wrongful interference which would work a common injury would entitle them to unite in an effort to enjoin. Barton v. Riverside Water Co., 155 Cal. 509, 101 P. 790, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 331.

[5] We are thus brought to the appellants' main contention upon this appeal. The history of the litigation which has heretofore arisen involving the assertion on the part of the Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district of certain rights to the use of the waters of the Kaweah river is to be read in the cases of Lindsay-Strathmore Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 182 Cal. 315, 187 P. 1056, and Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 649, 242 P. 725. After the determination by the superior court upon a retrial of the main cause with respect to which the two above-cited decisions were made, the Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district, acting in the main through its secretary and manager, H. R. Huebert, in about the year 1925, began purchasing shares of stock in a number of corporations holding and owning accrued rights of appropriation of the water of the Kaweah river or its branches, and possessed of ditches for the diversion and distribution of such of said waters as each corporation appropriator had become entitled to among the owners and holders of the capital stock of each in proportion to their said ownerships and upon such lands as might be designated by the holders of such shares of stock. Most of the corporations with respect to which such stock purchases were made were plaintiffs in the former action and are plaintiffs in the present one.

Having thus acquired the amount of the capital stock of each of said corporations which its several purchases thereof represented, the Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district entered into a contract for the purchase of an interest in the upper portion of the so-called Foothill ditch, which had its original point of intake from the Kaweah river at a place upon said river above McKays Point and hence above the respective points of intake of the several ditches of the corporations, chiefly plaintiffs herein, stock in which had been made the subject of the aforesaid purchases of the Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district. Having thus become the owner of the several blocks of stock bought by it from former stockholders of these several corporations, with whatever rights of ownership inhered therein, and having thus acquired the right to utilize the Foothill ditch at and below its point of intake from the river, the Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district proceeded, at large outlays for men and materials, with the enlargement of said Foothill ditch at and below its said point of intake to the extent of a water-carrying capacity which, if permitted to be proceeded with, would have enabled it to take and divert from the waterflow of the Kaweah river an amount of water equaling in acre feet the aggregate amount of water to which, by virtue of its several stock ownerships in the said corporations acquired as above stated, it would have thus become entitled to have proportionately received in the course of the distribution by each of such corporations of the water to which it and its stockholders had become entitled by virtue of the appropriation thereof by each from the sum total of the waters of the Kaweah river.

The Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district insists, in this action and upon this appeal, that it is entitled by virtue of its aforesaid stockholder's interest in the stock of these several corporations to such a definite and direct ownership in the waters of the Kaweah river as would permit it to go upon said river to a point above the several points of intake of the several ditches of the several corporations in which it has become a stockholder, and there extract, and divert by means of said expanded Foothill ditch an amount of water equaling in the aggregate the sum of the several amounts of acre feet of water which it would otherwise have been entitled to have distributed to it, proportionately with the other stockholders of each of such corporations in the course of the utilization of the amount of water to which each corporation was entitled by virtue of its individual appropriation of the waters of the Kaweah river. We are unable to give our assent to such a contention.

As to the appellants herein it is conceded that H. R. Huebert, in his activities in the way of acquiring stock holdings in the several corporations in which the Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district has become a stockholder, and in whatever he has done in the way of expanding the capacity of the Foothill ditch, has been acting throughout merely as the agent and representative of said district, which is the only real and actual party in interest upon this appeal. It is also conceded that whatever rights the Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district is presently asserting in justification of its proposed diversion of water from the Kaweah river at the point of intake of the Foothill ditch are those which it has acquired by virtue of its recent purchases of portions of the capital stock of the several corporations in which it has thus become a stockholder. The several corporations, the stock of which it has thus purchased, and which are plaintiffs herein, are the following: Lakeside Ditch Company, Tulare Irrigation Company, Elk Bayou Ditch Company, Consolidated People's Ditch Company, Farmers' Ditch Company, Persian Ditch Company, Evans Ditch Company, Uphill Ditch Company, Fleming Ditch Company, and Modoc Ditch Company. The said appellant has also acquired and owns stock in the Goshen Ditch Company and the Wutchumna Water Company, which are not plaintiffs herein. The individual share holdings of said appellant in each of said corporations is not given, but it is asserted in the supporting affidavit of H. H. Holley, and is not controverted by the counter affidavits, that the shares of stock acquired by the said appellant in the several corporations would entitle the holder thereof to an aggregate of 100 cubic feet of water per second at certain stages of the flow of the Kaweah river, and that the appellant has enlarged the Foothill ditch to a sufficient capacity for diverting that amount of water at the head of said ditch.

It is also asserted in the affidavit of said Holley, but denied in the counter affidavits presented on behalf of the defendants, that "to attempt to segregate and take into the head of said Foothill ditch or into the head of any other ditch above the heads of the ditches owned by the plaintiffs herein any quantity of water purporting to be the amount of water represented by the ownership of certain shares of stock in said plaintiff ditch companies, would disrupt and interminably confuse the system of the administration of water rights on said Kaweah river and on its branches and continuations, and would make it impossible to administer the distribution of water from said river and from its branches and continuations to the respective persons and corporations who are entitled to such waters."

[6-8] The several corporations, in which the said appellant has thus become a stockholder to the extent above set forth, are corporations organized under the laws of the state of California, and as such are invested with the powers and duties with respect to both the properties thereof and the stockholders therein as the Constitution and statutes of California and the by-laws of such framed in accordance therewith provide. They are not, however, such corporations as are referred to in section 324 of the Civil Code, the stock holdings in which have been by the by-laws thereof made appurtenant to certain lands and are to be transferable only with such lands. The capital stock of the foregoing corporations is transferable in the ordinary manner provided by law, and the owners thereof are the equitable owners of that proportion of the properties of each of such corporations which their respective number of the shares of stock thereof bear to the entire subscribed capital stock of the corporation, and as such equitable owners of the properties of the corporation are also equitably entitled to the proportionate distribution of such waters as such corporation acquires by appropriation or otherwise for the various uses for which such waters are acquired. Such stockholders are in that sense and to that extent, but to none other, owners of the water and water rights which the corporation possesses, and over the distribution of which it exercises under general laws and under its particular by-laws full and exclusive control. The term "mutual water company," much stressed by the appellants herein as defining these several corporations, has no defined legal meaning which would serve to differentiate corporations, organized for the acquiring of water rights and the distribution of water, from other corporations owning and administering property for the benefit of their stockholders, nor have the stockholders in that class of corporations any other or further rights than have those of corporations in general with respect to the administration of the affairs and properties of the corporation.

[9-12] The stockholders in corporations organized chiefly for the purpose of acquiring and distributing water have, it is true, a definite right to their proportion of the distribution of such water when so acquired, and the cases are uniform to the effect that they may individually enforce that right by appropriate proceedings in the event of its evasion or denial on the part of the officers of the corporation. Miller v. Imperial Water Co., 156 Cal. 27, 103 P. 227, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 372; McDermont v. Anaheim, etc., Co., 124 Cal. 112, 114, 56 P. 779. There are cases, such as the case of Thayer v. California Development Co., 164 Cal. 117, 128 P. 21, and Hildreth v. Montecito Water Co., 139 Cal. 22, 72 P. 395, and Stratton v. Railroad Commission, 186 Cal. 119, 193 P. 1051, wherein the landowners of riparian rights have organized a corporation for the sole purpose of facilitating the distribution of their water upon their lands, and in so doing have expressly reserved the ownership of such water in themselves. But the corporations above named, and in each of which the main appellant herein is a stockholder, are none of them of that character. The sole right of each and every stockholder in each of said corporations is the right in mutuality with its fellow stockholders of having the proportionate share of each in the distributable waters owned by such corporation supplied to such stockholder through the instrumentalities, including the system of dams, intake, and ditches provided by the corporation for such proportionate distribution of the waters of the Kaweah river covered by its particular appropriation thereof, and it would seem to be too clear for argument that neither one nor any number of such stockholders would or could possess the legal right to take or to receive the amount of water to which such stockholder or stockholders may be entitled by another manner or means than those supplied by the corporation itself in the exercise of its full and legal control over the reception and distribution of such of the waters of the Kaweah river as is covered by its appropriation, and is receivable in the amounts and at the points of intake designated in the very acquisition of its appropriative rights in the water of such river.

To adopt the views of the main appellant herein as to its right, derived solely from its holdings of stock in these several corporations to go higher up the river than the points of intake of each and all of the corporations of which it is a stockholder, and establish there an intake and system of ditches sufficient in capacity to enable it to extract and carry away the amount of water represented in its aggregated holdings of corporate stock, would necessarily be to admit the possession of similar rights in each and every stockholder in each of said corporations to go and do likewise, and it is too plain for argument that such an admission would result in a state of inextricable discord and confusion among the owners of water rights of various sorts along the course, not only of the Kaweah river, but of every other river and stream of water in California where similar rights, by appropriation or otherwise, in the flowing waters of these streams are in the course of acquisition and exercise. The creation or threatened danger of such a consequence would of itself supply a sufficient reason for the use of the injunctive processes of the court in the way of its prevention.

It appears affirmatively herein that none of the several corporations in which the main appellant herein has become a stockholder has in any wise denied or interfered with the right of said appellant, as such stockholder, to receive the full quota of water which it is entitled to in the due course of the distribution of each stockholder's share of the water belonging to each said corporation. That said appellant may not be able to so lawfully combine its several distributive shares in the waters of the Kaweah river to which it is thus in severalty entitled as to be able to deliver the same in a body upon its orchard properties cannot be held to justify its attempt to make such combination in the clearly unlawful method which has given rise to the present action.

For the foregoing reasons, we are of the opinion that the order of the trial court, granting and issuing a temporary injunction herein, should be and the same is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; LANGDON, J.

205 Cal. 71

HAINES et al. v. COMMERCIAL MORTG. CO.
et al. (L. A. 10688.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 24, 1928.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 801(4)—Motion to dismiss appeal should be denied, where examination of record and appeal on its merits would be necessary to determine motion.

Motion to dismiss appeal as being sham and frivolous, and because points urged had been previously determined on a former appeal adversely to appellants, should be denied, where to determine allegations of motion it would be necessary to examine record and the appeal on its merits.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1126—Motion for affirmance should be granted, where appellants' briefs set out insufficient of record to justify reversal (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953c).

Motion for affirmance of judgment appealed from should be granted, where appellants failed to print in their opening brief, or any supplement thereof, in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953c, any part of record sufficient to justify a reversal of the judgment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Francis S. Haines and another against the Commercial Mortgage Company and others. From the judgment, and an order, plaintiffs appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal, and for affirmance of judgment. Motion to dismiss denied. Judgment and order affirmed.

See, also, 200 Cal. 609, 254 P. 956, 255 P. 805, 53 A. L. R. 725.

George L. Sanders and Hugh Day, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Schweitzer & Hutton and Frank S. Hutton, all of Los Angeles (B. R. Ware, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent Commercial Mortg. Co.

Ralph H. Spotts, Lawrence L. Otis, Charles I. Baker, and R. E. Parr, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Title Ins. & Trust Co.

Earl S. Patterson, of Los Angeles, for receiver Oscar Moss.

PER CURIAM. Respondents move to dismiss the appeal, and to affirm the judgment and order appealed from. The motions are identical, except as to the relief requested, and respectively specify as grounds therefor that the several points urged upon the appeal have heretofore been determined by this court adversely to the appellants' contentions, that the appeal is frivolous and prosecuted for purposes of delay, and that the appellants have not printed in their opening brief, or any supplement thereto, as required by section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, any part of the record sufficient to justify a reversal of the judgment and order.

[1, 2] The motion to dismiss must be denied, for to determine whether the appeal is frivolous and sham, and to ascertain whether the points urged by the appellants have already been decided by this court on a former appeal, would require an examination of the record and the appeal on its merits. Such examination will not be undertaken upon a motion of this character. However, it appears that the motion to affirm for failure to comply with the provisions of section 953c, supra, is good. The appellants' opening brief, consisting of but six pages, makes no attempt to set forth any part of the record. It contains but an outline of the appellants' several contentions upon appeal, from which it is difficult to even ascertain the facts giving rise to the litigation. Upon the authority of Dahlberg v. Dahlberg (Cal. Sup.) 260 P. 290, the motion to affirm is granted.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied. The judgment and order appealed from are, and each is, affirmed.

205 Cal. 73

CALIFORNIA RENDERING CO. v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. (L. A. 9028.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1923.

1. Street railroads §117(7)—Proof of high speed of electric car does not establish negligence per se.

Though proof of given high rate of speed of electric car in absence of statute or ordinance does not establish negligence per se, yet a car traveling at same high rate of speed is not necessarily operated in a manner free from negligence, and rate of speed which in some circumstances would be regarded as reckless might, in other circumstances, be held to be proper.

2. Street railroads §114(9)—Evidence held to sustain finding of negligence in operation of electric car colliding with truck.

In action for damage in collision of truck with electric car, evidence held to sustain finding of negligence in operation of car.

3. Street railroads §114(14)—Truck driver's evidence that he did not seasonably look in direction of approaching electric car held to establish contributory negligence as matter of law.

In action against electric railway for damages sustained when plaintiff's truck collided with electric car, evidence held to establish that driver of truck was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.

4. Negligence §136(9)—Contributory negligence is question of law where only one reasonable conclusion can be drawn from evidence.

Though, generally, question of contributory negligence is one for the determination of the trial court, question becomes one of law rather than of fact where only one reasonable conclusion can be drawn from the evidence.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Action by the California Rendering Company against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Adopting opinion of the District Court of Appeal, for which see 265 P. 1019.

Frank Karr, E. E. Morris, C. W. Cornell, and R. E. Wedekind, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Martin Forrest, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. After a further and more complete consideration of the opinion herein rendered by the District Court of Appeal, we are of the opinion that it correctly states the views of this court upon the questions therein determined. This opinion, written by Justice pro tem. Wood, and concurred in by Presiding Justice Conrey and Justice York, we hereby adopt as the opinion of this court, and it is as follows:

Plaintiff recovered a judgment for damages sustained when its truck collided with a car of the defendant company. The accident occurred at about 11:30 o'clock in the morning at a point at which the rails of defendant company cross Cypress road on the interurban electric line between Los Angeles and Redondo Beach. The defendant was operating two sets of tracks and the car in question, traveling from Los Angeles to Redondo Beach, struck the right rear wheel of the truck as it crossed the west-bound tracks. The driver of the truck, one Schultz, approached the intersection traveling on Cypress road in a northerly direction. At his right, the direction from which the car was coming, a number of cypress trees planted close to the road obstructed his view to such an extent that he could not see an approaching car from any point from which he would have to look through the trees. A line extended from the trees across Cypress road would be 32 feet from the nearest rail of the tracks on which the car was traveling. Except at the intersection defendant's cars were operated on its right of way. A wigwag was in operation, and the customary railroad sign had been erected. The territory about the intersection was described as "truck garden country," and the intersection itself was described by Schultz as a "regular country road crossing." He had frequently driven over it before the day of the accident.

[1, 2] Defendant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that it was negligent in the operation of the car, and cites Bilton v. Southern Pacific Co., 148 Cal. 443, 83 P. 440, and Larrabee v. Western Pacific Ry. Co., 173 Cal. 749, 161 P. 750, both holding that, in the absence of a statutory regulation on the subject, a given rate of speed is not negligence as a matter of law. These cases do not change the general rule that the question of negligence is for the trial court to determine in view of all the circumstances surrounding the collision. While it is well established that proof of a given high rate of speed, in the absence of a statute or ordinance, does not establish negligence per se, it is equally well established that a car traveling at the same high rate of speed is not necessarily operated in a manner free from negligence. Tousley v. Pacific Electric Co., 166 Cal. 457, 137 P. 31. A rate of speed which in some circumstances would be regarded as reckless might, in other circumstances, be held to be proper. Here there was evidence from which the court could reasonably infer that the car was traveling at a rate of speed 50 miles per hour at a crossing frequently used where the drivers of vehicles could not see approaching cars until they arrived at a point 32 feet from the point of danger; and that the whistle on the car was not blown until the truck in question reached this point. In view of these circumstances, it cannot be said that the findings of the trial court on this subject were not supported by the evidence.

[3, 4] Defendant further contends that the evidence establishes that the driver of the truck was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. This contention must be upheld. Schultz testified that he approached the intersection at the rate of about 5 miles per hour, and that he could stop his truck in about 2 or 3 feet. He further testified:

"I stopped about where that 'X' is [referring to the map], and looked down to the east of me. I could see down to the east approximately 300 feet. I did not see any car approaching, and then I started up and looked to my right as I proceeded ahead. * * * When I stopped I was right on a line with those trees and I could see about 300 feet down the track. That is as far as I could see. I looked to the west between the time I started up and the time I drove onto the track. I looked to the east again after I hit the track. When I looked to the east again one wheel was on the track. I did not look to the east between the time I started up and the time I hit the track. * * * When I first saw the car, the front wheels of my truck were on the track. At that time the car was about 300 feet away. Had I looked to my right, or to the east, at any time between the point X and the point A [point of collision], I suppose I would have been able to see this car coming. There was nothing to obstruct my view."

While as a general rule the question of contributory negligence is one for the determination of the trial court, it has been frequently held that where the only reasonable conclusion that can be drawn from the evidence is that the driver was negligent the question becomes one of law rather than one of fact. In Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 P. 651, it is said:

"But the cases arising from injuries suffered at railroad crossings have been so numerous, and upon certain points there has been such absolute accord, that what will constitute ordinary care in such a case has been precisely defined."

The rules applicable to the present case are the same as those governing collisions at crossings of steam roads. New York L. Oil Co. v. United Railroads, 191 Cal. 96, 215 P. 72; Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., 192 Cal. 357, 219 P. 992. In Griffin v. L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 P. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842, it was impossible for the driver of the automobile "to get a clear view of the railway track to the south until he passed a corner of the fence 17 feet from the track. * * * If, therefore, he had stopped at a point where his head would have been 16 feet from the track there would have been 5 feet between the front of his car and the zone of danger from a locomotive and he could have obtained from that point an unobstructed view of the rails for a distance of approximately 1200 feet. Instead of stopping to look when he reached this first available place for seeing, Mr. Griffin chose to bring his automobile to a standstill at a point about 35 feet east of the track where it would be impossible to see a train approaching from the south. At this point he stopped to listen and to look for smoke. Hearing no noise and perceiving no smoke he started to cross the track." In holding the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, the court said:

"From these facts it is clear that Mr. Griffin neglected the simplest and plainest precautions for the safety of himself and the others in the automobile. It is the duty of a traveler on a highway approaching a railroad crossing to use ordinary care in selecting a time and place to look and listen for coming trains."

In Jones v. Southern Pacific Co., 34 Cal. App. 629, 168 P. 586, the court said:

"When the taxicab reached the property line of Webster street there was a space of 30 feet in which the plaintiff had opportunity to look for an approaching train. He testified that he looked for a train at this point, also when he passed the curb line, at which point he would have been 18 feet from the nearest rail of the track, with an unobstructed view for many blocks of the approaching train. * * * Plaintiff must look at a point where such looking would be effective. * * * If plaintiff had looked for a train where he said he looked, he must have seen it, for the uncontradicted testimony is that he had a clear view, and that the train was in sight with headlight burning. If he did see it, he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in attempting to cross. If he did not see it, it was because he did not look, and in that case he likewise was guilty of contributory negligence."

The facts in the case at bar establish contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff as positively as in either of the two cases last referred to. By the testimony of the driver it was shown that he traveled a distance of 32 feet (making allowance for the distance between the driver's seat and the front of the truck) during which he had an unobstructed view of the approaching car. During this time he either failed to look to the right at all or if he did so he must have looked heedlessly. In either case his negligence is apparent. New York L. Oil Co. v. United Railroads, 191 Cal. 96, 215 P. 72, supra. He cannot be cleared of the charge of negligence by a showing that he stopped the truck on a line with the trees and there looked to the right. It was his duty to look for approaching cars at such point and in such a manner as would enable him to determine if he could proceed in safety. No circumstances were shown in evidence which tended to excuse him from discharging this duty. His failure so to do, although ample opportunity was afforded, must inevitably lead to the conclusion that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

The judgment is reversed.

205 Cal. 82

PEAK v. SPITZER et ux. (S. F. 12456.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 29, 1928.

Vendor and purchaser — 186—Purchaser's failure to make initial payment, on receipt of report of title as required, held not excused, because report disclosed mortgage.

Where land contract, originally providing for down payment of $1,000 by purchaser, was changed by him before it was signed, so as to recite that initial payment should be made "upon report of title," held, that purchaser was not excused from making such payment, on receipt of report of title, by fact that report showed a $9,000 mortgage against premises, and that vendor's wife who had interest therein had not signed contract, and he was therefore not entitled to specific performance after receiving notice of vendor's election to rescind because of his failure to make required initial payment; time being of essence of contract.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by George Peak against Felix H. Spitzer and wife. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Milton Marks, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHENK, J. Appeal from a judgment of nonsuit in an action for specific performance.

The defendants were the owners as tenants in common of an improved lot in St. Francis Wood, San Francisco. The plaintiff desired to purchase the property, and, under date of October 19, 1926, signed and delivered to the defendant Felix H. Spitzer a written offer, as follows:

"$16,000, payable $1,000 down, $1,000 January 1, 1927, balance payable at $100 or more per month. * * * I will deposit $1,000 with the City Title Insurance Company and order of search immediately."

On the same day the plaintiff presented to the defendant Felix H. Spitzer, for his signature, a document in the form of a receipt and contract of sale and purchase of said property. The opening paragraph of this document recited:

"Received from Geo. Peak, hereinafter described as the purchaser, the sum of one thousand dollars."

The terms of purchase were stated or set forth in the letter of October 19, 1926. The document was a stock form of receipt, purchase, and sale, but it was modified in the handwriting of the plaintiff, before it was signed by the defendant Felix H. Spitzer, so as to provide that "initial payment to be paid direct to seller upon report of title." This modification tended to confuse the provisions of the contract as to the terms of payment. It is apparent from the whole record, however, that it was the intention of the parties that a down payment should be made by the plaintiff at least as soon as a report of the title should be received from the title company. This report was issued by the title company under date of October 25, and was received by the plaintiff on October 30, 1926, but the initial payment was never made by him. On November 6th following the plaintiff received from the defendant Felix H. Spitzer a letter rescinding the agreement, on the ground that the initial payment had not been made as provided in the contract; that the plaintiff had promised to be at the office of the defendant on November 4th and provide for the initial payment, but had not done so. On the same day the plaintiff notified said defendant by letter that he intended to fulfill the terms of his contract, that the report of title disclosed defects in the title, and inferring that he was required by the contract to make no payment thereunder until he received a "clear title report." The defects referred to appear to have been that the record showed that the defendant's wife had an interest in the property and she had not signed the contract, and that there was a $9,000 mortgage against the premises.

The plaintiff contends that under the contract he was to receive a title report showing title in the defendant Felix H. Spitzer, free and clear of all incumbrances, before he was obligated to put up any money. He cites many cases to the effect that, when an abstract of title or a certificate of title is called for, the same must show clear title in the vendor, unless the contract of purchase specifically provides otherwise. It may be assumed that generally such is the law, but that rule is not controlling here. The original form of the contract here in question provided for a down payment, which was never made. It would be unreasonable to say that by the modification of the printed form of contract the parties intended that the seller should clear the title of the $9,000 mortgage before the purchaser should be required to pay any money whatsoever. Under the facts shown by the record it is reasonable to conclude, as the trial court did, that the report of title issued and delivered to the plaintiff satisfied the requirements of the contract, and that, as time was made the essence, the plaintiff had not made out a case.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.

GROSS v. HAZELTINE et al. (L. A. 10722.)★

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 24, 1928.

Rehearing Granted and Submission Order Set Aside Sept. 20, 1928.

1. New trial §116(2)—Notice of intention to move for new trial, having been filed before receiving notice of entry of judgment, held timely (Code Civ. Proc. § 659).

Where defendants filed notice of intention to move for new trial before receiving notice of entry of judgment, defendants not having filed notice of appeal or taken any other step that might be construed as waiving service of notice of judgment entry, held that new trial proceedings were timely, under Code Civ. Proc. § 659.

2. New trial §139—Parties by conduct cannot waive court's jurisdiction to pass on new trial dependent on notice (Code Civ. Proc. § 660.)

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 660, providing that service of notice of the entry of judgment is necessary to start the time running within which a trial court may pass on new trial proceedings, the parties cannot by their conduct waive the court's jurisdiction in respect thereto.

3. Appeal and error §345(1)—Appeal taken before termination of new trial proceedings, where notice of intention to move for new trial had been made, but motion never was, held timely (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 660, 939).

Defendants gave notice of intention to move for new trial before being served with notice of entry of judgment, and before they filed notice of appeal. Motion for new trial was not made, and defendants thereupon filed notice of appeal from the judgment. Held, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 660, providing that service of notice of the entry of judgment is necessary to start time running within which a trial court may pass on new trial proceedings, that appeal was timely, under section 939, providing for taking of appeal from judgment within 30 days after termination in trial court of new trial proceedings.

4. Appeal and error §345(1)—Bill of exceptions on appeal, filed before termination of new trial proceedings, held timely, no way existing to determine limitation (Code Civ. Proc. § 650).

Bill of exceptions on appeal, filed before termination of new trial proceedings, held timely, under Code Civ. Proc. § 650, providing for filing bill of exceptions within 10 days after notice of decision denying motion for new trial or other termination of the new trial proceedings, for reason that there is no way to determine limit of time within which bill should have been prepared and served, in the absence of termination.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by D. Gross against C. E. Hazeltine and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. On motions to dismiss appeal and to exclude bill of exceptions from the record. Motions denied.

Leonard, Surr & Hellyer, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

Harry W. Horton, of El Centro, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1-3] Respondent presents a motion to dismiss the appeal herein and to exclude the appellants' bill of exceptions from the record. The action was brought to recover a money judgment and to foreclose a mechanic's lien for services performed. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff on December 18, 1926. Thereafter, and on January 3, 1927, the defendants filed their notice of intention to move for new trial, but a motion for new trial was never actually made. In passing, it might be said that the respondent failed to serve notice of the entry of judgment, and the new trial proceedings were therefore timely instituted, under the provisions of section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the appellants at the time had not filed their notice of appeal, or taken any other step that might be construed as a waiver of service of notice of the entry of judgment. The notice of appeal from the judgment was filed March 9, 1927.

Respondent now moves to dismiss the appeal, upon the ground that it was not taken within the time prescribed by law. The motion is without merit. Under the provisions of section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure service of notice of the entry of judgment is necessary to start the time running within which a trial court may pass upon new trial proceedings. The parties cannot by their conduct waive the court's jurisdiction in this respect. Strehlow v. Mothorn, 197 Cal. 112, 239 P. 850; Moore v. Strayer, 175 Cal. 171, 165 P. 530. In view of the respondent's failure to serve notice of the entry of judgment, it cannot now be said that the time within which the trial court might have passed upon the new trial proceedings has expired. This being so, the appeal is within time, for section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the taking of an appeal from a judgment within 30 days after termination in the trial court of new trial proceedings.

However, even if it be assumed that notice of entry of judgment had been served in the instant case on the very day judgment was entered, it would avail the movant nothing, for the trial court would have had 2 months thereafter, or until February 18, 1927, within which to dispose of the new trial proceedings. Section 660, supra. The appellants, under section 939, supra, would then have 30 days additional or until March 20, 1927, within which to prosecute their appeal. The appeal, having been taken on March 9, 1927, was, therefore, well within time, and the motion to dismiss will have to be denied.

[4] The motion to exclude the bill of exceptions from the record is grounded upon the assertion that the proposed bill was not served within time. In our opinion this motion must also be denied, for section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, among other things, for the preparation and service of a proposed bill of exceptions within 10 days after notice of decision denying motion for new trial or other termination of the new trial proceedings. If, as already shown, there has been no termination in this case of the new trial proceedings there is no way to determine the limit of time within which the proposed bill should have been prepared and served. Moreover, the respondent's motion, made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to vacate the settlement and allowance of the bill of exceptions was denied by the trial court, and apparently no appeal has been prosecuted from the order denying the requested relief.

For the foregoing reasons, the motions to dismiss and to exclude the bill of exceptions from the record are and each is denied.

205 Cal. 65

ATLANTIC FISH CO. v. DOLLAR S. S. LINE.
(S. F. 12788.)★

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 24, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 20, 1928.

Shipping Ⓒ—104—Modification of contract of shipment being without consideration, before acted on by carrier, revocation thereof left original contract in full force (Civ. Code, § 1605).

Plaintiff, as purchaser of fish, arranged for seller to contract for its carriage by defendant from Boston to San Francisco under refrigeration. Seller made contract. Refrigeration system having become disabled, plaintiff agreed to modification of contract, allowing transportation under ventilation only. Before ship started voyage, plaintiff revoked change, by notifying defendant directly. Defendant's agent assured plaintiff refrigeration system would be repaired, and fish would be carried as originally contracted. However, they were transported under ventilation, which resulted in spoilage. Held, modification of contract was without consideration, since not acted on by defendant to its detriment, in view of Civ. Code, § 1605, and therefore revocation of change restored original contract to full effect.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. T. B. Warne, Judge.

Action by the Atlantic Fish Company, a copartnership composed of H. M. Colety and others, against the Dollar Steamship Line. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff. A new trial was granted, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Superseding former opinion in 261 P. 729.

Milton L. Schmitt and Andros, Hengstler & Dorr, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Nathan H. Frank, Irving H. Frank, and Keith Ferguson, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This is an action to recover damages for detriment to a shipment of dried fish. The complaint pleads a contract between the parties whereby defendant agreed to carry said shipment under refrigeration from Boston to San Francisco, and its failure through negligence so to do, as a result of which plaintiff sustained damages in the sum of $1,738.51. The answer denies these averments, and sets up as a defense a contract to carry said goods under ventilation only. Made an exhibit thereto is a bill of lading to this effect, with the requirements of which faithful compliance is pleaded. Verdict and judgment were for plaintiff in the amount claimed, but upon motion of defendant a new trial was granted predicated upon alleged insufficiency of the evidence. Defendant offered no testimony. The facts are these:

In July, 1924, plaintiff through correspondence, purchased from Gorton-Pew Fisheries Company, Limited, of Gloucester, Mass., 300 cases of codfish, upon the express understanding that the goods would be shipped under refrigeration to Boston, there to be transhipped under like refrigeration to the purchaser at San Francisco on board the steamship President Hayes, one of defendant's vessels, which touched at Boston and New York and was scheduled to sail about August 12, 1924. On August 4th and 8th space was reserved on said vessel by the shipper for plaintiff, which reservation read as follows:

"Please arrange to store under refrigeration at a temperature of 35-40 degrees, sending forward on collect basis, sending bills of lading to us at Gloucester. * * * Will you kindly make notation on the bill of lading showing at what temperature these goods are stored?"

(269 P.)

On August 8th the goods were shipped to Boston, and on or about August 12th they were received by defendant on board the President Hayes, and bill of lading was issued and delivered to the shipper in accordance with instructions and providing for shipment under refrigeration.

Following the issuance and delivery of said bill of lading, and after the goods were on board and bound for San Francisco, via New York, to wit, on August 13, 1924, the shipper wired plaintiff at San Francisco as follows:

"Dollar Line advise refrigerator compartment on Hayes disabled. Unable to handle shipment under refrigeration. Goods now on board bound for New York. Can store where it will receive ventilation. Shall we authorize or have shipment held at New York for next steamer? Answer quick."

In reply to this message plaintiff wired on August 14th:

"Authorize Hayes shipment to come through under ventilation."

The last-mentioned wire was dispatched by Mr. Colety, Jr., of the firm of plaintiff, a copartnership. Mr. H. M. Colety, the senior member of the firm, was absent at the time, but returned the same evening, and the next morning, August 15, 1924, at 9 a. m., he called at the office of defendant in San Francisco and addressed himself to a Mr. Herman in the freight office, through whom he had previously transacted considerable business with defendant. He displayed the message he had received and the reply that had been sent, and stated to Mr. Herman that at that season of the year these goods could not be safely shipped through the Panama Canal under ventilation, but in order to preserve them it was necessary that they be shipped under refrigeration, whereupon, after consultation, Mr. Herman stated to Mr. Colety, Sr., that the refrigeration plant on the President Hayes would be repaired in New York and the goods would be shipped under refrigeration as theretofore ordered.

Upon various occasions subsequent to said date and prior to the arrival of said shipment Mr. Colety was assured by the said Herman that the goods were en route under refrigeration. Some 10 days after the shipment left, plaintiff received in the mail from the shipper a bill of lading, which showed that the goods were coming under ventilation. Mr. Colety again saw Mr. Herman, and was assured that this bill of lading had come from the Boston office of defendant, as his arrangements for refrigeration had been made with the New York office; hence there was no cause for alarm, for the goods were coming under refrigeration as promised. At the time of the first conversation between Mr. Colety and Mr. Herman, the steamer was either on the high seas or about to land at the port of New York, where she was to remain for several days before weighing anchor bound for San Francisco.

On August 15, 1924, the shipper wrote defendant's agent at Boston as follows:

"Agreeable to your request we are returning bill of lading, No. 1084, covering * * * salt fish. * * * We also wish to confirm our conversation while in your office yesterday, instructing you to forward both of these shipments via the steamship President Hayes, between decks where the goods will receive ventilation. We are writing the consignees to-day explaining to them fully just why it was necessary to take these steps, and feel sure that they will see it in the right way. Please mail us corrected bill of lading at your early convenience, so that we can arrange to forward them to our customers."

From this letter it is clear that the date borne by the bill of lading is erroneous, it being dated August 14, 1924, for the first bill of lading could not have been corrected or amended until subsequent to August 15, 1924. It is also apparent that the only difference between the bill of lading first issued and the amended or second bill of lading was as to the manner of shipment. The first bill called for refrigeration, and the other for "cool stowage—not refrigeration."

We regret to say, after careful study of the record, that we believe that neither counsel has given consideration to the controlling legal problem presented thereby. The efforts of counsel have been directed towards discussion of the sufficiency of the evidence to support novation claimed to arise from the oral arrangement made between Mr. Colety and Mr. Herman. They have also discussed at great length the rule against parol testimony to vary the terms of a written contract. An extended discussion has also been made of the question as to whether or not local statutes and rules of law are applicable, the contract being maritime, and of other questions.

Under our view of the case, as above intimated, these questions are not involved. When defendant issued to the shipper for the benefit of plaintiff its first bill of lading, providing for refrigeration, and accepted said goods under such contract on board its vessel, it then and there covenanted on sufficient consideration to carry said goods from Boston to San Francisco under refrigeration. The subsequent consent of plaintiff to a change in the character of the stowage, secured through the wires of August 13 and 14, was revoked or withdrawn before the consent to modification had been acted upon and a new bill of lading issued. The consent to the modification of the former valid and already issued bill of lading was without any consideration to support it, until it had been acted upon by the carrier and was, therefore, subject to withdrawal at any time before the defendant had suffered any detriment resulting therefrom. In other words, plaintiff received no consideration for the consent secured from it, and defendant suffered no detriment on account thereof. The senior member of the firm, acting for plaintiff, withdrew such consent within 24 hours after same was given, and clearly before the change was acted upon by defendant to its detriment. Therefore the first bill of lading, from and after its issuance, remained the true contract between the parties, and defendant was required thereunder to transport said goods under refrigeration. Having failed to do so, the verdict and judgment against it were proper. Civ. Code, § 1605; Western Lith. Co. v. Vanomar Producers, 185 Cal. 366, 369, 197 P. 103.

There being no basis for exercise of the discretion of the trial court, the order granting a new trial is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

205 Cal. 78

WHALEN v. STRESHLEY. (Sac. 3983.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1928.

Master and servant § 230(6)—Sixteen year old boy, injured while riding employer's mule for amusement, held negligent.

Plaintiff, a boy 16 years of age, was hired by defendant as a hay hand. He was skilled in riding unbroken horses, and knew it to be dangerous. He attempted to ride his employer's unbroken mule for his own amusement, and was injured. Held, that plaintiff was guilty of negligence, as a matter of law.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by Dennis Whalen, Jr., by D. E. Whalen, his guardian ad litem, against J. M. Streshley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Barry & Barry, N. J. Barry, and Hardin Barry, all of Susanville, for appellant.

Ervin S. Best, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against him for $5,000, damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while riding an "unbroken" mule upon a stock ranch owned by the defendant.

J. M. Streshley, the defendant, was engaged in the business of conducting a ranch, upon which he raised hay and cattle, in Willow Creek valley, Lassen county, Cal., and employed a number of people in this work. In July, 1924, the plaintiff was employed by said defendant to work on the ranch as a hay hand by the day. For some time prior to August 10, 1924, the hay hands and other employees of defendant had been riding calves, steers, cows, and unbroken horses for their own amusement. To aid them in this pastime, two of the employees, after their working hours and on Sundays, had built a chute for putting the "rigging" on the stock intended to be ridden. This chute opened into a large corral, into which the animals, with their riders, were turned from the chute. Different members of the hay crew rode cattle and range horses frequently after supper and on Sundays.

Plaintiff rode with the others, and was present and watched the others ride. Among the boys the plaintiff was considered a good rider. He states that he rode well, and that he took great pride in riding, and that on the occasion of his injury he "just wanted to ride and show off." At the time of the accident he was a boy 16 years of age, and had had experience in riding cattle and unbroken horses. The riding was outside the scope of his employment and was for his own entertainment and amusement. The defendant had been present on some of the occasions, when his employees had had these "shows," which were "handled" by Johnny Rhodes, one of the employees.

On the day of the accident, Sunday, August 10, 1924, cattle were brought into the corral and were ridden by plaintiff and other employees, and later plaintiff asked one of the younger boys to go into the field and get some horses for riding. This was done, and several of the employees rode the horses, the plaintiff riding a bay yearling from the chute. This animal failed to "buck," as expected and desired by the riders, but made a run through the fence. Plaintiff grabbed the fence as the animal went through and escaped injury. The defendant was present and watched the performance. Other horses were used, and later a mule was put into the chute for riding. According to the undisputed testimony, one of the employees, called "Rusty," was to ride this animal; but, while he had gone to the barn for a drink, plaintiff decided to ride the mule. He adjusted the "bull rigging" to satisfy himself, and then mounted the mule freely and voluntarily, and without any persuasion from any one. He knew the mule was put into the chute to make him "buck." He expected him to buck. He had seen many animals ridden from the chute in the same manner; he knew this mule was "unbroken"; and, according to the special verdict of the jury, he had had sufficient experience to know the danger of riding this mule.

Plaintiff shouted to turn the mule out and proceeded to ride him around the corral. The mule was crippled, and walked upon the side of one hoof. The mule "bucked" for a time, and plaintiff spurred him and urged him on. The mule soon ceased to "buck," and attempted to get away by jumping over the gate leading into the corral, but caught his foot in the gate and fell to the ground, throwing plaintiff over his head. The plaintiff struck his head on the ground and broke both jawbones. Plaintiff was experienced in riding unbroken horses, and knew the conditions surrounding such a hazardous pastime.

Special interrogatories were submitted to the jury, upon which it found: That the defendant had employed the plaintiff to work on the ranch during the hay season; that plaintiff was not performing any service for defendant as a hay hand, or within the scope of such employment, at the time of his injury; that the riding of the mule was no part of his duty as an employee; that the defendant did not direct the plaintiff to ride the mule; that defendant was present at the time of plaintiff's injury, and knew he was going to ride the mule; that defendant knew the mule was vicious; that plaintiff had sufficient experience to know the danger of riding the mule; that he rode the mule of his own free will; and that he had not been told that he could not ride the stock on the ranch. Notwithstanding these special findings, the jury returned a general verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $5,000.

There are some errors in the record with reference to the ruling on the demurrer, directed to the improper joinder of causes of action and other matters, but we shall not consider these matters, because we are of the opinion that, under the authorities in this and other jurisdictions, the facts found by the jury demand a judgment for the defendant.

The plaintiff in the instant case was not a child of tender years, but an alert, active, intelligent boy 16 years of age. He was experienced in the sport in which he engaged, and took the chance of injury because of the exhilaration of the exercise and the skill in riding it developed. In the case of Consolidation Coal Co. v. Pratt, 169 Ky. 494, 184 S. W. 369, L. R. A. 1916D, 1229, the court stated: "The kicking propensity of the mule is a matter of common knowledge." And after discussing the facts of the case, which showed that the injured man had placed himself in a position to be kicked by a mule, and had then lashed the mule, the court stated: "An employee cannot court danger by inviting and provoking a mule to kick him, and then recover of the master for a consequent injury."

In the instant case the injury occurred outside of the scope of the employment and on a holiday, when the plaintiff, with sufficient mentality, experience, and maturity to understand the possible consequences of his acts, mounted an unbroken mule, spurred, frightened, and angered it, until it attempted to leap over a gate. His action was his free and voluntary act. Unless the case falls within the doctrine of the turntable cases—a doctrine which this court and others have refused to extend—the plaintiff may not recover, and we are of the opinion that there is no analogy between those cases and the instant one.

In the case of Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345, 47 P. 113, 598, 56 Am. St. Rep. 106, this court refused to extend the rule of the turntable cases to a pond of water, and characterized that rule as an exceptionally harsh rule of liability. In the case of Studer v. Southern Pac. Co., 121 Cal. 400, 53 P. 942, 66 Am. St. Rep. 39, a boy of 12 years of age was held guilty of contributory negligence, barring a recovery for personal injuries, when he attempted to cross between the cars of a train which was blocking a crossing. The court said:

"The same act which would be negligence in an adult may not be such if done by a child; but a child is required to exercise the same degree of care that would be expected from children of his age, or which children of his age ordinarily exercise, * * * and the court is as fully authorized as a jury to determine what this degree of care is. Children, as well as adults, should use the prudence and discretion which persons of their years ordinarily have, and they cannot be permitted with impunity to indulge in conduct which they know, or ought to know, to be careless."

It is true, of course, that the plaintiff in this case was not a trespasser, but nevertheless the defendant was not an insurer of his safety, and under the circumstances presented by the record we think the plaintiff was guilty of negligence, as a matter of law, proximately causing his injury.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

205 Cal. 84

RITTERBUSCH et al. v. CITY OF PITTSBURG, and eighteen other cases.★
(Sac. 3860.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 30, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 27, 1928.

1. Waters and water courses ⇨209—Evidence held sufficient to support recovery against city for death from typhoid fever, caused by city officials negligently serving unchlorinated impure water through mains.

Evidence that epidemic of typhoid fever and dysentery was caused by city officials negligently allowing unchlorinated water to be served from an impure source of supply through city water mains to inhabitants held sufficient to justify judgment against city for death from typhoid fever.

2. Waters and water courses ⇨209—Evidence of epidemic, in actions against city to recover for typhoid fever caused by city water, held admissible.

Several actions were brought against the city of Pittsburg to recover damages for deaths and illness caused by typhoid fever contracted through use of impure and unchlorinated city water supply. It was stipulated that all testimony introduced in any one trial should be considered as having been introduced in all of them, so far as the same might be applicable to each case. Held, that admitting evidence of typhoid fever epidemic was not error, since evidence in each case, showing individual plaintiff was but one of large number of persons similarly affected, would be competent to show that each affection was traceable to a common source.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Action by Conradine Ritterbusch and others against the City of Pittsburg, heard with eighteen other cases. Judgments for plaintiff in each case, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. N. Wolfe, of Pittsburg, and J. E. White and Wm. J. Locke, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Ostrander & Carey, of Oakland, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This action was commenced by the plaintiff Conradine Ritterbusch and her two children on February 23, 1921, against the defendant, city of Pittsburg, a municipal corporation of the sixth class, to recover damages for the death of Carl D. E. Ritterbusch, husband and father, respectively, of the plaintiffs, alleged to have been caused through typhoid fever contracted by reason of the negligence of the said defendant in permitting its municipal water supply furnished to the inhabitants of said city to become impure, unwholesome, unpotable, polluted, and dangerous to the health of its inhabitants drinking and using said water. On the date of the commencement of said action 20 other separate actions were commenced against the same defendant, based upon the same statement of facts, and differing only in the elements of damage and amount of recovery. The defendant, upon being duly served, moved in each of said actions to have the same transferred to another county for trial, and upon stipulation of the parties plaintiff each and all of said actions were transferred for trial to the county of San Joaquin, and on the 24th day of October, 1922, were called for trial in the superior court in and for said county before the court sitting without a jury, whereupon it was further stipulated that each of said cases should be separately tried, but that all testimony introduced in any one of the trials should be considered as having been introduced in all of them, so far as the same might be applicable to each case, and subject to all legal objections that might be urged against such testimony, had it been originally offered in the particular case.

Nineteen of said cases were then tried successively. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony in each case, the defendant made a motion for nonsuit, which motion the court denied. At the conclusion of the trial, each of said cases was submitted for decision, and the court, on April 30, 1923, filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law in each of said 19 cases, and judgment was thereupon entered in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendant in each of said cases. A motion for new trial in each being denied, the defendant appealed from the judgment in each and all of said 19 cases, and by stipulation of the parties and order of this court these 19 appeals have been consolidated and are to be considered upon a single transcript and set of briefs. The main case to be considered upon these appeals is that of Ritterbusch v. City of Pittsburg. In the other cases the respondents are, respectively, Ralph R. Laederick, Agnes Ginty, D. F. Bothwell et al., Thomas F. Shannon, Harold De Haven, John G. Bishop, Patricia Haynes, Robert Bishop, James Griffin, Catherine Jane Shannon, Rosalia Haynes, Edgar M. De Haven, John G. Bishop, Jr., Ursula Haynes, Olive Haynes, Thomas Bishop, Phillip Grimm, H. H. Haynes, and the defendant in each is the city of Pittsburg.

[1] The main question to be considered upon these appeals is that of the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings and conclusions of law in each of these cases. There are also certain errors of law alleged to have been committed by the trial court in the admission of evidence in the main case, applicable to all the other cases, and also certain alleged errors affecting one or other of the individual appeals.

The city of Pittsburg has for some years maintained and operated a municipal water supply system for the purpose of furnishing water for domestic uses and drinking purposes to the citizens and inhabitants of said city, for which it charges and collects water rates. The water which the city thus supplies was derived from a certain slough putting off from the San Joaquin river at a point opposite said city and known as New York slough. It is an undisputed fact in these cases that this water in its natural state in said slough is not suitable nor safe for human consumption without being first treated by a purifying process, for the purpose of ridding it of typhoid and other bacteria which render it dangerous to the health of consumers. In order to purify said water for its aforesaid proprietary uses the city of Pittsburg, prior to the year 1920, established what is known as a chlorination plant, a process for the purification of said waters before delivery to its inhabitants through its service mains. It was sufficiently shown upon the trial that this particular purifying process was efficient, when in operation, to remove practically all bacterial contamination from said water and render the same safe for human consumption. It was, however, shown by the testimony of certain witnesses for the plaintiff in the main case that upon a certain night in the early part of June, 1920, the chlorination plant in question was inoperative during a period of about 12 hours, and that during said time unchlorinated water was, by the agents of said municipality in charge of its water system, permitted to be let into the water mains of said city, and to be therefrom furnished to the inhabitants thereof for drinking and other domestic uses.

There is ample medical and expert evidence in these cases to show that these waters in their thus unpurified condition would be so surcharged with typhoid and other dangerous germs as to render those persons drinking the same liable to attacks of typhoid fever and dysentery as a direct result of its consumption. The trial court permitted evidence to be introduced which strongly tended to show that an epidemic of typhoid fever and dysentery broke forth in said city within the period of about 3 weeks following the admission of said unchlorinated water into the water mains thereof, and that as a direct result of the existence of such epidemic Carl Ritterbusch became afflicted with typhoid fever, from which he presently died; that each of the other plaintiffs in said actions who sue directly became similarly afflicted; and that the children of the plaintiffs in said actions who sue for damages incurred in the nursing and care of their offspring became similarly ill during the same period from one or the other of the above disorders. Evidence was also introduced on behalf of the plaintiffs tending to show that the period during which these illnesses of typhoid fever and dysentery occurred corresponds to the time within which epidemics of typhoid fever and dysentery follow upon the use of germ-infected water.

On behalf of the defendant it was sought to be shown that some effort was made by its agents and officials during the brief period when its chlorination process was not in use to purify said water by other means, such as the introduction of lime into its content; but this evidence was unsatisfactory through the failure to show that the substituted method either would or did have the effect of purifying said water.

Considering the evidence in each of these cases as a whole, the deduction seems to be inescapable that the epidemic of typhoid fever and dysentery which broke forth in the city of Pittsburg within the aforesaid period after its agents and officials in charge of its water system had permitted unchlorinated water to be served through its water mains to its inhabitants was directly traceable to that cause, and that the cases of death or illness which form the basis of each of these actions were the direct result of the negligence of the agents and officials of said municipality in the foregoing regard.

The argument put forward by the appellant to the effect that the epidemic in question might have had its origin in other sources, such as the use of water from wells in various parts of the city, creates at best but a conflict in the evidence as to the source of infection, and this evidence is weakened as to its inferences by the fact that, while these other sources of water supply had existed for a considerable period of time prior to the month of June, 1920, no epidemic had resulted until the particular period following the pollution of the municipal water supply.

[2] Under the head of errors committed by the trial court in the admission of testimony, the appellant makes the contention that it was error to permit the introduction of evidence of an epidemic; the argument in that regard being that there was no sufficient pleading in each or any of said cases to justify the admission of such evidence. We are of the opinion that this objection to the introduction of such evidence is without substantial merit, since even with regard to each individual case evidence tending to show that the individual plaintiff was but one of a large number of persons similarly affected would be competent for the purpose of showing that each individual affection was traceable to a common source.

In so far as the appellant's assignments of error have relation to the evidence introduced affecting one or other of the aforesaid individual cases, we have examined the record in that regard, and do not find that these are of sufficient merit to require particular comment, or to justify a reversal of the judgment in the particular action to which such alleged errors relate.

Treated by and large, we are of the opinion that the judgment rendered and entered by the trial court in each of the foregoing cases is sufficiently supported by the findings of fact and conclusions of law applicable to each of said cases, and that as to each, the evidence was amply sufficient to justify the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the trial court.

It follows that the judgment in each of the foregoing cases must be and the same is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

205 Cal. 89

MCNETT v. VOLFI. (Sac. 4059.)

Supreme Court of California. Aug. 30, 1928.

1. Automobiles $\S$ 244(1)—Evidence supported finding that automobile driver was negligent in failing to look to right at intersection, resulting in collision.

In an action to recover for personal injuries and property damage resulting from automobile collision, evidence that defendant, in approaching intersection, did not look to his right, as a result of which he did not see car in which plaintiff was riding, held sufficient to justify finding that he was guilty of negligence, causing collision and injury to plaintiff.

2. Negligence $\S$ 93(1)—Negligence of driver of automobile in which plaintiff was riding as guest could not be imputed to her.

Where plaintiff was injured while riding in her own automobile as guest of driver she had loaned it to for his own use in taking load of turkeys to market, such driver having full charge of car, held, that any concurring negligence of the driver in causing collision with defendant's car was not imputable to her.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1033(8)—Inconsistency in verdict awarding plaintiff \$5,000 for personal injuries received in automobile collision, and finding for defendant regarding damage to car, was not available to defendant on appeal.

In action to recover for personal injuries and damage to automobile, resulting from collision with defendant's car, where jury returned verdict of $5,000 for personal injuries, but found for defendant regarding damage to the automobile, held, that defendant on appeal could not avail himself of the inconsistency.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by Blanche Husa McNett against John Volfi. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Irving D. Gibson, of Sacramento, for appellant.

J. Oscar Goldstein, of Chico, and Wm. H. Hatfield, of Sacramento, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. [1] This action was one for personal injuries as a result of a collision between an automobile owned by the plaintiff and in which she was riding, according to her contention, as a guest, and one owned and operated by the defendant, John Volfi. The collision occurred at the intersection of Thirty-Sixth street and Fourth avenue, in the city of Sacramento, which cross each other at right angles. Sacramento boulevard, running from the northwest to the southeast, includes within its boundaries the northwest corner of the said intersection. At the time of the collision the automobile in which the plaintiff was riding was proceeding north on Thirty-Sixth street and the defendant was driving his Ford delivery truck east on Fourth avenue. The following extract from the testimony of the defendant will explain the accident:

"I was coming from the west, going east on Fourth avenue. When I got down about the crossing, a machine was going across Sacramento boulevard. I was going southeast—going east. So I was turning my eyes on the car there, kind of sideways, watching the car coming up. When I got about 3 feet, I saw the Taylor car, and I applied my brakes; but it was too late, so we came to a crash.

"Q. In other words, you mean to tell the jury you never saw Mr. Taylor's car crossing until you were within 3 feet? A. Three feet of him.

"Q. Did you at any time look towards Thirty-Sixth street to your right, to see if a car was entering this intersection? A. I did not.

"Q. Did you ever see Mr. Taylor's car being driven over Thirty-Sixth street as you were coming into the intersection until the time you were within three feet of him? A. No.

"Q. Why didn't you see his car before he came into the intersection after he passed into— A. I told you I was watching the car that was crossing Sacramento boulevard."

A portion of the transcript of the defendant's testimony, given in another action growing out of this same accident, was read into the record in the instant case, as follows:

"I was going east, and he was going north. I was about—coming down this way between the curb and the car track; as I made the mark—I should judge between 15 and 17 miles an hour. I was looking ahead, right straight ahead, more to the left. I did not look to the right. I did not see Mr. Taylor's car until I was a few feet away from him. I did not have time to apply my brakes or nothing."

This testimony, regardless of anything else appearing in the record, justified the jury in finding, as it did, that the defendant was guilty of negligence, and we shall not discuss further the arguments of the appellant to the contrary. And this testimony, together with the other evidence in the record, justified the conclusion that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the collision and injury to plaintiff.

Taylor, the driver of plaintiff's automobile, testified (and in this he was corroborated by the two other occupants of the automobile) that as he reached about the south curb line of Fourth avenue and looked to the left, he saw defendant's automobile coming up the street about 10 feet outside of the intersection and the defendant was looking around; that Taylor started to blow his horn, thinking defendant would see him; that defendant did not look ahead of him at all until he struck Taylor's automobile; that Taylor was going about 6 miles an hour; that he had just started his motor, and it was cold, and would not "pick up" to allow him to escape; that defendant was looking back into his own automobile and was crossing the intersection at about 25 or 30 miles an hour.

[2] It is contended by appellant that Taylor was negligent in not stopping his automobile when he saw defendant approaching heedlessly and blindly at a rapid rate of speed. Certainly it may not be successfully contended that Taylor's negligence, if any, was the sole proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. If it be conceded to appellant that the negligence of Taylor was a concurring cause of plaintiff's injury, the judgment for plaintiff would nevertheless be a proper one; for we think the record discloses that she was a guest in her own automobile at the time of her injury, and therefore any concurring negligence of Taylor was not imputable to her.

The testimony was uncontradicted to the effect that plaintiff owned the automobile; that Taylor was the husband of plaintiff's sister; that Taylor asked to use plaintiff's automobile to take some turkeys he had raised to San Francisco to market. Plaintiff consented. She was not interested in any way in the turkeys, or in the business of Taylor. Plaintiff's sister, Taylor's wife, was to accompany Taylor to San Francisco, and, when she was making her preparations, she asked plaintiff if she would like to accompany her (Mrs. Taylor) on a pleasure trip. Plaintiff accepted this invitation. At the time of the accident, plaintiff was riding in the automobile, together with Taylor and his wife, and she had placed a few articles of her wearing apparel in her sister's suitcase, which was being carried in the automobile.

The undisputed testimony shows that Taylor had full charge and control of the automobile on the journey to San Francisco, and that it was being operated in connection with his own business, and the facts and circumstances appearing in the record support the finding of the jury that plaintiff was a guest in her own automobile at the time of her injury.

[3] The only remaining question arises from appellant's contention that the verdict is void for inconsistency. The action was tried upon plaintiff's third amended complaint, which contained two causes of action; the first for damages for alleged personal injuries, and the second for alleged damages to plaintiff's automobile. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff upon the first cause of action for $5,000, and upon the second cause of action the jury found in favor of defendant and against plaintiff.

It would seem that the plaintiff had grounds for complaint because of the finding upon the second cause of action; but assuredly the defendant has no such cause, and his appeal from the verdict upon the first cause of action is without merit.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.

93 Cal. App. 532

PEOPLE ex rel. SWINDELL et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES. (Civ. 3519.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 17, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 15, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 15, 1928.

1. Limitation of actions ⇨11(1)—State is not bound by limitations, unless by express words or necessary implication.

Limitations of actions do not bind state, unless made to do so by express words or necessary implication.

2. Quo warranto ⇨5—Validity of proceedings to annex territory to municipalities can only be determined in quo warranto.

Validity of proceedings for annexation of territory to municipalities can only be determined in quo warranto action.

3. Quo warranto ⇨1—Quo warranto proceedings are actions brought in name of state (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 803-810).

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 803-810, proceedings in quo warranto are actions brought in name of state.

4. Quo warranto ⇨1—Quo warranto proceeding contesting validity of annexation to city is civil action, not special proceeding of civil nature.

Quo warranto proceeding contesting validity of proceedings conducted in effecting annexation of certain outside territory to city is a civil action and not special proceeding of civil nature.

5. Municipal corporations ⇨33(9)—Three months' limitation, provided for actions contesting validity of annexation proceedings, held to apply to all such actions (Code Civ. Proc. § 349½, as added by St. 1923, p. 53).

Section 349½ of Code of Civil Procedure, as added by St. 1923, p. 53, entitled an act to add such section relating to limitation of time for commencing actions, in which validity of annexation proceedings is contested, and providing that validity of such proceedings shall not be contested unless action is brought within three months after completion of annexation proceedings or within three months after effective date of act, if proceedings are completed prior to time act takes effect, held to place three months' limitations on all actions contesting validity of annexation proceedings.

6. Quo warranto ⇨29—Three months' limitation placed on actions contesting validity of annexation proceedings applies to state, and barred quo warranto proceedings brought more than three months after completion of annexation (Code Civ. Proc. § 349½, as added by St. 1923, p. 53).

Section 349½ of Code of Civil Procedure, as added by St. 1923, p. 53, entitled an act to add such section relating to limitation of time for commencing actions in which validity of annexation proceedings is contested, and providing that validity of such proceedings shall not be contested unless action is brought within three months after completion of annexation proceedings, held to apply to state, and bars action in quo warranto brought more than three months after completion of annexation, since validity of annexation proceedings can only be determined in quo warranto action.

7. Statutes ⇨74(2), 76(2), 79(1), 80(1)—Act establishing three months' limitation for bringing action contesting consolidation proceedings, applying equally to all municipalities held valid (Code Civ. Proc. § 349½, as added by St. 1923, p. 53; Const. art. 1, § 11; art. 4, § 25, subds. 19, 33; art. 11, § 6).

Section 349½ of Code of Civil Procedure, as added by St. 1923, p. 53, requiring actions contesting validity of annexation proceedings to be brought within three months after completion of annexation and consolidation authorized by general statutes, being of general application and applying to every municipality throughout state with equal force, held not to violate Const. art. 1, § 11, article 4, § 25, subds. 19, 33, and article 11, § 6.

8. Statutes ⇨85(4)—Procedure is not special because peculiar to character of action with reference to which it is prescribed.

Procedure may not be said to be special because it is peculiar to character of action with reference to which it is prescribed.

9. Statutes ⇨80(1)—Legislature may distinguish between actions contesting validity of annexation proceedings and actions attacking original incorporation of municipalities as respects establishment of period of limitations.

Legislature has power to distinguish between actions contesting validity of annexation and consolidation proceedings and actions attacking original incorporation of municipalities; there being reasonable distinctions justifying different period of limitation for actions.

10. Statutes ⇨80(1)—Consequences of adding new territory to municipality justifies Legislature in prescribing limited time for contesting annexation proceedings.

That annexation or consolidation of new territory may result in election of particular officers, in attainment of necessary vote for bond issue, in bringing about litigation concerning validity of bonds for public improvement, or in unreasonably postponing municipal functions, furnishes sufficient ground for limiting period of time within which annexation and consolidation proceedings can be contested.

11. Limitation of actions ⇨43—Exercise of franchise over territory annexed does not constitute continuous offense and create new cause of action to contest annexation each day as regards limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 349½, as added by St. 1923, p. 53).

In determining whether action contesting validity of annexation proceedings is barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 349½, as added by St. 1923, p. 53, requiring such action to be brought within three months after completion of annexation, claim that exercise of franchise by municipality over territory annexed is continuous offense and that each day new cause of action arises is without merit.

12. Quo warranto ~~§~~29—Statute barring “any action” contesting annexation proceeding unless brought within three months applies to quo warranto (Code Civ. Proc. § 349½, as added by St. 1923, p. 53).

Code Civ. Proc. § 349½, as added by St. 1923, p. 53, providing that validity of annexation proceeding shall not be contested in “any action” unless brought within three months after completion of annexation, applies to quo warranto proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Any.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Quo warranto by the People, on the relation of Deane F. Swindell and another against the City of Los Angeles. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court: CURTIS and LANGDON, JJ., voting for a transfer.

Biby & Biby and John E. Biby, all of Los Angeles, and U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Leon French, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Lucius P. Green, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARTLETT, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from a judgment dismissing a quo warranto proceeding; a demurrer having been sustained by the trial court, on the ground that the action was barred by the provisions of section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure. The action is based upon an alleged invalidity in the proceedings conducted in effecting the annexation of certain outside territory, designated as Sunland addition, to the city of Los Angeles, in Los Angeles county, Cal. The various steps taken to annex the territory are fully set forth in the complaint, and the alleged grounds of their invalidity stated, and, as relief in the action, judgment is asked that it be decreed that defendant be enjoined from exercising any franchises, powers, privileges, or jurisdiction over the territory embraced in the Sunland addition, and for such other relief as is meet and proper.

The complaint was filed in the superior court of Los Angeles county on July 11, 1927. On the 19th of July, 1927, defendant served and filed its demurrer to the complaint; the grounds of demurrer being that the complaint does not, nor does any part thereof, state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and that said action is barred by section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure. The demurrer was heard on July 19, 1927, and ordered sustained, without leave to amend, and thereupon judgment was rendered and entered that plaintiff take nothing by the action, and declaring the same barred by section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure.

But one question is involved in the appeal, and that is whether the provisions of section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to actions brought in the name of the state concerning annexation of outside territory to cities, under what is commonly designated as the Annexation Act of 1913. Stats. 1913, p. 587. The ordinance approving the annexation of Sunland addition to the city of Los Angeles, it is alleged in the complaint, was adopted by the council of the city of Los Angeles on June 28, 1926, the same was duly published, and a copy thereof duly certified was transmitted to the secretary of state of the state of California and received by him and filed in his office on August 5, 1926. It is not questioned that this filing completed the annexation proceedings, and no dispute is made that this action was instituted more than three months after the filing of the papers above mentioned in the office of the secretary of state.

The act enacting section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure was passed by the Legislature on April 24, 1923, and is to be found at page 53, Statutes of 1923. It reads as follows:

“An act to add a new section to the Code of Civil Procedure to be numbered section three hundred forty-nine and one-half, relating to the limitation of the time within which actions, in which the validity of proceedings for the annexation of territory to municipal corporations, or the consolidation of municipal corporations is contested, can be commenced.

“Section 1. A new section is hereby added to the Code of Civil Procedure to be numbered three hundred forty-nine and one-half and to read as follows:

“Sec. 349½. The validity of any proceedings for the annexation of territory to a municipal corporation, or for the consolidation of municipal corporations, shall not be contested in any action unless such action shall have been brought within three months after the completion of such proceedings, or, in case such proceedings are completed prior to the time that this act takes effect, then within three months after this act shall have become effective.”

Appellant contends that the cause of action alleged in the complaint is not barred by section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the following reasons: (1) Limitations of actions do not bind the people of the state unless made to do so by express words or necessary implication. (2) Section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure is in violation of subdivisions 19 and 33 of section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution of the state of California, and the provisions of section 6 of article 11 and section 11 of article 1 of said state Constitution. (3) The exercise of the franchise in question is a continuous offense occurring each day, and each day a new cause of action arises. (4) A quo warranto proceeding is not an action of the character to which section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure applies. (5) Section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure has a reasonable meaning without applying its provisions to the state when it is plaintiff in a quo warranto proceeding.

[1] It cannot be disputed that it is a well-established principle of law that limitations of actions do not bind the state unless made to do so by express words or necessary implication. Russ & Sons Co. v. Crichton, 117 Cal. 695, 49 P. 1043; People v. Kings County Dev. Co., 48 Cal. App. 72, 191 P. 1004.

[2-4] The question involved in this action is of a purely political nature, and that the validity of the proceedings for the annexation of territory to municipalities can only be determined in a quo warranto action is clearly determined by the case of Coe v. City of Los Angeles, 42 Cal. App. 479, 183 P. 822, wherein are cited with approval as supporting this conclusion the following cases: People v. City of Los Angeles, 154 Cal. 220, 97 P. 311; Keech v. Joplin, 157 Cal. 1, 106 P. 222; Jaques v. Board of Supervisors, 24 Cal. App. 381, 141 P. 404; Reclamation Dist. No. 765 v. McPhee, 13 Cal. App. 383, 109 P. 1106; Williams v. Board of Supervisors, 65 Cal. 160, 3 P. 667; People ex rel. Warren v. York, 247 Ill. 591, 93 N. E. 400. That proceedings in quo warranto are actions brought in the name of the state is evident from the language used in sections 803 to 810 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where they are designated as actions in each of the sections. The case at bar, like all quo warranto proceedings, is a civil action and not a special proceeding of a civil nature.

[5, 6] While there are no express words in section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure making that statute applicable to the state, the necessary implication that it applies to and binds the state is manifested from the language of the act and the purpose declared in its title. The title announces that the purpose of the act is to add a new section to the Code of Civil Procedure, to be numbered 349½, relating to the limitation of the time within which actions, in which the validity of proceedings for the annexation of territory to municipal corporations, or the consolidation of municipal corporations, is contested, can be commenced. If quo warranto proceedings are the only actions in which the validity of annexation or consolidation proceedings can be determined, as held in Coe v. City of Los Angeles, supra, the three months' limitation provided by section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure bars the action under consideration, and the trial court ruled correctly in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. That the purpose of the act was to put a three months' limitation on all actions concerning the validity of annexation and consolidation proceedings is also apparent, and must be necessarily implied from the fact that section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure not only makes its limitation period of three months apply to all future contests, but also provides that it shall apply to all proceedings completed prior to the time the act took effect.

The general legislative policy of California that the state shall be bound by its statutes of limitation is well set forth in People v. Kings County Development Co., 48 Cal. App. 72, 191 P. 1004, where it is said:

"Where the Legislature has established a particular policy with respect to a particular subject of legislative cognizance, which policy is in derogation of that of the rule of the common law, all the law or sections of the Code bearing upon or pertaining to that particular subject should be read and considered together, or as a whole, or by the light of each other, if the language of any one section or part of the law is so dubious or uncertain as to render its meaning or the Legislative intent at the bottom of it lacking in clearness and certainty."

Section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure establishes a particular policy with respect to a particular subject of legislative cognizance, and there is no reason for holding it as not applicable to the state and barring this action.

[7] The contention of plaintiff that section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure is violative of the provisions of the state Constitution cannot be upheld. Both annexation and consolidation proceedings are authorized by general statutes, clearly of general application; the municipalities authorized to take advantage of their provisions not being classified or limited in any respect, and the acts applying with equal force to every municipality throughout the state.

[8] "Procedure may not be said to be special because it is peculiar to the character of the action with reference to which it is prescribed." Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Lusk, 15 Cal. App. 358, 115 P. 53; People v. Henshaw, 76 Cal. 436, 18 P. 413; Cohen v. City of Alameda, 168 Cal. 265, 142 P. 885; Mitchell v. Cal. Pac. Title Ins. Co., 79 Cal. App. 45, 248 P. 1035.

[9, 10] It was within the power of the Legislature to distinguish between actions contesting the validity of annexation and consolidation proceedings and actions attacking the original incorporation of municipalities. The fact that quo warranto would be an available remedy in both classes of actions is not important. There are reasonable distinctions that would justify a different period of limitation of the action. The addition of a newly annexed or consolidated territory may result in the election of particular individual officers, in the attaining of a required two-thirds vote for carrying bond issues for necessary municipal improvements, in bringing about litigation of questions concerning the validity of bonds for public improvements in the annexed territory, and in causing public functions of municipal government to be administered in a limited degree or to be held in abeyance over unreasonable periods of time. A consideration of such matters would furnish the Legislature with sufficient grounds to provide that the validity of annexation and consolidation proceedings should be asserted within some definite period of time, and that, if the proceedings were not attacked within such time, the right to file such contesting action should be barred.

[11] The claim of appellant that the exercise of the franchise in question is a continuous offense recurring day after day, and that each day a new cause of action arises, is without merit, in view of the manifest purpose and intent of the provisions of section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure. Whether or not there is a right to exercise the franchise depends upon the validity of the annexation proceedings, and the statute prohibits any contest of those proceedings after three months have elapsed after the filing in the office of the secretary of state of the certified copy of the ordinance of the city to which the territory is annexed.

[12] The contention that a quo warranto proceeding is not an action of the character to which section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure applies cannot be sustained. The words "any action," taking into view the purposes and intent of section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure must be held to embrace and include any form of action that can present for adjudication questions involving the validity of annexation proceedings.

In view of the fact that the validity of annexation proceedings can be determined only in a quo warranto action, the only reasonable meaning that can be given section 349½ of the Code of Civil Procedure is that it applies to and binds the state, and bars the remedy sought by reason of the action at bar.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

93 Cal. App. 584

McALMOND v. TRIPPEL et al. (Civ. 3549.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 22, 1928.

1. False imprisonment §20(1)—Complaint against several for false imprisonment need not allege whether they acted in concert or the particular act of each.

Complaint against several, alleging that they, without legal authority of any kind, arrested and imprisoned plaintiff, is sufficient, without any allegation as to whether or not they acted in concert or the definite part each performed.

2. False imprisonment §6—Detention without any legal authority, though in juvenile detention home, is "imprisonment."

Though detention complained of in complaint for false imprisonment be in a juvenile detention home, it is "imprisonment"; the party having, without any legal authority, been arrested and placed there.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Imprison—Imprisonment.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Lucile McAlmond, by Maury H. McAlmond, her guardian ad litem, against A. A. Trippel and others. From a judgment entered against plaintiff on the sustaining of the demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

Frank C. Scherrer and Chas. R. McCarty, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Everett W. Mattoon and R. C. McAllaster, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WEYAND, Justice pro tem. This appeal is taken from a judgment of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, made and entered against the plaintiff upon her refusal to amend her complaint, in an action for false imprisonment and malicious arrest.

The complaint avers that the defendant Trippel was city attorney of Huntington Park, a city within Los Angeles county, defendant Leland was city marshal of said city, and the bonding company above named was the surety on his official bond, and the defendant Edna Mahan was the superintendent of Juvenile Hall, an institution in the city of Los Angeles, operated by the county of Los Angeles as a place for the detention of persons under the age of 21 years.

The vital portion of the complaint is in words as follows:

"That on the 1st day of July, 1925, the defendants A. A. Trippel, Harry E. Leland, Edna Mahan, John One, John Two, Jane One, and Jane Two maliciously, wrongfully, unlawfully, and without process or commitment or legal authority of any kind whatsoever, and with the intent to oppress the plaintiff, Lucile McAlmond, arrested and imprisoned the said plaintiff in said Juvenile Hall, and continued to and did wrongfully and unlawfully and maliciously confine said Lucile McAlmond in said Juvenile Hall until the hour of approximately 1 o'clock p. m. on July 4, 1925; that, by reason of being confined in said Juvenile Hall, the plaintiff, Lucile McAlmond, during said period of confinement was forced to associate and come in contact with prostitutes and persons of immoral and ill repute, and who were degenerate; that at all times herein mentioned Robert Black was and still is an attorney at law, duly admitted to practice before all the courts of the state of California; that during said confinement, to wit, on July 2, 1925, plaintiff engaged the services of said Robert Black to represent her in the matter in which she was being held in confinement, and that said Robert Black on said day presented himself at said Juvenile Hall, and stated to the defendants and in particular to the defendant Edna Mahan, that he was the attorney and had been engaged as the attorney to represent said Lucile McAlmond; that said Edna Mahan then and thereupon refused to permit and in fact prevented plaintiff, Lucile McAlmond, from conversing with her said attorney or consulting her said attorney, and denied to plaintiff the right of counsel during all of said period of confinement; that said arrest and confinement became a matter of common notoriety among friends and acquaintances of plaintiff, Lucile McAlmond, and the general public, and by reason thereof plaintiff, Lucile McAlmond, suffered great humiliation; that, by reason of the aforesaid wrongful imprisonment and arrest, plaintiff, Lucile McAlmond, suffered great physical pain and grievous mental anguish, and always will continue so to suffer, to her damage in the sum of $25,000; and that all thereof was caused by the aforesaid wrongful and malicious arrest and actions on the part of the defendants."

The demurrer of the defendant Edna Mahan consisted of a general demurrer, and two special assignments, one of ambiguity and one of uncertainty. The language of both special assignments are the same, and is as follows:

"Said allegation does not show what part said defendant Edna Mahan is alleged to have taken in said alleged false imprisonment, and that it does not appear whether plaintiff intends to allege that all of the defendants named acted in concert or what the individual and several defendants are alleged to have done with reference to said alleged false imprisonment, and that such facts cannot be ascertained from said allegation, nor from any other allegation in said complaint."

It appears from the order made at the hearing of the demurrer that defendant Edna Mahan also had before the court a motion to strike out parts of the complaint. Whatever may have been the real merits of this motion is not now important, as the record discloses that this motion was ordered off the calendar. The demurrer was sustained, with leave to amend within the usual time. Plaintiff refused to amend, and the judgment appealed from was entered.

[1] Taking up the special assignments, they present the question as to the necessity of alleging whether or not the named defendants acted in concert, or to allege the particular part each defendant did perform with reference to said false imprisonment.

In the early case of Druex v. Domec et al., 18 Cal. 83, it was held:

"The complaint states the joint liability of defendants, by averments general to the three defendants, and there can be a joinder of several defendants in an action for a malicious prosecution. 1 Chitty's Pleading, 85. It was unnecessary to aver and prove a conspiracy. * * * If two persons can jointly engage in a malicious prosecution, they can be sued for the act itself and not for a conspiracy to commit the act."

There can be no essential difference between the action for malicious prosecution and the action for false imprisonment in this respect.

In the case at bar, the allegation is to the effect that the three defendants, Trippel, Leland, and Mahan, "without legal authority of any kind whatsoever, * * * arrested and imprisoned the said plaintiff."

In Culver v. Burnside et al., 43 S. D. 398, 179 N. W. 490, it is said:

"The first contention of appellants is that the acts alleged are such as could not be committed jointly. We are of the opinion that this contention is not tenable. We are of the view that all who take part in or assist or abet in the commission of false imprisonment are joint tort-feasors, without an allegation or proof of a conspiracy. 1 Cooley on Torts (3d Ed.) p. 319.

"* * * We are of the view that a complaint which states, in substance, that the defendants, at a specified time and place, unlawfully and maliciously detained plaintiff and restrained him of his liberty for the space of one hour without any right or authority so to do, and against his will, states a cause of action which is not subject to general demurrer. The action for false imprisonment is frequently alleged to have been committed by reason of some wrongful arrest under some pretended or void order of some court, in which class of false imprisonment cases it is incumbent on the plaintiff to allege facts showing or tending to show that such arrest, under such court procedure, was wrongful, unauthorized, and without any probable cause; but in a cause of action alleged as the one at bar there may have been no court procedure at all, and under such a complaint it is incumbent on the defendants, if they acted under lawful court procedure, to affirmatively allege and prove such facts as justification. Evidence of such a defense could not be admitted under a general denial. Neves v. Costa, 5 Cal. App. 111, 89 P. 860."

In the instant case the complaint specifically avers that the arrest was made without process or commitment.

In Corpus Juris, vol. 25, p. 531, it is said:

"In an action against joint defendants, it is unnecessary to allege that the acts of defendants were 'willful and concerted,' etc., since it is not necessary to make out a conspiracy to maintain an action for false imprisonment. An allegation that a false imprisonment was committed by defendants in person may be supported by evidence that the acts were done by their agents."

We are of the opinion that it was unnecessary for plaintiff to allege a conspiracy to arrest the plaintiff, or to allege the definite part each defendant performed.

[2] The ruling of the lower court is defended by respondent on the ground that, admitting that the complaint was otherwise good, yet, because the alleged detention was in a juvenile detention home, the restraint did not amount to "imprisonment." With this contention we are unable to agree. It is true that the detention homes established under the Juvenile Court Law are largely in the nature of shelters for abandoned and mistreated children. Nevertheless, the law in question lays down the procedure by which children may be placed therein. To initiate proceedings under the act in question, it is provided in section 3, Juvenile Court Law (St. 1915, p. 1225), that a verified petition shall first be filed. By subsequent sections it is further provided: That a citation shall be issued to cause the child to be brought before the court. There must be a summary hearing in court. That until final disposition of the case the person to be investigated may be held upon order of the court in some suitable place as the court may direct. Nowhere is there vested in any person any right whatsoever to take possession of and confine any person in any sort of detention home, except upon an order of the judge of the juvenile court.

Defendants may have acted for the best interests of said child, and may have done no damage to her by reason of her detention, or said officers may have even conferred upon her a favor and a benefit; yet these are all matters of defense as against the amount of damage claimed, or as answering the allegation of oppression. Any detention under pretended color of official right is imprisonment. Even a detention of a person outside of a public institution, against his will and without right, amounts to false imprisonment.

We can but conclude that the complaint stated a cause of action, and that to sustain the demurrer thereto was improper in the present case.

Respondent directs our attention to the case of Weber v. Doust et al., 84 Wash. 330, 146 P. 623, and contends that under the authority of that case there can be no false imprisonment when the detention was had under the juvenile court laws, and by juvenile court officers. That case was upon appeal to the Supreme Court of Washington after a trial on the merits in the lower court, and in which trial there was a judgment against the defendants. We think a careful reading of that case will disclose a quite different situation than the one here complained of. In the instant case the allegation is that the defendants "maliciously, wrongfully, unlawfully, and without process or commitment or legal authority of any kind whatsoever, and with the intent to oppress the plaintiff, * * * arrested and imprisoned the said plaintiff." It is here further alleged that these defendants kept her three days, not permitting her attorney to visit or consult her. Also, the present complaint contains the statement that during the said confinement plaintiff was forced to associate and come in contact with various types of degraded people.

Even had the defendant officers the right to take plaintiff into custody, they could not have warrant to do so "without any legal authority," and with intent to "oppress," nor would they have a right to compel an association with the unfit. From the case just mentioned, we quote as follows:

"If an officer abuses his authority, he is a trespasser ab initio, and liable for false imprisonment. 1 Cooley on Torts (3d Ed.) p. 314. In other words, an officer, acting as such, stands in the same relation to the infant as would a guardian appointed by, and acting under, the due process of a court having jurisdiction to appoint guardians. The only question to occur is whether the officer has acted in furtherance of the law, in good faith, and has done that which he believed to be for the best interests of the child, bringing no willful harm to it, and being actuated by no ulterior purpose. 1 Cooley on Torts (3d Ed.) p. 356."

The judgment of the lower court is reversed, with instructions to the lower court to overrule said demurrer, and permit the defendant Edna Mahan to answer if she desires so to do.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

93 Cal. App. 566

PEOPLE v. BIHN. (Cr. 1048.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 21, 1928.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 911, 1156(1)—Trial court's determination on motion for new trial is discretionary, and is conclusive on appeal, where conflicting inferences may be drawn.

The trial court is vested with a wide discretion in passing on a motion for a new trial, and, where conflicting inferences may be drawn from the evidence, that drawn by the trial court is conclusive on appeal.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 913(1)—Granting new trial on ground evidence did not satisfactorily show forgery was committed in county in which defendant received check held not abuse of discretion.

Where check, indorsement on which was alleged to have been forged by defendant, was passed in another county than that in which defendant received it from his employer for specified purpose, held, that trial court's granting of defendant's motion for new trial, on ground that evidence did not satisfactorily show that crime was committed in county in which defendant received check, will not be reversed, even if evidence was sufficient to warrant inference that crime was committed in whole or in part in that county.

3. Criminal law $\S$ 112(1)—Uncertainty as to proper place of trial for forgery may be avoided by bringing charge in county where instrument was passed.

Uncertainty as to proper place of trial, under a charge of forging indorsement on check and uttering and passing the instrument and indorsement as true and genuine, may be avoided by bringing the charge in the county where the forged instrument was uttered and passed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Clifford L. Bihn was convicted of forgery. From an order granting a new trial, the People appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.
Charles Kasch, of Ukiah, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an appeal from the order of the trial court granting defendant's motion for a new trial after his conviction of the crime of forgery. The evidence is sufficient to show that the defendant committed the forgery, and the only question to be determined is whether the trial court was warranted in granting a new trial on the ground that the evidence does not satisfactorily show that the crime was committed in Mendocino county.

[1, 2] The defendant was the representative at Ukiah, Mendocino county, of the Poppers Fruit Company. That company was indebted to M. Guide in the sum of $75.58, and it delivered its check for that amount, payable to the order of Guide, to the defendant at Ukiah, to be by him delivered to Guide. Guide never received or indorsed the check. Several days after it was so delivered to the defendant, the check, with the name "M. Guide" written on the back thereof, and also indorsed by the defendant, was passed over the counter of the West American Finance Company, in San Francisco, in part payment of an automobile which the defendant was purchasing on the installment plan. The cashier of the company testified: "I can't say it was Mr. Bihn himself, but it was given over the counter for his credit." It appears that Bihn was a resident of Ukiah. There is no other evidence tending to show where the forgery was committed. If it be conceded that the evidence is sufficient to warrant the inference that the crime was committed, in whole or in part, in Mendocino county, it does not follow that the order should be reversed. The trial court is vested with a wide discretion in passing on a motion for a new trial, and where conflicting inferences may be drawn from the evidence, that drawn by the trial court is conclusive on appeal. People v. Knutte, 111 Cal. 453, 455, 44 P. 166; People v. Canfield, 173 Cal. 309, 312, 159 P. 1046. It is a fair inference from the evidence that the defendant himself passed the check at the office of the West American Finance Company in San Francisco. Under the circumstances shown, it cannot be held, as a matter of law, that the only reasonable inference from the evidence is that he forged the indorsement on the check in Mendocino county.

[3] The charge herein is that the defendant forged the indorsement on the check "and uttered and passed said instrument and indorsement as true and genuine." In such a case, uncertainty as to the proper place of trial may be avoided by bringing the charge in the county where the forged instrument was uttered and passed.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; PLUMMER, J.

GOTTSTEIN v. KELLY et al. (Civ. 5796.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. July 21, 1928.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing, Aug. 18, 1928.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 17, 1928.

1. Taxation ⚡415—Assessment, naming owner but once, not misleading as to owner of each lot assessed, complied with statute, regardless whether owner's name should have appeared opposite each lot (Pol. Code, § 3650).

Where assessment on several lots in tract of land contained name of owner but once, followed by name of tract or subdivision in which property was located, correct number of each of lots, together with valuation of each, in accordance with Pol. Code, § 3650, and no one could have been misled as to name of person purporting to be owner of each of several lots, assessment complied with statute, regardless whether name of owner of property should have been repeated on assessment book opposite each lot assessed.

2. Taxation ⚡734(2)—Error, if any, in overcharge of less than one cent in assessing land, held immaterial, in determining validity of tax deed (Pol. Code, § 3731).

Where alleged overcharge in making assessment against land, under Pol. Code, § 3731, if any, was less than one cent, defect was of no consequence, so far as validity of ensuing tax deed was concerned.

3. Taxation ⚡627—All taxes, penalties, and costs should be placed opposite each description of property separately assessed, rather than total assessment against all property (Pol. Code, § 3764, as amended by St. 1913, p. 556).

Under Pol. Code, § 3764, as amended by St. 1913, p. 556, requiring taxes, penalties, and costs to be placed opposite each name and description of delinquent property, all taxes, penalties, and costs applicable thereto should be placed opposite each description, rather than placing total amount due on several pieces of property separately assessed and described, and stating such amount in one aggregate sum.

4. Taxation ⚡734(2)—Owner held not required to compute assessment against each lot, but duty thereof was jurisdictional prerequisite to validity of tax deed.

Where lots in designated tract were separately assessed and described, owner did not have burden of ascertaining amount of assessment against each lot, but duty of stating separate amounts on separate lots was jurisdictional prerequisite to validity of tax deed dependent on assessment proceedings.

★For opinion of Supreme Court adopting the opinion of the Appellate Court, see 276 P. 347.

5. Taxation ⇨734(7)—Notice of sale for delinquent taxes, not referring to penalties, but to unauthorized "percentage," held defective, and tax deed conveyed no title (Pol. Code, § 3764, as amended by St. 1913, p. 556).

Notice of sale to state of delinquent property under Pol. Code, § 3764, as amended by St. 1913, p. 556, reciting taxes, "percentage," and costs after property, without referring to penalties, was defective, as containing unauthorized item of "percentage" which was not synonymous with word "penalty," and hence tax deed based on assessment proceedings conveyed no title.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Percentage.]

6. Appeal and error ⇨877(4)—Plaintiff, claiming under tax deed, possessing no legal title, could not complain of judgment on cross-complaint quieting title in defendant.

Where plaintiff, claiming title under tax deed in suit for partition, was legally possessed of no property, he could not complain of relief granted to defendant in cross-complaint to quiet title.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by John Gottstein against T. G. Kelly and another, in which defendant E. D. Brooks, Jr., filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for cross-complainant, and plaintiff and defendant Kelly appeal. Affirmed.

Herbert C. Kelly, of San Diego, for appellants.

Rolland C. Springer, of San Diego, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This appeal originated in a suit brought by plaintiff against defendant Kelly and one Maud K. Messer for partition of real property. After the suit was commenced, one E. D. Brooks, Jr., with full knowledge of all the facts hereinafter set forth, acquired whatever interest said Messer owned in the property involved in the action, and thereupon was substituted as a party defendant therein. Thereafter defendant Brooks answered in the action and filed his cross-complaint therein, by which he sought to quiet his title to certain of the real property described in the complaint, and which formerly had been owned by the defendant Messer. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant Brooks, and it is from such judgment that this appeal is prosecuted.

The property involved consisted of three several lots, numbered 10, 11, and 12, in a designated tract of land. The basis of plaintiff's claim of title was a tax deed, which by the lower court was held to be invalid. Concededly the question of the invalidity of the tax deed rested upon each of several contentions set forth in the brief herein, the first of which being that the statute (section 3770, Pol. Code) authorized the inclusion in the collection of delinquent taxes of an advertising charge of fifty cents for "each lot, piece, or tract of land separately assessed, * * *" and consequently, in view of the fact that the advertising charge herein was for three separate parcels at 50 cents each, making a total charge therefor of $1.50, a tax, with its incidents, had been imposed which was unauthorized by law, with the alleged result that a sale of the property for the amount of the original tax assessment, plus penalties and the advertising costs, as charged, was illegal, and carried with it no title to the purchaser.

[1] In substance, the form of the assessment was that the name of the owner of the property appeared but once. Thereafter followed the name of the tract or subdivision in which the property was located, the correct number of each of the lots, to wit, 10, 11, and 12 (each on a separate line), together with the valuation of each of them—all of which would appear to be in accordance with the provisions of section 3650 of the Political Code relating to the requirements of an assessment. With the exception that no direct ruling is made with reference to the feature that as to each of the lots the name of the owner must be repeated on the assessment book, in each of the following authorities substantially it is held that the assessment herein was in conformity with the requirements of the statute: Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Board of Equalization, 56 Cal. 194, 205; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 605, 2 P. 418; Allen v. McKay & Co., 120 Cal. 332, 334, 52 P. 828; Hall v. Park Bank of Los Angeles, 165 Cal. 356, 358, 132 P. 452; People's Water Co. v. Boromeo, 31 Cal. App. 270, 272, 160 P. 574; Gottstein v. Holmes (Cal. App.) 264 P. 310.

An examination of the record in the case last cited discloses the fact that the form of the assessment was identical with that in the instant case, and it was there held that on the occurrence of the delinquency in the payment of the tax an advertising charge of 50 cents on each lot was "in exact conformity with the law." So far as concerns the question of the necessity for the name of the owner of the property to be repeated on the assessment book, so that it shall appear opposite each lot assessed, where, as in the assessment herein, from its form no one could have been misled as to the name of the person purporting to be the owner of each of the several lots, we think that a substantial, if not a literal, compliance with the terms of the statute was shown to exist.

The next alleged infirmity in the tax deed is that the sale was made for a greater amount of money than was legally due. By one form of computation, the sum for which the property was sold was the exact amount due thereon. By other methods of computation, dependent upon the recognition of fractions of a cent in the tax and the penalties, the difference between the amount for which the property was sold and the amount shown by such computation as actually due varied from two-tenths of a cent to as much as three cents.

[2] It is argued by respondent that, following the provisions of section 3731 of the Political Code, "fractions of a cent" must be rejected. On the other hand, appellant contends that by the plain terms of the statute the rejection of "fractions of a cent" applies to the computation of the tax only, and has no reference to computation of the penalties for delinquencies (Bell v. Fee Title Co., 69 Cal. App. 437, 231 P. 598), and that as so construed the amount for which the property was sold showed no variation from the correct computation of the amount which was legally due. On making the computation in accordance with the rule as announced in the case of Bell v. Fee Title Co., 69 Cal. App. 437, 231 P. 598, it appears that at most the overcharge, if any, was less than one cent. In such circumstances, at least by the great weight of authority, the defect was of no consequence, so far as the validity of the ensuing tax deed was concerned. Jacoby v. Wolff, 198 Cal. 667, 247 P. 195; Treadwell v. Patterson, 51 Cal. 637.

One of the reasons assigned for upholding the judgment herein is that the notice of sale to the state of the property affected by the judgment was defective. By the provisions of section 3764 of the Political Code, in force at the time the notice of sale was given (Stats. 1913, p. 556), the tax collector was required to "publish the delinquent list, which must contain the names of the persons and a description of the property delinquent, and the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due. opposite each name and description." * * * In this action, respondent's contention is that, while the notice contained a description of each of the lots 10, 11, and 12 of the described tract, the "taxes, penalties, and costs due" did not appear opposite each description as prescribed by the statute; that while the language of the statute calls for "taxes, penalties, and costs" applicable to each lot, the notice deviated therefrom, first, in that it recited the "taxes, percentage, and costs"; and, secondly, that, instead of the property, "taxes, penalties, and costs" being set "opposite" and made applicable to each lot as required by the statute, they were lumped together into one gross sum for all the lots.

At the time the notice of sale herein was published a further requirement of section 3764 of the Political Code, then in force, was that the delinquent list should contain the "taxes due on personal property, the delinquent state poll, road, and hospital tax, the taxes due each school, road, or other lesser taxation district, added to the taxes on real estate. * * * " It appears that, as affecting the property here involved, a tax of 71 cents on the $100 of valuation was levied for the school district. With reference to the meaning of the phrase appearing in the statute, "added to the taxes on real estate," it was held in California Loan, etc., Co. v. Weis, 118 Cal. 489, 496, 50 P. 697, 700, that "the word 'added,' as here used, does not contemplate a mathematical computation. It is employed in the sense of subjoined or appended. * * *"

In the case of Cordano v. Kelsey, 28 Cal. App. 9, 19, 151 P. 391, 396, among other things, it is held that, in a notice of sale for delinquent taxes, it is necessary that the amount of penalties and costs be separately stated, and that (citing Campbell v. Canty, 12 Cal. App. Dec. 373, 1 and quoting sections 205-207 of Black on Tax Titles), "the giving of notice in the manner and form prescribed by the statute is an essential jurisdictional fact"; also, that "not only is the giving of notice of the sale essential, but it must be such notice as the statute prescribes."

[3-5] Assuming the correctness of the conclusion hereinbefore stated to the effect that each lot was separately described and assessed, and reasoning from the rule announced in the case of California Loan, etc., Co. v. Weis, 118 Cal. 489, 496, 50 P. 697, as well as from the case of Cordano v. Kelsey, 28 Cal. App. 9, 19, 151 P. 391, 398, it becomes apparent that the construction which should be placed on the statutory requirement that the amount of "taxes, penalties, and costs due" should be placed "opposite each name and description," is that opposite each description all "taxes, penalties, and costs" applicable thereto should be placed, rather than that where, as in the instant case, there are several pieces of property separately assessed and described, the total amount due thereon on account of the several charges of "taxes, penalties, and costs" should be added together and stated in one aggregate amount. But, as in substance is said in the case of Cordano v. Kelsey, 28 Cal. App. 9, 19, 151 P. 391, 398, while it is true that in the form the notice was given it was possible for the owner of the three lots in question to have ascertained or computed the amount of each of the several items affecting any one lot, the law did not place that burden upon him, but rather enjoined that duty upon others as a jurisdictional prerequisite to the validity of a tax deed dependent upon precedent proceedings.

However, the last preceding statement, as affecting the facts in the instant case, requires notation of the additional fact, that while the notice as published contained the statement that unless the delinquent taxes for the year ending June 30, 1917, with all penalties and costs due thereon, were paid on or before a specified date the assessed property would be sold to the state, so far as the property herein involved was concerned, and which by the terms of the notice was not to be sold to the state, but "to the highest bidder for cash," the notice contained no reference to "penalties," but instead thereof the column heading in the delinquent list contained the unauthorized item of "percentage."

¹ For opinion on hearing by Supreme Court, see 162 Cal. 332, 123 P. 266.

As thus phrased or framed, the owner had no notice that any penalties were included in the sum total fixed as affecting all the lots combined. Nor did he occupy a positive situation in either his assumed or his actual knowledge of what was meant by "percentage." Obviously, such an expression might cover any number of different charges at an arbitrary rate or valuation, whether authorized by statute or not, and therefore the owner would be unable to do more than conjecture either as to what item or what amount was included in the "percentage," or what part or portion of the total charge was included therein. In the case of Bussenius v. Warden, 71 Cal. App. 717, 722, 236 P. 371, it was held that the requirement of section 3764 of the Political Code, as amended in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 556), that the delinquent list to be published by the tax collector must contain the names of the persons and a description of the property delinquent, and "the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due," is not complied with where the tax list sets forth the amount due as taxes and costs, but fails to set forth the amount due for penalties; and that a subsequent tax deed predicated upon such defective notice is void. To the same effect is Snodgrass v. Bell (Cal. App.) 261 P. 497. The word "penalty" is not synonymous with the word "percentage," from which it would follow that, if the principle announced in the last two cited cases is correct, the notice of sale was insufficient, with the ultimate result that the deed upon which appellant relies was of no validity, and conveyed no title to him.

[6] Since plaintiff was legally possessed of no title to the property in question, he is in no position to complain of the relief which was granted to defendant in quieting his title thereto. In the case of Canty v. Staley (Cal. Sup.) 123 P. 252, 255, may be found the statement that:

"Parties who purchase property at tax sales acquire the title to the property, if all the proceedings for the levy of the taxes and the sale are regular and in strict conformity to law; but, if not so, they acquire no rights to the property which either a court of law or equity can enforce" (citing authorities).

It becomes unnecessary to devote attention to other suggestions interposed by respondent as reasons for the affirmance of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: YORK, J.

CONREY, P. J. I concur in the judgment, and in the opinion also, except its assumption that the assessments were valid. There were three separate attempted assessments. Each one was by law required to be complete in itself. Two of them failed to name either the owner or "unknown owners." For the validity of an assessment it must contain the name of the owner, or be made to "unknown owners." Pol. Code, § 3636.

In Gottstein v. Holmes (Cal. App.) 264 P. 310, referred to in the foregoing opinion, it does not appear in the decision that the assessments were defective in respect to their statement of the owner's name, or that such defect, if it existed, was brought to the attention of the court.

93 Cal. App. 555

PHILLIPS et al. v. MACKIE. (Civ. 5202.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Aug. 20, 1928.

Brokers ~~vs.~~ 49(1)—Defendant having signed exchange agreement, agreeing to pay broker's commission immediately, brokers held prima facie entitled to commission.

Where brokers secured a purchaser of realty, whom defendant accepted as ready, able, and willing to exchange property on terms specified in contract, and defendant signed agreement to immediately pay commission for broker's services, acknowledging delivery to her of offer to exchange, and declaring that exchange agreement was then on her part in full force and effect, held, that brokers had completed their services and were prima facie entitled to commission.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action by B. G. Phillips and another, co-partners doing business under the name of Phillips & Ream, against Mrs. Cora K. Mackie. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Thomas J. Pitts, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This action was brought to recover brokers' commissions alleged to be due for services rendered in accordance with a contract whereby defendant agreed to pay for those services a commission of $500. At the close of the testimony presented by plaintiffs, the court, on motion of the defendant, ordered a nonsuit, and judgment was entered accordingly. The plaintiffs appeal. The contract was in writing in the form of an offer by one Mrs. Stewart, accepted by respondent, for an exchange of described properties, and all contained in one paper. This agreement, including the promise to pay to plaintiff the said sum of $500, appears in full in the reporter's transcript.

An examination of the transcript discloses that the appellants secured for the defendant a purchaser whom she accepted as ready, able and willing to exchange the property upon the terms specified in the contract, and it also appears that the agreement obtained by appellants was signed by both of the parties to the exchange. In that part of the agreement signed by defendant Mackie, she said:

"I hereby agree and declare that Phillips & Ream is and has been my agent in procuring the said exchange agreement. I hereby agree to pay my said agent immediately the sum of five hundred and no/100 dollars ($500.00) commission for his services. I hereby acknowledge delivery to me of the foregoing offer to exchange and declare that this exchange agreement is now on my part in full force and effect."

Under this contract the brokers' services were completed at the same time when the defendant promised to pay. As was said by the Supreme Court (Jauman v. McCusick, 166 Cal. 517, 522, 137 P. 254, 256), in relation to a similar contract:

"She did not, as did the owner in the cases cited by her, agree to pay a commission for the securing of a purchaser ready and willing to purchase the land. She agreed to pay a commission for securing a specific agreement. Such agreement having been secured, she was liable under the precise terms of her contract."

A prima facie case was made by the plaintiffs, and a nonsuit should not have been granted.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

TOMBLIN v. HILL et al. (Civ. 3522.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 18, 1928.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Oct. 15, 1928.

1. Trusts §103(4)—Attorney, purchasing client's property at judicial sale, is presumed trustee of client, unless purchasing with client's consent, and transaction is fair.

When attorney purchases at judicial sale property in relation to which he has in some way acted in professional capacity, it is presumption of law that he shall be regarded as trustee of client, unless he shows purchase with client's consent, and that transaction was in every way fair, and not to client's disadvantage.

2. Attorney and client §123(1)—Attorney is under no actual incapacity to purchase from client.

Attorney is under no actual incapacity to deal with or purchase from his client.

3. Trusts §107—Proof that client consented to attorneys purchasing client's property, and there was no abuse of confidence, or advantage taken, overcomes presumption that attorney is constructive trustee.

Presumption that attorney, purchasing client's property at judicial sale, is constructive trustee of property, is overcome by clear showing that there has been consent, with full knowledge by client, no abuse of confidence, and no advantage taken.

4. Trusts §103(4)—Attorney, purchasing client's property without client's consent, became trustee for client, and could not change relation without client's consent.

In action to establish trust in real property against attorney, acquiring legal title in proceedings in which he acted as plaintiff's attorney regarding property, testimony by attorney that he made purchase without knowledge or consent of plaintiff established trust for plaintiff, though there was no abuse of confidence, or advantage taken of plaintiff, and trust relation could not be changed by any act of attorney without plaintiff's consent.

5. Trusts §110—Evidence of attorney's conduct in purchasing property of client involved in actions showed he considered himself trustee for client.

In action by plaintiff to establish trust in real property against attorney acquiring legal title in proceedings in which he acted as plaintiff's attorney regarding property, evidence showing plaintiff was mentally incapacitated during portion of time in which attorney and client relation obtained, adverse position taken by attorney towards plaintiff, procurement of third parties to become apparent purchasers, and large difference in value between amount expended by attorney and value of property, showed attorney considered himself trustee of properties for plaintiff, though there was no willful abuse of confidence or intentional taking advantage of client, and attorney was required to account for property to plaintiff.

6. Execution §264—Purchaser at execution sale is successor to judgment debtor, whether title be considered legal or equitable (Code Civ. Proc. § 700).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 700, purchaser at execution sale becomes successor in interest of judgment debtor, whether his title under certificate of sale be considered legal or equitable.

7. Trusts §134—Trustee's possession was possession of beneficiary, and trustee could not defeat beneficiary's claim to property, by showing beneficiary's title passed to third person, not party to action (Code Civ. Proc. § 367).

Where defendant was trustee of real estate for plaintiff, possession of trustee was possession of plaintiff beneficiary, and trustee could defeat beneficiary's claim by showing beneficiary's title passed to third person, not party to action, on ground that, under Code Civ. Proc. § 367, every action must be prosecuted in name of real party in interest.

8. Trusts §134—Trustee holds legal title for beneficiary.

Trustee holds legal title for beneficiary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Action by M. Marie Tomblin against Frank C. Hill and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Hugh Dickson and Duke Stone, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Hewitt, Crump & Penn, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BARTLETT, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff asks in this action to have the defendants Frank C. Hill and Cornelia Beauvais declared to be holders of the legal title to certain real properties situated in the city of Los Angeles in trust for her, and for an accounting of rents and profits. It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiff at all times since November, 1921, is and has been the owner and entitled to the possession of the property; that on November 21, 1921, she employed the defendant Hill as her attorney to represent her in litigation pending in the superior court of Los Angeles county; that in 1922 a judgment was rendered in an action wherein one Olive Pearl Phillips was plaintiff against this plaintiff, defendant Hill acting as attorney for this plaintiff in the action; that on January 2, 1923, the property in litigation was sold by the sheriff under an execution issued in the Phillips action, and purchased by Mrs. Phillips through her attorney; that on April 27, 1923, Mrs. Phillips assigned her sheriff's certificate to the Union Bank & Trust Company; that on January 3, 1924, the Union Bank & Trust Company assigned its interest under the sheriff's certificate to the defendant Cornelia Beauvais; that said Cornelia Beauvais was acting for Hill in an attempt and with the design of acquiring the property for himself, and in fraud of plaintiff's rights; that on January 3, 1924, the sheriff executed a sheriff's deed of the properties to the defendant Beauvais; that said Beauvais is the agent of Hill, and holds the title to the property for said Hill; that Hill on several occasions between January 2, 1923, and January 2, 1924, refused to give plaintiff the address of defendant Beauvais; that Hill and Beauvais claim to own the property to the exclusion of plaintiff; that a mortgage on the property is held by the Union Bank & Trust Company; that Hill has purchased other judgments against plaintiff with intent and design to acquire title to the property for himself, said purchases having been made without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, and in fraud of plaintiff, and in violation of the duties of Hill as the attorney for plaintiff; that Hill has collected certain rents, and paid out money for taxes and interest; that plaintiff offers to repay any moneys paid out by Hill lawfully in the purchase of judgments against plaintiff, and any other sums he may have legally expended; that the property at the time of the sale under the Phillips judgment was worth $55,000; and that at the time this action was instituted the property is of a value of $80,000.

The answer of Hill, Beauvais, and the Union Bank & Trust Company denies ownership of the property by plaintiff, denies all allegations of fraud, and denies the property to be of a value in excess of $55,000. As an affirmative defense it is averred in the answer that on January 2, 1923, plaintiff owned the property subject to a $12,000 mortgage held by the Security Trust & Savings Bank, which mortgage indebtedness was then in default, to two judgment liens in favor of one Koeberle for the sums of $1,180.45 and $922.45, respectively, to a judgment in favor of one O. D. Collins for $25,000, to a judgment in favor of one Rublee for $2,279.54, and certain delinquent taxes and penalties, and interest thereon, which it is alleged amount approximately to the market value of the property. The answer sets forth in detail the acts and events leading up to and following the acquisition by Hill of the property, and avers acquiescence, ratification, and estoppel, and also avers as a defense that plaintiff is not the real party in interest.

The trial court found in favor of the defendants on all the material issues involved, and decreed by its judgment that plaintiff has no right, legal or equitable, in or to the property in question; that defendant Frank C. Hill is the owner and entitled to the possession thereof; that neither Frank C. Hill nor Cornelia Beauvais holds title to the property in trust for plaintiff; and that plaintiff is entitled to recover nothing by her action.

The evidence adduced at the trial shows that plaintiff first became acquainted with defendant Hill in 1905, and first consulted him professionally in June, 1921, at which time she called at his office for advice and assistance concerning a threatened foreclosure of a trust deed which she had given on this property to O. D. Collins and J. O. Mouser on March 1, 1921, for the sum of $35,000, due 60 days after date. This loan was in fact $25,000, the excess of $10,000 being usurious interest. In addition to the Collins trust deed, plaintiff owed over $12,000 to the Security Trust & Savings Bank on a note secured by her first mortgage on the same property, federal income taxes, city and county taxes, and a large amount of open accounts to merchants and others, aggregating many thousand dollars. For some months Hill negotiated with the attorneys for Collins in an endeavor to obtain a reduction of the Collins demand, so that the property could be refinanced. He was not successful in this, and Collins insisted on full and immediate payment, and served notice of sale on plaintiff under this trust deed, fixing the date of sale for November 29, 1921. On November 15, 1921, upon proceedings had in the superior court of Los Angeles county, plaintiff was adjudged incompetent, and her brother-in-law John H. Coulter, was appointed her guardian. The guardian retained Hill and commenced an action against Collins to have the trust deed declared void, and for a penalty of $30,000 under the Usury Act; a temporary injunction was issued and served, restraining the trustee from selling the properties; the action was thereafter tried, and resulted in a judgment rendered November 20, 1922, which declared the trust deed void, but which gave Collins a simple money judgment on the cross-complaint, which he had interposed, for $25,000, without interest. From this judgment the guardian of plaintiff took an appeal, and thereafter this judgment was affirmed by the Appellate Court of the Second Appellate District, Division 1, the decision therein being reported in 71 Cal. App. 380, the same being filed February 21, 1925.

Prior to the time plaintiff was adjudged incompetent, one Koeberle, an assignee of several Los Angeles merchants, secured a judgment against plaintiff on December 31, 1921, for $1,161 and costs. Hill was not an attorney for plaintiff or her guardian in this action. On April 29, 1923, this judgment was purchased by one G. C. Watson, acting for Hill, an execution was issued thereon, and the property was sold to Watson on May 21, 1923, and the writ of execution was wholly satisfied. On January 17, 1922, Koeberle obtained a judgment in another action against plaintiff for $1,922.45. On August 17, 1922, one Mrs. Olive Pearl Phillips, who had loaned plaintiff some money and taken her note for $8,000 to evidence the loan, began an action on the note against plaintiff's guardian. Hill appeared in this action for the guardian, and answered, denying liability for more than $2,500. An attachment was issued, and the property in controversy was levied upon on August 17, 1922. On a trial of the action judgment was rendered in favor of Mrs. Phillips on November 1, 1922. On January 2, 1923, under an execution issued in this last action the property was sold to Mrs. Phillips for $6,922.55, the writ being returned as fully satisfied. The sheriff issued his certificate of sale to Mrs. Phillips on January 2, 1923, and on April 27, 1923, Mrs. Phillips assigned all her right, title, and interest in the property under the sheriff's certificate to the Union Bank & Trust Company, which bank on January 3, 1924, assigned its interest in the property to the defendant Cornelia Beauvais. On January 3, 1924, the sheriff of Los Angeles county executed a sheriff's deed of the property to defendant Cornelia Beauvais.

On November 24, 1922, a writ of execution on the $25,000 Collins judgment was issued, and on January 15, 1923, all the right, title, and interest of Coulter, as guardian, and of the plaintiff, in and to the properties, was sold to Collins for $25,422.55, the judgment being thereby satisfied in full, and on January 29, 1924, the sheriff issued his deed of the properties to Collins. On November 6, 1922, one Kenneth Rublee, a nephew of plaintiff, commenced an action against her for $2,000 and costs, and attached the property, obtaining judgment by default on November 28, 1922; the judgment being for $2,266.14, together with costs and attorney's fees. Hill was not an attorney in this case, and no levy or sale was made under this judgment. On May 21, 1923, the Security Trust & Savings Bank assigned its $12,000 mortgage, which was then in default, to one G. C. Watson, and on the same day the Union Bank & Trust Company, as assignee of the sheriff's certificate of sale under the Phillips judgment, redeemed from the Koeberle sale. The plaintiff was restored to competency on December 20, 1922. Immediately after this plaintiff told Hill she had large sums of money due her from an estate in the East, and that she intended to go to the East and collect moneys sufficient to pay up all of the mortgages, judgments, and debts she was owing in California. About March 19, 1923, she departed for the East and remained there until about December 10, 1923, when she returned to the city of Los Angeles. During her absence plaintiff often wrote and telegraphed Hill that she was making progress in the collecting of moneys, and would soon have them in hand and make remittances sufficient to clear all of her indebtedness.

On or about April 17, 1923, Hill was informed by the former guardian of plaintiff that plaintiff would be unable to redeem from the sheriff's sales that had been made on the Koeberle and Phillips judgments, and thereupon said Hill caused one George C. Watson to purchase, with funds advanced by Hill, the Koeberle judgments, and later caused the Union Bank & Trust Company to purchase the certificate of sale issued on the Phillips judgment, and on May 21, 1923, did cause the Union Bank & Trust Company to purchase the mortgage of the Security Trust & Savings Bank on the plaintiff's property. These judgments, certificates of sale, and mortgages were afterwards assigned to the defendant Cornelia Beauvais, and thereafter transferred by her to the defendant Hill. Hill notified the former guardian of plaintiff that he had purchased the mortgages and judgments, that plaintiff claimed she was about to receive large sums of money in the East, that such moneys had not been forthcoming, that unless plaintiff redeemed from these sales before January 2, 1924, she would lose all right to the property, and asked Coulter to urge plaintiff to make the redemptions. Hill thereafter gave plaintiff a full and accurate account of the moneys he paid out, urged and requested her to redeem before January 2, 1924, and after her return from the East told her it was necessary for her to redeem the property before January 2, 1924, or she would lose all her rights thereto.

Plaintiff, instead of redeeming the property, on or about February 15, 1924, came to Hill and represented that she had a cash purchaser of the properties for $52,500, and asked him if he would be willing to make such sale, and out of the proceeds take only the moneys he had actually advanced. To this Hill consented, and a deal to effect this sale was begun, but was abandoned by plaintiff, for the reason that she would receive no moneys from such sale, as her debts exceeded the sum of $63,000. After this no further claim of her having any interest in the property was made by plaintiff until May 11, 1925, on which date this action was begun.

[1-3] The claim that defendant Hill holds the property under a constructive trust is based upon the ground that he was the attorney for plaintiff in certain legal proceedings, which culminated in the legal title becoming vested in Hill prior to the institution of this action. That it is a presumption of law that, when an attorney purchases at a judicial sale property in relation to which he has in some way acted in a professional capacity, he shall be regarded as the trustee of his client is well established, unless he shows he has purchased for himself, with his client's consent, and that the transaction is in every way fair and not to his client's disadvantage. An attorney is under no actual incapacity to deal with or purchase from his client. If he makes a clear showing that there has been a consent with full knowledge on the part of his client, no abuse of confidence, and no advantage taken, the legal presumption of his being a constructive trustee of properties purchased is overcome and his purchase will be upheld. Kisling v. Shaw, 33 Cal. 425, 91 Am. Dec. 644; Boardman v. Crittenden, 52 Cal. App. 433, 198 P. 1020; 3 Cal. Jur., p. 622, § 33.

[4] If it be conceded there was no abuse of confidence and no advantage taken, the defendant's own testimony in this case shows that he made the purchases without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff. He thereafter held the property in trust for her, a relation which he could not change by any act of his without her consent. Dean v. Shingle, 198 Cal. 652, 658, 246 P. 1049, 46 A. L. R. 1156; Cobb v. Whitney, 124 Okl. 188, 255 P. 566.

[5] While it cannot be said that the evidence taken at the trial of this action shows that there was any willful abuse of confidence or intentional taking advantage of his client on the part of defendant in the many transactions that resulted in the legal title to the properties becoming vested in him, there are certain elements entitled to serious consideration. The mental incapacity during a portion of the time in which the relation of attorney and client obtained, the position taken by Hill in the Phillips case that the loan sued on was for the sum of $2,500, instead of $8,000, his purchase thereafter of the certificate of sale on this judgment for $6,922.55 and its accruing penalties, his having a third party, G. C. Watson, and the defendant Cornelia Beauvais become the apparent purchasers of the various certificates of sale and judgments and mortgage against plaintiff, and his consent to permit plaintiff to negotiate a sale of the property after the time to redeem from the sale under the Phillips judgment, taken into consideration with the large difference between the amount expended on account of the properties by Hill, some $27,500, and their admitted value of $55,000, are persuasive facts in this case pointing to the conclusion that defendant Hill, up to the time of the present controversy, considered himself a trustee of the properties involved for the plaintiff. Counsel for defendants concede:

"It is not clear whether Hill purchased the Phillips' certificate of sale and the mortgage of the Security Bank and redeemed from the Koeberle sale, intending at that time to hold adverse to Mrs. Tomblin."

As stated, if the defendant did not then intend to acquire the property in his individual capacity, he could not change the character of his title by a subsequent change of intention.

[6] The sheriff's certificate of sale and the deed made thereunder to O. D. Collins, pleaded by defendants as a fourth affirmative defense as a bar to this action, presents a novel matter for consideration. Said O. D. Collins is not a party to this action. Under section 700 of the Code of Civil Procedure the purchaser at an execution sale becomes the successor in interest of the judgment debtor, whether his title under the certificate of sale be considered legal or equitable. Pollard v. Harlow, 138 Cal. 390, 71 P. 454, 648; Leaver v. Smith, 47 Cal. App. 474, 190 P. 1050; Bateman v. Kellogg, 59 Cal. App. 464, 211 P. 46; Wangenheim v. Garner, 42 Cal. App. 332, 183 P. 670; Freelon v. Adrian, 161 Cal. 13, 118 P. 220; 11 Cal. Jur. 117, § 64.

[7] Section 367 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. Can a defense that an action is not being prosecuted by the real party in interest be invoked as a bar to the action, where the defendant is shown to be a trustee for the plaintiff? The purpose of an action seeking the holding of a defendant to be a trustee of real properties is in many respects similar to one for quieting title to real estate. In such actions it has been held that a defendant not in possession cannot defeat a title of a plaintiff in possession by showing title in a stranger to the suit with whom he is not in privity. McGrath v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 622, 24 P. 793; Williams v. City of San Pedro, 153 Cal. 44, 94 P. 234; Sears v. Willard, 165 Cal. 12, 130 P. 869; Rockey v. Vieux, 179 Cal. 681, 178 P. 712; Kilfoil v. Warden, 46 Cal. App. 503, 189 P. 303; Weldon v. Lawrence, 76 Cal. App. 534, 245 P. 451.

[8] The possession of a trustee is the possession of his beneficiary. A trustee holds the legal title for his beneficiary. It cannot be held that he can defeat the beneficiary's claim by showing that the beneficiary's title has passed to some third person, not a party to the action.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

93 Cal. App. 577

SPALDING v. BENNETT et al. (Civ. 3536.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 22, 1928.

1. Brokers ⇨43(2)—Oral promise to pay specified sum for services for procuring lease held not within statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624; Code Civ. Proc. § 1973).

Oral promise to pay specified sum for services for procuring lease held not within provisions of statute of frauds, since neither agreement to purchase nor sell real estate is required to be in writing by Civ. Code, § 1624, or Code Civ. Proc. § 1973.

2. Brokers ⇨86(1)—Evidence of lease procured by brokers, agreement for listing and lease by broker's clients with defendants on same terms, supported judgment allowing broker commissions.

In action for broker's commission for procuring lease of real property, evidence showing lessees voluntarily came to broker regarding prospects of securing lease, that broker solicited listing of property and entered into agreement of employment as agent to procure lease containing promise to pay compensation fixed for similar services by realty board, that written lease was procured and sum deposited therefor, but that subsequently defendants entered into lease of premises with broker's clients on similar terms, supported judgment allowing broker commission for procuring lease.

3. Brokers ⇨80—Defendants, sued for brokers' commissions, could not complain of acceptance of lease on terms less favorable than secured by brokers.

In action by brokers to recover commission for procuring lease of real property, defendants could not complain against judgment allowing brokers' commissions, because they saw fit to accept lease on terms less favorable to themselves than terms secured by brokers.

4. Brokers ⇨8(3)—Evidence held to show defendants acquiesced in employment of brokers with promise to pay commissions fixed by realty board for reasonable value.

Evidence that brokers' employee conferred with defendants regarding leasing of their premises, that defendants agreed to payment of commissions, and stated they would not ask brokers to accept less commission than that fixed by realty board showed acknowledgment by defendants of liability to pay commissions in amount fixed by realty board for similar services, or implied agreement to pay reasonable value of services, and indicated that defendants acquiesced in employment of brokers.

5. Brokers ⇨8(3)—Evidence that defendant refused to sign lease procured by brokers until he saw attorney did not show agreement to pay commissions subject to attorney's approval.

In action by brokers to recover commissions for procuring lease of real property, statement by defendant, after brokers procured lease, that he could not sign until he saw his attorney, did not show agreement to pay commissions subject to approval of defendant's attorney, in view of other evidence showing agreement to employ brokers and pay commissions without reservations.

6. Brokers ⇨86(4)—Concession as to correctness of lease procured by broker held acknowledgment that brokers were procuring cause, entitling brokers to commission, though lease was entered into without brokers' aid.

In action by brokers to recover commissions for procuring lease of real property, evidence that defendants conceded written contract of lease procured by brokers was just as they wanted it, and that they would not ask brokers to reduce commissions below amount specified by realty board, showed acknowledgment that broker was procuring cause of obtaining lease on terms satisfactory to defendants, and authorized recovery of commissions by brokers, though lease was finally executed without presence or aid of brokers.

7. Brokers ⇨53—Broker, who is efficient cause of procuring customer willing and able to lease property on terms acceptable to owner, is entitled to commissions.

Where broker is efficient cause of procuring customer who is ready, willing, and able to lease property on terms specified by owner in contract of employment, or on terms acceptable to owner, he is entitled to commissions.

8. Brokers ⇨54—Owner, after accepting customer procured by broker and execution of satisfactory lease, cannot deny customer's ability or willingness to consummate contract.

When customer procured by broker is accepted by owner, and lease is executed on terms satisfactory to owner, owner is estopped from denying ability or willingness of customer to consummate contract.

9. Brokers $\S$ 56(3)—Neither principal nor customer procured by broker can defeat broker's claim for commissions by concluding transaction without broker's aid.

After broker has procured customer willing and able to lease property on terms acceptable to owner, neither principal nor customer may defeat claim of broker to his compensation by concluding transaction without broker's aid.

10. Brokers $\S$ 86(1)—Destruction of original contract and check after brokers procured acceptable customer held insufficient to show brokers' abandonment of employment.

In action by brokers to recover commissions for procuring lease of real property, where brokers procured customer, and lease was actually executed between owner and customer on terms acceptable to owner, mere destruction of original contract to lease and deposit check, in absence of further testimony, was insufficient evidence to warrant holding that broker abandoned employment and forfeited commissions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by B. H. Spalding against Charles H. Bennett, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Peyton H. Moore, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Barker & Keithly, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment for broker's commissions for procuring a 50-year lease of real property.

[1] The complaint contains two counts, the first of which is based upon an alleged oral promise to pay a specified sum for services for procuring the lease, while the second count claims compensation upon a quantum meruit. The transaction is not within the provisions of the statute of frauds, since it was neither an agreement to purchase nor sell real estate, which, in the absence of a memorandum in writing, is prohibited by section 1624 of the Civil Code and section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The complaint alleges that the respondent was a duly licensed real estate broker, doing business in the city of Los Angeles; that the appellants were the owners of lot 1, block 7, of Wright's subdivision of lots 78, 95, and 96 of McDonald's Tract of the city of Los Angeles, Cal.; that on November 19, 1923, the appellants employed respondent to negotiate a 50-year lease of said premises upon specific terms, mentioned at $250 per month as rental for the first five years, $400 per month for the following five years, and an increased rental of $100 per month for each succeeding 5-year period until the termination of the lease; that the efforts of respondent resulted in securing the customers, who subsequently executed said lease upon the exact terms specified by the appellants. The first count alleged that appellants agreed to pay respondent for said services a sum equivalent to the amount fixed by the Los Angeles Realty Board schedule of broker's commissions for similar transactions. The second count prayed for judgment upon a quantum meruit. Upon trial the court found all the allegations of the complaint to be true, that the commissions which were fixed by the schedule of the realty board for such services were $4,225, and that said sum was also a reasonable compensation therefor. Judgment was thereupon rendered in favor of the respondent for the sum of $4,225, together with interest thereon, aggregating the sum of $4,814.04.

The appeal is based solely upon a charge that the findings of the court are not supported by the evidence. It is claimed that (1) there is no evidence of the employment of respondent as an agent to procure the lease; that (2) there was no agreement to pay for such services, either a specified sum, or the reasonable value thereof; and that (3) the respondent abandoned his employment and thereby waived his commissions.

[2, 3] There is no merit in these contentions. There is a conflict of evidence, but the record discloses ample testimony to support the findings and judgment of the court. It satisfactorily appears that the lessees first voluntarily came to the office of respondent, inquiring regarding the prospects of securing a lease upon the identical property in question. Respondent sent two salesmen to appellants upon different occasions, soliciting a listing of the property and an agreement of employment as agent to procure the lease. There is substantially no conflict as to the exact terms of the lease agreed upon. A promise to pay the compensation fixed for similar services by the realty board was clearly made. Respondent procured a written contract from the lessees, who agreed to all the terms required by appellants, which document also provided for the depositing of $5,000 as security for the faithful performance of the covenants of the lease. A check for $1,000 was actually delivered to the respondent by the lessees to bind the bargain. A controversy afterwards arose between respondent and the appellants regarding the commissions to be paid, and this check and contract with the lessees were then destroyed. Appellants contend that this constituted an abandonment of the employment as broker and a waiver of his claim for compensation. Immediately thereafter the appellants entered into a lease of the premises with respondent's clients upon the exact terms specified, except that $5,000 deposit for the faithful performance of the terms of the lease was not required. The appellants, however, may not complain because they have seen fit to accept a lease upon terms less favorable to themselves than the terms which were secured by respondent. 4 Cal. Jur. 606, § 39; 4 R. C. L. 322, § 59; 9 C. J. 600, § 89; Arnold v. La Belle Oil Co., 47 Cal. App. 290, 297, 190 P. 815.

[4] Regarding the employment of respondent as the agent of appellants, Ruth Schauerman, respondent's saleslady, testified that she had a conference with both of the appellants in November, 1923, and that they specified the terms of the lease which they were willing to make, which conformed exactly to the terms of the lease subsequently executed by them, except as to the amount of deposit. She testified that appellants said "they would take care of the commissions; * * * they were willing to pay a commission—knew that a commission had to be paid." And in a subsequent conference, during which she told them respondent had a client who would lease the premises upon the terms specified, appellants replied "that it was fine that they would lease it, and if we could lease it and get those terms, it was perfectly satisfactory." This witness further testified that at the last-mentioned conference appellants said respecting the payment of commissions:

"We have called the Realty Board and figured with them, and the commission is more than we expected it would be, but we would not ask you to cut it one penny."

This appears to be a clear acknowledgment that appellants recognized their liability to pay for the services of their agent the amount fixed by the Los Angeles Realty Board for similar services. Mr. Ulm, another salesman of respondent, having procured the written contract with respondent's client to lease the premises upon the terms specified, took this agreement, together with the $1,000 check above mentioned, to appellants, who carefully read it over in the presence of each other. Mr. Bennett then asked his wife, "Is that just the way we want it, Mamma?" To which she replied, "Yes." In discussing the commissions at this conference, Mr. Bennett further said:

"Now, that commission is more than I thought [it would be] when I gave Mrs. Schauerman the listing, but when I called up the Board, I found it was about right, and I would not ask you to cut it one penny; but I can't sign it until I see my attorney."

We are of the opinion that, fairly construed, the record discloses evidence clearly indicating that appellants acquiesced in the employment of respondent as their agent, and promised to pay him the amount, fixed by the Los Angeles Realty Board for similar services, as compensation. At least, it must be conceded that the foregoing evidence implies that they agreed to pay respondent some amount as compensation for his services in procuring a lease of the premises upon the specified terms. If the specific amount agreed upon may be said to be in doubt, still the judgment must stand, because it represents the reasonable value of the services performed, as indicated by both the pleadings and the proof in the case.

[5-10] The appellants contend that their agreement to employ respondent as their agent and pay him commissions for his service was subject to the approval of their attorney, Mr. Byrnes, and that appellant's foregoing statement with respect to the lease, that "I can't sign it until I see my attorney," confirms this claim. But we are of the opinion that the record, including the evidence heretofore quoted, indicates that appellants, without reservation, agreed to the specific terms of the lease, as well as to the payment of commissions for the agent's service. Both Ruth Schauerman and Mr. Ulm testified positively that the appellants did not state that the commissions for the broker's service must be satisfactory to their attorney. The inference which must be drawn from the foregoing statement of Mr. Bennett, that "I can't sign it until I see my attorney," clearly indicates that he recognized the contract of employment, and desired to submit to his attorney the mere form of the lease, for their protection. It does appear that appellants' attorney, Mr. Byrnes, did believe that the contract of employment was within the statute of frauds, and therefore void, and evidently because they considered the commissions excessive they were warranted in repudiating the contract. Mr. Lockwood, one of the lessees, testified that Mr. Byrnes had said to him:

"Morally we owe the money, but he [the respondent] has nothing in writing, and legally he cannot get it, and we won't pay it."

But upon appeal it is not contended that the contract of employment is void because it was not reduced to writing or signed by the parties to be charged. From the testimony heretofore quoted it appears that the appellants conceded that the written contract of the lessees procured by the respondent was "just the way we want it," and that, while the commissions exceeded their expectations, they had conferred with the Realty Board and found them to be about right, and therefore would not ask the respondent to cut them one penny.

These concessions amount to an acknowledgment that respondent was the procuring cause of obtaining a written contract from the lessees upon terms entirely satisfactory to appellants, and a promise to pay commissions equivalent to the sum fixed by the Realty Board for such services. This being true, the respondent is entitled to recover his compensation, in spite of the fact that the lease was finally executed between the parties thereto without the presence or aid of the respondent. Where a broker is the efficient cause of procuring a customer who is ready, willing, and able to lease property upon the terms specified by the owner in the contract of employment, or upon terms acceptable to the owner, he is entitled to his commissions. 4 Cal. Jur. 583, § 25; 4 R. C. L. 307, §§ 49, 50; Twogood v. Monnette, 191 Cal. 103, 215 P. 542. When the customer procured by the agent is accepted by the owner, and the lease is executed upon terms satisfactory to the owner, he is estopped from denying the ability or willingness of the customer to consummate the contract. 4 R. C. L. 309, § 49; Twogood v. Monnette, supra; Rucker v. Hubler, 56 Cal. App. 771, 206 P. 472.

After a broker has procured a customer willing and able to lease property upon terms acceptable to the owner, neither the principal nor the customer may defeat the claim of the broker to his compensation by concluding the transaction without the broker's aid. 9 C. J. 619, § 99. Since the 50-year lease was actually executed between the appellants and the customers procured by respondent, upon terms acceptable to the owners, the mere destruction of the original contract to lease, and the deposit check for $1,000, in the absence of further testimony, is insufficient evidence to warrant a holding that the respondent thereby abandoned his employment and forfeited his commissions. The record indicates just the contrary purpose, on the part of respondent.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

93 Cal. App. 632

PEOPLE v. WILSON. (Cr. 1469.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 24, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 22, 1928.

1. Criminal law § 741(1)—Whether person present at crime, aided and abetted therein, so as to be principal, is fact question for jury (Pen. Code, § 31).

Whether a person, who is shown to have been present at the time and place of commission of the crime, aided and abetted therein, so as to be a principal, within Pen. Code, § 31, is question of fact for the jury to decide from all the circumstances proved.

2. Robbery § 24(1)—Evidence held sufficient to justify conviction of defendant for robbery, second degree, on theory that she was present to aid and abet (Pen. Code, § 31).

Evidence held sufficient to warrant conclusion that defendant was present at robbery, for purpose of aiding and abetting actual robbers by diverting suspicion, to serve as lookout and give warning of approach of any one, or to take charge of robbers' automobile, keep engine running, and give direct aid to them in making their escape, justifying her conviction of robbery, second degree under Pen. Code, § 31.

3. Criminal law § 552(1)—Unexplained presence at crime may be deemed circumstance tending to show complicity.

The unexplained presence of a person at the scene of the commission of a crime may be deemed a circumstance tending to show complicity in the transaction.

4. Criminal law § 1037(1)—District attorney's persistent cross-examination of defendant respecting reasons for carrying pistol, notwithstanding rulings sustaining objections, held not to require reversal, without assignment for misconduct.

Where police detective testified without objection to finding pistol in defendant's vanity case, and that she stated in answer to question that she carried gun for her protection, conduct of district attorney in persisting to cross-examine defendant as to why she stated to officer that she had carried pistol for her protection, though all defendant's objections thereto were sustained, and his referring thereto in his argument, held not to require reversal, where defendant did not assign this as misconduct.

5. Criminal law § 719(1)—District attorney's statement in argument, fairly supported by evidence, was not improper.

District attorney's statement to jury during his argument, which was fairly supported by the evidence, was not improper.

6. Criminal law § 823(2)—Instructions respecting degrees of robbery held not objectionable, as implying defendant's presence at crime, in view of other instruction.

Where court charged that defendant should not be found guilty at all, unless jury was convinced to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that robbery was committed as alleged in information, and that defendant was present and aided and abetted therein, instructions relating to degrees of robbery held not objectionable, as implying that defendant was present at scene of crime, though, standing alone, they might give rise to such implication.

7. Criminal law § 823(1)—Typographical mistake in using term "a defendant," instead of "the defendant," in instruction, held not objectionable, as permitting conviction if codefendants were guilty, in view of other instruction.

Typographical mistake in using the term "a defendant" in instruction, instead of "the defendant," held not objectionable, as in effect informing jury that, if they found that either of codefendants aided or abetted in the commission of the robbery, it was their duty to find defendant guilty thereof, where the following instruction required jury to find to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant aided and abetted in commission of the crime before they could convict her.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James G. Conlon, Judge.

Lorena Wilson was convicted of robbery in the second degree, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph M. Trusty and Frank J. Golden, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KNIGHT, J. The appellant, Lorena Wilson, was charged jointly with her husband, Harry Wilson, and one Russell Griffin, with the crime of robbery alleged to have been committed in San Francisco on September 21, 1927. She was arrested in Oakland on December 1, 1927, and tried separately in February, 1927; her codefendants having been previously sentenced to the state prison on another charge. The jury found her guilty of robbery in the second degree, and, following the denial of motions for a new trial and probation, she was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. Thereupon she took this appeal from the judgment of conviction and the order denying her motion for a new trial.

The first point made is that the verdict is not supported by the evidence and is contrary to law. The record discloses that shortly prior to the hour of 8 o'clock on the evening of the robbery appellant's codefendant Russell Griffin, accompanied by another man and a woman, drove in an automobile to a grocery store on the corner of Noriega street and Twentieth avenue, San Francisco, and while his companions waited outside near the front of the store, Griffin entered the store, armed with a pistol, and after threatening Miss Rose O'Connor, the manager of the store, who was alone therein at the time, stole the money that was in the cash register, and then made his escape by driving away with his companions. Direct evidence was introduced to prove that appellant and her husband were the other two persons with Griffin at the time he perpetrated the crime, and the prosecution introduced evidence of certain circumstances which it claimed justified the conclusion that appellant aided and abetted in its commission, and the jury so found. These circumstances briefly stated, were as follows:

About dusk on the evening of the robbery a Mrs. Woods, living on Twentieth avenue, about six houses distant from the grocery store and on the same side of the street therewith, was standing in front of her home, watering the lawn, and while doing so a Chrysler coupé approached slowly, with only one headlight burning. She saw that it was occupied by two men and a woman, the latter being seated between the men; and her attention was particularly attracted to them because her husband was employed by the agency handling that make of car, and when she first saw the coupé approach she thought that one of its occupants was her husband, and that he was driving home in one of the agency's cars; but as the parties came closer to her she saw that her husband was not one of them. The coupé passed within $3\frac{1}{2}$ or 4 feet of her, "hugging" the curb, and then proceeded on along Twentieth avenue directly in front of the grocery store, around the corner into Noriega street, and circled the block. This maneuver was repeated three times. The window of the coupé was down, and consequently each time the parties drove by Mrs. Woods she was able to get a good look at them.

On the fourth trip around the block, the coupé drew in still closer to the curb toward Mrs. Woods, and as it passed slowly by her one of the men curily told her to "go into the garage and mind her own business." In compliance with such command she went into the garage, but looked back out through the glass door, and saw the coupé continue on slowly along Twentieth avenue until it reached a point about 20 feet the other side of Noriega street. It stopped there, and the two men alighted; whereupon Mrs. Woods hurried to the phone to notify the police, but, being unable to obtain telephonic connection with the department, because her party line was "busy," she immediately returned to the front yard and stood behind the trunk of a tree, where she could observe the subsequent movements of the coupé and also the interior of the grocery store through its front windows. She testified that, after both men got out of the coupé, one of them entered the store, while the other stood near a street light directly in front of the store; that she saw the man in the store commit the robbery, and then run out, join the other man, and that both men then jumped into the coupé, the engine of which had been kept running, and drove away; and that while all of this was going on she had a clear view, through the rear window of the coupé, of a woman seated therein. Mrs. Woods afterwards, at the Oakland jail and at the trial positively identified appellant as the woman occupant of the coupé. Additional evidence was adduced tending to show that appellant made more or less resistance at the time of her arrest, and also that she had contradicted herself in some respects regarding the whereabouts of her husband and as to other pertinent matters.

Appellant's defense depended entirely upon her own testimony, no other witness being produced in her behalf, and her testimony on direct examination was to the effect merely that she lived with her husband and three children, and that Griffin boarded with them; that she was not present in the coupé at the time of the robbery, as claimed by Mrs. Woods; and that she did not know her husband had been doing wrong until he was arrested.

[1, 2] Section 31 of the Penal Code declares in part that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or, not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission, are principals in any crime so committed; and the contention appellant makes regarding the evidence is that, even assuming that she was present at the time and place of the robbery, there was no proof introduced to establish the fact that she aided and abetted in the commission of the crime. We are unable to agree with this contention, for it is well settled that the question of whether or not a person who is shown to have been present at the time and place of the commission of a crime has aided and abetted therein is one of fact for the jury to decide from all the circumstances proved (People v. Woodward, 45 Cal. 293, 13 Am. Rep. 176; People v. Kauffman, 152 Cal. 331, 92 P. 861; People v. Wilson, 135 Cal. 331, 67 P. 322); and in our opinion the circumstances hereinabove narrated are legally sufficient to warrant the conclusion that appellant had previous knowledge of what was about to transpire, and that her object in being present was to divert any suspicion as to their purpose, or to serve as a lookout, and to give warning of the approach of anyone seeking to interfere with their enterprise, or to take charge of the automobile, keep the engine running, and to give direct aid to the men in making their escape. Any one of the purposes mentioned would be sufficient upon which to base the reasonable inference that she was aiding and abetting in the commission of the robbery.

[3] Furthermore, it has been held that the unexplained presence of a person at the scene of the commission of a crime may be deemed a circumstance tending to show complicity in the transaction. People v. Woodward, supra. Here appellant denied that she was present at the scene of the crime, but the jury, by its verdict, declared that she was; consequently, in that state of her testimony, her presence was unexplained, and may have been taken by the jury as an additional circumstance tending to show complicity in the crime. The case last cited is one upon which appellant relies to support her contention that the evidence is insufficient. But, aside from the declaration of the legal principle above referred to, we think the case is of little value here, because an analysis of the decision shows that it goes no farther than to restate in negative form the provisions embodied in section 31 of the Penal Code to the effect that the mere presence of a person at the time and place of the commission of a crime is not legally sufficient to sustain a conviction, unless it be found as a fact that he aided and abetted in the commission thereof, and, as the decision in the case declares, it is "for the jury to decide from all the facts proved, whether he aided, assisted, or abetted in the perpetration of the offense." In other words, an affirmative finding on the elements mentioned may be based upon the circumstances surrounding the person's presence. Therefore it would appear that the conclusion reached in the present case is not in conflict with any of the rules stated in the case cited.

[4] Appellant assigns as error certain rulings of the trial court and the conduct of the district attorney in relation to the introduction in evidence of an envelope and a pistol which were found in appellant's possession at the time of her arrest, the circumstances leading up to and attending which were as follows: At the time the robbery occurred the Wilsons and Griffin resided on Twenty-Third avenue in Oakland, and they continued to live there until the following month, October, 1927, at which time they moved to San Francisco, where they resided until the time of appellant's arrest. For several days preceding appellant's arrest the Oakland police department had under surveillance a house on Twelfth street, knowing that a government letter from the War Veterans' Bureau, addressed to Griffin, was about to be delivered there, and the day after it was delivered appellant called to get it. As she left the premises, the police followed her for some distance, and she finally ran into the doorway of an apartment house. As the officers were about to follow her in, she came out of the door carrying a vanity case, which was partly opened. After a brief struggle she was placed in the police automobile, and one of the officers asked her to hand over the vanity case, which she refused to do, and during the struggle for it she threw it out of the machine. It was picked up, and among the articles found therein was the government envelope addressed to Griffin and a Mauser pistol fully loaded. The particular portions of the testimony given by the police detective on direct examination as to the struggle for the vanity case and the finding of the envelope and pistol therein went before the jury without objection, as did the further testimony given by the same officer to the effect that they asked appellant "why she carried the gun, and she said she carried the gun for her protection"; but, upon introducing the envelope and pistol in evidence, appellant objected thereto, and her objections were overruled as to the admission of the envelope, but sustained as to the pistol. Thereafter, and on cross-examination of appellant, the district attorney persisted in asking appellant, despite the repeated objections of appellant, which the court consistently sustained, why she had stated to the officers that she carried the pistol for protection. The district attorney also touched upon the same matter in an indirect manner during his argument to the jury. Therefore, at the conclusion of the arguments the trial court, through abundance of caution, instructed the jury that "all objections to questions asked by the district attorney with reference to the possession by the defendant" of the pistol had been sustained, and all testimony given with reference thereto stricken out, and in addition the court admonished the jury "to disregard and discard from their minds any and all ideas and impressions and convictions that the production of such weapon in court has or may have formed in the minds of the members of the jury," and to disregard also "any and all impressions, ideas, or convictions which form from any and all questions and answers of the defendant and the remarks of the district attorney in reference to the possession by the defendant of said revolver at the time of her arrest."

It is evident from the foregoing condition of the record that appellant was not injured by the rulings of the trial court regarding appellant's reason for carrying the pistol because the objections made with reference thereto were sustained; nor can it be said that the ruling as to the reception in evidence of the sealed envelope addressed to Griffin, if erroneous, operated to her prejudice, because, as stated, the officer had already testified, without objection on appellant's part, that such envelope was found in appellant's possession, and, conceding that the conduct of the district attorney in repeatedly asking appellant her reason for carrying the pistol, after the court had ruled such testimony inadmissible, and in adverting to the same matter in his argument, is subject to just criticism, it cannot be held to have constituted reversible error because neither during the cross-examination nor the argument did appellant assign the same as misconduct.

[5] The only assignment of misconduct made related to the district attorney's statement to the jury, during his argument, that appellant saw Griffin going into the store with the pistol and committing the robbery, and we think that such inference was fairly deducible from the evidence, and that therefore the statement objected to was not improper.

[6] Appellant also complains of the giving of four instructions, the first two of which relate to the degrees of robbery. Appellant claims that the implied meaning of said instructions was that she was present at the scene of the crime. Standing alone, the instructions might give rise to such implication; but the court elsewhere in its charge instructed the jury in substance that appellant should not be found guilty at all, unless the jury was convinced to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that a robbery was committed as alleged in the information, and that appellant was present and aided and abetted therein, as defined in said instructions; consequently, when the instructions objected to are read in connection with the others constituting the court's charge, the implication imputed to them entirely disappears.

[7] The third instruction objected to apparently contained a typographical mistake, the term "a defendant" being used instead of "the defendant"; and appellant claims that as a result of such mistake the jury was in effect informed that, if it found that either of her codefendants aided and abetted in the commission of the robbery, it was their duty to find appellant guilty thereof. The very next instruction quoted in appellant's brief clearly shows, however, that the jury could not have been misled by the typographical error. It reads as follows:

"If the jury is convinced to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that a robbery was committed as alleged in the information, and that the defendant aided and abetted as defined in these instructions, in the commission of the acts leading up to and resulting in such robbery, and that the defendant was actually present at the scene of the commission of the robbery, or at such convenient distance as to be able to come to the immediate assistance of her associates, if required, or to watch to prevent surprise, or the like, at the time and place and on the occasion when it is alleged and claimed that such robbery was committed, and that she then and there directly committed the acts constituting the offense, or aided and abetted in its commission, as defined in these instructions, or, being present, advised and encouraged in its commission, then it is your duty to return a verdict of guilty against defendant."

Appellant also attacks the foregoing instruction upon the ground that there is no evidence to support any of the elements of the crime therein set forth. We have already discussed the evidence, and, as stated, the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom are legally sufficient in our opinion to establish the necessary elements constituting the crime of which appellant was convicted.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem.

PEOPLE v. HAACK. (Cr. 1031.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 22, 1928.

1. Criminal law § 741(5)—Corroboration of accomplice held sufficient to warrant submission of larceny case to jury (Pen. Code, § 1111).

In prosecution for grand larceny for theft of calves, based on testimony of accomplice, corroborating testimony held sufficient to warrant submission of case to jury, under Pen. Code, § 1111.

2. Criminal law § 1171(1)—Any misconduct in examining accomplice respecting counts on which prosecuting officers knew they could not introduce corroborating evidence held harmless, where court instructed jury to acquit on such counts (Pen. Code, § 1111).

Even if prosecuting officers, when examining accomplice respecting crimes charged in certain counts, knew they would not be able to introduce corroborating evidence, as required by Pen. Code, § 1111, though they had stated that they intended to introduce such corroborating testimony, accused was not damaged thereby, where court directed jury to acquit on such counts; such direction constituting a plain and unequivocal instruction that any evidence received respecting those counts had no bearing on remaining count.

3. Criminal law § 815(1)—Instruction not to consider fact that others were not prosecuted for offense charged held not objectionable, as directing jury to disregard testimony of witnesses connected with crime charged.

Where trial court stated during voir dire examination of jurors and in his instruction that the fact that others had not been arrested or prosecuted at that time for the larceny charged was not before jury, and must not be considered for any purpose, and cannot be allowed to influence verdict, held not objectionable, as instructing jury not to consider for any purpose the testimony of any witness who was connected by evidence in some way with offense charged.

4. Criminal law § 1172(3)—Error in instruction relative to corroboration of accomplice testimony, in assuming that certain persons were accomplices, held favorable to defendant.

Error of court in assuming, in its instruction requiring corroboration of accomplice testimony, that certain persons were accomplices, held favorable to defendant, since, if they were such accomplices, their testimony against defendant would not be competent corroboration of accomplice testimony.

5. Criminal law § 829(1)—Refusal of defendant's requested instructions, covered by instructions given, was not error.

Refusal of defendant's requested instructions covering correct legal propositions was not error, where matters involved were covered elsewhere by court's charge.

6. Criminal law § 507(5)—Instruction that certain person became accomplice by attempting to conceal stolen calves, after being informed they had been stolen, held properly refused (Pen. Code, § 1111).

In prosecution for larceny by theft of calves, refusal of defendant's requested instruction that certain person became an accomplice by his attempt to conceal the calves, after he was informed that they had been stolen, held properly refused, since, if he had received calves, knowing they were stolen, he would not have been an accomplice, under Pen. Code, § 1111.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Carl Haack was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Clinton Johnson, of Oroville, and Ray Manwell, of Marysville, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. Under an indictment found and returned to the superior court of Butte county by the grand jury thereof, and filed in said court on the 7th day of May, 1927, the defendant was convicted of the crime of grand larceny, in that he, on or about the 1st day of April of said year, did unlawfully and feloniously steal and take away two calves, the personal property of one Nettie Frishholz. This is an appeal by the defendant from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The indictment as found was in four counts, viz.: Count 1, charging the offense of which the defendant now stands convicted, and with which this appeal is alone concerned; count 2, charging him with the stealing, on or about the 7th day of April, 1927, of two calves, the property of one William Cardoza; count 3, charging him with the stealing, on or about the 3d day of March, 1927, of one calf, the property of one John Bettencourt; count 4, charging him with the stealing, on or about the 2d day of April, 1927, of one calf, the property of one William N. Lewis.

The trial of which the present appeals are the outgrowth is the second prosecuted against the defendant under the indictment. The result below of the first trial was the conviction of the accused under counts 1, 2, and 3, and his acquittal under count 4. He took an appeal to this court from the judgment and the order disallowing his motion for a new trial on his conviction at the first trial, and in an opinion by Mr. Justice Plummer of this court the judgment and the order were reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial. People v. Haack (Cal. App.) 260 P. 913. It is, among other things, said in the opinion:

"This appeal presents for our consideration two major reasons why the judgment of the trial court should be reversed, to wit: First, that conviction was had upon the uncorroborated ed testimony of an accomplice; and, second, alleged error on the part of the trial court in instructing the jury on matters of law. A careful reading of the testimony set out in the transcript discloses that there is absolutely no corroborating testimony, as required by section 1111 of the Penal Code, in so far as counts 2 and 3 of the indictment are concerned, and no further comment need be made thereon."

In the opinion it is further held that the record disclosed sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the accomplice to justify the submission of the case to the jury on the question of the defendant's guilt or innocence of the crime stated in the first count of the indictment, but properly held that a reversal was required because of erroneous instructions read to the jury by the court. A reversal of the judgment and the order followed, of course.

At the last trial, or the one from which the present appeals have arisen, the court directed the jury to return verdicts of acquittal as to counts 2 and 3, and the jury acted accordingly. As above stated, we are concerned here only with count 1, which, as also stated above, charges, in appropriate legal form, the defendant with the stealing, on April 1, 1927, of two calves belonging to Mrs. Frishholz.

The witness upon whose testimony the people principally relied at both trials for a conviction of the accused was a Mrs. Florence King, who testified at both trials that she participated with the defendant in the commission of the larceny charged in count 1, and who, therefore, was confessedly an accomplice of the accused. Pen. Code, § 1111. As on the former appeal, so on this, the point first urged is that the verdict fails of sufficient support, for the asserted reason that the testimony of Mrs. King, the accomplice, was not corroborated by other testimony, as required by the section of the Penal Code just cited. Other assignments of error involve the action of the trial court in giving and disallowing certain instructions.

The testimony presented by the people at the second trial in support of the charge set forth in count 1 of the indictment is substantially the same as that likewise presented at the first trial. The opinion of Mr. Justice Plummer (cited above) contains a full and accurate statement of the facts brought out by the testimony so presented. It is not necessary, therefore, that we should repeat herein, in elaborate or extended detail, the evidence adduced at the trial responsible for the present appeals. There should be made herein, however, some reference to the facts as they were brought before the jury at the last or second trial, in order that a general outline of the case, as it was made by the evidence, may be with us as we consider the several legal points which defendant contends support his demand for a reversal.

Mrs. King testified: That she had on several different occasions previous to the 1st day of April, 1927, accompanied the defendant in the nighttime on rides in the latter's automobile, which was a Studebaker; that at some time in the afternoon of April 1, 1927, the defendant made an engagement with her for a ride that night; that between 9 and 10 o'clock p. m. of that day (on which rain had to some extent fallen) the defendant drove to a point near her home, situated not far distant from the town of Gridley; that she met him there and got into his auto, and that they thereupon drove westerly from her home on the highway, until they reached a point on the highway opposite a barn situated in a field belonging to Mrs. Nettie Frishholz; that, when reaching that point on the highway, or when in near approach thereto, either she or the accused (she was not certain which of the two) suggested that they go to the barn of Mrs. Frishholz, a short distance from the highway, and see if they could find some calves; that the Studebaker was thereupon moved to and parked on the unpaved portion of the highway opposite the barn, and the two then climbed over the fence, went to the barn, where they saw three young calves; that, with ropes, they tied two of the calves and took them to the fence bordering on the highway; that at this particular moment of time they observed the lights of an automobile which was approaching from the west, and that the defendant, leaving the witness in the field with the calves, passed over the fence, got into his car, and drove "up the highway" a short distance, returning after the other automobile had passed the spot where the witness and the calves were; that, on returning, the accused, aided by the witness, lifted the calves over the fence, placed them in the rear portion of the automobile, thereupon returned to the ranch where the witness and her husband resided, and turned the calves loose in a field on said property. A short time thereafter, in the month of April (the exact time or date the witness said she could not give), the defendant met and told the witness that "there was trouble with the calves," further saying, "Get rid of them; take them off the place;" that later the defendant was at her home, and they then informed the husband of the witness (Lee King) that the calves had been stolen, and that her husband thereupon said that "he wanted no stolen calves on his place and that he wanted them to be taken away"; that defendant stated that he had no time to remove the calves from the King place, and that thereupon the witness' husband requested the defendant to assist him (King) in loading the calves in his (King's) car; that the defendant complied with King's request, and assisted the latter in lifting the calves into the car of King, who then took the animals to a field in which there was located what the witness referred to as a "tin barn." The defendant, when King removed the calves to the so-called "tin barn" premises, did not accompany the latter.

[1] The circumstances upon which the people relied at the first trial for corroboration of the testimony of Mrs. King are fully and clearly stated in our opinion disposing of the former appeal as follows:

"The Studebaker automobile, owned by the defendant and taken from his possession a few days after the alleged larceny, was found to be equipped with three smooth tires and one tire comparatively new. The three smooth tires were on the front wheels of the automobile and on the right rear wheel thereof. The comparatively new tire, with the tread thereon still intact, was found upon the left rear wheel of the defendant's automobile. As stated herein, rain had fallen on the day preceding the night of the alleged larceny. The automobile tracks alongside the highway in the neighborhood of the Frishholz barn, discovered the morning after the larceny, discloses that they were made by an automobile on which three of the tires were smooth, and that the tire on the left rear wheel was comparatively new and the tread was intact. An examination of this tread was made by witnesses familiar with the different makes of tires, and these witnesses testified that the tracks made by the tire on the left rear wheel of the car that was stopped along the Frishholz barn on the night of the larceny were made by a Federal tire, and that the left rear wheel of the defendant's automobile was equipped with a Federal tire having a like tread with the tire that made the marks to which we have just referred. The testimony also showed a number of foot tracks leading from the place where the automobile was stopped to and from the Frishholz barn. These tracks indicated that a man and a woman had participated in the larceny. The man's tracks were large; the woman's tracks were small. Measurements were made of these tracks, and especially of the tracks made by the larger of the two persons participating in the larceny. The length of these tracks was found to be identical with the length of the shoe worn by the defendant at the time of his trial. The width, however, was slightly in excess of the width of the shoes then worn by the defendant. Upon being arrested, the defendant stated to the arresting officer 'that, if they were going to send him to the penitentiary, there would be more go with him,' and also that the calves could be found at the tin barn."

Precisely the same circumstances as corroborative of Mrs. King's testimony were brought out at the second trial. In the opinion on the former appeal, this court declared that the circumstances as narrated in the foregoing excerpt tended to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime charged in count 1, "and sufficiently fills the measure of proof required by section 1111 of the Penal Code." We adhere to that declaration, not only as in its application to the first trial, but also as in its application to the last or second trial. Section 1111 of the Penal Code provides:

"A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof."

In People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 480, 24 P. 32, it is stated that, while the corroborating evidence in that case was not strong, and that more is required by way of corroboration than to raise a mere suspicion (People v. Thompson, 50 Cal. 480), "yet the corroborating evidence is sufficient if it, of itself, tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, although it is slight, and entitled, when standing by itself, to but little consideration." See, also, People v. Melvane, 39 Cal. 614; People v. Garnett, 29 Cal. 622; People v. Clough, 73 Cal. 351, 15 P. 5; People v. Blunkall, 31 Cal. App. 778, 783, 161 P. 997, 999; State v. Miller, 65 Iowa, 60, 21 N. W. 181; People v. Mayhew, 150 N. Y. 346, 44 N. E. 971.

It is not necessary that we should herein analytically examine the circumstances constituting the corroborating proof in this case, to make it clear that, as such proof, they are sufficient under section 1111 of the Penal Code. The significance of those circumstances as corroborating proof is clearly shown by the analysis thereof by Mr. Justice Plummer in the opinion handed down by this court on the former appeal herein, and to that opinion we refer for a full consideration and discussion of the proposition.

[2] It is next objected that the court erred, to the prejudice of the defendant's rights, by allowing the people to introduce evidence addressed to the proof of the charges contained in counts 2 and 3 of the indictment. At the first trial of the accused on all of the four counts set forth in the indictment, the people, as this court correctly declared in its former opinion, utterly failed to introduce evidence corroborative of the accomplice, Mrs. King, as to counts 2 and 3, and it was charged by counsel for the defendant that the prosecuting officers knew, at the beginning of the second trial, that they would not be able to present such corroborating evidence, because there was, as they knew, no such evidence available to them. It was hence objected that the testimony by Mrs. King regarding those counts would bring into the case proof of the commission by the defendant of other crimes which the prosecuting officers knew from the very beginning could not be legally proved. When objection was made in the court below to the evidence, special counsel for the people stated that he intended to introduce two witnesses who were not called to testify at the former trial, and whose testimony would corroborate that of Mrs. King as to counts 2 and 3. The judge, in overruling the objection, in effect stated that he had no reason for assuming that the prosecuting officers were not acting in good faith in the matter. It turned out, however, that the people were unable to present such corroborating proof.

If the prosecuting officers at all times knew that they would not be able to corroborate the testimony of Mrs. King as to counts 2 and 3, they certainly would be subject to just censure for attempting to prove the crimes alleged in those counts. But, like the court below, we cannot say but that those officers in good faith believed that they could make the proof required, but were in that particular disappointed by the parties by whom they expected to make it. We must assume, in the absence of a contrary showing, that, at the time they stated that they had the corroborating testimony referred to, they honestly believed that they could make the required proof. Assuming, however, that they knew, when examining Mrs. King respecting the crimes alleged in counts 2 and 3, that they would not be able to introduce corroborating evidence as to said crimes, it cannot justly be concluded that the accused was damaged by the conduct of the prosecuting officers as to that matter, since the court subsequently made an order directing the jury to acquit the defendant of the crimes therein alleged, from which order the jury, as intelligent persons, must have concluded that they were not at liberty to consider that evidence in determining the question of the guilt or innocence of the defendant under count 1. The direction to acquit on those two counts in effect constituted a plain and unequivocal instruction to the jury that any evidence received regarding those counts had no bearing whatever on count 1.

[3] While the jurors were being examined upon their voir dire, in which proceeding the judge of the court took a part, the latter stated to the talesmen that:

"It will develop in this case that there are others who are not being prosecuted, or at least haven't been prosecuted up to this time. * * * Now, if the jury are going to refuse to convict this man solely on that account, what is the use of trying him, because that will be the fact."

In its charge to the jury the court repeated substantially the foregoing statement in the following language:

"The fact that others have not been arrested or not being prosecuted at this time is not before you, and must not be considered by you for any purpose, and not to be allowed to influence your verdict."

It is argued by counsel for the defense that the effect of the foregoing statements to the jury was to tell the latter that, in deliberating upon the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused, they were not to consider for any purpose the testimony of any witness who the evidence might tend to show was connected in some way with the commission of the offense stated in count 1. We cannot agree with that interpretation of the instructions in question. The court was right in stating to the jury that they had no right to take into consideration the fact that others who might have been connected with the commission of the crime were not being or had not been prosecuted; and in so stating that proposition to the jury the court used no language which a person of average intelligence would interpret as meaning that they should not consider the testimony of such witnesses in their deliberation upon the case. It will be noted that the court did not say that the testimony of any assumed accomplices was not to be considered by the jury, but merely that the fact that any accomplices who might not have been arrested or prosecuted should not be permitted to influence them in making up their minds upon the ultimate question.

[4] The court further correctly instructed the jury that the testimony of one accomplice could not be corroborated by the testimony of another accomplice. Of course, these instructions assumed that there were accomplices of the accused other than the witness Mrs. King, and presumably the court had in mind, in giving those instructions, Lee King and Mrs. Watson. The assumption was, of course, unwarranted, since both testified that they knew nothing about the larceny of the calves until after the animals were brought by the accused to their respective places; and there was no evidence, other than any inferences which might have been afforded by their own testimony and that of the defendant and Mrs. King, that Lee King and Mrs. Watson were in league with the accused and Mrs. King in the stealing of the calves before the theft took place. Hence the court, instead of assuming that Mrs. Watson and Lee King were accomplices, should have submitted to the jury proper instructions upon the question of whether those parties were accomplices. But the assumption by the court that they were was an error favorable to the defendant, for the reason that, if they were such accomplices, their testimony, which was susceptible to an interpretation which would be against the defendant, would not constitute competent corroboration of Mrs. King's testimony. Moreover, the court in other parts of its charge in clear language instructed the jury that they must take into consideration all the evidence in the case and also instructed the jury that they were to view with caution the testimony of Mrs. King, an admitted accomplice, or that of any other person that the jury might under the evidence conclude was also an accomplice.

[5, 6] The defendant complains of the refusal by the court to give several instructions which he proposed. Those of said instructions which were correct involved the statement of legal propositions which were covered elsewhere by the court's charge. One of the instructions was to the effect that Mrs. King was an admitted accomplice. The court so instructed the jury. The instruction proposed by the defendant that Lee King became an accomplice by reason of his attempt to conceal the calves after he was informed by Mrs. King that they had been stolen was, as indicated above, improper. Legally, even though he received the calves, knowing them to have been stolen, he would not be an accomplice under section 1111 of the Penal Code. The same would be true as to Mrs. Watson. Said instruction was properly refused.

The other instructions proposed by the defendant and disallowed by the court merely involved the statement of certain elementary propositions of law which are sometimes referred to as "stock instructions," viz.: The presumption of the innocence of the accused, the elements which the jury should consider in passing upon the credibility of the witnesses, the necessity for the concurrence of the entire jury to reach a verdict, the right of each juror to use his own judgment in arriving at a conclusion, and his duty to remain steadfast to his own judgment until convinced by a full, fair and careful consideration of the evidence that his judgment was erroneous, that the burden of proving his innocence was not on the defendant, but the burden of proving guilt was upon the people. As stated, all these instructions were given by the court in language so plain that it could not be misunderstood. We may add that the charge of the court contained the statement in clear language of every legal principle applicable to the case. The court seemed to have been exceedingly careful in cautioning the jury to consider the testimony of the admitted accomplice with care, for in a number of instances it called the attention of the triers to the fact that Mrs. King was an accomplice and that it was necessary that her testimony should be corroborated by evidence which of itself or alone would tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. The instructions condemned in our former opinion were, of course, excluded at the second trial.

The defendant seems to have had a fair and impartial trial, and, so far as we can judge from the record before us, was justly as well as legally convicted.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

93 Cal. App. 560

LIBERTY BANK v. ERNST. (Civ. 5786.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California. Aug. 21, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 20, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 18, 1928.

1. Evidence §100—Evidence of acts or statements of strangers to action, in so far as they furnish circumstantial evidence of relevant facts, or have legal operation material to subject of inquiry, is admissible.

Although a party litigant cannot be concluded, or his rights affected, by the acts or statements of strangers, yet in so far as such acts or statements furnish circumstantial evidence of relevant facts, or have any legal operation material to the subject of inquiry, evidence thereof is admissible.

2. Bills and notes §504, 509—Evidence that defendant was accommodation maker, and that payee acquired note for value without notice, held admissible as against defense that note sued on was obtained by fraud.

In an action on a note, defended on ground of fraud, evidence relating to transaction occurring out of presence of defendant, and which he was not shown to have authorized, which tended to show that, contrary to defendant's claim, latter was accommodation maker, and that payee acquired note for value without notice in transaction free from fraud, held improperly excluded; it being sufficient that defendant signed note and placed it in possession of others for their use.

3. Trial §45(1)—Plaintiff's offer of proof as to circumstances under which note sued on was given held sufficient, where witnesses were in court.

In action on note, defended on ground that it was fraudulently procured, plaintiff's offer of proof as to circumstances under which note was given held sufficient, where cashier of payee was on witness stand when offer was made, and its president, who participated in transaction sought to be proved, was in court.

4. Trial §208—Court having denied offer of proof by plaintiff, and instructed jury to consider no evidence ruled inadmissible, held to show testimony stricken.

In action on note, where court denied offer of proof by testimony of plaintiff's witness, who was cashier of payee bank, and later instructed jury not to consider any evidence ruled inadmissible, held to show that cashier's testimony was stricken, and that jury did not pass thereon.

5. Trial §252(3)—Refusal of part of instruction applying only to stricken testimony held proper.

Refusal of portion of instruction applying only to stricken testimony held proper, such part being inapplicable to evidence remaining for jury's consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Liberty Bank against J. Ernst. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Ross & Ross, of Redding (Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., and F. A. Devlin, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Fletcher A. Cutler, of Burlingame, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An action on a promissory note executed by defendant Ernst to the California Bank of San Mateo and transferred after maturity to the plaintiff. The answer, which denied that the note was given for value, alleged that the instrument was executed at the request of R. J. Falvey, who, as the cashier and manager of the payee bank, by false and fraudulent representations induced the defendant to agree to purchase certain stock in the Nonnenmann Motor Company; that Falvey agreed to obtain a loan from the payee for the amount of the purchase price of the stock, namely, $1,500, and pursuant to the agreement a note for that amount was prepared by Falvey and presented to the defendant, who signed it, and that the same was delivered to Falvey, as cashier and manager of the payee; that Falvey further agreed to credit the proceeds of the loan to the defendant's account with the payee, which he failed to do; and that as such cashier and manager he appropriated the whole to his own use and to that of the payee and the Nonnenmann Motor Company. A jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and from the judgment entered thereon the plaintiff appealed.

It is contended that the exclusion of certain evidence and the refusal of a part of an instruction offered by the plaintiff, together with the giving of an instruction proposed by the defendant, were prejudicially erroneous. It is conceded that the proceeds of the note were not credited to the account of the defendant, and his testimony supports the allegations respecting the representations and agreement made by Falvey. It appears, however, that the note was not executed at the bank or presented to the defendant by Falvey, but by one W. B. Hyder, to whom, after the same had been signed, the defendant delivered it. It also appears that Hyder was interested in the Nonnenmann Motor Company and that the note was delivered to the bank by him. Falvey denied that the representations or agreement alleged were made, or that the note was executed for the purpose claimed by the defendant.

The plaintiff then sought to prove that the facts of the transaction were as follows: That shortly before the execution of the note Elwood Nonnenmann, who was accompanied by Hyder, applied on his own behalf and that of the motor company to the payee bank for a loan of $1,500; that the amount which the bank was permitted to loan to an individual had already been borrowed by Nonnenmann and the motor company, and the request was refused; that Nonnenmann, having stated to Falvey that the defendant was going into the company, then proposed to Harden Hatch, the president of the bank, that a loan of the above amount be made on the note of defendant, which Hatch, on behalf of the bank, agreed to do, provided the defendant, upon investigation proved to be financially responsible. This fact having been ascertained, Hatch prepared the note in question and delivered it to Nonnenmann for defendant's signature; that in the meantime Hyder, as a temporary accommodation to the motor company pending the investigation mentioned, executed his note to the bank for a like amount, which was credited to the account of the company; that the note prepared by Hatch was subsequently executed by the defendant and delivered to the bank without other instructions; and that credit therefore was given to the motor company and the Hyder note canceled.

The witness Falvey was permitted, over objections, to testify to certain of the above matters, but subsequently this testimony was stricken out, and the jury instructed to disregard it. The plaintiff thereupon made its offer, which the court excluded.

[1, 2] It appears from the record to have been the theory of counsel for the defendant, whose objection the court sustained, that the offered evidence was incompetent, as it related to a transaction occurring out of the presence of the defendant and which he was not shown to have authorized. Although a party litigant cannot be concluded, or his rights affected, by the acts or statements of strangers, yet in so far as such acts or statements furnish circumstantial evidence of relevant facts, or have any legal operation material to the subject of inquiry, evidence thereof is admissible (Wigmore Evidence [2d Ed.] § 1770; 22 Corp. Jur. "Evidence," §§ 313, 314, pp. 287, 288); and where, as here, the excluded evidence with the testimony of the cashier tended to show that contrary to the claim of the defendant the latter was an accommodation maker of the note, and that the payee acquired the same for value without notice in a transaction which was free from fraud, such evidence was admissible, and it was unnecessary to show that the defendant was present when the transaction occurred, it being sufficient that he should have signed the note and placed it in the possession of the motor company, thus conferring upon it ostensible authority to use it (Tischhauser v. Prentice, 30 Cal. App. 699, 159 P. 226; Boston Steel & Iron Co. v. Steuer, 183 Mass. 140, 66 N. E. 646, 97 Am. St. Rep. 426; Bank of Commerce & Savings v. Randell, 107 Neb. 332, 186 N. W. 70, 21 A. L. R. 1360), as the offered evidence tended to show was done. This evidence, with the testimony of the cashier which it corroborated, was, if believed by the jury, sufficient to support a finding adverse to the claim that the note was fraudulently procured by the payee, and its exclusion was prejudicially erroneous.

[3] Defendant contends that the offer of proof was insufficient, citing Rose v. Doe, 4 Cal. App. 680, 89 P. 135, and Biddick v. Kobler, 110 Cal. 191, 42 P. 578. As there held, a general offer to prove a variety of things without producing a witness or segregating the different items, or, if the witness be present, without putting a question to him in such form as to give an opportunity for an objection, are sufficient grounds for refusing the offer. In the present case, however, the cashier of the payee was on the witness stand when the offer was made, and its president, who participated in the transaction sought to be proved, was in court. Under such circumstances the offer was sufficient.

[4] Defendant further claims that the testimony of the cashier was not stricken out; that all the material facts contained in the offer of proof were testified to by him and passed upon by the jury. The record shows that all the testimony of the cashier relating to the transaction between the payee and the motor company was admitted subject to objection, the court stating that the same would be stricken out if the defendant was not shown to be connected therewith. The offer of proof included the facts in the above connection to which the cashier had testified, and the court in ruling upon the offer said:

"The offer is denied. The jury will be instructed not to consider that evidence in any way. * * *

Subsequently the following instruction was given:

"You are not to consider any evidence that the court has ruled inadmissible."

The above sufficiently shows defendant's contention to be untenable.

[5] The portion of the instruction which the plaintiff claims was erroneously refused applied only to the facts of the transaction between the payee bank and the motor company, and after Falvey's testimony respecting the transaction had been stricken out this portion of the instruction was inapplicable to the evidence which remained for the jury's consideration, and its refusal was proper. People v. Cochran, 61 Cal. 548; Meyer v. Foster, 147 Cal. 166, 81 P. 402.

Plaintiff further contends that an instruction given for the defendant had the effect of taking from the jury the question whether Falvey, in making the representations and promises alleged, was acting within the scope of his authority, together with the other questions presented in the offer of proof. In so far as it had the latter effect it was not improper; nor was it prejudicially erroneous, in view of other instructions by which the jury were told that the implied authority of a cashier is limited to acts done in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that Falvey had no implied power to represent the bank in stock-selling transactions, and any promise in reference to a sale of stock not within the ordinary course of the bank's business was not binding upon it.

The record discloses no error warranting a reversal of the judgment other than the ruling by which competent material evidence constituting substantially the entire case for the plaintiff in rebuttal was excluded. This evidence, with the testimony of Falvey denying the alleged fraud, was sufficient, if believed by the jury, to have supported a verdict for the plaintiff, and its rejection was prejudicial to a degree requiring a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

93 Cal. App. 557

PEOPLE v. CALDERON et al. (Cr. 1674.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 20, 1928.

1. Criminal law §686(2)—Permission to introduce surrebuttal testimony by people in criminal prosecution is within trial court's discretion.

Permission to people to introduce surrebuttal testimony in criminal prosecution is within discretion of trial court.

2. Criminal law §686(2)—Permission to people to reopen case after noon recess to introduce rebuttal testimony, which was rebutted by defendant, was not abuse of discretion, where no prejudice to defendant was shown.

Where defendant's counsel was permitted to call witnesses in rebuttal after close of co-defendant's testimony, and two witnesses testified in rebuttal for people after district attorney announced, "That is all for the state," granting of motion by people after noon adjournment to reopen, and introduction of further rebuttal testimony, which was again rebutted by defendant, was not abuse of discretion, where defendant did not show prejudice, or any new evidence that might have been offered, had their witnesses not been excused, and it affirmatively appeared that people did not coach witnesses during noon recess.

3. Criminal law §798½—Form of verdict to find defendant guilty of burglary in first or second degree, held not to limit jury's finding, under instructions on second degree burglary.

Where jury were properly instructed as to finding defendants guilty of burglary in first or second degree, or that one or both were guilty, and were instructed that, if offense was committed during daytime they should substitute second degree on verdict, forms of verdict finding defendant "guilty of burglary, a felony, and find it burglary of first degree," did not limit jury to finding of first degree burglary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Andrew Calderon and another were convicted of burglary, and they appeal. Affirmed.

John F. Groene, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. The appellants and one Cinvente S. Lueras were jointly charged with the crime of burglary, to which offense the latter pleaded guilty, and appellants were convicted of burglary in the first degree. Motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment were thereafter presented, which were denied, and Calderon and Torres appeal from the judgments and from the rulings upon said motions.

It appears that the home of one M. Yano, at Wilmington, in Los Angeles county, was robbed during the night of January 18, 1928. Appellants and Lueras were arrested when seen throwing a package from an automobile in which they were driving, and a trunk, certain jewelry, and other personal property of Yano were found in their machine. Calderon later made a written confession, and Lueras testified at the trial, both admitting the robbery in detail.

